SUMMARY

s.1

The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines is one version of the Long Perfection of Wisdom sūtras that developed in South and South-Central Asia in tandem with the Eight Thousand version, probably during the first five hundred years of the Common Era. It contains many of the passages in the oldest extant Long Perfection of Wisdom text (the Gilgit manuscript in Sanskrit), and is similar in structure to the other versions of the Long Perfection of Wisdom sūtras (the One Hundred Thousand and Twenty-Five Thousand) in Tibetan in the Kangyur. While setting forth the sacred fundamental doctrines of Buddhist practice with veneration, it simultaneously exhorts the reader to reject them as an object of attachment, its recurring message being that all dharmas without exception lack any intrinsic nature.

The sūtra can be divided loosely into three parts: an introductory section that sets the scene, a long central section, and three concluding chapters that consist of two important summaries of the long central section. The first of these (chapter 84) is in verse and also circulates as a separate work called The Verse Summary of the Jewel Qualities (Toh 13). The second summary is in the form of the story of Sadāprarudita and his guru Dharmodgata (chapters 85 and 86), after which the text concludes with the Buddha entrusting the work to his close companion Ānanda.

· The Translator's Acknowledgments ·

ac.2 This is a good occasion to remember and thank my friend Nicholas Ribush, who first gave me a copy of Edward Conze's translation of The Perfection of Wisdom in Eight Thousand Lines in 1973. I also thank the Tibetan teachers and students at the Riklam Lobdra in Dharamshala, India, where I began to study the Perfection of Wisdom, for their kindness and patience; Jeffrey Hopkins and Elizabeth Napper, who steered me in the direction of the Perfection of Wisdom and have been very kind to me over the years; and Ashok Aklujkar and others at the University of British Columbia in Canada, who taught me Sanskrit and Indian culture while I was writing my dissertation on Haribhadra's Perfection of Wisdom commentary. I thank the hermits in the hills above Riklam Lobdra and the many Tibetan scholars and practitioners who encouraged me while I continued working on the Perfection of Wisdom after I graduated from the University of British Columbia. I thank all those who continued to support me as a monk and scholar after the violent death of my friend and mentor toward the end of the millennium. I thank those at the University of Michigan and then at the University of California (Berkeley), particularly Donald Lopez and Jacob Dalton, who enabled me to complete the set of four volumes of translations from Sanskrit of the Perfection of Wisdom commentaries by Haribhadra and Āryavimuktisena and four volumes of the fourteenth-century Tibetan commentary on the Perfection of Wisdom by Tsongkhapa. I thank Gene Smith, who introduced me to 84000. I thank everyone at 84000: Dzongsar Khyentse Rinpoche and the sponsors; the scholars, translators, editors, and technicians; and all the other indispensable people whose work has made this translation of The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines and its accompanying commentary possible.

Around me everything I see would be part of a perfect road if I had better driving skills.

Where I was born, where everything is made of concrete, it too is a perfect place.

Everyone I have been with, everyone who is near me now, and even those I have forgotten—there is no one who has not helped me.

So, I bow to everyone and to the world and ask for patience, and, as a boon, a smile.

INTRODUCTION

In the introduction to his translation of The Transcendent Perfection of Wisdom in Ten Thousand Lines,<sup>1</sup> Gyurme Dorje has given a clear account of the Tibetan tradition's explanation (1) of the origin of the Perfection of Wisdom in the words of the Buddha on Gr̥dhraakūṭa Hill in Rājagṛha some 2,500 years ago, (2) of the way the Perfection of Wisdom became extant in our world through the efforts of Nāgārjuna, and (3) of the Perfection of Wisdom's place in the vast corpus of the Buddha's words as "the middle turning of the wheel of the Dharma." He has also given a brief account of the conclusions arrived at by the Western research tradition, which suggest that the Perfection of Wisdom may have originated in the south of the Indian subcontinent, perhaps the Andhra region, but more likely first began circulating in the far northwest of the Indian subcontinent. A prophecy in the text translated into English here provides some support for this conclusion. In chapter 39 the Buddha says to Śāriputra, "with the passing away of the Tathāgata this perfection of wisdom will circulate in the southern region," and "from the country Vartani [the east] this deep perfection of wisdom will circulate into the northern region." A comparison of early fragments of a Perfection of Wisdom in the Gāndhārī language, written in Kharoṣṭhī script and dated ca. 75 CE, with an early translation of a Perfection of Wisdom text into Chinese by Lokakṣema in the middle of the second century CE has led the Western research tradition to the tentative conclusion that the Perfection of Wisdom first circulated in written form in the northwest of the Indian subcontinent some 2,000 years ago.

The text translated here into English is the one found in the Degé Kangyur with reference to the other Kangyur editions contained in the Comparative Edition (Tib dpe bsdur ma). Both the original handwritten Indic manuscript (or manuscripts) on which the Tibetan translation of The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines was based and the original handwritten manuscript of the earliest Tibetan translation are lost. There is, however, a large, nearly complete birch bark manuscript of a Perfection of Wisdom text written in Sanskrit in a Gilgit-Bāmiyān type alphabet that shows surprising similarities to the alphabet later used for the translation of Indian Buddhist texts into Tibetan. Stefano Zacchetti<sup>2</sup> calls the birch bark manuscript, unearthed in northwest India in Gilgit in 1931, the “[Larger] Prajñāpāramitā from Gilgit,” and he dates it to “between [the] 6th and the beginning of the 7th century.” It is not misleading to say it is similar in the main to the Tibetan translation that is the basis of the English translation presented here. It is not, however, exactly the same, and it certainly was not the Indic manuscript on which the Tibetan translation of the Eighteen Thousand was based.

i.3 Besides the Gilgit manuscript there are the Śatasāhasrikā (Hundred Thousand)<sup>3</sup> and Pañcaviṃśatisāhasrikā (Twenty-Five Thousand)<sup>4</sup> groups of Indic manuscripts, mainly originating from collections in Nepal that are similar in many respects to the Tibetan text that is the basis of the English translation presented here. There are a considerable number of these relatively recent manuscripts, dating at the earliest to the seventeenth century. Pratāpacandra Ghoṣa published a heroic Sanskrit edition (1902–13) of the first section (khaṇḍa) of the Hundred Thousand that runs to 1,676 pages! Takayasu Kimura (2009–14) has published the Sanskrit of the Hundred Thousand equivalent up to about chapter 32 of the 87 chapters translated here (up to halfway through the sixth of the twelve volumes of the Tibetan translation of the Hundred Thousand in the Kangyur). The Hundred Thousand is obviously much longer than the Eighteen Thousand but is similar in many respects.

i.4 Kimura has also published a complete Sanskrit edition of Haribhadra’s version of the Twenty-Five Thousand (1986–2009). This version is one of the two bases (together with the Gilgit manuscript) for Edward Conze’s (1984) magisterial translation called The Large Sutra on Perfect Wisdom. Kimura’s Sanskrit edition of the Twenty-Five Thousand is also similar in many respects to the Tibetan translation of the Eighteen Thousand that is the basis of the English translation presented here.

· The Title: Eighteen Thousand ·

i.5 According to Stefano Zacchetti, Bodhiruci (fl. beginning of the sixth century), a translator of Buddhist texts into Chinese, is the first to explicitly mention an Eighteen Thousand.<sup>5</sup> Bodhiruci lists it, among other texts, as one of the three sizes of what he calls the Larger Perfection of Wisdom. We have not determined with certainty if Bodhiruci meant Eighteen Thousand as an actual title of a Perfection of Wisdom text or simply as a description of the length of a text.

i.6 In A Catalogue of the Chinese Translation of the Buddhist Tripiṭaka,<sup>6</sup> the first entry is Xuanzang's huge Dabanruoboluomi jing (Long Perfection of Wisdom, finished ca. 659). A text in fifty-nine fascicles and thirty-one chapters is included as part of it. Based on the K'yuen-lu (Nañjio's transliteration) written in 1287, which compares Perfection of Wisdom works in the Tibetan canon and the Chinese canon, says it "agrees with the Tibetan Pragñāpāramitā in 18,000 ślokas."<sup>7</sup>

i.7 We have not been able to read Xuanzang's translation, so we cannot say with certainty whether or not the name Eighteen Thousand is found there, but speaking generally, in Chinese Buddhism bibliographical material is organized based on the person (the translator and so on) rather than genre or title, certainly after Fei Changfang's Lidai sanbao ji (Record of the Three Treasures throughout Successive Dynasties, published in 597). It therefore remains to be conclusively determined whether the name Eighteen Thousand is actually used by Xuanzang to identify this part of his long translation or whether it is, again, just a description of the length of part of a longer book.

i.8 In the Denkarma, the catalog of Buddhist works translated into Tibetan compiled in the early years of the ninth century by the translators Paltsek (dpal brtsegs) and Lui Wangpo (klu'i dbang po), the Eighteen Thousand comes third in the first subdivision of Mahāyāna sūtras. Later the two translators include in their list of commentaries on Mahāyāna sūtras The Long Explanation of the One Hundred, Twenty-Five, and Eighteen Thousand (Toh 3808).<sup>8</sup> So, we can say with certainty that a Perfection of Wisdom text in Tibetan identified by the name Eighteen Thousand existed by about the year 820.

i.9 Edward Conze gives the name Aṣṭādaśaprajñāpāramitā (The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines) to the later part of the Gilgit manuscript (starting from folio 188).<sup>9</sup> Other scholars have followed him, describing fragments of Perfection of Wisdom texts that correspond to parts of the Gilgit manuscript as fragments of the Eighteen Thousand. But Zacchetti persuasively argues that Conze has made a mistake. He says Conze takes the early part of the Gilgit manuscript to reflect the text of the Twenty-Five Thousand and the later part the Eighteen Thousand because of an inconsequential mistake on the part of the Gilgit scribe. Zacchetti says the scribe accidentally wrote chapter 48 instead of 38 at the end of the chapter following chapter 37. Not all the chapters in the Gilgit manuscript have both titles and numbers. Conze noticed that the next chapter in the Gilgit manuscript after the chapter mistakenly numbered 48 that has both a title and number is chapter 50, with the title Avinivartanīyalinganirdeśa (Teaching the signs of irreversibility). Conze also noticed that it corresponded to chapter 50 in the Tibetan translation of the Eighteen Thousand, which has the same title (Teaching the signs of irreversibility). This is the reason, Zacchetti argues, that Conze mistakenly said that the scribe “calmly chang[ed] from the version in 25.000 Lines to the version in 18.000 Lines (at f. 187/188) without telling anybody about it.”<sup>10</sup> Zacchetti concludes that the Gilgit manuscript in fact reflects “a single version of the Larger PP” and says that trying to decide if it is a version of the Twenty-Five Thousand or Eighteen Thousand is “a futile question.”<sup>11</sup>

- i.10 The research of Zacchetti and other modern scholars<sup>12</sup> presupposes that the Eighteen Thousand begins with an original compiler and undergoes changes over time. The shorter Eight Thousand represents an earlier (more original) version, and the different longer texts, including the Eighteen Thousand, reflect later changes. Heuristically, given that an origin is being investigated, this is a helpful presupposition. The research, however, has not identified an original, and one suspects never will. If it finally proves to be the case that no original can be identified it will corroborate the view set forth in the Eighteen Thousand itself, that a sacred book or tradition, when sought for in reality, is nowhere to be found.

· The Structure of the Eighteen Thousand ·

- i.11 Gyurme Dorje has already set forth the structure of a Perfection of Wisdom text based on the Tibetan tradition that privileges The Ornament for the Clear Realizations (Abhisamayālaṅkāra). According to that tradition the Eighteen Thousand, like the Ten Thousand, is one of the six major texts, which is to say the Eighteen Thousand makes a presentation of all eight clear realizations (abhisamaya) set forth in the Ornament for the Clear Realizations. The Eighteen Thousand also includes as its eighty-fourth chapter another of the six major texts, the verse summary of the entire Perfection of Wisdom that circulates as a separate text called The Verse Summary of the Jewel Qualities (Ratnaguṇa-saṃcayagāthā). It also includes as its eighty-third chapter the Categorization of a Bodhisattva’s Training, one of the important eleven minor Perfection of Wisdom texts that circulates separately under the name The Maitreya Chapter or The Questions of Maitreya.
- i.12 By contrast, what follows is the structure based on Vasubandhu’s or Daṃṣṭrāsena’s Long Explanation of the One Hundred, Twenty-Five, and Eighteen Thousand.<sup>13</sup> Butön Rinchen Drup (1290–1364), the famous scholar and editor of the Kangyur, characterizes this as one of the four accepted ways to approach the Perfection of Wisdom corpus, and for the fourteenth century writer Dölpopa Sherap Gyaltzen it is the only way.

- i.13 According to that structure, there are five major divisions [I–V] and eleven sections [(1)–(11)].

· · I. Introduction · ·

- i.14 After the statement of the place and time (“Thus did I hear at one time. The Lord dwelt at Rājagṛha on Gṛdhrakūṭa Hill...”) and the list of śrāvakas and bodhisattvas in the retinue and their excellent qualities, the Lord Buddha, the Blessed One, sets up his seat and sits in meditation. He displays miraculous powers—emitting light that goes to the ends of the cosmos, shaking the cosmos, and creating a magical canopy of flowers above his head. The light illuminates buddhas and their retinues in different worlds in the ten directions, prompting bodhisattva students to come to attend the discourse, thereby completing the huge retinue.

· · II. Brief Exegesis · ·

- i.15 Following the introduction there is the single statement by the Lord at the beginning of chapter 2: “Here, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want to fully awaken to all dharmas in all forms should make an effort at the perfection of wisdom.” This says it all in brief. The reader should understand that the Lord remains silent after saying this.

· · III. Intermediate Exegesis · ·

- i.16 Then, beginning the intermediate exegesis there is Śāriputra’s question (2.2), “How then, Lord, should bodhisattva great beings who want to fully awaken to all dharmas in all forms make an effort at the perfection of wisdom?” followed by the Lord’s response. Śāriputra’s inquiry raises the following questions: What is a bodhisattva and a great being? What is it to want fully to awaken to all dharmas in all forms? What is “making an effort”? And, what is the perfection of wisdom? Śāriputra’s inquiry thus introduces the reader to (i) bodhisattva great beings, (ii) all dharmas, (iii) the perfection of wisdom, (iv) full awakening, and (v) making an effort—that is, actually putting the perfection of wisdom into practice. These five provide the outline of the intermediate exegesis.
- i.17 Informing both the Lord’s statement and Śāriputra’s question is the important word want—a word that signals a bodhisattva’s compassionate aspiration because it references a bodhisattva’s motivation. Hence, what truly informs the statement is bodhicitta (“the thought of awakening”), a technical term for a special altruism. This section has two parts: (1) the explanation for and by Śāriputra that goes from chapter 2 through chapter 5 and (2) the explanation for and by Subhūti, from chapter 6 through chapter 21. This two-part section corresponds to the first chapter of the Eight Thousand.

· · IV. Detailed Exegesis · ·

i.18 The detailed exegesis of the opening statement goes from chapters 22 to 82. It comprises an explanation of the conceptual and nonconceptual perfection of wisdom in a detailed exposition based on relative and ultimate truth for the sake of those who understand from a longer explanation. The explanation is subdivided into (3) an explanation for the head god Śatakratu (chapter 22) and (4) an explanation by Subhūti (chapters 23–32). (5) Then there is an explanation that includes an exchange with Maitreya (chapter 33) and (6–9) three more sections associated with Subhūti and one with Śatakratu. (10) A second explanation for Maitreya is chapter 83, titled “The Categorization of a Bodhisattva’s Training.” Conze and Iida (1968) call it Maitreya’s Questions. It is included in the Twenty-Five Thousand<sup>14</sup> and the Lhasa edition of the Hundred Thousand but not the Degé edition of the Hundred Thousand.

i.19 Chapter 84 is the summary in verse for Subhūti that circulates separately as The Verse Summary of the Jewel Qualities. In the Eighteen Thousand it is not divided into chapters. (11) Chapters 85 and 86 are a summary of the earlier chapters in the form of a story about Sadāprarudita’s quest to find his teacher Dharmodgata and learn the perfection of wisdom, and the final chapter is a short one in which the Lord entrusts the perfection of wisdom to Ānanda and the retinue rejoices.

· What Does the Eighteen Thousand Say? ·

i.20 In essence, the Eighteen Thousand says that attachment to sacred texts and sacred traditions is the greatest impediment to awakening. For a modern reader the major difficulty when reading the Eighteen Thousand is therefore the lack of knowledge of the specific sacred texts and traditions the Eighteen Thousand references.

i.21 We have seen that the opening chapter of the Eighteen Thousand sets the scene and describes the retinue, in which, we are told, are many worthy ones as well as bodhisattvas. Worthy ones are those who, by definition, have reached the final goal explained in the fundamental texts that record the Buddha Śākyamuni's teachings for those who seek their own liberation. Bodhisattvas are those who privilege the teachings given by him to and for bodhisattvas in Mahāyāna texts like the Eighteen Thousand.

i.22 Both the fundamental texts and the Mahāyāna texts like the Eighteen Thousand make a presentation of the dharmas. In the English translation we have sometimes left the word dharma untranslated, sometimes when appropriate rendered it "phenomenon," and sometimes when appropriate "attribute"<sup>15</sup> or "quality." When it is capitalized, Dharma means the doctrine, as in "turn the wheel of the Dharma." The doctrine can be either the books (words) or the meanings, in particular the meanings as they are found in the mindstreams of those who have a proper understanding.

i.23 The dharmas set forth in the fundamental texts are basic to an understanding of the tradition that the author of the Eighteen Thousand treats as sacred. In the fundamental texts these dharmas are in two categories: the dharmas of defilement (saṃkleśa) and the dharmas of purification (vyavadāna). Included in the former are the first two of the four noble truths, which comprise, among others, the aggregates, sense fields, constituents, contacts, feelings arising from contacts, and the twelve links of dependent origination. All describe the ordinary practitioner (the so-called "suffering" being).

i.24 Included in the purification dharmas that are covered by the last two noble truths are the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening (ending with the eightfold noble path), the three gateways to liberation (emptiness and so on), and the eight results of the practice (beginning with the stream enterer and ending with the worthy one). They describe the state of the practitioner progressing toward the goal and when the goal is reached. Worthy ones, the first part of the intended audience of the Eighteen Thousand, do not need to be taught these dharmas. Just the word rūpa ("form"), the material reality that locates a particular individual, at the beginning of a list is enough for a worthy one to know what is intended. Thus, the Heart Sūtra says "no form ... no eyes ... no truth of suffering,"<sup>16</sup> and so on.

i.25 Modern readers unfamiliar with the sacred tradition set forth in the fundamental texts can read, for example, Ven. Bhikkhu Bodhi's In the Buddha's Words. Alternatively, the fundamental texts can be learned from the Eighteen Thousand, which presents them in a very clear and accessible manner. But a modern reader unfamiliar with the dharmas set forth in the fundamental texts can get confused, because at the same time that the Eighteen Thousand is setting them forth with veneration, it is exhorting the reader to reject them as an object of attachment.

i.26 Thus, chapter 3 of the Eighteen Thousand begins with the monk Śāriputra asking, "How then should bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of wisdom?" to which the Lord responds, "They do not see form. Similarly, they do not see feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness either.” “They do not see” means that they reject it as an object of attachment. It does not mean that the aggregates, and so on, are not there or are not something they should know. Worthy ones obviously know the aggregates and so on, because it is the basic teaching of the truth of suffering, the first words the Buddha Śākyamuni uttered to the five companions when he returned to the Deer Park outside Vārāṇasī after reaching awakening.

i.27 The Eighteen Thousand does not only focus on the fundamental Buddhist teachings and caution the reader to avoid taking them as objects of attachment, but it also references the sacred teachings of the Eighteen Thousand and other Mahāyāna texts and stresses that bodhisattvas, the second part of the retinue described in the Introduction chapter, should avoid attachment toward them. It does this first by expanding the list of basic purification dharmas to include all the possible qualities of bodhisattvas, among which are “the four detailed and thorough knowledges, the four fearlessnesses, the five undiminished clairvoyances, the six perfections, the six principles of being liked, the seven riches, the eight ways great persons think, the nine places beings live, the ten tathāgata powers, the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, great love, and great compassion.”

i.28 The second way the Eighteen Thousand says that the sacred Mahāyāna tradition must be rejected as an object of attachment is by negating the mental representations (the ideas or names) of the defilement and purification dharmas. The recurring message of the Eighteen Thousand is that all dharmas without exception lack any intrinsic nature (svabhāva). A Mahāyāna practitioner—a worthy one or an advanced bodhisattva—who has learned this lesson sees dharmas as they are supposed to appear, as lacking any intrinsic nature and with only a nominal or conventional reality. This, and the sacred tradition that teaches it, can become an object of attachment as much as anything else. To “settle down on” (abhiniviś) something is to be negatively attached to it.

i.29 Even though the texts, practices, and results of the fundamental and the Mahāyāna traditions are equally rejected as objects of attachment, the Eighteen Thousand extols the Mahāyāna tradition as most excellent for its wide range and concomitant benefits, and for undercutting itself, as it were, by extending the analysis of the person (the selflessness of a person understood by those who know the basic dharmas taught in the fundamental texts) to all phenomena. The Eighteen Thousand says that reliquaries, statues, books, practices, knowledge, and anything wholesome and beneficial are good, but only to the extent that they do not become objects of attachment. It also preaches the value of skillful means for benefiting others in whatever way is helpful to them. The Eighteen Thousand says of itself that it is special, as a book, to the extent that the knowledge it conveys is the source of all that is beneficial. But if, as a book, or even as the knowledge the book conveys, it becomes an object of attachment, it results in the exact opposite of what, in its own terms, it preaches. When the Eighteen Thousand praises itself and says that even writing out one word of it is more beneficial by far than the words of the fundamental texts or the wisdom of the worthy ones, it is not setting forth some new tradition that transcends the problem of attachment.

· SUMMARY OF THE CHAPTERS ·

- i.30 The first chapter sets the scene. It is in two parts: an introduction shared with many other sūtras and an introduction unique to the Perfection of Wisdom. The first part, beginning with “Thus did I hear at one time,” describes the qualities of the arhat monks and most important nuns and ends with a description of the bodhisattvas, including many of their names.
- i.31 The second part describes the Buddha, always called “Lord” (bhagavat), or occasionally Tathāgata, setting up and taking his seat and then demonstrating the three miraculous powers. The miraculous power of meditative stabilization causes light to radiate from the Buddha’s major marks and minor signs and from the different parts and pores of his body, causes the radiation of natural light, and causes light to radiate from the tongue faculty in particular. The miraculous, wonder-working power magically creates a great tower out of flowers and, having done so, suspends it in midair and so on. And finally, the miraculous dharma-illuminating power illuminates buddhas dwelling in different worlds, prompting their bodhisattva retinues to make the journey to attend the discourse to follow.

- i.32 This chapter begins the discourse proper with the single, all-encompassing statement: “Here, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want to fully awaken to all dharmas in all forms should make an effort at the perfection of wisdom.” The key term here is “want” (kāma). The bodhisattva great beings “want to fully awaken.” This is the great central statement of the compassion unique to the Perfection of Wisdom and other Mahāyāna scriptures, described as wanting (kāma) everything of use to others both in the interim and ultimately—the daily necessities and the necessities for different levels of liberation for all beings according to their capacities—making “beings who are blind ... see shapes with their eyes," and so forth, and the miraculous powers to "blow out with one puff of breath the fire in the great billionfold world system when the eon is burning up," and so forth.

i.33 The chapter ends with a discussion of celibacy. The compassionate sons and daughters of good families want to be born into a bodhisattva's family. This leads the gods to think that a perfect practitioner remains celibate, like the Buddha, until awakening, which prompts Śāriputra to ask if a practitioner has to have a family or has to be celibate. The Lord replies that there are many types of practitioners, but those who understand the deep perfection of wisdom like a magician, who uses magic to make a show of dallying with, enjoying, and acting gratified by the five sorts of sense objects in order to bring beings to maturity, is not contaminated by them. The chapter ends with the statement, "Alternatively, bodhisattva great beings speak disparagingly of sense objects: 'Sense objects are ablaze, disgusting, murderous, and against you.' So, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings take to these sorts of sense objects in order to bring beings to maturity."

i.34 A practitioner exists conventionally but not ultimately. All the possible physical or mental marks through which one might "see" or apprehend a practitioner, all the names of those things, even all the ultimate or conventional realities of a practitioner, their deficiencies and perfections, are ultimately unfindable, and so too with awakening and the practice. Thus, one pursues the practice of the perfection of wisdom by avoiding the extremes of naïve realism and nihilism through understanding the imaginary, other-powered, and thoroughly established natures of all dharmas. Such an insight surpasses that of the practitioners of fundamental Buddhism exemplified by Śāriputra and Maudgalyāyana.

i.35 One practices the perfection of wisdom when "engaged with the emptiness of form," and so on. This teaches the thoroughly established nature. There is no connection between the practice and the defilement dharmas that define the suffering state, no engagement with a practice that disconnects the practitioner from those defilement dharmas, and no connection between the purification dharmas and the perfection of wisdom. Still, practitioners conventionally exist, so the members of the community of irreversible bodhisattvas practicing the perfection of wisdom are enumerated based on where they were before coming to this world, and so on, and where they will be born and what they will demonstrate prior to their complete awakening.

i.36        The retinue praises the Lord’s discourse on the perfection of wisdom as “the calm and gentle perfection ... the space-like perfection, it is the perfection of the emptiness of particular defining marks, it is the perfection endowed with all good qualities.” The Lord extends his tongue, illuminating the perfection of wisdom in all worlds for all beings. They all come and worship the Lord and generate the altruistic aspiration to become buddhas to teach this same doctrine for the benefit of beings. The Lord then smiles because he sees with clairvoyance that the compassion generated by monks in the retinue as they listened to the discourse will cause them all to become fully awakened buddhas in the future.

i.37        All teaching by śrāvaka trainees or the gods is through the Tathāgata’s power and does not contradict the true nature of phenomena. This statement comes at the beginning of the Eight Thousand and begins the summary verses in chapter 84 of the Eighteen Thousand.

i.38        The word bodhisattva is used again and again but ultimately is not a word for anything. The form aggregate and so on are just designations, just labels used conventionally to aid comprehension, and similarly with the sense fields and so on, all the parts of the body—the skull and neck bones down to the bones in the feet—and all external things such as grass and leaves; even all the buddhas are just names and conventional terms. Since this is so, the bodhisattva practitioners understand that the fundamental doctrines of the four noble truths—that the aggregates, sense fields, and constituents and the like are impermanent rather than permanent, suffering rather than pleasurable, and so on—are just names to make things known for the benefit of beings, and practice accordingly. Similarly, “standing without mentally constructing any phenomenon,” the bodhisattvas cultivate the basic, shared practices set out in the fundamental Buddhist scriptures. These are systematized as the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening. And beyond those the bodhisattvas cultivate the unique bodhisattva practices of the six perfections and the powers and fearlessnesses, up to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha.

i.39        Bodhisattvas should not settle down even on an ultimate, undivided true reality as the final referent of the name bodhisattva. Those who do not tremble in the face of such a reality, or perhaps lack of reality, are practicing the perfection of wisdom.

.. Chapter 7 ..

- i.40 From the practice of the perfection of wisdom that sees all phenomena as dharma designations, not absolute truths, all the benefits of fundamental and bodhisattva practice arise, included among which are all the meditative stabilizations starting from the bodhyaṅgavatin and siṃhavijṛmbhita meditative stabilizations and ending with the ākāśaṃgavimuktinirupalepa meditative stabilization.
- i.41 The practice enables bodhisattvas to avoid “hardheadedness,” the “love for dharmas.” This is when a practitioner loses track of the purpose of practice—the welfare of others—and sees the realization of reality, the attainment of peace, or even altruism as an end in itself. Hardheaded bodhisattvas fall to the śrāvaka level, bereft of the guiding compassionate principle of the bodhisattva. The absence of hardheadedness is flawlessness, or the secure state of a bodhisattva. Here the bodhisattvas do not falsely project anything even while knowing all and practicing all for the sake of others.
- i.42 Even the sublime thought of awakening (bodhicitta) is just a label, so how does it operate in bodhisattvas in the flawless state? That “thought is no thought because the basic nature of thought is clear light.” It is clear light because it is not together with or free from any shortcoming, any accompanying afflictive emotion, or any intention to enter into a śrāvaka or pratyekabuddha nirvāṇa. Such a thought, the clear light, neither knows nor does not know, neither exists nor does not exist. It is the state in which all phenomena “are just so.”
- i.43 In conclusion, Śāriputra praises Subhūti’s explanation as authentic and in accord with the Lord’s intention and says, “in this perfection of wisdom is detailed instruction for the three vehicles in which bodhisattva great beings should train on the level of śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas, bodhisattvas, and buddhas.”

- i.44 Subhūti rhetorically poses a hypothetical question. If all phenomena are just names, just dharma designations, then practice is futile. So, “which bodhisattva will I advise and instruct in what perfection of wisdom?” In response Subhūti says that phenomena are conventional terms for the inexpressible true nature of things that cannot be expressed as anything at all. It is just because of that that all starting places for practice, all practices, and all attainments are tenable. Bodhisattvas who are not terrified by this reality are irreversible from full awakening.

i.45 All phenomena are empty. Form is empty of form. The twelve links of dependent origination are empty. Ignorance is empty of ignorance, up to old age and death are empty of old age and death. All phenomena are empty, so bodhisattvas practicing the perfection of wisdom are standing by way of taking no stand on anything. Hence, bodhisattvas do not march under the banner of any letters, words, or statements, under the banner of the four noble truths, under the banner of emptiness, or under the banner of anything else. To do so is to have descended into grasping at “I” and “mine” and to practice without skillful means. Bodhisattvas do not grasp at anything because grasping requires a differentiation through language based on causal signs (nimitta), and bodhisattvas see causal signs just as śrāvakas see afflictive emotions. An afflictive emotion is based on settling down on a causal sign for things as real. That causes attachment and hatred. These same causal signs cause bodhisattvas without skillful means to settle down on a basis, path, and set of results as real. This is the case because the religious mendicant Śreṇika, a śrāvaka, gained nirvāṇa by listening to this teaching because it led him to avoid a belief in causal signs. Śreṇika achieved nirvāṇa by realizing that even nirvāṇa could not be grasped through a causal sign. Similarly, bodhisattvas master such a nirvāṇa but do not actually enter into it until their prayers that are vows are fully carried out and they have brought beings to maturity, purified a buddhafiield, and fully awakened to perfect, complete awakening.

i.46 Śāriputra asks Subhūti what does not exist and cannot be apprehended. Subhūti says all phenomena do not exist because all phenomena are empty of an intrinsic nature. A bodhisattva’s mind is never separated from a buddha’s mind because all phenomena are separated from an intrinsic nature. An intrinsic nature is not something real. All phenomena are without defining marks. Training in that way, bodhisattvas go forth to the knowledge of all aspects because nothing has been produced and nothing has gone forth. Everything is empty. Even the ultimate is empty of an intrinsic nature. Training in the perfection of wisdom like this, bodhisattvas get close to awakening.

i.47 Thinking “I am practicing the perfection of wisdom” is a lack of skillful means, a practice that occasions something, or a practice of an enactment (abhisamkāra). Not only does it not even lead to śrāvaka nirvāṇa, it leads to the suffering of saṃsāra. Bodhisattvas who do not have such beliefs and mistaken notions have skillful means because, in reality, there are no dharmas apart from emptiness. Bodhisattvas do not assert any dharma or practice but know all dharmas are the same insofar as they have never been produced, and bodhisattvas remain in the sarvadharmānutpāda meditative stabilization up to the ākāśasaṃgavimuktinirupalepa meditative stabilization. The awakening of such bodhisattvas is prophesied, but only conventionally, not ultimately, because none of the meditative stabilizations ultimately exist. The Lord compliments Subhūti, “the foremost of śrāvakas at the conflict-free stage,” for his explanation.

i.48 Everything is in the state of absolute natural purity where there is no production or defilement, where nothing appears or is enacted. Employing the two meanings of the Sanskrit word vid (“to exist” and “to know”), the Lord says form, and so on, do not exist in the way foolish, ordinary people take them to be, and because they do not exist, they are ignorance. Nothing goes forth, nothing rests. Those who mentally construct a starting point, progress, and a goal do not train in the perfection of wisdom. Those who do not apprehend any phenomenon go forth to the knowledge of all aspects.

i.49 Everything is like an illusion. Everything is just a name and conventional term that in reality is not produced. Bodhisattvas who understand that go forth to the knowledge of all aspects. This frightens new bodhisattvas without spiritual friends. To accept and teach the four noble truths in an absolutist way, apprehending the words as ultimately true, is to fall under the sway of Māra and bad friends. These bad friends dissuade bodhisattvas from this perfection of wisdom, saying that it is not the true doctrine of the Tathāgata. The bad friend may be Māra disguised as a buddha, setting forth an absolutist doctrine that takes the four noble truths as an absolute, and the doctrine of awakening for the sake of others through training in the perfection of wisdom as absurd. The bad friend says that if everything is empty there is no point, dissuading the bodhisattvas from the bodhisattva’s career. Sometimes Māra the bad friend approaches in the form of a mother or father saying rather than stay in the world with all its tortures, make hard work meaningful by working for nirvāṇa; sometimes Māra the bad friend approaches in the form of a monk teaching the doctrine of the four noble truths in an absolutist way.

.. Chapters 11–13 ..

i.50 Explaining the word bodhisattva from many different angles, the text says the basis in reality of the word bodhisattva is no basis at all. The track left by a bodhisattva is like the track left by a bird in space. There is no basis in reality for light, even the light of a tathāgata.

i.51 There follows a list of all phenomena, starting with ordinary wholesome phenomena like honoring parents, and so on, and the nine perceptions of the repulsive state of a body after death, as well as all the other levels of ordinary mindfulness and meditation. It also lists the ordinary unwholesome phenomena like the ten unwholesome actions, and so on; extraordinary phenomena (those same phenomena informed by an understanding of their illusory and ultimate nature); and phenomena without outflows—the purification dharmas in the mindstreams of buddhas, shared in common with other practitioners, and unique to the practice of those following the buddhas.

i.52 The Lord, Śāriputra, and Subhūti explain the term great being from many different angles. A great being is foremost among all the stream enterers, and so on; sees the ultimate nature of beings and treats them all the same and works for them all equally; never entertains a negative thought toward them; cares about the doctrine; perfects the meditative stabilizations and all the other purification dharmas; and is not attached even to the greatest thought, bodhicitta.

i.53 Śāriputra asks why all ordinary foolish beings are not free of attachments and the sense of possession, and Subhūti says that in reality they are, just as the mind of a buddha in its intrinsic nature is without attachment and any sense of possession. All phenomena are equally empty and pure.

i.54 Pūrṇa says a great being is armored with the great armor of the interwoven six perfections based on a concern for all beings. Each of the six perfections of giving, morality, patience, perseverance, concentration, and wisdom incorporates all the other five perfections, and all thirty-six subdivisions of the perfections are informed by the understanding that all phenomena are like illusions, devoid of any intrinsic nature. The practice of them is always focused on and dedicated to the knowledge of all aspects. Such a practice of the perfections brings the bodhisattva close to the very limit of reality—nirvāṇa. With skillful means, entering into all the meditative states without relishing them, taking birth through compassion but not through the force of meditative attainment, turning over everything to perfect and complete awakening for the sake of all beings, bodhisattvas are truly great beings delighting all the buddhas and bodhisattvas in the ten directions.

i.55 Śāriputra asks Pūrṇa why a great being's vehicle is great. It is a great vehicle because when great beings practice the perfection of giving, and so on, it carries them higher and higher through the states of immeasurable love, compassion, joy, and equanimity, and higher and higher through the first to the fourth concentrations and through the four formless absorptions of endless space, endless consciousness, nothing-at-all, and neither perception nor nonperception. In the Great Vehicle bodhisattvas are absorbed in and emerge from all those meditative stabilizations and absorptions without falling to the śrāvaka or pratyekabuddha level.

i.56 The Great Vehicle is a knowledge of all the emptinesses, meditative states, and aspects of the four noble truths by way of not apprehending anything, so it is not a knowledge in any of the three periods of time or in any of the three realms of desire, form, and formlessness. In this sense it is a knowledge that is no knowledge at all. At the same time, the Great Vehicle is of infinite expanse, including all practices and attainments, including maturing beings, purifying a buddhafiield, and complete and perfect awakening.

i.57 How does the Great Vehicle proceed higher and higher? It does so as a practice of all the purification dharmas by a practitioner set on the knowledge of all aspects who does not apprehend anything at all. The practitioner, “from the first thought of awakening up until sitting at the site of awakening,” intentionally appropriates bodies to look after the needs of beings, roams from buddhafiield to buddhafiield, and listens to the teaching of the buddhas without any notion of buddhafiields or beings to benefit. Finally, the practitioner gains the knowledge of all aspects and turns the wheel of the Dharma so that all the buddhas raise their voices in praise.

i.58 Armed with great armor the bodhisattvas enter into a variety of bodies and demonstrate the practice of the six perfections, pervading all world systems with light and shaking the earth, blowing out all the fires in the hells, and so on. Demonstrating the perfection of giving, bodhisattvas cause beings to emerge from the hells and other bad rebirths and be reborn as gods and humans, understanding the performance of the perfections to be illusory, doing everything like a magician, conjuring up worlds made of beautiful materials, and giving food and whatever else beings require or enjoy. The mind of the bodhisattva is always set on the knowledge of all aspects and always concerned with the welfare of every living being, working to establish them in whatever attainment is appropriate to their dispositions, but always knowing the illusory nature of phenomena. That is, the bodhisattvas know that all phenomena, even the knowledge of all aspects, are without defining marks, are not made, and do not occasion anything because there is nothing that could make them, just as in a dream. For this reason, form and so on, all the defilement and purification dharmas, are not bound and are not freed. Nothing is freed because nothing exists, just as in a dream.

i.59 Subhūti asks a series of questions: “Lord, what is the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings? Lord, how have bodhisattva great beings come to have set out in the Great Vehicle? Where will the Great Vehicle have set out? Where will the Great Vehicle stand? Who will go forth in the Great Vehicle?”

i.60 The response to the first question occasions an explanation of all purification dharmas both as a personal practice and as a practice modeling the dharmas as a demonstration for others. It lists and explains the eighteen emptinesses and the meaning of each of the names of all the meditative stabilizations. Similarly, it lists and explains the four applications of mindfulness, occasioning a long explanation of mindfulness of the body through awareness of its makeup as sense faculties and their objects, of physical activity, of breathing, of the body’s constituent elements and different types of filth, and of what it looks like after death. It also explains the rest of the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, the three meditative stabilizations on emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness, the eleven knowledges, and each of the three faculties—the faculty of coming to understand what one does not understand, the faculty of understanding, and the faculty of having understood. There is a further explanation of the stages of meditative stabilization between the desire realm and first concentration level, and from there to the highest formless absorption; of the ten mindfulnesses (of the Three Jewels and so on); and of the four immeasurables and each of the four concentrations, four formless absorptions, eight deliverances, and nine serial absorptions. There is also an explanation of each of the ten powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, and eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, and, finally, a detailed explanation of the types of dhāraṇī based on the letters of the Karoṣṭhī alphabet.

i.61 In response to Subhūti’s question about how bodhisattvas come to have set out in the Great Vehicle, the text says that bodhisattvas do so by ascending from the first of the ten levels up to the last. For each of the ten levels there are a different number of purifications, first set forth in lists and then individually explained in a second section. A bodhisattva great being on the tenth level is called a tathāgata. To reach that level bodhisattvas practice all six perfections, and so on, with skillful means, passing beyond the Śuklavipaśyanā, Gotra, Aṣṭamaka, Darśana, Tanū, Vītarāga, Kṛtāvin, and Pratyekabuddha levels. These are all the fundamental Buddhist attainments of stream enterer, and so on, that bodhisattvas master but do not fully actualize. It then says the practitioner “pass beyond these nine levels and stands on the buddha level.” Even the unshared bodhisattva practice of mastery of all levels as a demonstration for the benefit of others is illusory and transcended. At that point the bodhisattva on the tenth level is modeling the perfect life of a fully awakened being, which is also transcended for the final authentic full awakening.

- i.62 In response to the question “From where will the Great Vehicle go forth?” the text says that a mahāyāna (“great vehicle”) is equivalent to a niryāna that means both “going forth” and “devoid of a vehicle.” The Great Vehicle includes all phenomena and all practices because all are illusory and none has any defining mark. Reality, emptiness, and the unmarked do not go forth from anywhere, and an illusion does not go forth, either. “That vehicle does not move.”
- i.63 In response to the question “Where will the Great Vehicle stand?” the text says it stands nowhere because all phenomena stand nowhere, since even the intrinsic nature of reality is empty of the intrinsic nature of reality. All phenomena, all the noble beings in the results of basic practice, and even the bodhisattva practice stand nowhere.
- i.64 In response to the question “Who will go forth in the Great Vehicle?” the text says no one will go forth in the Great Vehicle because a self, a being, and so on cannot be apprehended anywhere, nor can any of the dharmas that might locate such a being be apprehended. Everything is absolutely pure in its nature and knows no increase or decrease. Nothing is apprehended because everything is empty.

- i.65 The Great Vehicle is great because it surpasses the world. It is like space in that it encompasses all the perfections up to the dhāraṇīs, and just as you cannot apprehend space as coming or going, and just as time is equally just time in all time periods and does not come and go, so too with the Great Vehicle.
- i.66 The Great Vehicle surpasses the world because the world is a construction. The Great Vehicle is equal to space. The directions of space do not make themselves known. Space cannot be qualified by size, color, time, defilement, or purification, as something that should be understood, as free from greed and so on, and there are no levels or paths or results in space. You cannot hear or see or remember space, and it is not included anywhere. In space no thought comes into being, and similarly with the Great Vehicle.

The dharma-constituent (dharmadhātu), space, and beings are infinite because, playing on the similarity of the Sanskrit words sattva (“being,” “state of being”) and sattā (“state of existence”), to be is not to exist, and spaces are states that do not exist, and so too with all phenomena. Just as the state of nirvāṇa has room for all beings, so too does the Great Vehicle.

i.67 All dharmas are unmoving, so the Great Vehicle does not move. The basic nature of all dharmas does not come, does not go, and does not remain. There is no before, middle, and after to the journey of the Great Vehicle because all time periods are empty of those time periods.

i.68 To talk about the Great Vehicle is to talk about the perfection of wisdom because both include all wholesome dharmas. Ultimately there is no difference between any phenomena, so bodhisattvas train in them to master them and demonstrate them to those who benefit from them, not for any goal. This is because all phenomena are illusory and share the same defining mark—no mark at all.

i.69 How is it possible to give instructions to bodhisattvas who cannot be found in any of the three time periods, are unproduced, and are without a limit? A bodhisattva is just a word and cannot be apprehended. The instructions are given with the understanding of that reality.

i.70 Śāriputra poses many questions and Subhūti, in response, says beings (“states of beings”) are not asserted to be at any limit—before, after, or in between—because they are nonexistent (“states of nonexistence”), and the same holds true for all phenomena and practices. There are no bodhisattvas to whom one can give instructions, because form and so on are empty of form and empty of every other dharma. Bodhisattva is just a name plucked out of thin air. The Lord says “self” again and again, but it has absolutely never come into being because it does not exist and is not found, and the same holds true for all phenomena. All phenomena thus are the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature because an intrinsic nature arisen from a union (sāmyogika) does not exist. What does not come into being has no basic nature, so it cannot be instructed or give instruction, and yet it is just an unproduced bodhisattva that practices the perfection of wisdom by not seeing any phenomena other than those that have not come into being. Such bodhisattvas see all phenomena as like illusions and are not scared when given instructions in the perfection of wisdom. The practitioner sees no phenomena at all.

.. Chapter 21 ..

- i.71 Expanding on the responses he provided to Śāriputra in the previous chapter, Subhūti again explains what a bodhisattva and the perfection of wisdom are and what an investigation of phenomena entails. Using different etymologies, he says a bodhisattva is so called because bodhi (“awakening”) is itself one’s state of being (sattva). To awaken to a phenomenon means to know it without settling down on it as ultimately real, to know it through, and as, the different names for it. The perfection (pāramitā) of wisdom is so called because it has “gone far off” (āram itā) or “gone to the other side” (pāram itā) of all phenomena.
- i.72 In a final exchange, Śāriputra and Subhūti say ordinary beings are not already in nirvāṇa or awakened even though all beings and all dharmas are equally not produced and only like illusions, because an unproduced being or dharma has no attainment or clear realization. There are no difficult practices that bodhisattvas have to undertake to reach the goal. Bodhisattvas simply work for the welfare of all beings knowing that everything is unproduced and empty and like an illusion. Attainment and clear realization happen in a nondual way. They exist as mere conventions. The forms of life that arise from afflictions and karma and the purification dharmas are all just conventional terms for the benefit of beings. As for nonproduction, it is not there because something real or not real does not happen—it is the way things are.
- i.73 The doctrine has never been taught because no words have ever been produced. No confidence giving a readiness to speak, and none of the categories and phenomena to be explained, have ever been produced. Everything is empty of a basic nature, so nobody can take any fixed position in regard to anything.
- i.74 Still, the path to awakening is purified by an integrated practice of the six perfections. There are ordinary and extraordinary perfections. The practice of the ordinary perfection of giving is being generous while still attached to the idea of self, the idea of other, and the idea of giving. The extraordinary perfection of giving is free from those attachments. The other perfections are similar. As for the path that is purified, it is the path that includes every practice and result that beings of different dispositions might feel attracted to. It includes all the purification dharmas, and the practice of them all is work at the extraordinary perfection of wisdom. This is the work that all the buddhas of the three time periods have engaged in.
- i.75 Śāriputra says that all beings who would be bodhisattvas always pay attention to the goal, the knowledge of all aspects, in order to be of benefit to beings even though they do not know it. Subhūti agrees, but not when you take the statement as a statement of an absolute truth. Bodhisattvas do not continually pay attention to the goal of the knowledge of all aspects to be of benefit to beings by turning the wheel of the Dharma, because all phenomena are nonexistent and empty.

i.76 This exposition of the doctrine by Subhūti causes the worlds to shake, and the Lord smiles because, simultaneous with it, in a billionfold world system buddhas teaching the same doctrine cause billions of beings to produce the thought of unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

i.77 The assembled gods all, like the sun, emit light, but the light of the Tathāgata, a natural light that is not the maturation of any action, totally eclipses it. The head god, Śatakratu, the one who has performed a hundred of the most complex rituals, asks Subhūti to teach. Subhūti says that even the gods with the greatest accomplishment, even the accomplishment of nirvāṇa, must produce the thought to become awakened for the sake of all beings by training in the perfection of wisdom, and they have the capacity to do so. The perfection of wisdom is to demonstrate the four noble truths, the twelve links of dependent origination, and all the purification dharmas with the thought that by doing so one will gain the knowledge of all aspects for the sake of all beings.

i.78 The practice puts one part of the picture together with all the other parts, mastering all the doctrines and practices while making a detailed and thorough analysis, thinking, “They are selfless, they are not me, and they are not mine.” The thought of awakening, bodhicitta, is a motivation that leads to the planting of wholesome roots—the roots that grow into the awakened state that is of ultimate benefit to self and others. The thought is the wholesome roots in the sense that it remains steady, growing stronger. And it is a dedication in the sense that it remains set on awakening for the sake of others. And yet none of these stages in bodhicitta ultimately exist. They are separated from each other as ordinary enactments and yet ultimately are exactly the same. The bodhisattva practitioner-god thus practices the perfection of wisdom by not settling down on any part, seeing the ultimate unity of the parts and their illusory difference.

i.79 The Lord praises Subhūti for his exposition, and Subhūti reflects how the Lord, as a bodhisattva, engaged in just this practice of the perfection of wisdom. Feeling a sense of gratitude, Subhūti then teaches the perfection of wisdom to the gods. The gods then think they cannot understand a word Subhūti is saying, and Subhūti says he has said nothing, just as nobody in a magical creation says anything. When the gods think this is deep, Subhūti says there is nothing deep. When they ask if nothing has been designated, Subhūti says nothing—awakening is not teachable.

- i.80 The speaker, listener, and teaching are like a dream. Everything is like a dream. Only the great śrāvakas and bodhisattvas, only those with wholesome roots that have been planted well, will receive such a teaching that is not the object of speculative thought.
- i.81 In the perfection of wisdom, the vehicle of the śrāvakas, the vehicle of the pratyekabuddhas, and the bodhisattva's buddha vehicle are taught in detail as performance for the sake of others, because all phenomena are empty.
- i.82 Then the head of the gods magically produces a rain of flowers and Subhūti uses them as an example for practice. Bodhisattva-gods should not train in anything because of not seeing anything. Bodhisattva-gods do not see anything because everything is empty of an intrinsic nature; they train without making a duality out of practice and result, or out of knowledge and an object known. Training in the perfection of wisdom like that, the gods go forth to the knowledge of all aspects.
- i.83 All the perfect instructions Subhūti gives to the gods are given through the sustaining power of the Tathāgata, but they are not sustained by anything, because all phenomena, even emptiness and reality, are not sustained by anything, are not held up by or powered by anything. Nothing is conjoined with or disjoined from reality such that it could be sustained by it. It is just this isolation that is its sustaining power.

.. Chapter 25 ..

- i.84 The gods shout out in delight at this exposition of the perfection of wisdom that presents three vehicles without presenting any phenomena to be apprehended at all. Bodhisattvas training in this perfection of wisdom are called tathāgatas.
- i.85 The Lord says to the gods that when he was a brahmin student in Padmāvati practicing the six perfections and all the other purification dharmas by way of not apprehending anything, the buddha Dīpaṃkara prophesied that in the Fortunate Age, after incalculable eons, he would become the Buddha Śākyamuni.
- i.86 He says to the gods that the perfection of wisdom will protect them and all others from harm, so they should take it up and practice it. The gods say they will always protect the perfection of wisdom and those practicing the perfection of wisdom, because it is the source of all the good in the world.

.. Chapters 26–30 ..

- i.87 The perfection of wisdom is greatly beneficial. It brings benefit to beings through teaching the three vehicles. It prevents conflict and interreligious animosities. The gods naturally guard and protect, and the buddhas and bodhisattvas naturally take notice of, those practicing the perfection of wisdom, because of their demonstration of generosity, morality, forbearance, and so on. They are without any conceit because of seeing all the training they demonstrate as empty, just a demonstration for the benefit of others.

i.88 Even if attacked, the attack does no harm, even when fighting on the front line. Nothing can get through to hurt someone training in the perfection of wisdom.

i.89 There is great benefit from worshiping the physical remains of a tathāgata placed in a reliquary, but that does not compare with the benefit from admiring even just the perfection of wisdom as a physical book, because the physical remains of a tathāgata can be traced back to the perfection of wisdom. The perfection of wisdom, from which the relics of a tathāgata's physical body originate, is the teacher. The Three Jewels and all their benefits come from having the knowledge of all aspects, so the benefit of worshiping even just the physical book that explains it is far greater.

i.90 Why, then, do people not know this? Why do so many worship statues and reliquaries of the Tathāgata, but not the perfection of wisdom? It is because an admiration for the perfection of wisdom that teaches the thought of awakening and the illusory nature of all practices and attainments is not easily gained. How many beings even admire basic morality and the Three Jewels more than the experiences of saṃsāra? It is extremely rare to admire the thought of awakening; it is even rarer to admire the thought of awakening as just an empty demonstration.

i.91 Great is the merit gained from building a reliquary of gold, jewels, and so on to hold the remains of a tathāgata's body. But even just writing out the perfection of wisdom and admiring it produces even greater merit. Even if as many beings as can be imagined were to make as many huge reliquaries as can be imagined and worship the remains of tathāgatas placed in them, it still would not produce as much merit as that which issues forth from just writing out the perfection of wisdom and admiring it, because all ordinary and extraordinary wholesome acts and attainments come from the perfection of wisdom. All the benefits here and in the beyond derive from it because the thought to fully awaken to everything that could benefit any being anywhere at any time informs the perfection of wisdom.

i.92 Just reciting the perfection of wisdom turns back those of other faiths who want to criticize it. There is no value in attempting to teach it to those who have decided it is no good. Māra cannot stand it and wants to sow confusion, but the head god, seeing this, just recites the perfection of wisdom and Māra turns back. The other gods rejoice and throw flowers into the air.

i.93        Ānanda asks why, of the six perfections, the perfection of wisdom is privileged. It is because the other perfections become perfections when they are informed by wisdom. When the practitioner dedicates the training in the perfections to the knowledge of all aspects in a nondual way, within knowing that all phenomena are empty and illusory in nature, they become perfections.

i.94        The good qualities that issue forth from the perfection of wisdom are innumerable and immeasurable. Bodhisattvas training in the perfection of wisdom attract all the gods who come to admire or listen. The beneficial presence of those celestial beings is known by a special fragrance, so the place where there is a copy of the perfection of wisdom in written form, or where it is being practiced, should be kept clean and decorated beautifully. Training in the perfection of wisdom, bodhisattvas feel physically and mentally at ease, have good dreams, hear the perfection of wisdom being taught everywhere, see tathāgata reliquaries and the people worshipping them, and are filled with enthusiasm and energy.

i.95        The perfection of wisdom, even just in book form, is more valuable than an entire world filled with reliquaries containing the material remains of tathāgatas, but still it cannot be seized on and taken up. Ultimately it does not bestow any benefit. The perfection of wisdom deserves worship. Just as the other gods worship the throne of the head god when he is not there, so too all beings come to worship the perfection of wisdom as the place where all the tathāgatas and all good qualities are located. The perfection of wisdom cannot be located anywhere; there is no causal sign through which it can be grasped. To see the Tathāgata is to see the perfection of wisdom. For a bodhisattva to recite the perfection of wisdom is equivalent to the buddhas teaching the twelve divisions of the teachings—the discourses, melodious narrations, predictions, and so on. It is equivalent to even an infinite number of tathāgatas in every direction doing so, because all the tathāgatas issue forth from the perfection of wisdom, which is the source of their knowledge of all aspects.

i.96        Bodhisattvas who have written out the perfection of wisdom, borne it in mind, recited it, mastered it, properly paid attention to it, and illuminated it for others face no problems, just as a debtor pursued by creditors is safe with a rich ruler. Nothing can get at such bodhisattvas, just as a tremendous celestial jewel wards off all sickness and keeps poisonous snakes and so on away, and just as such a jewel keeps the temperature constant and turns clear water into water of different colors. Great benefits issue forth from respecting and worshipping the reliquaries, just not nearly as much as issues forth from the perfection of wisdom. Just as the merit from worshipping a reliquary is not as great as the merit from worshipping the perfection of wisdom, the merit from writing out the perfection of wisdom and worshipping it is not as great as from giving it to others to worship. Even more merit comes from giving an explanation of it to others, because from the explanation come the attainments of the three vehicles. “Because bodhisattvas have come about from the perfection of wisdom; tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas have come about from bodhisattvas; and śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas have come about from tathāgatas.”

i.97 Bodhisattvas rejoice in a wholesome deed and dedicate the merit from that to awakening for the sake of all beings. Just this surpasses the merit from a deed done only for the benefit of the one who does it. Bodhisattvas put together the vast merit made from rejoicing in all the activities of all the buddhas and their teaching and in the training and achievements of śrāvakas, making it into something shared in common with all beings and dedicating it to awakening. But even as the bodhisattvas do so, the objective supports (the wholesome activities, the beings, and the awakening) that come together in that rejoicing and dedicating state of mind do not exist and cannot be apprehended. A proper dedication is made within understanding that the thought of awakening, all the wholesome and beneficial acts it motivates, the rejoicing in those, the dedication of them to awakening, and awakening itself have never been produced but are just illusory.

i.98 Belief in and admiration for the perfection of wisdom—in the sense of all that is for the benefit of beings—gets stronger and stronger when this is understood and put into practice. Bodhisattvas new to the practice who do this practice of rejoicing and dedication while grasping at causal signs have a wrong perception, wrong thought, and wrong view. A dedication made to awakening while grasping at causal signs is like food with poison in it. The dedication should be done in the way all the tathāgatas have done it, within comprehending the true nature of all phenomena as without differentiating marks. Admiration and belief, rejoicing and dedication, do not belong to the three realms or three time periods. Nothing dedicates anything to anything. When dedication is done properly, the merit from it is immense. The gods praise this dedication and billions of gods from other worlds approach and give praise. The Lord says to them that the greatest dedication offered by billions of gods who have produced the thought of awakening while apprehending something is not as meritorious as the dedication done without apprehending anything. The dedication done without grasping, without rejecting, without falsely projecting, without acquiring, and without apprehending the wholesome roots—with the thought that there is no production, no cessation, no defilement, and no purification of a dharma—is the supreme dedication.

- i.99 All wholesome dharmas come from the perfection of wisdom, so it should be treated as the Teacher. The perfection of wisdom is like the eyes that guide the other perfections. One finds and produces the knowledge of all aspects within oneself by not finding and producing any phenomenon. This is the training in the perfection of wisdom. Still, one forsakes the perfection of wisdom by thinking it is pointless. One has confidence in the perfection of wisdom as a training in the knowledge of all aspects by not having confidence in any phenomenon or in the attainment of any result.

- i.100 If the perfection of wisdom is indeed in accord with the praises heaped upon it, why do so many have no interest in it, or worse, reject it out of hand as inauthentic doctrine? Someone who comprehends this doctrine is someone who has heard it and admired it in many past lives. Those who worshiped the buddhas in past lives while apprehending something are those who find the doctrine offensive. When they oppose the teaching of the perfection of wisdom, the source of such benefit, their action brings the most terrible results in the future. Their future suffering is so terrible it should not even be talked about, because it would make the listener's heart burst.
- i.101 Those who have fallen into the clutches of bad friends and do not have the requisite wholesome roots do not believe in the perfection of wisdom; they cannot accept the emptiness of all phenomena. There is no saṃsāra or nirvāṇa. Everything is pure. The purity of the final result, the knowledge of all aspects, and the purity of the suffering aggregates is the same purity.

- i.102 Purity is deep, illuminating, does not go from one form of life to the next, is undefiled, knows no attainment or clear realization, does not come into being anywhere, and does not help or hinder anything or take hold of any truth. Some apprehend this perfection of wisdom through a causal sign and make it into an absolute truth. They are far from the perfection of wisdom. If they apprehend even the finest qualities of a buddha, they have attachment. The attachment happens when they perceive the thought of awakening, the path, what knowledge comprehends, the results of the training—all the buddhas of the three time periods and their qualities—and, rejoicing in it for the sake of all beings, turn it over to the knowledge of all aspects. It is attachment because all these have no basic nature. To teach others the perfection of wisdom they must practice the perfection of wisdom without any perception of it. To entertain any notion of tathāgatas, wholesome roots growing into awakening, or complete nirvāṇa is to have attachment.

i.103 The tathāgatas give an excellent explanation of the doctrine of the perfection of wisdom, but it does not make anything better or worse; like praising or criticizing space, it does not change anything. To train in the perfection of wisdom is to train in space. This enables the trainee to become armed with an armor that withstands all the hardships endured in looking after the needs of others. The gods and others are not needed to guard the space-like perfection of wisdom. Just the practice of it guards against everything. Nothing can hurt a trainee who does not falsely project anything.

i.104 The gods magically reduplicate the performance of the teaching of the perfection of wisdom with the same words, the same interlocutors, the same gods, and the same buddha in all the ten directions. The Lord says that the future buddha Maitreya will teach exactly the same doctrine in exactly the same way. Like a great jewel this perfection of wisdom relieves all suffering and brings all results. It apprehends nothing, causes nothing to be left behind, and causes nothing to be attained. It is not a clear realization. The gods cheer this turning of the wheel of the Dharma that is no turning at all.

i.105 Subhūti lists one hundred and seventy-three qualities or aspects of the perfection of wisdom. The head god and Śāriputra praise the perfection of wisdom and say that those who train in it have had respect for it in their past lives. They practice it by not apprehending anything, including the practice itself. Those able to practice the perfection of wisdom are irreversible from perfect, complete awakening, and their awakening is prophesied by the buddhas. They know that this is so, just as a person who has come through a dense jungle knows a city is near when they see the first clearings on the edge of the jungle, or a person who has set off to see the ocean knows it is near when the land flattens out and treeless dunes appear, or they know spring has come when the buds appear on the trees, or when a pregnant woman feels the feelings that portend the birth of her child.

- i.106 Subhūti says everything in the perfection of wisdom is to benefit others in myriad ways. It incorporates everything that makes people happy. Those who practice it do so in order to reach awakening for the benefit of the world. They master and demonstrate all practices for others, in accord with their capacities and propensities, and yet the practice is done within seeing that there is nothing to be taken away and nothing to be added to inconceivable reality.
- i.107 The perfection of wisdom is valuable and, just like wealth, attracts danger and has to be protected. Māra tries to hinder those copying out, or reading, or practicing the perfection of wisdom. However, Māra is unable to do so because the buddhas always stand behind those training in the perfection of wisdom. The presence of the perfection of wisdom depends on the wholesome roots of the trainees.
- i.108 First the perfection of wisdom circulates in the south, then in Vartani (the east), and from there it goes to the northern regions, protecting beings from future bad rebirths. In the last five hundred years it is the perfection of wisdom that does the work of the buddhas. But even when it has spread widely in the northern regions there will be many bodhisattvas there without the good fortune to hear the perfection of wisdom, or who will be frightened off by it. Those who do train in it have become familiar with it in lifetimes gone by. They are committed to the welfare of others and in the presence of the buddhas declare their commitment. But even those without familiarity from past lives will, through gradually practicing giving and so on, build up wholesome roots and be reborn in more fortunate forms of life where they will hear and respond positively to the teaching. All who strive to train in the six perfections will finally do so.

- i.109 The hindrances faced by those training in the perfection of wisdom are many. Among them are being overly confident about what the perfection of wisdom is and pontificating about it and fooling around when making copies of the perfection of wisdom; being turned off by not finding in the perfection of wisdom specific historical references to oneself and one's situation, and privileging books that teach only the fundamental Buddhist practices; wanting to be a good monk or nun to get respect from the wider community and, in order to do so, privileging books that help with that aim even after learning about the perfection of wisdom; learning the fundamental practices from the perfection of wisdom and making oneself out to be an expert who then explains them in an absolutist fashion; and turning the perfection of wisdom as a book or knowledge or practice into an absolute. Even settling down on the perfection of wisdom as inconceivable and beyond letters in an absolutist fashion is a hindrance, as is getting distracted by ordinary affairs, or becoming fascinated by books on fundamental Buddhist practices so that one neglects the perfection of wisdom. Besides these hindrances, there are also all the various incompatibilities that occur between students and teachers. All these constitute hindrances to the perfection of wisdom.

- i.110 Just as a mother with many children is looked after by her offspring because they feel a sense of gratitude when they think of how she gave birth to them and taught them about the world, so too bodhisattvas and buddhas feel a sense of gratitude and look after the perfection of wisdom that gave birth to them and teaches them the categories of the aggregates, three realms, and so on, all the unshared purification dharmas and the knowledge of a buddha, and all of them as being ultimately without an intrinsic nature and conventionally like illusions. They feel a sense of gratitude and look after the perfection of wisdom because it has also taught them to know how different beings feel and think, and all the wrong views that people entertain, including the different types of wrong view based on a belief in going on and on forever or being completely annihilated. It has also taught them the true reality of all phenomena and the perfect, complete awakening of a tathāgata to that reality.

.. Chapter 43 ..

- i.111 The perfection of wisdom is deep because all phenomena are empty, not produced, and do not come and go. The tathāgatas use conventional labels as ordinary conventional terms, not as ultimates. The defining marks of phenomena are not generated out of the phenomena themselves. They are all empty of marks. There is no mark of space. Reality remains what it is regardless of what is or is not taught, regardless of what is or is not known. The Tathāgata illuminates the diversity of phenomena by illuminating ultimate reality, illuminating illusory diversity and ultimate sameness. The Tathāgata illuminates all the mental states of a bodhisattva on the path to awakening and illuminates the great love and compassion and so on of bodhisattvas through their absence of any differentiating marks. They show gratitude to and appreciation for the perfection of wisdom because she gives birth to and illuminates phenomena for bodhisattvas and tathāgatas. They do so by recollecting that nothing has been done or experienced. The perfection of wisdom gives birth to and reveals all beneficial dharmas just because neither the perfection of wisdom nor any dharma is produced or revealed. The perfection of wisdom also reveals them by properly saying what they are from the conventional and ultimate perspectives.

i.112 The work of the buddhas that has made the perfection of wisdom available to the world is tremendous, inconceivable work. This work is the labor to protect, look after, and benefit living beings.

i.113 All dharmas are inconceivable and equal to the unequalled. There is no conceiving them because their intrinsic nature is inconceivable. They are immeasurable because there is nothing with which to measure them.

i.114 Just as a great king delegates all the work of the kingdom, similarly, all the work of the bodhisattvas and tathāgatas is delegated to the perfection of wisdom that incorporates everything of benefit to all, in accord with their capacities and inclinations.

i.115 Bodhisattvas master but do not actualize all the realizations and attainments of all stream enterers and other śrāvakas included in the perfection of wisdom. This attainment of bodhisattvas is called “the forbearance for the nonproduction of dharmas.” Even though billions of śrāvakas have entered into nirvāṇa and billions of bodhisattvas have entered into awakening, thanks to the perfection of wisdom there is neither less nor more of it.

i.116 Those who immediately believe in the perfection of wisdom in this life have definitely been humans before, or gods in Tuṣita in the presence of Maitreya. They are like cows that do not let go of their calves. Others will be overwhelmed when they hear the perfection of wisdom and black out. Those who hear and practice the perfection of wisdom a bit but then move on to something else are those who heard it in prior lives but did not put what they heard into practice. Those are the new bodhisattvas. They have faith and enjoy the perfection of wisdom but do not train fully in it.

i.117 Those who are adrift in an ocean without anything to hold on to sink and drown. Similarly, those who have just faith without a true basis in ultimate reality slowly degenerate in their training in the perfection of wisdom and fall to the śrāvaka level. When you carry water in a mud pot that has not been fired, it dissolves the pot and everything is lost. Those without skillful means who train in the perfection of wisdom are similar. If a ship has not been well joined and caulked it will sink on its voyage. Those with skillful means who have faith without taking anything as a basis reach the knowledge of all aspects. A decrepit old man cannot stand alone but with helpers under both arms can move. Similarly, with the assistance of the perfection of wisdom and skillful means one reaches the knowledge of all aspects and does not fall to the śrāvaka or pratyekabuddha level.

- i.118 Bodhisattvas are not assisted if, when they give, they think “I am giving” and so on, falsely projecting a giver, a gift, the act of giving, and so on. Those free from those constructions are assisted by the perfection of wisdom and skillful means and will go to the farthest limit.

- i.119 There are neophyte bodhisattvas and bodhisattvas who are firm in the training. The former ones have faith but can waver. They must write out the perfection of wisdom, read it aloud, memorize it, and so on. They must worship it and must find teachers to teach it properly, teachers who explain the practice of the six perfections without forming any ideas about them. The bodhisattvas who are firm are those who do what is difficult. They are the world’s refuge, resting place, final ally, island, leader, and support. They teach others the authentic perfection of wisdom and take them to the farther shore where all phenomena are a unity because they have neither come nor gone.

- i.120 The attributes, tokens, and signs that bodhisattvas are irreversible from awakening are the absence of greed, hatred, and confusion, and so on. Armed with the armor that knows all phenomena are illusory, they will never be upset at any hardship involved in working for beings and will never give up on impossible beings and enter śrāvaka nirvāṇa.

- i.121 Meditation on the perfection of wisdom is the disintegration of meditation on the perfection of wisdom. An irreversible bodhisattva is not attached to any phenomenon, always practices the six perfections, and, familiar with the perfection of wisdom from the past, is not daunted by what the training entails.

- i.122 The perfection of wisdom is deep because ultimately the defiled state of form and so on is the same as the purified state of awakening. At first the Tathāgata thought that the perfection of wisdom would be too difficult for

- self-centered people habituated to dualistic thinking to understand, and he desisted from teaching it. The perfection of wisdom is a doctrine that is in harmony with reality.
- i.123 The elder Subhūti takes after the Lord because he teaches with emptiness as his point of departure. He takes after him because in suchness he is the same as the Tathāgata, because all dharmas and the Tathāgata are the same in suchness.
- i.124 The universe shakes from this exposition, and the gods strew flowers. Sixty monks without skillful means enter śrāvaka nirvāṇa because they apprehend a difference in dharmas and have not entered into the secure state of a bodhisattva. They were attached to the thought that they were giving gifts, being moral and patient, persevering, entering into concentration, and being wise. Even though the meditation on emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness of those bodhisattva monks and of the monks with skillful means was the same, the bodhisattvas with skillful means cultivated love, compassion, and so on and finally became awakened. The goal of the bodhisattva monks without skillful means was the same goal defined by bodhicitta, but still they fell to the śrāvaka level because of being separated from the perfection of wisdom and skillful means. They are like a huge bird with stunted wings that takes off for a long flight but has to set down before reaching the goal.
- i.125 Bodhisattvas who, from the start, practice the six perfections guided by the perfection of wisdom and skillful means, always with attention fixed on the knowledge of all aspects, do not fall to the śrāvaka level.
- i.126 There is an argument over whether awakening is hard to gain or easy to gain. Subhūti says awakening is easy because all dharmas are empty and there is nothing to be attained, while Śāriputra says it is quite the opposite, because it would never occur to space to think, "I will become awakened," and yet bodhisattvas, knowing all dharmas are like space, still become fully awakened. Subhūti says nobody is irreversible from awakening because no phenomenon ever turns back from anything to anywhere. Śāriputra objects that, in that case, the presentation of three vehicles does not make sense, and Pūrṇa chimes in to ask if Subhūti believes in a single awakening, not three. Subhūti says there are no awakenings because in emptiness nothing can be apprehended.
- i.127 The Lord praises Subhūti's exposition and then Subhūti says that to go forth to perfect, complete awakening, bodhisattvas must treat all beings the same, must see them all as relatives and close friends, and must never have a negative thought toward them. For their sake bodhisattvas must do every practice and so on, master every śrāvaka level, and enter the secure state of a bodhisattva. Bodhisattvas must personally do all this and encourage and help all others to do it, too, but always without apprehending any phenomenon.

i.128 Another sign that bodhisattvas are irreversible from awakening is being firm in their understanding of the illusory nature of phenomena and not being reborn under the power of afflictive emotions. They are bodhisattvas who, as ordained persons, keep clean and act appropriately. Even when Māra shows the hardships of saṃsāra, urges these bodhisattvas to enter into the peace of śrāvaka nirvāṇa, and says the perfection of wisdom is just fantasy, they remain unmoved.

i.129 Māra says the perfection of wisdom is a nihilistic doctrine, but bodhisattvas investigate and see that liberation and awakening are possible because phenomena lack an intrinsic nature. Bodhisattvas who fall to the śrāvaka level have turned back, are reversible, while bodhisattvas who do not do so are irreversible. Irreversible bodhisattvas make a show of living an ordinary householder's life to bring beings to maturity, but they do not use their status or powers for self-gratification. When they are ordained, they do not hoodwink people who have faith in them and are never swayed by those who question the perfection of wisdom and insist that only the fundamental Buddhist texts are authentic. They distinguish the spiritual from absolutism. Their attitude to texts is inclusive. They ensure that the words of the tathāgatas are not lost. Regardless of the language, who is speaking, or where it is said, they protect all the texts of the tathāgatas, knowing them because of a dhāraṇī based on doctrines and benefits—that is, they know them because they know the ultimate and conventional nature of phenomena.

i.130 The deep places are emptiness and so on, which is to say, nirvāṇa unseparated from all the illusory phenomena practiced for the sake of all beings. Bodhisattvas motivated by the thought of awakening are always irreversible from awakening, obsessed with becoming awakened for the welfare of others, like a man with a strong libido who has set up a date with a beautiful woman and thinks of nothing but having sex with her. The strength and intensity of the bodhisattvas' thought of awakening stops any of the faults that would cause them to turn back and enter śrāvaka nirvāṇa. The merits they amass are incredible in comparison to the merits of stream enterers and so on. All the fundamental Buddhist practices of the śrāvakas are extremely important, and engaging in them produces great merit. But the merit does not compare with even a fraction of the merit gained when the practices are performed as models for the benefit of others, with a mind set on perfect awakening, within knowing the ultimate and conventional nature of all practices and results.

i.131 The thought of awakening is there from the beginning of the practice, motivating the bodhisattvas to reach the goal, awakening. It is not the first or the last instant in the continuity of the bodhisattvas' unbroken motivation that results in the attainment of that goal. Like a wick getting burned up, not by the first tongue or the last tongue of flame, but nevertheless being burned up, so too with the thought of awakening and the attainment of awakening. Bodhisattvas gain all ten bodhisattva levels and reach awakening, always motivated by the thought of awakening, but that thought is never produced and ultimately never moves from suchness or ultimate reality. The movement of thought, the habitual ideas that come up, are absent, but not because the causal signs that occasion them have disintegrated.

i.132 This chapter is about action and the purification of a buddhafield. If somebody actually murders someone, and if somebody else does so in a dream and on awakening thinks that what happened in the dream actually happened and is happy about it, it is the same. The effects of actions are based on the state of mind when the act is done. There has to be an objective support and intention. In the absence of those there is no result. Ultimately there is no karmic cause and effect, but there is on the conventional level.

i.133 Śāriputra asks Maitreya, who is in his last life before awakening, if the practice of the perfections results in awakening. Maitreya says ultimately there is no Maitreya there to answer, and nobody to be responded to. Śāriputra is a worthy one, but there is nothing there that can be apprehended that makes him a worthy one.

i.134 Bodhisattvas get closer to awakening by providing all beings with what they need in their day-to-day lives, ensuring that later all beings in their buddhafield will have the enjoyments of gods. Similarly, seeing ugliness and people with missing limbs, they practice morality; seeing hatred, they practice patience; seeing laziness, they practice perseverance; seeing those separated from the four immeasurables and so on, they practice concentration; and seeing ignorance all around, they practice wisdom so that all beings in their buddhafields will be free from those faults. They practice so that in their buddhafields there will be none of the terrible forms of life and polluted environments, and no acquisitiveness, caste identities, despots, social injustices of all types, or the ordinary problems that come with an ordinary body. They practice so that they will have not one but billions of buddhafi elds for all beings.

- i.135 A nun in the retinue, sister Gaᅅgadevī, states her commitment to such a practice of the six perfections and worships the Lord with golden-colored flowers. He predicts her future awakening as the buddha Suvarᅅapaᅅpa.

- i.136 Bodhisattvas master all meditations but do not actualize their results. A bodhisattva who radiates love and kindness and shows the way to freedom without actualizing the results of the meditations on emptiness and so on, like a bird on the wing that moves through space without alighting anywhere, and like an archer who keeps a series of arrows up in the air by shooting them one after the other, is like a good-looking hero, an expert in weaponry and all crafts and vocations, loved by many persons, who, having gained great wealth, can lead relatives out of the dense jungle where they are caught, keeping them happy and hopeful without poisoning their minds against their enemies and opponents.
- i.137 Bodhisattvas do not cross the very limit of reality into complete nirvāᅅa until all the work is done. Bodhisattvas do not forsake beings, remaining in the emptiness meditation without actualizing the śrāvaka nirvāᅅa until all beings are no longer afflicted by ignorance. Bodhisattvas free them from the causal signs that occasion the differentiation and valuation of male and female, different realms and so on, and from pointless wishes for future attainments, even the attainment of the knowledge of all aspects. Bodhisattvas practicing mastery of the three fundamental practices of emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness in this way are irreversible from awakening. There are not many who master the śrāvaka and bodhisattva practices without becoming attached to them as absolutes.

- i.138 A sign that bodhisattvas are irreversible is that even in dreams there is no attraction to śrāvaka nirvāᅅa, and so on, and that upon waking from seeing the suffering of the world in a dream, the determination to help beings is even stronger. Another sign is unleashing the controlling power of truth to stop flames engulfing villages and exorcising demons. These signs can give an opening to Māra. The successes make the bodhisattvas think, "Wow! I did that," and thereby think that their awakening is prophesied when in fact they are not yet at a level where it is. Māra makes those bodhisattvas go astray by falsely predicting their awakening, which they believe because the prophecy includes all sorts of details they mistakenly think only a buddha could know. These bodhisattvas do not actually know the signs of an irreversible bodhisattva. And during their careers, as long as they do not come to terms with their misplaced pride, their pride in being bodhisattvas and not just śrāvakas, they run the risk of falling to the śrāvaka level and entering nirvāṇa. It is like a monk who incurs any one of the four root downfalls. He is no longer a monk. It is similar with this misplaced pride. Bodhisattvas who look down on other bodhisattvas incur an even worse downfall. Māra also confuses these bodhisattvas about the value of strict retreat in isolation, giving them a misplaced pride that theirs is a certain path on which they are irreversible from awakening. In fact, isolation is mental isolation, that is, freedom from all attachments and the false sense of superiority. Bodhisattvas in retreat who return to a settlement and speak badly of those bodhisattvas who are engaged in worldly life out of a misplaced sense of pride in their own religious practice are vulgar and gross. They are like a robber who steals the authentic spiritual practice from bodhisattvas.

i.139 Bodhisattvas must distinguish true spiritual friends from false ones. Buddhas and śrāvakas who expound the teachings of the Tathāgata are a bodhisattva's friend. The basic Buddhist practices of the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening are included in the six perfections and are a bodhisattva's friend. To bring beings to maturity bodhisattvas should gather students in four ways: giving gifts, kind words, beneficial actions, and consistency between words and deeds. Bodhisattvas gather those attracted to fundamental Buddhist teachings by practicing the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening. The defilements they counteract arise because beings grasp as "I" and "mine" phenomena empty of any defining mark.

i.140 The merit from worshiping a billion beings who become human and gain awakening is not as great as the merit from staying attentive to the perfection of wisdom and teaching it to others. Those attentive to the perfection of wisdom generate stronger and stronger love, compassion, joy, and equanimity. The merit from worshiping and looking after them is immense. If a bodhisattva who has bodhicitta and is attentive to the knowledge of all aspects were to lose that precious thought, it would be like a person getting the finest diamond and then losing it. It would be unbearable. All the person would think about would be getting it back. But ultimately even bodhicitta has no intrinsic nature. Ultimately reality does not move from reality.

i.141 The wholesome roots from practicing all the other practices are not as strong as those gained from practicing the perfection of wisdom, from which those other practices all issue forth. Those who hear and practice the perfection of wisdom have strong wholesome roots. Even a person who produces one instant of bodhicitta informed by the perfection of wisdom makes more merit and is blessed with strong wholesome roots. That practice surpasses all other practices and brings the person closer to the tathāgatas.

i.142 Such a practice also rouses Māra to seek a way to infiltrate the mind of the practitioner to prevent awakening. If there was a time before when the practitioner's belief in the perfection of wisdom was not complete, if the bodhisattva believes their attainment is real and feels entitled to admiration, if the practitioner is unsure what the perfection of wisdom is and entertains certain reservations about the perfection of wisdom, or if the practitioner is without spiritual friends, it provides Māra with the opportunity. Māra makes terrible things happen in the world to hinder the continuity of the practitioner's thought of awakening. For example, Māra makes practitioners glib so that they can give great talks and get crowds to listen, building up a false sense of their own excellence. Māra rejoices at that, thinking that those in the realms under his control are increasing in number. When Māra sees a bodhisattva become sectarian, he rejoices and encourages the fight with other śāvakas and other bodhisattvas. When he sees a bodhisattva envious of another, more advanced bodhisattva, Māra rejoices. For as long as those envious thoughts engendering animosity toward another bodhisattva last, for that many more eons the bodhisattva will have to practice to reach the goal, although sincerely facing up to the grossness of such thoughts and making a confession prevents Māra from achieving his aim. Bodhisattvas should not live together with śrāvakas, but if they do, they should feel no malice toward them. When bodhisattvas are together with other bodhisattvas they should treat them as their teachers. In that way they pursue an equal and proper training in the perfection of wisdom.

i.143 All phenomena are the same in emptiness. There is no ending, becoming detached, or cessation of anything that decreases reality. Māra cannot infiltrate and break a bodhisattva who trains in light of this, and the training leads to awakening and the turning of the wheel of the Dharma. It ensures a perfect human rebirth not through the force of earlier karma but through compassion, the purification of a buddhfield, and all the buddhadharmas. Bodhisattvas practicing like this are as rare as nuggets of gold and silver in the Jambū River. Just as more people think they have a chance to be a local ruler than a wheel-turning emperor, more people seek the śrāvaka attainments than a bodhisattva's perfect awakening. The training for awakening includes all trainings, just as the view of the perishable collection incorporates all wrong views. When you die and the life faculty leaves, every other faculty shuts down as well, and so too with the perfection of wisdom and the other perfections.

i.144 Out of admiration for bodhisattvas who have produced the thought of awakening, the head god strews flowers. The wholesome root planted by those who rejoice in the thought produced by those bodhisattvas is greater and greater relative to the level those bodhisattvas have reached. The merit is infinite even for those who have just set out on the path. They are pleasing to the tathāgatas, and Māra cannot harm them because of the amount of merit they amass. Those who amass such merit should turn it all over so the root grows into awakening.

i.145 It does not occur to space or to a magical creation to think, "I am far from one thing and close to another." There is no thought in space and there is no thought in ultimate reality. Conceptualization and thought construction are totally absent.

i.146 Still there are the five forms of life and the stream enterers and so on. Ordinary beings motivated by error pile up karma that matures into different forms of life. Stream enterers and so on escape from that stream of suffering existence because they are free from all thought construction.

i.147 The training is not ultimately worthwhile because the goal is not ultimately worthwhile. The gods rejoice in bodhisattvas who have produced the perfection of wisdom and engage in such training without falling into nirvāṇa before the goal is reached. It is not difficult to avoid nirvāṇa, but it is difficult to work for the welfare of beings because beings are like space, worthless. Those who do so are those who do what is difficult and deserve praise. They are tussling with space. Even a billion Māras cannot hinder bodhisattvas whose training is endowed with two sets of two qualities: "They view all dharmas as emptiness and they do not give up on all beings," and "They are true to their word and watched out for by the lord buddhas." The Lord is thrilled when he sees bodhisattvas engaged in such training. He sees and is thrilled by bodhisattvas following the buddha Akṣobhya by training in this perfection of wisdom, even if they are not yet at the end of their training. In this training there is neither attainment nor attainer. There is no change in reality whether the training is done or is not done.

i.148 The head god praises Subhūti for his exposition. Subhūti does not apprehend any perfections or anything else in which to train. The Lord agrees, and when the gods shower petals on him, six thousand monks in the retinue state their aspiration to enter into the dwelling in the perfection of wisdom that Subhūti has demonstrated. Prompted by Ānanda, the Lord then prophesies the future awakening of the six thousand monks in the eon called Tārakopama, when all will become buddhas called Avakīrṇakusuma. The Lord then entrusts Ānanda with the teaching of the perfection of wisdom and says, “If I am dear to you and you have not given up on me, then, Ānanda, love this deep perfection of wisdom, make it dear, and do not give up on it. One way or the other you must not let even just a single line of this deep perfection of wisdom go to waste.” Complete awakening is reached only by training in the perfection of wisdom. It is the training of all buddhas. If any of the Lord’s teaching is explained, the Lord is happy, but never as happy as when even one line of the perfection of wisdom is explained. The good that comes from explaining just one line surpasses the good from explaining the śrāvaka training for nirvāṇa to billions of people, even just giving an authentic explanation for a second, because in that second the bodhisattva would personally want to reach awakening and would want all other beings to do so as well.

i.149 The Lord miraculously causes the buddha Akṣobhya teaching his retinue to appear before the assembled retinue and then causes the entire vision to disappear. Just as they cannot be seen, all phenomena are beyond the field of vision. Nothing sees anything. One trains in the perfection of wisdom but does not think one can take the measure of it, just as one cannot take the full measure of space. You can measure the words in books, but you cannot measure the perfection of wisdom, because it is inexhaustible. Everything good and all the buddhas who have reached awakening come from this perfection of wisdom, but it has not been depleted. The Lord extends his tongue, with which he had covered his face, and says it could never speak a falsehood. He urges Ānanda to take care of the perfection of wisdom.

- i.150 Just as space is inexhaustible, so too the perfection of wisdom, form and so on, and awakening are inexhaustible. Insight into dependent origination and there being no beginning or end is the distinctive attribute of a bodhisattva seated at the site of awakening who reaches the knowledge of all aspects. Through that insight, the bodhisattva realizes the emptiness of all phenomena, and Māra realizes that the bodhisattva is about to be awakened and feels a stab of pain.
- i.151 Bodhisattvas model the thirty-six subdivisions of the six perfections. Standing in the perfection of wisdom, bodhisattvas perfect concentration with the two meditative stabilizations, the śiṃhavijṛmbhita and the viṣkandaka. With greater and greater mental agility and insight bodhisattvas enter into and leave absorption in the meditative states of the three realms, interspersing them with entry into the cessation absorptions and into ordinary, unconcentrated states. Knowing their ultimate and illusory nature, bodhisattvas are able to leave one state and enter into another, leaping from one state to another, transcending accomplishments that are in ultimate truth no accomplishment at all.

- i.152 Bodhisattvas with such a skillful practice of the perfections have been at it for billions of eons serving countless buddhas, building up large wholesome roots. All the perfections are equally perfections, but the perfection of wisdom is foremost, like the four continents around which the heavens revolve, or like a wheel-turning emperor who obtains that status when in possession of the seven precious treasures. Just as scoundrels cannot violate a woman with a husband and opponents cannot defeat a well-armed soldier, Māra cannot harm the practice of the other perfections when they are joined with the perfection of wisdom. The perfection of wisdom goes together with the other perfections, leading them. The perfection of wisdom views the ultimate nature of all phenomena. Bodhisattvas who form any notion of training in the perfections are far away from the perfection of wisdom. Just as the different branches of a wheel-turning emperor's army accompany the emperor, so too the other perfections are present with the perfection of wisdom.
- i.153 If all the perfections are empty of an intrinsic nature, how, by training in them, do bodhisattvas reach awakening? Bodhisattvas see that beings suffer because the ordinary state of beings is a distorted state of mind. They model the six perfections for them, but when giving them gifts, they do not see a giver, recipient, or act of giving and so on. Among all the perfections the perfection of wisdom is the most important because it models taking hold of all beneficial phenomena, standing in the knowledge of all aspects, but without standing anywhere, without any attachment or clinging to anything as ultimately real. From that training comes the greatest merit. Bodhisattvas who cling to the states they are in as they model the perfection of wisdom for others are no longer training in the perfection of wisdom and will not be able to accomplish great compassion, the training in the six perfections, and final awakening.

i.154 To bring beings to maturity, bodhisattvas train in the six perfections. Bodhisattvas are just like those who want to eat mangos, planting them, watering and tending the growing plants, weeding from time to time, and when ripe eating the fruit.

i.155 Bodhisattvas standing in the perfection of wisdom are helped by the buddhas and bodhisattvas, cultivate every type of knowledge and meditation, become the heirs apparent, are handsome, are ready to speak and extremely articulate, know grammar and all the other branches of knowledge, know the ultimate and conventional, and are skilled in everything.

i.156 The merit from making a gift to a tathāgata and a gift to a tathāgata conjured up by a tathāgata are equal, and the work of a tathāgata and the work of a tathāgata conjured up by a tathāgata are equal. Words are used for the benefit of others. You should not complicate reality, which is one and isolated from the words and signs for things. All phenomena, practices, and results are like illusions. Their ultimate reality is unchanging.

i.157 The bodhisattvas' training is a difficult practice, like growing a cutting in space. With just a cutting, its root, buds, leaves, and flowers are not known to the farmer, but still branches, leaves, flowers, and fruits will grow from that trunk, and the farmer will make use of the leaves and so on. Similarly, bodhisattva leaves, as it were, liberate beings from the three terrible forms of life, the flowers are excellent rebirths as humans and gods, and the fruits are the results of stream enterers and so on. A bodhisattva is a tathāgata because of the benefits that come from a bodhisattva—among them, giving rise to a tathāgata.

i.158 Bodhisattvas undertake the bodhisattva practices for the welfare of beings, purify a buddhfield, gain the knowledge of all aspects, turn the wheel of the Dharma, establish beings in the three vehicles, and then pass into nirvāṇa in the element of nirvāṇa without any aggregates left behind.

i.159 The merit of producing the thought of awakening surpasses all the merit from attaining every śrāvaka attainment; the merit of attaining each higher bodhisattva level surpasses the merit from each lower level; and the merit of a tathāgata surpasses all.

i.160 The first thought of awakening is set on the knowledge of all aspects. The knowledge of all aspects has a nonexistent thing as its objective support, its dominant factor is mindfulness, its aspect calmness, and its defining mark the absence of a defining mark. Not only the knowledge of all aspects, but all phenomena have no intrinsic nature and are therefore nonexistent things. Bodhisattvas practice with skillful means, mastering everything without ultimately settling down on anything. Bodhisattvas continue with this training until awakening.

i.161 Bodhisattvas train in all the purification dharmas, woven around the six perfections, first serially and finally in a single, unique instant. Ultimately the bodhisattvas' practice does not decrease or increase anything, is not a practice of anything for anything, and is not done in a dualistic way. Reality remains the same. Conventionally, assisted by spiritual friends, bodhisattvas produce the thought of awakening and learn all the doctrines and train in the six perfections, purify a buddhafield, and cause beings to be brought to maturity. With those wholesome roots bodhisattvas stay close to spiritual friends and the buddhas, serving and worshiping them. If they do not stay close to them, they do not gain the correct understanding of the perfection of wisdom. Guided by them, bodhisattvas train correctly in the six perfections. They practice all the practices that lead to the results and attainments of śrāvakas and adepts but do not become saddled with those results. They never move from their intrinsic nature, never realize anything, and are without any thought construction. This is their perfection of wisdom through which they enter into the secure state of a bodhisattva. They do so having mastered all paths through nonattachment to them, through seeing that their ultimate nature is the same, the absence of an intrinsic nature. Nevertheless, all the levels and paths and results are conventionally different. Thus, the knowledge of all path aspects is the bodhisattvas' forbearance for the nonproduction of dharmas. The bodhisattvas who know the knowledge of path aspects know all shared and unshared practices and paths. This enables the bodhisattvas to enter into the different aspirations of beings with different personalities and dispositions.

i.162 The perfection of wisdom is called the noble Dharma and Vinaya. All phenomena have no differentiating marks. None is conjoined with or separated from anything else. Thus the afflictive emotions and other negative factors removed by following the Vinaya training are absent in the training in the perfection of wisdom, which abides in the ultimate nature of all phenomena, and all the phenomena taught in the Dharma, all the differentiating marks of all the knowledges and attainments set forth in the doctrines, do not ultimately exist either. In this sense they are complete. The

i.163 There is not even ordinary patience in ultimate reality, so ultimately bodhisattvas do not achieve forbearance for the nonproduction of dharmas by mastering them all but not settling down on them. There are no clear realizations, there are no obstructions, there is no saṃsāra, and there is no path to the cessation of suffering.

i.164 The Buddha previously engaged in all the practices—cultivated detachment from sense objects, desisted from unwholesome acts, perfectly accomplished meditative states without relishing the experiences, manifested a performance of miraculous power, apprehended the causal signs but avoided falsely considering them fact, and with wisdom of the unique instant, fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening—but without engaging in a false projection of any of them. Bodhisattvas also enter into the training in the six perfections and all the practices of clairvoyance and so on serially and then in a single, unique instant. While serially cultivating the giving branch of the perfection of giving, up to the wisdom branch of the perfection of wisdom, the bodhisattvas pay attention to the absence of any intrinsic nature in each of them and pay attention to the knowledge of all aspects that is the goal. Similarly, bodhisattvas complete all the special powers and attributes of a buddha, and the major marks and minor signs of a buddha, through cultivating them serially within the training in the six perfections without any perception of something that exists or does not exist.

i.165 Just the absence of any apprehended object is attainment and clear realization, and all the gradual attainments and clear realizations happen because of that absence. All the trainings are the same, and to train in one is to train in them all, from giving up to clairvoyance. All are incorporated in a single thought. Bodhisattvas engage in the training in each without a dualistic thought. The giving of gifts up to the use of clairvoyance happens spontaneously with a pure and uncontaminated state of mind. The morality includes all moral standards. The patience is ordinary patience in the face of abuse and hardship, and it is forbearance that is a disinterested mastery of all phenomena through seeing their ultimate nature. The perseverance gives incredible powers and abilities to help others. Even on the verge of death the bodhisattvas are working to help others. The concentration achieves every mental state, except the state of a tathāgata, without relishing any of them, and the wisdom perfects the three meditative stabilizations on emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness without seeing anything as truly existent or established. To train in the six perfections is to train in all the perfections that incorporate all training as if in a dream.

.. Chapter 73 ..

- i.166 Ordinary people falsely consider phenomena to be real and become predisposed to the unwholesome. Bodhisattvas teach them that all phenomena are empty dependent originations, all arising on account of error. Skillfully the bodhisattvas model for them giving, morality, and so on.
- i.167 Bodhisattvas help beings by teaching and modeling for them any practice that helps them. The extent of the bodhisattvas' generosity is unlimited. When giving gifts to those who are helped by generosity, bodhisattvas make no distinction between offering to a buddha or to an animal and will give limbs away, and even go to any terrible place for their sake.
- i.168 Bodhisattvas teach various doctrines to all beings, including the gods. Included in this are the explanations of ordinary and extraordinary dharmas, the former the ordinary meditations on uncleanliness and the shared meditations on calm abiding and so on, and the extraordinary being the entire list of purification dharmas, explained in detail, one by one. Here are included detailed descriptions of each of the thirty-two major marks and their causes, as well as the eighty minor signs. This is the amazing gift of Dharma that is part of the first of the four ways of gathering a retinue.
- i.169 Bodhisattvas also teach the knowledge of alphabets and how letters collapse into and expand from a single letter and so on. This is done even though bodhisattvas cannot apprehend any of these dharmas.
- i.170 Just as a tathāgata's magical creation magically creates millions of other magical creations and establishes them in different practices without anything happening at all, so too with the bodhisattvas training in the perfection of wisdom.

- i.171 Beings do not know that all phenomena are the same—like an illusion without any intrinsic nature—and are therefore caught in suffering. They are located in unreal names and causal signs. Names plucked out of thin air and causal signs cause attachment. Causal signs are not existent. Were they to exist, bodhisattvas would not awaken to awakening. The material reality of a person, full of holes like foam, does not come from or go anywhere. Its ultimate reality does not deviate from the way things are. Other phenomena are similar. Bodhisattvas know difference but without complicating the true nature of dharmas because nothing can be apprehended. Nothing is trained in, nothing is gained. A magician uses a prop to make all sorts of things appear to an audience. A bodhisattva trains others in that way. Bodhisattvas speak about the dharma-constituent as it really is, the same before as it is afterward.

i.172 The ultimate reality (1) of the result and (2) of the beings that want to attain that result are the same. Beings are naturally in a perfect state, at the very limit of reality. The very limit of reality is not different from the limit of beings, from their infinite number, or from their ultimate nature. By skillful means bodhisattvas lead beings, conventionally, to the realization of reality by teaching the six perfections on the conventional level, always together with the emptiness of giver, recipient, and gift, and so on. Bodhisattvas personally engage in the training to model it for others and to encourage others to train in it. There is no movement from or to anything in reality. Bodhisattvas liberate beings by causing those snared in error to be established in the absence of error, error that is itself not error because it is just a thought construction. The absence of thought construction is the absence of error because in its absence there is no grasping at self and so on.

i.173 The path is just the comprehension of emptiness. The emptiness that is reality remains unchanging. It is not different from the diversity of the suffering world, the path to freedom, and the results. Nothing is removed, nothing added. Beings simply do not know reality as it is and live grasping at "I" and "mine." Bodhisattvas do not complicate reality with their teaching, just as space does not complicate space; they do not practice within duality. They do not take anything up or not take anything up. Subhūti is a worthy one in nirvāṇa. A bodhisattva reaches perfect, complete awakening. Both are just designated by ordinary convention. In reality nothing is accumulated or diminished, nothing is helpful and nothing harmful.

i.174 A bodhisattva, like a person conjured up by a magician, realizing that there is no place of departure, path, or attainment, neither endeavors nor desists from the endeavor. This is the bodhisattvas' skillful means.

i.175 There are not even people for whom the bodhisattvas feel compassion. The distorted minds of those people have mentally constructed the form aggregate, and so on, and settled down on them as real. All phenomena have no real basis, and the mind constructing them has no real basis. Bodhisattvas approach these illusory beings as illusory beings and model what is appropriate to liberate them from error, knowing the liberation is illusory, and the error illusory too. It is amazing that bodhisattvas keep at it, given that nothing is there that can be apprehended. Again, the chapter explains the armor in detail—that from having produced the first thought the bodhisattvas train in the perfection of wisdom to mature beings and purify a buddhafiield, modeling the six perfections such that each of the six incorporates all six.

- i.176 The training in the six perfections incorporates every training. Awakening is possible because every training in which bodhisattvas train is empty. If beings knew this there would be no reason for bodhisattvas to train. The presentation is only for their sake. Training is an enactment. There is no training, no phenomenon at all that can be apprehended through its own intrinsic nature. No false sense of superiority arises in bodhisattvas engaged in the training. Bodhisattvas are not located in any of the meditative states, first because all the states are empty, and second because the bodhisattvas are never satisfied with an accomplishment until perfect, complete awakening.
- i.177 Bodhisattvas eliminate the final physical, verbal, and mental bases of suffering. As long as there is the notion of anything, there is a basis of suffering. Bodhisattvas offer abundantly to the buddhas and purify a buddhafiield.

- i.178 As for śrāvaka stream enterers and so on, there is no rebirth in the terrible forms of life, and the same is true for bodhisattvas who have only just produced the authentic thought of awakening. They take perfect human rebirths. The Buddha took rebirth as animals intentionally through skillful means not available to śrāvakas. There is no wholesome dharma that bodhisattvas, starting from the first production of the thought onward, do not complete. A bodhisattva takes rebirth in a terrible form of life, like a being magically produced by a tathāgata, and does not experience suffering. The bodhisattva does not actually turn into an animal any more than a being magically produced by a tathāgata does. All is done for the sake of others. There is no wholesome dharma bodhisattvas do not produce. All are included in the perfection of wisdom. Bodhisattvas produce the clairvoyances and could not be awakened without them. Through their power, bodhisattvas are able to go anywhere, to see whatever is of benefit, and to teach in those places. A bodhisattva does not feel happy or unhappy about whatever happens through the power of the clairvoyances, just as a being magically produced by a tathāgata does not.

i.179 The buddhadharmas (the qualities of an awakened being) are the bodhisattva dharmas (the qualities of a bodhisattva). Awakening is the full awakening to all those dharmas. Awakening happens through the wisdom of the unique instant. The first half of that instant, so to speak, is the bodhisattva's awakening to all dharmas. This is like the difference between the state of a candidate for stream enterer and a result-recipient stream enterer. You cannot say of either that they are not a stream enterer. With the elimination of all the residual impression connections comes complete awakening.

i.180 Karmic cause and effect is empty of differentiating marks, but those who do not understand that behave badly or well and accumulate karma with or without outflows. The former end up in terrible forms of life, the latter as humans or gods. Among them, bodhisattvas train in the six perfections, become absorbed in the final meditative stabilization, awaken to perfect, complete awakening, and work for the welfare of suffering beings. If beings knew that phenomena are empty of differentiating marks, no bodhisattva would set out for awakening. Foolish beings settle down on the nonexistent things they have constructed. Bodhisattvas explain the four noble truths to them and make a presentation of the Three Jewels. In fact, beings do not enter nirvāṇa because of knowing the truth of suffering and so on; they do so because of knowing the sameness, in emptiness, of the four truths. This sameness is their ultimate absence. Reality remains, whether the tathāgatas teach it or do not teach it. Bodhisattvas awaken to the sameness of the truths by not apprehending any phenomenon, thereby entering into the secure state of a bodhisattva and standing on the verge of all the śrāvaka attainments, but without actualizing them. Even when attaining perfect, complete awakening, a bodhisattva does not fall down onto it as though from the sky onto the highest peak. It is seeing all phenomena for what they actually are, empty of an intrinsic nature.

i.181 All the attributes of śrāvakas and buddhas have not been made by karma any more than all the problems of those in terrible forms of life. All are ultimately not produced. Foolish, ordinary people do not know that phenomena are, in their nature, nonexistent things, and because of thought that has arisen on account of error, they accumulate a variety of karma. A path that delivers practitioners to the results is not a real thing, and neither are the results. Just as there is no underpinning reality for somebody dreaming a dream and experiencing a sense of gratification through enjoying the five sorts of sense objects, there is no underpinning reality that is a basis on which beings accumulate karma. Nobody accumulates karma, just as no karma is accumulated by a reflection on the surface of a mirror and so on. The appearance coaxes beings into believing it is true. No defilement and no purification happen on any path.

i.182 The sameness of all phenomena is purification. Even so, bodhisattvas produce the thought of unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, thinking, “I will complete the perfections and every good quality that benefits beings,” knowing they are illusory. In reality, even the bodhisattvas are illusory, so no illusion is training in any illusion. That the Tathāgata has fully awakened is a designation by ordinary convention. Ultimately there is no clear realization at all.

i.183 Sameness is where there is no existing thing, no intrinsic existence, and nothing that has been expressed. It is not the support and not within the range of anyone. In sameness nothing has a distinguishing feature. Ordinary beings and tathāgatas are the same. Phenomena with different marks come to have the same mark because of emptiness. Bodhisattvas remain in sameness, in emptiness, while working for the benefit of others.

i.184 The training in giving gifts and so on is done without moving from the ultimate, without moving from sameness. Whatever the perfection of a phenomenon, the phenomenon is empty of that. When one magical creation has created another magical creation, there is nothing real there that is not empty. “This is a magical creation, this is an emptiness” is a contortion.

i.185 Some phenomena are magically created by afflictive emotions, some by actions; some are magically created by śrāvakas, some by pratyekabuddhas, some by bodhisattvas, some by tathāgatas. Even nirvāṇa, a phenomenon that does not coax you into believing it is true, is just an illusion. Ultimately, there will never be anything called “the emptiness of an intrinsic nature” that has to be understood.

i.186 In this chapter there is a vocabulary not utilized in the rest of the Eighteen Thousand. Maitreya and the Lord investigate the relationship between a name and what it refers to. Names are plucked out of thin air. Any name can be given to anything. From that perspective all things, including the names, are nothing beyond imagination and unconnected with reality. But the things to which names are given are only known through those names, not from their own sides. When looked for, these things arise from causes and conditions, from ignorance and thought projections that motivate actions. These things are all the same in that they cannot be apprehended. In true reality they are all without any difference. Therefore, all phenomena from form up to the knowledge of all aspects should be viewed from the perspective of three natures: imaginary, conceptual (the term “other-powered” is not used in this chapter), and the dharma’s ultimate nature (again, “thoroughly established” is not used). Understanding this, a bodhisattva does not enter into nirvāṇa but willingly takes a body and reenters the world for the benefit of others.

i.187 This summary in verse circulates separately as The Verse Summary of the Jewel Qualities (Toh 13). Here it is not divided into chapters. The first verses say that the Tathāgata is speaking through the voices of the other interlocutors, that the perfection of wisdom cannot be apprehended through any causal sign, and that the mendicant Śreṇika gained nirvāṇa through listening to the perfection of wisdom. These verses follow the order of the Eight Thousand. The verses then generally follow the order of the Long Perfection of Wisdom and give a very helpful summary up until the end of the second of the three volumes of the Degé Kangyur Eighteen Thousand. The verse summary ends with an explanation of each of the six interlinked perfections, the maturation of beings, the purification of the buddhafiield, and awakening.

i.188 This is a summary of the Eighteen Thousand in the form of a story about Sadāprarudita’s quest to find his teacher Dharmodgata and learn the perfection of wisdom. Sadāprarudita sees the tathāgatas in a vision and wants to know where they have come from and where they went. He starts on his journey but realizes he is lost. He hears a voice from the sky telling him where to go and how to listen and learn. Having heard about the perfection of wisdom, he enters deep into meditation and hears more about it. He must find the way to go and make great merit in order to experience it in reality. Without any material wealth, like a perfect monk, he sells his flesh and blood in the marketplace, earning the admiration of a wealthy merchant's daughter and her family. He tells them everything that has happened and they enter into his quest and accompany him on his journey. Finally, they actually arrive in the wonderful city in which Dharmodgata lives, and Sadāprarudita again retells his entire story. Dharmodgata tells him the tathāgatas are not produced, so they have come from nowhere and go nowhere. All phenomena are like a dream without any ultimate reality. Having heard the perfect explanation of the perfection of wisdom, the earth shakes, the gods rejoice, and great joy and unshakeable resolve are born in all the retinue. Then Dharmodgata meditates for seven years. Sadāprarudita again gives even his blood to prepare for the teaching to be given when Dharmodgata emerges. He learns the doctrine of the perfection of wisdom in which all dharmas are the same, free from false projections and without limit.

i.189 The Lord entrusts the perfection of wisdom to his personal attendant Ānanda and tells him to take care of it as he has taken care of his teacher. The retinue praises the teaching of the Lord.

CHAPTER 1: INTRODUCTION

We prostrate to all the buddhas and bodhisattvas.

Thus did I hear at one time. The Lord dwelt at Rājagṛha on Gṛdhṛakūṭa Hill together with a great community of monks, numbering<sup>17</sup> five thousand monks, all worthy ones with the exception of one single person—that is, venerable Ānanda—with outflows dried up, without afflictions, fully controlled, with their minds well freed and their wisdom well freed, thoroughbreds, great bull elephants, with their work done, their task accomplished, with their burden laid down, with their own goal accomplished, with the fetters that bound them to existence broken, with their hearts well freed by perfect understanding, in perfect<sup>18</sup> control of their whole mind; [F.2.a] with nuns numbering five hundred—Yaśodharā, Mahāprajāpatī, and so on—and with a great many laymen and laywomen, all of them with a vision of the Dharma; and with an unbounded, infinite number of bodhisattva great beings, all of whom had acquired the dhāraṇīs, were dwellers in emptiness, their range the signless, and who had not fashioned any wishes, had acquired forbearance for the sameness of all dharmas, had acquired the dhāraṇī of nonattachment, with imperishable clairvoyant knowledges, and with speech worth listening to; who were not hypocrites, not fawners, without thoughts of reputation and gain; who were Dharma teachers without thought of compensation, with perfect forbearance for the deep dharmas, who had obtained the fearlessnesses, and who had transcended all the works of Māra, who had cut the continuum of karmic obscuration, were skillful in expounding the analysis of investigations into phenomena, with the prayer that is a vow made during an asamkhyeya of eons really fully carried out, with smiling countenances, forward in addressing others, without a frown on their faces, skillful in communicating with others in chanted verse, without feelings of depression, without losing the confidence giving a readiness to speak, and endowed with fearlessness when surpassing endless assemblies; who were skilled in going forth during an ananta of one hundred million eons, understanding phenomena to be like an illusion, a mirage, a reflection of the moon in water, a dream, an echo, an apparition, a reflection in the mirror, and a magical creation; who were skillful in comprehending the thoughts, conduct, and beliefs of all beings and subtle knowledge, [F.2.b] with unobstructed thoughts, and endowed with extreme patience; who were skilled in causing entry into reality just as it is, having appropriated all the endless arrays of the buddhafi elds through prayer and setting out, with the meditative stabilization recollecting buddhas in an infinite number of world systems constantly and always activated; who were skillful in soliciting innumerable buddhas; who were skillful in eliminating the various views, propensities, obsessions, and defilements; and who were skillful in accomplishing a hundred thousand feats through meditative concentration. That is, he was together with the bodhisattva great beings Bhadrapāla, Ratnākara, Ratnagarbha,<sup>19</sup> Ratnadatta, Susārthavaha, Varuṇadeva, Guhyagupta, Indradatta, Uttaramatin, Viśeṣamatin, Vardhamānamatin, Anantamati, Amoghadarśin, Anāvaramatin, Saṃprasthita, Suvikrāntavikrāmin, Anantavīrya, Nityodyukta, Nityaprayukta, Anikṣiptadhura, Sūryagarbha, Anupamamatin, and Avalokiteśvara, Mahāsthāmaprāpta, Mañjuśrī Kumārabhūta, Mārabala-pramardin, Vajramatin, Ratnamudrāhastā, Nityokṣiptahastā, Mahākaraṇā-cinta, Mahāvīyūha, Vyūharāja, and Merukūṭa, the bodhisattva great being Maitreya, and many hundreds of thousands of one hundred million billion other bodhisattvas as well.

1.3 Thereupon the Lord, having himself arranged the lion throne, sat down with his legs crossed, holding his body erect, intent on fixing mindfulness, and entered into the meditative stabilization, [F.3.a] samādhirāja by name, in which all meditative stabilizations are put, included, encompassed, and come to meet.

1.4 Then the Lord, mindful and self-possessed, emerged from this meditative stabilization and surveyed with his divine eye all world systems. Having done so, he beamed with his whole body. From the wheels with a thousand spokes on the soles of his feet issued sixty sixty-one hundred thousand one hundred million billion rays, from the ten toes of his feet issued sixty sixty-one hundred thousand one hundred million billion rays, and similarly from his ankles, legs, knees, thighs, hips, and navel, from his two sides, and from the śrīvatsa mark of a great person in his heart issued sixty sixty-one hundred thousand one hundred million billion rays. From his ten fingers issued sixty sixty-one hundred thousand one hundred million billion rays. Similarly, from his two forearms, two shoulders, neck, four eyeteeth, all forty teeth, two nostrils, ears, and eyes, ūṛṇā, the uṣṇīṣa on the top of his head, and from the opening of his mouth issued sixty sixty-one hundred thousand one hundred million billion rays. All these sixty sixty-one hundred thousand one hundred million billion rays pervaded the world systems in their entirety with a great illumination and lit them up. This great illumination from the light rays spread out through as many world systems in the eastern direction as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River. Similarly, this great illumination from the light rays spread out through each of as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River to the south, west, and north, in the intermediate directions to the northeast, southeast, southwest, northwest, below and above, and lit them up. And all the beings [F.3.b] who saw that light, who were touched by the illumination of those light rays, became irreversible from unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

1.5 Thereupon all the Lord's hair pores became radiant. From each of the hair pores sixty sixty-one hundred thousand one hundred million billion rays issued forth, and these rays pervaded all the world systems in the great billionfold world system with a great illumination. This great illumination from the light rays spread out through as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River to the east, pervading them with a great illumination and lighting them up. Similarly, this illumination from the light rays spread out through each of as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River to the south, west, and north, in the intermediate directions to the northeast, southeast, southwest, and northwest, below and above, and lit them up. And all the beings who saw that light, who were touched by the illumination of those light rays, became irreversible from unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

1.6 Then the Lord, with the light from the natural splendor of a tathāgata, pervaded the great billionfold world system with a great illumination. He pervaded as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River to the east with this great illumination, and he similarly pervaded each of as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River to the south, west, and north, in the intermediate directions to the northeast, southeast, southwest, and northwest, below and above, with this great illumination. And all the beings who saw that light, who were touched by the illumination of those light rays, became irreversible from unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

1.7 Thereupon the Lord extended his tongue and with it covered the great billionfold world system in its entirety. [F.4.a] Having pervaded the great billionfold world system with his tongue, he smiled, and from his tongue again many hundred thousand one hundred million billion variously colored rays issued forth, and on all the light rays stood lotuses made of manifold precious stones, shining like gold, each with a thousand petals, variegated, beautiful, captivating, brilliant, fragrant, and soft, all completely like the kācalindika, pleasing to the touch. On the lotuses, furthermore, were seated many embodied tathāgatas, teaching Dharma—this very teaching of Dharma associated with the six perfections. They went to as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River to the east and taught Dharma—this very teaching of Dharma associated with the perfection of wisdom—and similarly, to each of as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River to the south, west, and north, in the intermediate directions to the northeast, southeast, southwest, and northwest, below and above, and taught Dharma—this very teaching of Dharma associated with the six perfections. And all the beings who listened to that Dharma became irreversible from unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

1.8 Then the Lord, seated on that very lion throne, entered into the meditative stabilization called siṃhavikrīḍita. He enacted such a performance with his miraculous power that his performance of miraculous power shook the great billionfold world system in six ways: it shook, shook greatly, and shook violently; it quaked, quaked greatly, and quaked violently; it stirred, stirred greatly, and stirred violently; it became disturbed, greatly disturbed, and violently disturbed; [F.4.b] it roared, roared greatly, and roared violently; and it resounded, resounded greatly, and resounded violently. At the edges it rose up and it sank down in the middle; in the middle it rose up and at the edges sank down. It became soft and oily, producing benefit and ease for all beings. Thereupon, at that moment, minute, and second, in the great billionfold world system the continuums of the hells and the animal world, and the world of Yama, were all cut. And all the places that preclude a perfect human birth disappeared. All those beings were reborn among humans, and also among the Cāturmahārājika, Trāyastriṃśa, Yāma, Tuṣita, Nirmāṇarati, and Paranirmitavaśavartin gods.

1.9 Thereupon, in their great joy and rejoicing these humans and gods recalled their former lives, and having recalled them approached the Lord, bowed to his feet with their heads, cupped their palms together in a gesture of prayerful supplication, and bowed forward. And so too in each of the ten directions, in as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River to the east, to the south, west, and north, in the intermediate directions, and below and above, the continuums of the hells, animal worlds, and the worlds of Yama in as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River were all cut too. And all the places precluding a perfect human birth disappeared. All those beings were reborn among humans and the gods. Thereupon these humans and gods recalled their former lives. In their great joy and rejoicing they then approached the buddhas in their respective buddhafiels, bowed to their feet with their heads, [F.5.a] and with palms together in a gesture of prayerful supplication bowed forward.

1.10 Then, in the great billionfold world system, the beings who were born blind saw forms with their eyes, the deaf heard sounds with their ears, the insane regained their senses, those with distracted thoughts became one-pointed in their thoughts, the naked found clothes, the poor found wealth, the hungry found food, the thirsty found drink, the sick were healed, the sense faculties of those with damaged sense faculties were repaired, and the physically exhausted became no longer exhausted. Those who had not given up unwholesome deeds of body, speech, and mind, and unwholesome livelihood, gave up their unwholesome habits. All beings considered every being in the same way as they considered their mother, father, brother, and sister, and as they considered their friends, kinsmen, and blood relatives. And they were endowed with the ten wholesome actions and became celibate, pure, free from the stain of immorality, and free from all unwholesome conceptualization. And at that time all beings, possessed of all happiness, acquired the ease a monk feels when absorbed in the third concentration. And at that very time they were endowed with such knowledge that they knew, “Good is charity! Good is self-discipline! Good is restraint! Good it is to observe celibacy! Good is nonviolence toward living creatures!” And at that time [F.5.b] the lord buddhas in other buddhafiels cried out cries of delight: “Ah! It is amazing these beings are thus endowed with such knowledge that knows, ‘Good is charity! Good is self-discipline! Good is restraint! Good it is to observe celibacy! Good is nonviolence toward living creatures!’ ”

1.12 So too the Lord stood out towering over as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River to the east with his light, color, brilliance, and glory. Similarly the Lord stood out towering over as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River to the south, west, and north, in the intermediate directions, and below and above—in each of the ten directions—shining forth, gleaming, dazzling, and shedding light with his light, color, brilliance, and glory in the same way as, for example, Sumeru, the king of mountains, stands out towering over all mountains, shining forth, gleaming, dazzling, and shedding light; or in the same way as, for example, the disk of the moon towers over all the stars, shining forth, gleaming, dazzling, and shedding light; or in the same way as, for example, the disk of the sun [F.6.a] stands out towering over all other lights, shining forth, gleaming, dazzling, and shedding light. So too the Lord stands out towering over world systems in the ten directions with their gods, Indras, Brahmās, Śuddhāvāsas, and the classes of gods and humans, shining forth, gleaming, dazzling, and shedding light with his light, color, brilliance, and glory.

1.13 Thereupon the Lord exhibited an ordinary bodily form, like that of beings in the great billionfold world system. Then in the great billionfold world system all the gods, from the gods of the Śuddhāvāsa class down to the Brahmakāyika, Paranirmitavaśavartin, Nirmāṇarati, Tuṣita, Yāma, Trāyastriṃśa, and Cāturmahārājika gods saw the body of the Tathāgata you can never see enough. Feeling contented, pleased, delighted, joyful, and joyous, with such mental happiness they took celestial flowers, celestial garlands, celestial incense, celestial creams, celestial powders, and celestial perfumes; celestial blue lotuses, lotuses, red lotuses, white lotuses, nalina lilies and saugandhaka lilies; celestial flowers, nāgavṛkṣa flowers, and tamāla leaves; and celestial robes, celestial jewelry, celestial parasols, flags, and banners and approached the Lord. Those humans to be trained, in the form of recipients seated in the great billionfold world system, saw the body of the Tathāgata you can never see enough, took land and water flowers, and approached the body of the Tathāgata you can never see enough. [F.6.b] Both gods and humans then strewed near, strewed in front, and strewed all around<sup>21</sup> the body of the Tathāgata these celestial flowers, incense, perfumes, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, banners, and land and water flowers.

1.14 By the sustaining power of the Lord all this rain of flowers, incense, perfumes, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, banners, and land and water flowers that was strewed down on the Lord stayed there like a second story made of flowers and so on, with the dimensions of the great billionfold world system, in the sky right above the Lord's head. And from this second story tassels made of celestial flowers and silk were suspended, hanging there, hanging right there, and these tassels made of celestial flowers and silk made the great billionfold world system look very beautiful. And the brightly shining golden color of the Lord streaming forth in the ten directions pervaded and lit up as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River in each direction. This thought then occurred to each of the gods and humans in all the Jambudvīpa world systems in the great billionfold world system: "The Tathāgata is seated in front of us teaching the Dharma.” Similarly, this thought occurred to the gods in the Godānīyas to the west, Videhas to the east, and Kurus to the north, to the Cāturmahārājika gods up to the Akaniṣṭha gods, and similarly to all the gods and humans in a thousandfold [four-continent] world system, in a millionfold world system, or in a great billionfold world system: [F.7.a] “The Tathāgata is seated in front of us teaching the Dharma.”

1.15 Thereupon the Lord, seated on this very lion throne, smiled once again. Through the illumination from that smile the great billionfold world system was lit up, and all the beings seated in the great billionfold world system saw the Lord Buddha, together with his śrāvaka saṅgha, in as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River to the east. And all those beings seated in as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River to the east saw the Lord Śākyamuni, together with his community of monks, in this Sahā world system.

1.16 Similarly, the beings included in this Sahā world system saw the Lord Buddha, together with his śrāvaka saṅgha, in as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River to the south, west, and north, in the intermediate directions to the northeast, southeast, southwest, and northwest, below and above. And all those beings seated in as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River as well saw this Sahā world system and the Lord Śākyamuni, together with his community of monks.

1.17 In the east, beyond as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River, at the very limit of these world systems, there is a world system called Ratnāvātī. In it the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha Ratnākara now dwells and maintains himself. He teaches to the bodhisattvas this very perfection of wisdom. [F.7.b] Then, in that world system a bodhisattva, a great being, called Samantaraśmi saw this great illumination, this great shaking of the earth, and the body of the Lord you can never see enough, and he approached the lord Ratnākara, the tathāgata, and inquired of the tathāgata Ratnākara, “What is the cause, O Lord, what is the reason for this great illumination having manifested in the world, and for this great shaking of the earth, and for the presence of the body of the Tathāgata you can never see enough?”

1.18 The lord Ratnākara replied to the bodhisattva Samantaraśmi, “There is, child of a good family, beyond as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River in the western direction, a world system called Sahā. There the tathāgata Śākyamuni now dwells and maintains himself, also teaching the Dharma to the bodhisattvas. This sort of thing is his power.”

- 1.19 Then the bodhisattva Samantaraśmi said to the tathāgata Ratnākara, “I will go to that Sahā world system to see, salute, and honor that tathāgata Śākyamuni, and to see those bodhisattva great beings, for the most part in the form of the young, who have acquired the dhāraṇīs and detailed and thorough knowledges and acquired mastery over all the meditative stabilizations and absorptions.”
- 1.20 The Lord replied, “Go then, child of a good family, since you feel that now is the right time.”
- 1.21 Thereupon the tathāgata Ratnākara gave the bodhisattva Samantaraśmi [F.8.a] a thousand lotuses made of manifold jewels, each with a thousand petals shining like gold, saying, “Child of a good family, strew these lotuses over the tathāgata Śākyamuni. Be on your best behavior<sup>22</sup> in that buddhafiield. And why? Because the bodhisattvas born in that Sahā world system are difficult to approach.”
- 1.22 Thereupon the bodhisattva Samantaraśmi received from the tathāgata Ratnākara the lotuses made of manifold jewels, each with a thousand petals shining like gold. Surrounded by, and at the head of, many hundred thousand one hundred million billion bodhisattvas, householders and renunciates, young men and women, he disappeared together with them from that buddhafiield and, having respected, revered, honored, and worshiped as many lords as there are dwelling and maintaining themselves in the east with flowers, incense, perfumes, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners, arrived there in the Sahā world through that bodhisattva’s great wonder-working and that bodhisattva’s great power. He approached the tathāgata Śākyamuni, went up to him, bowed to the Lord’s feet with his head, and stood to one side. The bodhisattva Samantaraśmi then addressed the Lord, the tathāgata Śākyamuni: “The lord Ratnākara inquires about the Lord’s health, hopes that the Lord is well and free from sickness, alert and buoyant, eating well, strong, and comfortable. [F.8.b] The lord Ratnākara has also dispatched these lotuses for the Lord.”
- 1.23 The lord tathāgata Śākyamuni accepted the lotuses and threw them back to the lord buddhas in as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River to the east. Those lotuses spread throughout those world systems, and on them were seated buddha bodies. In those buddhafiields they taught Dharma—this very teaching of Dharma associated with the six perfections. And the beings who heard that Dharma became certain to reach unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. Thereupon those bodhisattvas, the householders and renunciates, young men and women, each one by virtue of his or her own wholesome roots, respected, revered, honored, and worshiped the lord Śākyamuni and sat down on one side.

- 1.24 Then in the south, beyond as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River, at the very limit of these world systems, there is a world system called Sarvaśokāpagata. In it the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha Aśokaśrī now dwells and maintains himself. Then, in that world system a bodhisattva, a great being, called Vigatāśoka and so on. Connect to the previous, at length, up to and sat down on one side.
- 1.25 Then in the west there is a world system called Upaśānta. In it the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha Ratnārcis now dwells and maintains himself. Then, in that world system a bodhisattva, a great being, called Cāritramati and so on, at length, up to and sat down on one side.
- 1.26 Then in the north [F.9.a] there is a world system called Jayā. In it the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha Jayendra now dwells and maintains himself. Then, in that world system a bodhisattva, a great being, called Jayadatta and so on, at length, up to and sat down on one side.
- 1.27 Then in the intermediate northeast direction there is a world system called Samādhyalaṃkṛtā. In it the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha Samādhihastyuttaraśrī now dwells and maintains himself. Then, in that world system a bodhisattva, a great being, called Vijayavikrāmin and so on, at length, up to and sat down on one side.
- 1.28 Then in the intermediate southeast direction there is a world system called Bodhimaṇḍalālaṃkārasurucitā. In it the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha Padmottaraśrī now dwells and maintains himself. Then, in that world system a bodhisattva, a great being, called Padmahasta and so on, at length, up to and sat down on one side.
- 1.29 Then in the intermediate southwest direction there is a world system called Vigatarajasamcayā. In it the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha Sūryamaṇḍalaprabhāsottaraśrī now dwells and maintains himself. Then, in that world system a bodhisattva, a great being, called Sūryapratibhāsa and so on, at length, up to and sat down on one side.
- 1.30 Then in the intermediate northwest direction there is a world system called Vaśībhūtā. In it the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly [F.9.b] complete buddha Ekachattrā now dwells and maintains himself. Then, in that world system a bodhisattva, a great being, called Ratnottama and so on, at length, up to and sat down on one side.
- 1.31 Then in the direction below there is a world system called Padmā. In it the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha Padmaśrī now dwells and maintains himself. Then, in that world system a bodhisattva, a great being, called Padmottama and so on, at length, up to and sat down on one side.
- 1.32 Then in the direction above, beyond as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River, at the very limit of these world systems, there is a world system called Nandā. In it the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha Nandaśrī now dwells and maintains himself. Then, in that world system a bodhisattva, a great being, called Nandadatta, saw this great illumination, this great shaking of the earth, and the body of the Lord you can never see enough, and he approached the lord Nandaśrī, the tathāgata, and inquired of the tathāgata Nandaśrī, “What is the cause, O Lord, what is the reason for this great illumination being manifested in the world, and for this great shaking of the earth, and for the presence of the body of the Tathāgata you can never see enough?”

1.33 The lord Nandaśrī replied to the bodhisattva Nandadatta, “There is, O child of a good family, beyond as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River in the direction below a world system called Sahā. There the tathāgata arhat, perfectly [F.10.a] complete buddha Śākyamuni now dwells and maintains himself, also teaching the Dharma to the bodhisattvas. This sort of thing is his power.”

1.34 Then the bodhisattva Nandadatta said to the tathāgata Nandaśrī, “I will go to that Sahā world system to see, salute, and honor that tathāgata Śākyamuni, and to see those bodhisattva great beings, for the most part in the form of the young, who have acquired the dhāraṇīs and detailed and thorough knowledges and have acquired mastery over all the meditative stabilizations and absorptions.”

1.36 Thereupon the tathāgata Nandaśrī gave the bodhisattva Nandadatta a thousand lotuses made of manifold jewels, each with a thousand petals shining like gold, saying, “These lotuses, child of a good family, strew over the tathāgata Śākyamuni. Be on your best behavior in that buddhafiield. And why? Because the bodhisattvas born in that Sahā world system are difficult to approach.”

1.37 Thereupon the bodhisattva Nandadatta received from the tathāgata Nandaśrī the lotuses made of manifold jewels, each with a thousand petals shining like gold. Surrounded by and at the head of many hundred thousand one hundred million billion bodhisattvas, householders and renunciates, and young men and women, he disappeared together with them from that buddhafiield, and, having respected, revered, honored, and worshiped as many lords as there are dwelling and maintaining themselves in the direction above [F.10.b] with flowers, incense, perfumes, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners, arrived there in the Sahā world through that bodhisattva’s great wonder-working and that bodhisattva’s great power. He approached the tathāgata Śākyamuni, went up to him, bowed to the Lord’s feet with his head, and stood to one side. The bodhisattva Nandadatta then addressed the lord, the tathāgata Śākyamuni:

“The lord Nandaśrī inquires about the Lord’s health, hopes that the Lord is well and free from sickness, alert and buoyant, eating well, strong, and comfortable. The lord Nandaśrī has also dispatched these lotuses for the Lord.”

1.38 The lord tathāgata Śākyamuni accepted the lotuses and threw them back to the lords, the buddhas in as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River in the direction above. Those lotuses spread throughout those world systems, and on them were seated buddha bodies. In those buddhafiels they demonstrated Dharma—this very demonstration of Dharma associated with the perfection of wisdom. And the beings who heard that Dharma became irreversible from unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. Thereupon those bodhisattvas, the householders and renunciates, young men and women, each one by virtue of his or her own wholesome roots respected, [F.11.a] revered, honored, and worshiped the lord Śākyamuni and sat down on one side.

1.39 Thereupon, at that moment, minute, and second, the great billionfold world system became constituted of jewels, filled with various blossoms, hung with clusters of silk streamers, made fragrant with incense pots, and beautified with wish-fulfilling trees whose stem-tips bend down with ornaments and fruit, and with flower trees, fruit trees, fragrance trees, flower-garland trees, and powder trees, just like Padmavatī, the buddhafiels of the tathāgata Samantakusuma where Mañjuśrī Kumārabhūta lives, as well as the god Susthitamati, and others who are magnificent bodhisattva great beings.

1.40 This was the first chapter, “Introduction,” of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.”

2. CHAPTER 2: PRODUCTION OF THE THOUGHT

2.1 When the Lord understood that the world with its celestial beings, Māras and Brahmās, śramaṇas and brahmins, gods and humans, as well as bodhisattvas, most of them in youthful form, had assembled, he said to venerable Śāriputra, “Here, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want to fully awaken to all dharmas in all forms should make an effort at the perfection of wisdom.”

2.2 The Lord having spoken thus, venerable Śāriputra inquired of him, “How then, Lord, [F.11.b] should bodhisattva great beings who want to fully awaken to all dharmas in all forms make an effort at the perfection of wisdom?”

2.3 Venerable Śāriputra having thus inquired, the Lord said to him, “Śāriputra, here bodhisattva great beings, having stood in the perfection of wisdom by way of not taking their stand on it,<sup>23</sup> should complete the perfection of giving by way of not giving up anything, because a gift, a giver, and a recipient are not apprehended. They should also complete the perfection of morality because no downfall is incurred and no compounded downfall is incurred,<sup>24</sup> the perfection of patience because there is no disturbance, the perfection of perseverance because there is no physical or mental effort expended, the perfection of concentration because there is no experience, and the perfection of wisdom because all phenomena are not apprehended.

2.4 “Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings, having stood in the perfection of wisdom, should perfect the four applications of mindfulness because<sup>25</sup> mindfulness cannot be apprehended, and they should perfect the four right efforts, four legs of miraculous power, five faculties, five powers, seven limbs of awakening, and eightfold noble path. They should cultivate the emptiness meditative stabilization, signlessness meditative stabilization, and wishlessness meditative stabilization. They should cultivate the four concentrations, four immeasurables, four formless absorptions, eight deliverances, nine serial absorptions, [F.12.a] and nine perceptions. What are the nine? The nine perceptions are the perception of a bloated corpse, the perception of it chopped in half,<sup>26</sup> the perception of it as putrid, the bloodied perception, the black-and-blue perception, the savaged perception, the torn-asunder perception, the bones perception, and the burnt-bones perception. They should cultivate mindfulness of the Buddha, mindfulness of the Dharma, mindfulness of the Saṅgha, mindfulness of morality, mindfulness of giving away, and mindfulness of the gods. They should cultivate mindfulness of breathing in and out, mindfulness of disgust, mindfulness of death, and mindfulness of what is included in the body. They should perfect the perception of impermanence, the perception of suffering, the perception of selflessness, the perception of the unclean, the perception of death, the perception that there is no delight in the entire world, and the perception that there is nothing to trust in the entire world; knowledge of suffering, knowledge of origination, knowledge of cessation, knowledge of the path, knowledge of extinction, knowledge of nonproduction,<sup>27</sup> knowledge of dharma, subsequent realization knowledge, conventional knowledge, knowledge of mastery, and knowledge in accord with sound;<sup>28</sup> and meditative stabilization with applied and sustained thought, meditative stabilization without applied thought but with sustained thought, meditative stabilization without either applied or sustained thought, what one does not understand, the faculty of understanding, the faculty of having understood, the stations of mastery, the stations of complete immersion, the four ways of gathering a retinue, the four presentations, the ten levels and ten practices, the ten forbearances, [F.12.b] the twenty surpassing aspirations, the knowledge of a knower of all,<sup>29</sup> the knowledge of calm abiding and insight, the three knowledges, the four detailed and thorough knowledges, the four fearlessnesses, the five undiminished clairvoyances, the six perfections, the six principles of being liked,<sup>30</sup> the seven riches, the eight ways great persons think, the nine places beings live, the ten tathāgata powers, the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, great love, and great compassion.

2.5 “Bodhisattva great beings who want to fully awaken to the knowledge, furnished with the best of all aspects, of a knower of all aspects, who want to perfect the knowledge of all path aspects, who want to perfect all-knowledge,<sup>31</sup> and who want to perfect the knowledge of the aspects of the thought activity of all beings should make an effort at the perfection of wisdom. Bodhisattva great beings who want to destroy all residual impressions, connections, and afflictions<sup>32</sup> should make an effort at the perfection of wisdom.

- 2.6 “Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want to enter into the secure state of a bodhisattva,<sup>33</sup> who want to pass beyond the level of śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas, who want to stand on the irreversible level, who want to know the activity and continual movement of the thoughts of all beings, who want to surpass the knowledge of śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas, who want to acquire the dhāraṇī gateways, and who want to surpass gift-giving to all śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas by producing a single thought with associated rejoicing [F.13.a] should train in the perfection of wisdom. Bodhisattva great beings who want to surpass the morality of śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas by producing a single thought with associated rejoicing<sup>34</sup> should train in the perfection of wisdom. Bodhisattva great beings who want to surpass the meditative stabilization, wisdom, liberation, and knowledge and seeing of liberation of śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas by producing a single thought with associated rejoicing should train in the perfection of wisdom. Bodhisattva great beings who want to surpass the concentrations, meditative stabilizations, and absorptions of śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas by producing a single thought with associated rejoicing should train in the perfection of wisdom.
- 2.7 “Bodhisattva great beings who, for the sake of all beings, want giving even a little gift to become immeasurable and incalculable by turning it over to all-knowledge with skillful means should train in the perfection of wisdom. Similarly, bodhisattva great beings who, for the sake of all beings, want even the little morality they have guarded, the little patience they have developed, the little effort they have exerted, the little concentration they have become absorbed in, and the little wisdom they have developed to become immeasurable and incalculable by turning them over to all-knowledge with skillful means should train in the perfection of wisdom.
- 2.8 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings [F.13.b] practicing the perfection of giving should train in the perfection of wisdom. Similarly, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of morality, the perfection of patience, the perfection of perseverance, the perfection of concentration, and the perfection of wisdom should train in the perfection of wisdom.
- 2.9 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want to thoroughly establish a buddha’s body should train in the perfection of wisdom. If they want to acquire the thirty-two major marks and the eighty minor signs of a great person, they should train in the perfection of wisdom.
- 2.10 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want to be born in the buddha’s line should train in the perfection of wisdom. Bodhisattva great beings who want to step onto the heir apparent’s level, and want never to be without the buddhas and bodhisattvas, should train in the perfection of wisdom.

- 2.11 “Moreover, Śāriputra, were bodhisattva great beings to feel this longing—‘May I be richly endowed with the wholesome roots with which I will respect, revere, honor, and worship the tathāgatas, the worthy ones, the perfectly complete lord buddhas’—they should train in the perfection of wisdom.
- 2.12 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want to satisfy all the desires of all beings with requirements such as food, drink, flowers, perfume, garments, flower garlands, incense, powders, creams, bedding, seats, houses, money, grain, medicines for relief of sickness, ornaments, jewels, gems, beryl, conch shells, crystals,<sup>35</sup> [F.14.a] corals, parks, and kingdoms should train in the perfection of wisdom. Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want to establish all beings in a world as vast as the dharma-constituent and as far reaching as the space element<sup>36</sup> in the perfection of giving, and who want to establish them in the perfection of morality, the perfection of patience, the perfection of perseverance, the perfection of concentration, and the perfection of wisdom, should train in the perfection of wisdom.
- 2.13 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want to make a single wholesome thought of awakening inexhaustible until reaching complete awakening at the site of awakening should train in the perfection of wisdom.
- 2.14 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who think, ‘May the buddhas in the ten directions praise me,’ should train in the perfection of wisdom.
- 2.15 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want, [F.14.b] through a single production of the thought,<sup>37</sup> to approach as many world systems in the eastern direction as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River should train in the perfection of wisdom. Similarly, bodhisattva great beings who want, through a single production of the thought, to approach as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River in each of the southern, western, northern, northeastern, southeastern, southwestern, and northwestern directions, and below and above, should train in the perfection of wisdom.
- 2.16 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want by uttering a single sound to instruct as many world systems in the eastern direction as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River should train in the perfection of wisdom. Similarly, bodhisattva great beings who want by uttering a single sound to instruct as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River in each of the southern, western, northern, northeastern, southeastern, southwestern, and northwestern directions, and below and above, should train in the perfection of wisdom.

- 2.17 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want to ensure that the line of buddhas will be unbroken should train in the perfection of wisdom.
- 2.18 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want to stand in inner emptiness should train in the perfection of wisdom. Similarly, bodhisattva great beings who want to stand in outer emptiness, inner and outer emptiness, the emptiness of emptiness, great emptiness, the emptiness of ultimate reality, the emptiness of the compounded, the emptiness of the un compounded, the emptiness of what transcends limits, the emptiness of no beginning and no end, the emptiness of nonrepudiation,<sup>38</sup> the emptiness of a basic nature, the emptiness of all dharmas, the emptiness of its own mark, the emptiness of not apprehending,<sup>39</sup> the emptiness of a nonexistent thing, the emptiness of an intrinsic nature, and the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature should train in the perfection of wisdom.
- 2.19 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want to comprehend the suchness of all dharmas, the suchness of the dharma-constituent, and the suchness of the very limit of reality should train in the perfection of wisdom.
- 2.20 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want to know how many tiny particles of earth there are in the great billionfold world system; who want to know the tiny particles of water [F.15.a] in the oceans, torrents, lakes, ponds, wells, and rivulets; who want to know the tiny particles of fire; and who want to know the tiny particles of wind in all the world systems in the great billionfold world system should train in the perfection of wisdom.
- 2.21 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want to blow out with one puff of breath the fire in the great billionfold world system when the eon is burning up should train in the perfection of wisdom.
- 2.22 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want to blunt with the tip of one finger the force of the whirling, shaking circle of wind as it is circulating in the great billionfold world system, rocking, scattering, and pervasively shaking every mountain and the entire earth starting with the axial mountain Sumeru, the great Sumeru, the encircling mountain ranges, and the great encircling mountain ranges should train in the perfection of wisdom.
- 2.23 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings thinking, ‘I should toss immeasurable world systems by bundling up every mountain there is in the great billionfold world system—the axial mountain Sumeru, the great Sumeru, the encircling mountain ranges, the great encircling mountain ranges, and so on—with a single strand of hair,’ should train in the perfection of wisdom.

- 2.24 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want their single cross-legged posture to expand into and fill up the space of the great billionfold world system in its entirety should train in the perfection of wisdom.
- 2.25 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings [F.15.b] who want with a single begging bowl to distribute food to each of<sup>40</sup> the lord buddhas, together with their śrāvaka saṅghas, in as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River to the east should train in the perfection of wisdom; and similarly, bodhisattva great beings who want to respect, want to revere, want to honor, and want to worship those tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas with clouds of flowers, incense, perfumes, garlands of flowers, creams, aromatic powders, clothes, parasols, flags, and banners should train in the perfection of wisdom. Similarly, bodhisattva great beings who want with a single alms bowl to distribute food to each of the lord buddhas, together with their śrāvaka saṅghas, in each of as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River to the south, west, and north, in the intermediate directions to the northeast, southeast, southwest, and northwest, and below and above, and similarly want to respect, want to revere, want to honor, and want to worship with clouds of flowers, incense, perfumes, garlands of flowers, creams, aromatic powders, clothes, parasols, flags, and streamers those tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas should train in the perfection of wisdom. [B2]
- 2.26 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want to establish beings in as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River to the east in the aggregate of morality; who want to establish them in [F.16.a] the aggregate of meditative stabilization, in the aggregate of wisdom, in the aggregate of liberation, and in the aggregate of knowledge and seeing of liberation; and similarly want to establish them in the result of stream enterer, once-returner, and non-returner, in the state of a worthy one, in a pratyekabuddha’s awakening, up to in the element of nirvāṇa without any aggregates left behind should train in the perfection of wisdom. As with the east, also connect this with as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River in the south, west, and north, in the intermediate directions to the northeast, southeast, southwest, and northwest, and below and above.
- 2.27 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom should know, when giving a gift, that having given such a gift there is a great result: having given such a gift, they will be born in great sāla tree-like royal families, and similarly in great sāla tree-like brahmin families, and in great sāla tree-like business families; having given such a gift they will be born among the Cāturmahārājika gods, and similarly, born among the gods of Trāyastriṃśa, Yāma, Tuṣita, and Nirmāṇarati; having given such a gift, they will reach the first concentration, and similarly reach the second concentration and the third concentration; having given such a gift they will reach the fourth concentration; having given such a gift they will reach the station of the nonperception absorption; having given such a gift they will reach [F.16.b] the station of the endless-space absorption, and similarly, having given such a gift, they will reach the station of endless consciousness and the station of the nothing-at-all absorption; having given such a gift they will reach the station of the neither perception nor nonperception absorption; and having given such a gift they will acquire the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, and similarly they will reach the result of stream enterer, and reach the result of once-returner, the result of non-returner, and the state of a worthy one.

2.29 The Lord having spoken thus, venerable Śāriputra then inquired of him, “How, Lord, does the perfection of giving become complete when bodhisattva great beings are giving a gift? How do the perfection of morality, the perfection of patience, the perfection of perseverance, the perfection of concentration, and the perfection of wisdom become complete when bodhisattva great beings are giving a gift?”

2.30 Venerable Śāriputra having thus inquired, the Lord said to him, “Śāriputra, the perfection of giving is completed by way of the purity of the three spheres, not apprehending a gift, giver, or recipient; the perfection of morality is completed because no downfall is incurred and no compounded downfall is incurred; [F.17.a] the perfection of patience is completed because of not being disturbed; the perfection of perseverance is completed because of not expending physical or mental effort; the perfection of concentration is completed because of not being distracted and not constructing any ideas; and the perfection of wisdom is completed by way of not apprehending the knowledge of all dharmas. Thus, Śāriputra, when bodhisattvas give a gift like that,<sup>41</sup> the six perfections are completed. Similarly all six perfections are completed in the perfection of morality, and similarly all six perfections are completed in the perfection of patience, the perfection of perseverance, the perfection of concentration, and the perfection of wisdom.

2.31 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want to acquire all the buddha qualities of the past, future, and present lord buddhas should train in the perfection of wisdom.

- 2.32 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want to transcend all compounded and uncompounded phenomena should train in the perfection of wisdom.
- 2.33 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want to comprehend the suchness of all past, future, and present dharmas, and similarly, who want to reach the dharma-constituent, the limit of the absence of production,<sup>42</sup> should train in the perfection of wisdom.
- 2.34 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want to be foremost among śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas [F.17.b] should train in the perfection of wisdom.
- 2.35 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want to be attendants of the lord buddhas should train in the perfection of wisdom.
- 2.36 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want to be in the inner circle of the lord buddhas should train in the perfection of wisdom.
- 2.37 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want to be in the inner retinue of the lord buddhas should train in the perfection of wisdom.
- 2.38 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want to have a large retinue should train in the perfection of wisdom.
- 2.39 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want to purify a donation should train in the perfection of wisdom.
- 2.40 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want to stop miserly thoughts should train in the perfection of wisdom, and similarly, those who want to prevent immoral thoughts from arising, who want to prevent malicious thoughts from arising, who want to quit having lazy thoughts, who want to quit having distracted thoughts, and who want to quit having confused thoughts should train in the perfection of wisdom.
- 2.41 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want to establish all beings in the bases of meritorious action arisen from giving, and who want to establish all beings in the bases of meritorious action arisen from morality, arisen from meditation, that accompany service, and arisen from material things should train in the perfection of wisdom.
- 2.42 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want to produce the five eyes should train in the perfection of wisdom. And what are the five eyes? They are [F.18.a] the flesh eye, divine eye, wisdom eye, dharma eye, and buddha eye. If they want to produce them, they should train in the perfection of wisdom. Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want to see with their divine eye as many buddhas and lords as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River to the east should train in the perfection of wisdom, and similarly, if they want to see with their divine eye as many buddhas and lords as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River in the south, west, and north, in the intermediate directions to the northeast, southeast, southwest and northwest, and below and above they should train in the perfection of wisdom. If they want to hear with their divine ear the doctrine those buddhas and lords explain they should train in the perfection of wisdom, and if they want to comprehend with their mind the thought of those buddhas and lords exactly as it is they should train in the perfection of wisdom.

2.43 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want to hear the entire doctrine that the lord buddhas in all world systems in all ten directions explain, and having heard it take it up perfectly by applying the power of memory uninterruptedly, and who do not want any to be lost up until they awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening should train in the perfection of wisdom.

2.44 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want to see the buddhafiels of past buddhas and lords, and of future buddhas and lords as well, and who want to see the buddhafiels of present buddhas and lords now dwelling and maintaining themselves [F.18.b] in world systems in all ten directions should train in the perfection of wisdom.

2.45 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want to master all that the tathāgatas have taught in discourses, melodious narrations, predictions, verses, summaries, introductions, accounts, birth stories, expanded texts, marvels, tales, and expositions, and what has not been heard by śrāvakas or pratyekabuddhas, should train in the perfection of wisdom.

2.46 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want to take up all that the lord buddhas in the eastern direction have said, are saying, and will say, who want to bear it in mind, who want to read it aloud, and similarly who want to practice it and want to elaborate upon it in detail for others, should train in the perfection of wisdom. Similarly, if they want to take up all that the lord buddhas in the southern, western, northern, northeastern, southeastern, southwestern, and northwestern directions, below and above, have said, are saying, and will say, want to bear it in mind, want to read it aloud, and similarly want to practice it and want to elaborate upon it in detail for others, they should train in the perfection of wisdom.

2.47 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want to shine down on the blinding darkness where the sun and moon do not shine, [F.19.a] in as many world systems in the eastern direction as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River, should train in the perfection of wisdom. Similarly, if they want to shine light down on the blinding darkness where the sun and moon do not shine, in as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River in the southern, western, northern, northeastern, southeastern, southwestern, and northwestern directions, below and above, they should train in the perfection of wisdom.

2.48 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want to proclaim to all the beings born in various buddhafiels in as many world systems in the eastern direction as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River the word Buddha, the word Dharma, and the word Saṅgha, and who want to establish them in right view, should train in the perfection of wisdom. Similarly, bodhisattva great beings who want to proclaim the words Buddha, Dharma, and Saṅgha and establish in right view beings in as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River in the southern, western, northern, northeastern, southeastern, southwestern, and northwestern directions, below and above, where there is no sound of the words Buddha, Dharma, Saṅgha, or right view, should train in the perfection of wisdom.

2.49 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want beings who are blind, in as many world systems in the eastern direction as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River, to see shapes with their eyes through their might should train in the perfection of wisdom. Similarly, [F.19.b] thinking, ‘May those who are deaf hear sounds with their ears, those who have gone mad regain their senses, the naked be clothed, hungry beings have their fill, the thirsty quench their thirst, beings who are stuck in terrible forms of life be freed from all the terrible forms of life and gain birth as humans, and may I establish the immoral in the aggregate of morality’; and similarly, thinking, ‘May I establish those who are not stabilized in meditation in the aggregate of meditative stabilization, in the aggregate of wisdom, in the aggregate of liberation, and in the aggregate of knowledge and seeing of liberation’; and thinking, ‘May I establish those who do not see the truths in the result of stream enterer’; and thinking, ‘May I establish them in the result of once-returned, the result of non-returned, the state of a worthy one, in a pratyekabuddha’s awakening, and in unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening,’ they should train in the perfection of wisdom.

2.50 “Similarly, bodhisattva great beings who want beings who are blind, in as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River in the southern, western, northern, northeastern, southeastern, southwestern, and northwestern directions, below and above, to see shapes with their eyes through their might should train in the perfection of wisdom. Similarly, thinking, ‘May those who are deaf hear sounds with their ears, those who have gone mad regain their senses, the naked be clothed, hungry beings have their fill, the thirsty quench their thirst, beings who are stuck in terrible forms of life be freed from all the terrible forms of life and gain birth as humans, and may I establish the immoral in the aggregate of morality’; and similarly, thinking, 'May I establish those who are not stabilized in meditation in the aggregate of meditative stabilization, [F.20.a] in the aggregate of wisdom, in the aggregate of liberation, and in the aggregate of knowledge and seeing of liberation'; and thinking, 'May I establish those who do not see the truths in the result of stream enterer'; and thinking, 'May I establish them in the result of once-returner, the result of non-returner, the state of a worthy one, in a pratyekabuddha's awakening, and in unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening,' they should train in the perfection of wisdom.

2.51 "Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want to train in the tathāgatas' way of carrying themselves should train in the perfection of wisdom.

2.52 "Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom should contemplate like this: 'When, oh when, will I look down as an elephant looks? How will it come to be that I will walk on the earth without my feet touching it by the measure of four fingers?' Thinking thus, they should train in the perfection of wisdom.

2.53 "Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom should contemplate like this as well: 'How will it come to be that I, surrounded by and at the head of many hundred thousand one hundred million billion Cāturmahārājika gods, and Trāyastriṃśa, Yāma, Tuṣita, Nirmāṇarati, Paranirmitavaśavartin, Brahmaपुरोहिता, Brahmakāyika, Brahmāpārṣadya, Parīttābha, Apramāṇābha, Ābhāsvara, Parīttāsubha, Apramāṇāsubha, Śubhakṛtsna, Bṛhatphala, Śuddhāvāsa,<sup>43</sup> Sudṛśa, Sudarśana, Avṛha, Atapa, and Akaniṣṭha gods, go forth to the site of awakening?' Thinking thus, they should train in the perfection of wisdom.

2.54 "Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom should contemplate like this as well: 'How will it come to be that the Cāturmahārājika gods, up to the Akaniṣṭha class, spread out my seat at the root of the tree at the site of awakening?' Thinking thus, they should train in the perfection of wisdom. [F.20.b]

2.55 "Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom should contemplate like this as well: 'How will it come to be that this region of the earth on which I will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, and walk, stand, sit, or lie down, become all diamond?' Thinking thus, they should train in the perfection of wisdom.

2.56 "Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom should contemplate like this as well: 'How will it come to be that on that very day that I go forth I will fully awaken, on that very day, to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, and, having fully awakened on that very day, that I will turn the wheel of the Dharma so that, having turned it, dust-free and stainless, the Dharma eye of countless beings beyond measure will become clear about the dharmas, countless beings beyond measure will stop appropriating anything and their minds will become freed from outflows, and countless beings beyond measure will not turn back from unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening?’ Thinking thus, they should train in the perfection of wisdom.

2.57 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom should contemplate like this as well: ‘How will I come to have a community of countless śrāvakas beyond measure? How through my one single teaching of the Dharma will countless beings beyond measure [F.21.a] become worthy ones in one sitting, become bodhisattvas in one sitting,<sup>44</sup> become bodhisattvas who will not turn back from unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening? How will I come to have an infinite community of bodhisattvas, a measure of life that is infinite, and infinite splendid light?’ Thinking thus, they should train in the perfection of wisdom.

2.58 “Bodhisattva great beings thinking, ‘How will there come to be not even the sound of the words greed, hatred, and confusion in any way at all in that buddhafiield where I fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening?’ should train in the perfection of wisdom.

2.59 “Bodhisattva great beings thinking, ‘How will all beings in that buddhafiield where I fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening come to be endowed with the form of wisdom that knows “giving is good, discipline is good, restraint is good, celibacy is good, nonviolence toward all creatures and spirits is good”?’; bodhisattva great beings thinking, ‘After I have passed into complete nirvāṇa, how will it come to be that there are not even the words disappearance of the good Dharma?’; bodhisattva great beings thinking, ‘How will it come to be that just from hearing my name beings present in as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River become assured of unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening?’—they should train in the perfection of wisdom.

2.60 “Śāriputra, at the time a bodhisattva great being practicing the perfection of wisdom produces these good qualities, then the Four Mahārājas [F.21.b] present in the great billionfold world system are enraptured and think as follows: ‘Just as the Four Mahārājas of yore presented begging bowls to the tathāgatas, the worthy ones, the perfectly complete buddhas of yore, we too will present four begging bowls to this bodhisattva, this great being.’ The Trāyastriṃśa gods, along with the Yāma, Tuṣita, Nirmāṇarati, and Paranirmitavaśavartin gods, are enraptured as well and think, ‘With this the hosts of asuras will decline and the hosts of gods will flourish, so we will make attendants available for this bodhisattva, this great being.’ And the gods in the great billionfold world system, from the Mahābrahmās and

Brahmakāyika, and all the Brahmās up to Akaniṣṭha, are enraptured and think, ‘We will request this bodhisattva, this great being, awakened to complete awakening, to turn the wheel of the Dharma.’

2.61 “Moreover, Śāriputra, at the time a bodhisattva great being practicing the perfection of wisdom prospers with the six perfections, the sons and daughters of good families are enraptured as well and think, ‘Let us become the mother and father, wife, son, friend, kinsman, and blood relative of that great being.’ The Four Māhārājas and the Trāyastriṃśa gods, as well as the gods up to the Akaniṣṭha gods, are enraptured and think, ‘In order to [F.22.a] definitely join beings to awakening the bodhisattva great being is celibate, not conjoined with the qualities that fetter.’ They make the prayer, ‘Starting from when I first produce the thought of awakening, I will be celibate, I will not be noncelibate. And why? Because pursuing sense objects becomes a block even to birth in the world of Brahmā, so it goes without saying it is a block to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. Therefore, having gone forth to homelessness, I will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening just as a celibate person, not as a noncelibate person.’ Hence, they shun sexual intercourse.”

2.62 The Lord having spoken thus, venerable Śāriputra then asked him, “Lord, do bodhisattva great beings definitely have to be with parents, wives, sons, friends, kinsmen, and blood relatives?”

2.63 Venerable Śāriputra having asked this, the Lord said to him, “Śāriputra, some bodhisattva great beings definitely come with parents, a wife, and sons. Some bodhisattva great beings embrace celibacy starting from when they first produce the thought of awakening, always remaining unmarried persons practicing the bodhisattva practices until they fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. Some bodhisattva great beings, through skillful means, in order to bring beings to maturity, make use of the five sorts of sense objects and then go forth [F.22.b] from the harem<sup>45</sup> and fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. Śāriputra, some bodhisattva great beings gain a standing in the deep perfection of wisdom and, separated from the desire realm afflictions, in order to bring beings to maturity, make a show of taking to<sup>46</sup> the five sorts of sense objects, but they do not make use of them. To illustrate, Śāriputra, a clever, well-trained magician or magician’s apprentice with knowledge of magic spells and magic performance conjures up the five sorts of sense objects and makes a show of themselves dallying with, enjoying, and acting gratified by the five sorts of sense objects. What do you think, Śāriputra, does that magician or magician’s apprentice make use of those five sorts of sense objects?”

“No, Lord,” Śāriputra replied.

2.64 “Similarly, Śāriputra,” said the Lord, “bodhisattva great beings, through skillful means, make use of those five sorts of sense objects in order to bring beings to maturity, and still those bodhisattva great beings are not contaminated by those sense objects. Alternatively, bodhisattva great beings speak disparagingly of sense objects: ‘Sense objects are ablaze, disgusting, murderous, and against you.’ So, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings take to these sorts of sense objects in order to bring beings to maturity.”

CHAPTER 3: DESIGNATION

3.1 Then [F.23.a] venerable Śāriputra inquired of the Lord, “Lord, how then should bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of wisdom?”

3.2 Venerable Śāriputra having thus inquired, the Lord said to him, “Śāriputra, here bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom do not, even while they are bodhisattvas, see a bodhisattva. They do not see even the word bodhisattva. They do not see awakening either, and they do not see the perfection of wisdom. They do not see that ‘they practice,’ and they do not see that ‘they do not practice.’ They also do not see that ‘while practicing they practice and while not practicing do not practice,’ and they also do not see that ‘they do not practice, and do not not practice as well.’<sup>47</sup> They do not see form. Similarly, they do not see feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness either. And why? Because, Śāriputra, the name bodhisattva is empty of the intrinsic nature of a name. The name bodhisattva is not empty because of emptiness. A bodhisattva is also empty of the intrinsic nature of a bodhisattva, but a bodhisattva is not empty because of emptiness. Awakening, too, is empty of the intrinsic nature of awakening, but awakening is not empty because of emptiness. The perfection of wisdom, too, is empty of the intrinsic nature of the perfection of wisdom, but the perfection of wisdom is not empty because of emptiness. Form, too, is empty of the intrinsic nature of form, but form is not empty because of emptiness. [F.23.b] And feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is<sup>48</sup> also empty of the intrinsic nature of consciousness, but consciousness is not empty because of emptiness. And why? Because the emptiness of the name bodhisattva is not the name bodhisattva, and there is no name bodhisattva apart from emptiness, because the name bodhisattva itself is emptiness and emptiness is the name bodhisattva as well. The emptiness of the bodhisattva is not the bodhisattva and there is no bodhisattva apart from emptiness, because the bodhisattva is emptiness and emptiness is the bodhisattva as well. The emptiness of the perfection of wisdom is not the perfection of wisdom and there is no perfection of wisdom apart from emptiness, because the perfection of wisdom itself is emptiness and emptiness is the perfection of wisdom as well. The emptiness of form is not form and there is no form apart from emptiness, because form itself is emptiness and emptiness is form as well. And the emptiness of feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is not consciousness, and there is no consciousness apart from emptiness because consciousness itself is emptiness and emptiness is consciousness as well. And why? Because this—namely, bodhisattva—is just a name; because these—namely, the name bodhisattva, awakening, [F.24.a] the perfection of wisdom, form, feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness—are just names; and because this—namely, emptiness—is just a name. Why? Because where there is no intrinsic nature there is no production, stopping,<sup>49</sup> decrease, increase, defilement, or purification. And why? Because form is like an illusion, feeling is like an illusion, perception is like an illusion, volitional factors are like an illusion, and consciousness is like an illusion. And an illusion is just a name that does not reside somewhere, does not reside in a particular place, so the sight of an illusion is mistaken and does not exist and is devoid of an intrinsic nature. Bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom like that do not see production, do not see stopping, do not see standing, do not see decrease, do not see increase, do not see defilement, and do not see purification in any dharma at all. They do not see ‘awakening,’ and they do not see a ‘bodhisattva’ anywhere. And why? Because names are made up. In the case of each of these different dharmas they are imagined,<sup>50</sup> unreal, names plucked out of thin air working subsequently as conventional labels, and just as they are subsequently conventionally labeled, so too are they settled down on as real. Bodhisattva [F.24.b] great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom do not see any of those names as inherently existing, and because they do not see them, they do not settle down on them as real.

3.3 “Moreover, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom think, ‘This bodhisattva is just a name. This awakening is just a name. This awakened one is just a name. This perfection of wisdom is just a name. This practicing the perfection of wisdom is just a name.’ They think, ‘This form is just a name, and these—feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness—are just names.’

3.4 “For example, Śāriputra, ‘self’ is said again and again but a self cannot be apprehended; a being, a soul, and a person cannot be apprehended either. Thus they work conventionally as what has been designated by a name,<sup>51</sup> yet they cannot be apprehended at all, because of the emptiness of not apprehending. Similarly, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom also do not see a bodhisattva, they do not see up to consciousness, and they do not see even the names through which they work as conventional labels. So, Śāriputra, setting aside the wisdom of a tathāgata, bodhisattva great beings thus practicing the perfection of wisdom surpass the wisdom of all śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas because of the emptiness of not apprehending. And why? Because they do not see what would make them settle down on them as real. So bodhisattva great beings practicing thus, Śāriputra, [F.25.a] are practicing the perfection of wisdom.

3.5 “To illustrate, Śāriputra, if this Jambudvīpa were filled with monks similar in worth to Śāriputra and Maudgalyāyana—like a thicket of naḍa reeds, or a thicket of bamboo, or a thicket of sugarcane, or a thicket of rushes, or a thicket of rice, or a thicket of sesame—their wisdom would not approach the wisdom of a bodhisattva great being practicing the perfection of wisdom even by a hundredth part, or by a thousandth part, or by a hundred thousandth part; it would not stand up to any number, or fraction, or counting, or example, or comparison.<sup>52</sup> And why? Because, Śāriputra, that wisdom of a bodhisattva great being has been established with the complete nirvāṇa of all beings as the aim.

3.6 “Furthermore, Śāriputra, even the wisdom cultivated<sup>53</sup> for a single day by a bodhisattva great being practicing the perfection of wisdom surpasses the wisdom of śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas. Śāriputra, let alone this Jambudvīpa filled with monks similar in worth to Śāriputra and Maudgalyāyana, even if the great billionfold world system were filled with monks similar in worth to Śāriputra and Maudgalyāyana their wisdom would not approach the wisdom cultivated for a single day by a bodhisattva great being practicing the perfection of wisdom even by a hundredth part, up to it would not stand up to any comparison with it. Śāriputra, let alone the great billionfold world system filled with monks similar in worth to Śāriputra and Maudgalyāyana, Śāriputra, even if as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River [F.25.b] to the east were filled with monks similar in worth to Śāriputra and Maudgalyāyana, and similarly, even if as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River to the south, west, and north, in the intermediate directions to the northeast, southeast, southwest, and northwest, below and above were filled with monks similar in worth to Śāriputra and Maudgalyāyana, their wisdom would not approach the wisdom cultivated for a single day by a bodhisattva great being practicing the perfection of wisdom even by a hundredth part, up to it would not stand up to any comparison with it.”

3.7 Then venerable Śāriputra said to the Lord, “Lord, the wisdom of śrāvaka stream enterers, once-returners, non-returners, worthy ones, pratyekabuddhas, and tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas, all those wisdoms are not broken apart, they are a detachment, are not produced, and are empty of an intrinsic nature; and, Lord, you do not find variation or distinction in something that has not been broken apart, that is a detachment, not produced, and empty of an intrinsic nature. So how, Lord, could the wisdom cultivated for a single day by a bodhisattva great being practicing the perfection of wisdom surpass the wisdom of all śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas?"

3.8 Venerable Śāriputra having spoken thus, the Lord asked him, "What do you think, Śāriputra, is the wisdom of all śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas concerned with a purpose<sup>54</sup> of the sort that concerns the wisdom cultivated for a single day by a bodhisattva great being practicing the perfection of wisdom furnished with the best of all aspects, [F.26.a] practicing the knowledge of all aspects,<sup>55</sup> working for the welfare of all beings with the thought, 'I must, having fully awakened to all dharmas in all forms, lead all beings to complete nirvāṇa'?"<sup>56</sup>

"No, Lord," Śāriputra replied.

3.9 The Lord then asked, "What do you think, Śāriputra, do all śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas think, 'We must, having fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, lead all beings to complete nirvāṇa in the element of nirvāṇa without any aggregates left behind'?"

"No, Lord," Śāriputra replied.

3.10 The Lord said, "You should understand from just this explanation, Śāriputra, that all the wisdom of śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas does not approach the wisdom cultivated for a single day by a bodhisattva great being practicing the perfection of wisdom even by a hundredth part, up to it does not stand up to any comparison with it, hence it surpasses the wisdom of śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas.

3.11 "What do you think, Śāriputra, do all these śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas think, 'We must, having practiced the six perfections, having brought beings to maturity, having purified a buddhafiield, having completed the ten tathāgata powers, having completed the four fearlessnesses, the four detailed and thorough knowledges, and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, and having fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, [F.26.b] complete awakening, lead infinite, countless beings beyond measure to complete nirvāṇa'?"

"No, Lord," Śāriputra replied.

3.12 "Śāriputra," said the Lord, "a bodhisattva great being thinks, 'I must, having practiced the six perfections, having brought beings to maturity, having purified a buddhafiield, having fulfilled the ten tathāgata powers, having fulfilled the four fearlessnesses, the four detailed and thorough

- knowledges, and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, and having fully awakened to the unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, lead infinite, countless beings beyond measure to complete nirvāṇa.’
- 3.13 “To illustrate, Śāriputra, just as a firefly-type creature does not think, ‘I should light up Jambudvīpa with my light, I should pervade Jambudvīpa with my light,’ so too, Śāriputra, no śrāvaka or pratyekabuddha thinks, ‘I must, having practiced the six perfections, having brought beings to maturity, having purified a buddhafiield, having completed the ten tathāgata powers, having completed the four fearlessnesses, the four detailed and thorough knowledges, and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, and having fully awakened to the unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, lead infinite, countless beings beyond measure to complete nirvāṇa.’
- 3.14 “Again to illustrate, Śāriputra, just as the circle of the sun, when it rises, lights up all Jambudvīpa [F.27.a] with its light and pervades all Jambudvīpa with its light, so too, Śāriputra, a bodhisattva great being, having practiced the six perfections, having brought beings to maturity, having purified a buddhafiield, having completed the ten tathāgata powers, having completed the four fearlessnesses, the four detailed and thorough knowledges, and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, and having fully awakened to the unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, leads infinite, countless beings beyond measure to complete nirvāṇa.”
- 3.15 The Lord having spoken thus, venerable Śāriputra then asked him, “How, Lord, do bodhisattva great beings, having passed beyond the śrāvaka or pratyekabuddha level, reach the irreversible bodhisattva level and practice<sup>57</sup> the bodhisattva path?”
- 3.16 Venerable Śāriputra having asked this, the Lord said to him, “Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings, from their first production of the thought of awakening onward, stand in the dharmas of emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness while practicing the six perfections, and, having passed beyond the śrāvaka or pratyekabuddha level, reach the irreversible bodhisattva level.”
- 3.17 The Lord having spoken thus, venerable Śāriputra asked him further, “Standing on which level, Lord, do bodhisattva great beings become worthy of the offerings of all śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas?”
- 3.18 Venerable Śāriputra having asked this, the Lord said to him, [F.27.b] “Śāriputra, in the interval from their first production of the thought up to the site of awakening, bodhisattva great beings practicing the six perfections are constantly and always worthy of the offerings of all śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas. And why? Because, Śāriputra, it is thanks to bodhisattva great beings that all wholesome dharmas appear in the world, that is, that the ten wholesome actions, the morality with five branches, the morality with eight branches, and the four concentrations, four immeasurables, four formless absorptions, four noble truths, four applications of mindfulness, four right efforts, four legs of miraculous power, five faculties, five powers, seven limbs of awakening, and eightfold noble path appear in the world; and that the six perfections, the ten tathāgata powers, the four fearlessnesses, the four detailed and thorough knowledges, up to great love, great compassion, and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha appear in the world. And it is because those wholesome dharmas appear in the world that there are<sup>58</sup> great sāla tree-like royal families in the world, great sāla tree-like brahmin families in the world, and great sāla tree-like business families in the world; that there are the Cāturmahārājika gods and gods of the Trāyastriṃśa, Yāma, Tuṣita, Nirmāṇarati, Paranirmitavaśavartin, Brahmāpurohita, Brahmakāyika, Brahmāpārśadya, Parittābha, Apramāṇābha, Ābhāsvara, [F.28.a] Parittaśubha, Apramāṇaśubha, Śubhakarṣna, Bṛhatphala, Asaṃjñisattva,<sup>59</sup> Śuddhāvāsa—Sudṛśa, Sudarśana, Avṛha, Atapa, and Akaniṣṭha—and the Ākāśānantyāyatana, Vijñānānantyāyatana, Ākiṃcityāyatana, and Naiva-saṃjñānāsaṃjñāyatana; that stream enterers appear in the world, and that once-returners, non-returners, worthy ones, pratyekabuddhas, bodhisattva great beings, and tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas appear in the world.”

3.19 “Lord, do bodhisattva great beings purify the offering, or do they not do so?” asked Śāriputra.

3.20 “Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “bodhisattva great beings metaphorically<sup>60</sup> purify the offering. And why? Because, Śāriputra, a bodhisattva great being’s offering is absolutely pure. Thus, Śāriputra, a bodhisattva great being is a giver, but a giver of what? A giver of wholesome dharmas. A giver of which wholesome dharmas? A giver of these: the ten wholesome actions, the five-point training, the eight-branched confession and restoration, up to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha.”

3.21 “Lord, how are bodhisattva great beings who engage with the perfection of wisdom ‘engaged’?”<sup>61</sup> asked Śāriputra.

3.22 “Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “here [F.28.b] bodhisattva great beings engaged with the emptiness of form are ‘engaged.’ Similarly, engaged with the emptiness of feelings, the emptiness of perceptions, the emptiness of volitional factors, and the emptiness of consciousness, they are engaged. Furthermore, Śāriputra, here bodhisattva great beings engaged with the emptiness of the eyes are engaged. Similarly, engaged with the emptiness of the ears, nose, tongue, body, and thinking mind they are engaged. When they are engaged with the emptiness of a form, a sound, a smell, a taste, a feeling, and a dharma they are engaged. When they are engaged with the emptiness of the eye consciousness constituent they are engaged. Similarly, engaged with the emptiness of the ear consciousness constituent, nose consciousness constituent, tongue consciousness constituent, body consciousness constituent, and thinking-mind consciousness constituent they are engaged. When they are engaged with the emptiness of suffering they are engaged. When they are engaged with the emptiness of origination, cessation, and the path they are engaged. When they are engaged with the emptiness of ignorance they are engaged. When they are engaged with the emptiness of volitional factors, consciousness, name and form, the six sense fields, contact, feeling, craving, appropriation, existence, birth, and old age and death, they are engaged. When they are engaged with the emptiness of all dharmas they are engaged. When they are engaged with the emptiness of all compounded and uncompounded phenomena they are engaged. Furthermore, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom who are engaged with the emptiness of a basic nature are engaged. Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom who are engaged with these seven emptinesses are engaged. [F.29.a]

3.23 “Furthermore, Śāriputra, when those bodhisattvas are practicing the perfection of wisdom with these seven emptinesses you cannot say, first of all, that they ‘are engaged’ or ‘are not engaged.’ And why? Because they do not see form as qualified by production or qualified by stopping. They do not see feelings, perceptions, volitional factors, or consciousness as qualified by production or qualified by stopping. They do not see form as qualified by defilement or qualified by purification. They do not see feelings, perceptions, volitional factors, or consciousness as qualified by defilement or qualified by purification. Furthermore, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings do not see ‘a confluence of form with feeling,’ or similarly, ‘a confluence of feeling with perception, perception with volitional factors, or volitional factors with consciousness.’ They do not see ‘a confluence of consciousness with volitional factors.’ And why? Because no dharma is in a confluence with any other dharma, because they are empty of a basic nature. And why? Because that emptiness of form is not form, and because that emptiness of feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is not consciousness. And why? Because, Śāriputra, that emptiness of form is not seeable,<sup>62</sup> the emptiness of feeling does not experience, the emptiness of perception does not perceive, the emptiness of volitional factors [F.29.b] does not occasion anything, and the emptiness of consciousness does not make conscious. And why? Because, Śāriputra, form is not one thing and emptiness another; emptiness is not one thing and form another. Form is itself emptiness, and emptiness is form. Similarly, feeling is not one thing and emptiness another; emptiness is not one thing and feeling another. Perception is not one thing and emptiness another; emptiness is not one thing and perception another.

Volitional factors are not one thing and emptiness another; emptiness is not one thing and volitional factors another. And consciousness is not one thing and emptiness another; emptiness is not one thing and consciousness another. Consciousness is itself emptiness, and emptiness is consciousness. And why? Because, Śāriputra, that emptiness is not produced and does not stop, is not defiled and is not purified, does not decrease and does not increase, and is not past, is not future, and is not present.

3.24 “In such as that there is no form, there is no feeling, there is no perception, there are no volitional factors, and there is no consciousness. There is no earth element, water element, fire element, or wind element. There is no space element. There is no consciousness element.

3.25 “There is no eye sense field; there is no form sense field. There is no ear sense field; there is no sound sense field. There is no nose sense field; there is no smell sense field. There is no tongue sense field; there is no taste sense field. There is no body sense field; there is no touch sense field. There is no thinking-mind sense field; there is no dharma sense field.

3.26 “There is no eye constituent, there is no form constituent, there is no eye consciousness constituent. There is no ear constituent, there is no sound constituent, [F.30.a] there is no ear consciousness constituent. There is no nose constituent, there is no smell constituent, there is no nose consciousness constituent. There is no tongue constituent, there is no taste constituent, there is no tongue consciousness constituent. There is no body constituent, there is no touch constituent, there is no body consciousness constituent. There is no thinking-mind constituent, there is no dharma constituent, there is no thinking-mind consciousness constituent.

3.27 “There is no ignorance; there is no cessation of ignorance. There are no volitional factors; there is no cessation of volitional factors. There is no consciousness; there is no cessation of consciousness. There is no name and form; there is no cessation of name and form. There are no six sense fields; there is no cessation of the six sense fields. There is no contact; there is no cessation of contact. There is no feeling; there is no cessation of feeling. There is no craving; there is no cessation of craving. There is no appropriation; there is no cessation of appropriation. There is no existence; there is no cessation of existence. There is no birth; there is no cessation of birth. There is no old age and death; there is no cessation of old age and death.

3.28 “There is no suffering. There is no origination. There is no cessation. There is no path. There is no attainment. There is no clear realization. There is no stream enterer; there is no result of stream enterer. There is no once-returner; there is no result of once-returner. There is no non-returner; there is no result of non-returner. There is no worthy one; there is no result of worthy one. There is no pratyekabuddha; there is no pratyekabuddha's awakening. There is no buddha; there is no awakening. [B3]

3.29 "Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom like that are 'engaged,' but they do not see the practice of the perfection of wisdom as either 'engaged' or 'not engaged' with form. [F.30.b] They do not see it as either engaged or not engaged with feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness. They do not see it as either engaged or not engaged with the eyes. They do not see it as either engaged or not engaged with the ears, nose, tongue, body, or thinking mind. They do not see it as either engaged or not engaged with form. They do not see it as either engaged or not engaged with sound, smell, taste, feeling, or dharmas.

3.30 "They do not see it as either engaged or not engaged with the eye constituent. They do not see it as either engaged or not engaged with the form constituent. They do not see it as either engaged or not engaged with the eye consciousness constituent ... up to ... They do not see it as either engaged or not engaged with the thinking-mind constituent, the dharma constituent, or the thinking-mind consciousness constituent.

3.31 "They do not see it as either engaged or not engaged with the applications of mindfulness. Similarly, they do not see it as either engaged or not engaged with the right efforts, the legs of miraculous power, the faculties, the powers, the limbs of awakening, or the path. They do not see it as either engaged or not engaged with the four truths. They do not see it as either engaged or not engaged with the ten tathāgata powers, the four detailed and thorough knowledges, the four fearlessnesses, the five clairvoyances, or the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, up to they do not see it as either engaged or not engaged with the knowledge of a knower of all aspects furnished with the best of all aspects.

3.32 "Śāriputra, in this way you should know bodhisattva great beings who have engaged in the perfection of wisdom like that [F.31.a] have 'engaged.'

3.33 "Furthermore, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom neither cause emptiness to engage with emptiness, nor disengage from it, and the same holds true for the yogic practice of emptiness as well.<sup>63</sup> They neither cause signlessness to engage with nor disengage from signlessness, and the same holds true for the yogic practice of signlessness as well. They neither cause wishlessness to engage with nor disengage from wishlessness, and the same holds true for the yogic practice of wishlessness as well. And why? Because emptiness is neither a yogic practice nor not a yogic practice. Similarly, signlessness and wishlessness are neither yogic practices nor not yogic practices.

- “Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings engaged like that are ‘engaged’ in the perfection of wisdom.
- 3.34 “Furthermore, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom enter into<sup>64</sup> the emptiness of the marks particular to dharmas, and when they so enter they do not engage with nor disengage from form. Neither do they engage with nor disengage from feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness.
- 3.35 “They do not join<sup>65</sup> form with the prior limit, because they do not even see the prior limit. They do not join form with the later limit, because they do not even see the later limit. They do not join form with the present because they do not even see the present. Similarly, they do not join feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... or consciousness with the prior limit, because they do not even see the prior limit itself. They do not join consciousness with the later limit, because they do not even see [F.31.b] the later limit itself. They do not join consciousness with the present because they do not even see the present itself.
- 3.36 “Furthermore, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom, because of the sameness of the three periods of time, do not join the prior limit with the later limit and do not join the later limit with the prior limit. They do not join the present with the prior limit or the later limit, and they do not join the prior limit or the later limit with the present. Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings engaged like that are ‘engaged’ in the perfection of wisdom.
- 3.37 “Furthermore, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom engage in such a way that they do not join the knowledge of all aspects with the past. How, without even seeing the past itself, could they join it with the past? They do not join the knowledge of all aspects with the future. How, without even seeing the future itself, could they join it with the future? They do not join the knowledge of all aspects with the present. How, without even seeing the present itself, could they join it with the present? Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings engaged like that are ‘engaged’ in the perfection of wisdom.
- 3.38 “Furthermore, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom do not join form with the knowledge of all aspects because they do not even see form. Similarly, they do not join feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... [F.32.a] or consciousness with the knowledge of all aspects either because they do not even see consciousness itself. Similarly, they do not join the eyes with the knowledge of all aspects either because they do not even see the eyes themselves. They do not join the ears ... nose ... tongue ... body ... or thinking mind with the knowledge of all aspects either because they do not even see the thinking mind itself.

Similarly, they do not join a form with the knowledge of all aspects either because they do not even see a form itself. They do not join a sound ... a smell ... a taste ... a feeling ... or a dharma with the knowledge of all aspects either because they do not even see a dharma itself. Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings engaged like that are 'engaged' in the perfection of wisdom.

3.39 "Furthermore, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom do not join the perfection of giving with the knowledge of all aspects because they do not even see the perfection of giving itself. Similarly, they do not join the perfection of morality ... the perfection of patience ... the perfection of perseverance ... the perfection of concentration ... or the perfection of wisdom with the knowledge of all aspects either because they do not even see the perfection of wisdom itself. They do not join the applications of mindfulness with the knowledge of all aspects because they do not even see the applications of mindfulness themselves. Similarly, they do not join the right efforts ... the legs of miraculous power ... the five faculties ... the five powers ... the seven limbs of awakening ... the eightfold noble path ... the ten tathāgata powers ... the four fearlessnesses ... the four detailed and thorough knowledges ... [F.32.b] the five clairvoyances ... or the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha with the knowledge of all aspects either because they do not even see the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha themselves. Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings engaged like that are 'engaged' in the perfection of wisdom.

3.40 "Furthermore, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom do not join a buddha with the knowledge of all aspects, and they do not join the knowledge of all aspects with a buddha, because they do not even see a buddha. They do not join awakening with the knowledge of all aspects, and they do not join the knowledge of all aspects with awakening, because they do not even see awakening. And why? Because a buddha is the knowledge of all aspects, and the knowledge of all aspects is the buddha as well. And because awakening itself is the knowledge of all aspects, and the knowledge of all aspects is itself awakening as well. Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings engaged like that are 'engaged' in the perfection of wisdom.

3.41 "Furthermore, Śāriputra, while bodhisattva great beings are practicing the perfection of wisdom, form is not joined with 'originating.' Form is not joined with 'perishing.' Similarly, feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is not joined with 'originating.' Consciousness is not joined with 'perishing.' Form is not joined with 'permanent.' Form is not joined with 'impermanent.' Similarly, feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is not joined with 'permanent.' Consciousness is not joined with 'impermanent.' Form is not joined with 'happiness.' Form is not joined with 'suffering.' Similarly, feeling ... perception ... [F.33.a] volitional factors ... and consciousness is not joined with 'happiness.' Consciousness is not joined with 'suffering.' Form is not joined with 'self.' Form is not joined with 'no self.' Similarly, feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is not joined with 'self.' Consciousness is not joined with 'no self.' Form is not joined with 'calm.' Form is not joined with 'not calm.' Similarly, feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is not joined with 'calm.' Consciousness is not joined with 'not calm.' Form is not joined with 'empty.' Form is not joined with 'not empty.' Similarly, feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is not joined with 'empty.' Consciousness is not joined with 'not empty.' Form is not joined with 'having a sign.' Form is not joined with 'being signless.' Similarly, feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is not joined with 'having a sign.' Consciousness is not joined with 'being signless.' Form is not joined with 'having a wish.' Form is not joined with 'being wishless.' Similarly, feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is not joined with 'having a wish.' Consciousness is not joined with 'being wishless.' Form is not joined with 'being produced' or 'stopping.' Similarly, feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is not joined with 'being produced' or 'stopping.' Form is not joined with 'the past,' form is not joined with 'the future,' and form is not joined with 'the present.' Similarly, feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is not joined with 'the past,' consciousness is not joined with 'the future,' and consciousness is not joined with 'the present.' Form is not joined with 'strong' or 'weak.' Similarly, feeling ... perception ... [F.33.b] volitional factors ... and consciousness is not joined with 'strong' or 'weak.' Form is not joined with 'is' or 'is not.' Similarly, feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is not joined with 'is' or 'is not.'

3.42 "Śāriputra, if bodhisattva great beings do not assert 'those who practice thus are practicing the perfection of wisdom'; if they do not assert 'they are not practicing'; if they do not assert 'they are practicing when they practice and not practicing when they do not practice'; and if they do not assert 'they are not practicing and not not practicing,' they are 'engaged' in the perfection of wisdom.

3.43 "Furthermore, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom do not practice the perfection of wisdom for the sake of the perfection of giving. They do not practice the perfection of wisdom for the sake of the perfection of morality, the perfection of patience, the perfection of perseverance, the perfection of concentration, or the perfection of wisdom. They do not practice the perfection of wisdom for the sake of the irreversible level. They do not practice the perfection of wisdom for the sake of bringing beings to maturity, for the sake of purifying a buddhafield, for the sake of the ten tathāgata powers, for the sake of the four fearlessnesses, for the sake of the four detailed and thorough knowledges, or for the sake of the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha. They do not practice the perfection of wisdom for the sake of inner emptiness. They do not practice the perfection of wisdom for the sake of outer emptiness, inner and outer emptiness, the emptiness of emptiness, great emptiness, the emptiness of ultimate reality, the emptiness of the compounded, the emptiness of the un-compounded, the emptiness of what transcends limits, the emptiness of no beginning and no end, the emptiness of nonrepudiation, the emptiness of a basic nature, the emptiness of its own mark, [F.34.a] the emptiness of all dharmas, the emptiness of the unproduced,<sup>66</sup> the emptiness of a nonexistent thing, the emptiness of an intrinsic nature, or the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature. They do not practice the perfection of wisdom for the sake of suchness, the dharma-constituent, or the very limit of reality. And why? Because bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom do not see a difference in any dharma. Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings engaged like that are 'engaged' in the perfection of wisdom.

3.44 "They do not practice the perfection of wisdom for the sake of divine eyes, for the sake of divine ears, for the sake of knowing others' thoughts, for the sake of the recollection of past lives, or for the sake of the performance of miraculous power. And why? Because bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom like that do not even see the perfection of wisdom itself, not to mention a bodhisattva, so however could they apprehend fully all the clairvoyances? Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings engaged like that are 'engaged' in the perfection of wisdom.

3.45 "Furthermore, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom do not think, 'With my divine eyes I will know the deaths and rebirths of beings established in as many world systems in the eastern direction as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River. With my divine ears I will listen to their words, I will know their thoughts, and having also recollected their past lives I will go with miraculous power and teach the Dharma.' Similarly, they do not think, 'With my divine eyes I will know the deaths and rebirth of beings established in as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River in each of the southern, western, northern, northeastern, southeastern, southwestern, [F.34.b] and northwestern directions, below and above. With my divine ears I will listen to their words, I will know their thoughts, and having also recollected their past lives I will go with miraculous power and teach the Dharma.' Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings engaged like that are 'engaged' in the perfection of wisdom.

3.46 "They lead infinite, countless beings to complete nirvāṇa, so, Śāriputra, Māra the wicked one does not gain entry to bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom like this. All those ordinary afflictive emotions, as many as there are, are destroyed.<sup>67</sup>

3.47 "The lord buddhas in as many world systems in the eastern direction as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River, as well as the lord buddhas in as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River to the south, west, and north, in the intermediate directions to the northeast, southeast, southwest, and northwest, below and above, guard the bodhisattva great beings so they will not fall to the śrāvaka level or to the pratyekabuddha level. The Cāturmahārājika gods and the Trāyastriṃśa, Yāma, Tuṣita, Nirmāṇarati, and Paranirmitavaśavartin gods, and the Brahmakāyika gods up to the Akaniṣṭha gods who are standing there, also guard the bodhisattva great beings so that nothing will draw them toward hindrances. Whatever physical defects<sup>68</sup> they have, in each and every way they become nonexistent in this very life. And why? Because the bodhisattva great beings are filled with a love that extends to all beings. [F.35.a] Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings engaged like that are 'engaged' in the perfection of wisdom.

3.48 "Furthermore, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom come face to face, with little difficulty, with the dhāraṇī gateways and the meditative stabilization gateways.<sup>69</sup> In all their births they please the tathāgatas, the worthy ones, the perfectly complete buddhas, and are not separated from the lord buddhas, until fully awakening to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings engaged like that are 'engaged' in the perfection of wisdom.

3.49 "Furthermore, Śāriputra, it does not occur to bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom to wonder, 'Is any phenomenon conjoined with or separated from phenomena, or does it come together with or not come together with them?' And why? Because they do not see any phenomenon that could be united or separated, or could come together or not come together. Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings engaged like that are 'engaged' in the perfection of wisdom.

3.50 "Furthermore, Śāriputra, it does not occur to bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom to wonder, 'Will I quickly fully awaken, or not fully awaken to the dharma-constituent?' And why? Because the dharma-constituent does not fully awaken by means of the dharma-constituent. Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings engaged like that are 'engaged' in the perfection of wisdom.

3.51 "Furthermore, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom [F.35.b] do not see any dharma over and above the dharma-constituent, they do not make a distinction between the dharma-constituent and any dharma,<sup>70</sup> and it does not occur to them to wonder, 'Will I penetrate into the dharma-constituent, or will I not penetrate into it?' This is because they do not see any dharma that is the dharma that would come to be penetrated into by means of a dharma, because they<sup>71</sup> do not join the dharma-constituent to 'empty' and do not join it to 'not empty.' Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings engaged like that are 'engaged' in the perfection of wisdom.

3.52 "Furthermore, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom do not join form to emptiness and do not join emptiness to form. Similarly, they do not join feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... or consciousness to emptiness and they do not join emptiness to consciousness. Furthermore, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom do not join the eye constituent to emptiness and do not join emptiness to the eye constituent; do not join the form constituent to emptiness and do not join emptiness to the form constituent; and do not join the eye consciousness constituent to emptiness and do not join emptiness to the eye consciousness constituent. Similarly, they do not join the ear constituent ... the sound constituent ... and the ear consciousness constituent ... the nose constituent ... the smell constituent ... and the nose consciousness constituent ... the tongue constituent ... the taste constituent ... and the tongue consciousness constituent ... the body constituent ... the touch constituent ... and the body consciousness constituent ... and they do not join the thinking-mind constituent to emptiness and do not join emptiness to the thinking-mind constituent. They do not join the dharma constituent to emptiness and do not join emptiness to the dharma constituent. [F.36.a] They do not join the thinking-mind consciousness constituent to emptiness and do not join emptiness to the thinking-mind consciousness constituent. And why? Because, Śāriputra, this—the yogic practice of emptiness—is the bodhisattva great beings' ultimate yogic practice. Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing emptiness do not fall to the śrāvaka level or the pratyekabuddha level, purify a buddhafiield, bring beings to maturity, and quickly and fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. Śāriputra, whatever the bodhisattva great beings' yogic practices, of them the yogic practice of the perfection of wisdom is the highest, the foremost, the most excellent, the best, the most superb, sublime, and unsurpassed. And why? Because this—the yogic practice of the perfection of wisdom, the yogic practice of emptiness, of singleness, and of wishlessness—is a yogic practice that is unsurpassed.

3.53 “Śāriputra, you should bear in mind that bodhisattva great beings engaged like that have been prophesied, or are close to being prophesied.<sup>72</sup> Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings engaging like that will work for the welfare of infinite, countless beings beyond measure, but it will not occur to them to think, ‘The lord buddhas will make a prophecy about me. I am close to being prophesied. I will purify a buddhafiield. I will bring beings to maturity. Having fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening I will turn the wheel of the Dharma.’ And why? Because they do not make the dharma-constituent into a causal sign,<sup>73</sup> and [F.36.b] do not see any dharma at all, over and above the dharma-constituent, that is a practice of the perfection of wisdom, or about which the lord buddhas will make a prophecy, or that will become fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. And why? Because the notion of a being does not occur to bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom like that. And why? Because a being is absolutely not produced and does not cease, because the true dharmic nature of dharmas is not produced and does not cease. How could what is not produced and does not cease practice the perfection of wisdom? Śāriputra, a bodhisattva great being practicing like that practices the perfection of wisdom as an unproduced and unceasing being,<sup>74</sup> practices the perfection of wisdom as a being who is emptiness, and practices the perfection of wisdom as a being who cannot be apprehended, is in an isolated state, is without a basic nature, and is without an intrinsic nature. Śāriputra, this—the yogic practice of emptiness—is the bodhisattva great beings’ ultimate yogic practice. Śāriputra, this is the bodhisattva great beings’ yogic practice of the practice of the perfection of wisdom that stands surpassing any other yogic practices. Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing this yogic practice accomplish the ten tathāgata powers, the four fearlessnesses, the four detailed and thorough knowledges, great love, great compassion, and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha. Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings standing in this yogic practice do not produce a miserly [F.37.a] thought, and they do not produce an immoral thought, a malicious thought, a lazy thought, a distracted thought, or an intellectually confused thought.”

3.54 The Lord having spoken thus, venerable Śāriputra then inquired of him, “Where did they die, Lord, bodhisattva great beings dwelling by means of this yogic practice of the perfection of wisdom who have taken birth here? And having died here where will they take birth?”

- 3.55 Venerable Śāriputra having thus inquired, the Lord said to him, “Śāriputra, you should know that bodhisattva great beings dwelling by means of this yogic practice of the perfection of wisdom have taken birth here, having died in other buddhafiels; or have taken birth here, having died a god of the Tuṣita class; or have taken birth here, having died a human.<sup>75</sup>
- 3.56 “Śāriputra, the bodhisattva great beings who have taken birth here, having died in other buddhafiels, quickly become absorbed in yogic practice, that is, in this yogic practice of the perfection of wisdom. This deep dharma manifests itself to them even after they have exchanged lives, and afterward they again become absorbed in the yogic practice of the perfection of wisdom. They take birth in whichever buddhafiels the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas dwell and maintain themselves, and they please those tathāgatas.
- 3.57 “Śāriputra, the bodhisattva great beings who have taken birth here, having died a god of the Tuṣita class, are interrupted by a single birth, and insofar as they have not lost<sup>76</sup> their six perfections, all the dhāraṇī gateways and the meditative stabilization gateways [F.37.b] are brought together in them and are not lost either.
- 3.58 “Śāriputra, the bodhisattva great beings who, having died as humans, have taken birth sharing in the unique good fortune of humans, the faculties of those bodhisattva great beings are dull unless they are bodhisattva great beings who are irreversible from awakening. They do not quickly become absorbed in this yogic practice of the perfection of wisdom, and the dhāraṇī gateways and meditative stabilization gateways do not manifest themselves to them either.
- 3.59 “Śāriputra, you asked, ‘Where will bodhisattva great beings dwelling by means of this yogic practice of the perfection of wisdom, having died here, take birth?’ Śāriputra, having died in this buddhafiels, bodhisattva great beings dwelling by means of this yogic practice of the perfection of wisdom will pass on from buddhafiels to buddhafiels wherever the lord buddhas dwell and maintain themselves, and until they fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening they will never be separated from the lord buddhas and will please those lord buddhas.
- 3.60 “Śāriputra, there are certain bodhisattva great beings without skillful means who become absorbed in the four concentrations and practice the perfections, but even if, having taken birth among the long-lived gods because of their acquisition of the concentrations, they acquire a human birth and please the lord buddhas, they are still those with dull, not keen, faculties.

- 3.61 “Śāriputra, there are bodhisattva great beings who become absorbed in the concentrations and practice the perfections but still, without skillful means, relax [F.38.a] the concentrations and so take birth even in the desire realm. Śāriputra, those bodhisattva great beings too are still those with dull, not keen, faculties.
- 3.62 “Śāriputra, there are also bodhisattva great beings who become absorbed in the four concentrations, and become absorbed in the four formless absorptions, the applications of mindfulness, the right efforts, the legs of miraculous power, the faculties, the powers, the limbs of awakening, and the path but still, with great compassion and skillful means do not take birth through the influence of the concentrations and do not take birth through the influence of the four immeasurables or the formless absorptions, but instead take birth wherever the lord buddhas dwell and maintain themselves and, inseparable from this yogic practice of the perfection of wisdom, will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening right here in the Fortunate Age.
- 3.63 “Śāriputra, there are also those bodhisattva great beings who, having produced the four concentrations, the four immeasurables, and the four formless absorptions stop all the concentrations and meditative stabilizations with skillful means, and, taking birth in the desire realms, are born in great sāla tree-like royal families, or in great sāla tree-like brahmin families, or in great sāla tree-like business families. This is not because they want another existence, but they take birth in order to bring beings to maturity.
- 3.64 “Śāriputra, there are also those bodhisattva great beings who become absorbed in the four concentrations, and become absorbed in the four immeasurables, and the four formless absorptions as well, but with skillful means do not take birth through the influence of the concentrations, [F.38.b] the meditative stabilizations, or the absorptions but instead take birth sharing in the good fortune of the Cāturmahārājika gods, or take birth sharing in the good fortune of the Trāyastriṃśa, Yāma, Tuṣita, Nirmāṇarati, and Paranirmitavaśavartin gods. Living there they bring beings to maturity, purify a buddhfield, and please the lord buddhas.
- 3.65 “Śāriputra, there are also those bodhisattva great beings who practice the six perfections and with skillful means become absorbed in the four concentrations, and become absorbed in the four immeasurables, and the four formless absorptions as well, who, having died here, take birth in the Brahmaloḥa. Having become brahmās, mahābrahmās, there, standing in those brahmā dwellings they pass on from buddhfield to buddhfield in order to request the tathāgatas to turn the wheel of the Dharma in whichever buddhafiield the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

3.66 “Śāriputra, there are also those bodhisattva great beings interrupted by a single birth who practice the six perfections and with skillful means become absorbed in the four concentrations, and become absorbed in the four immeasurables and the four formless absorptions as well, who also cultivate the applications of mindfulness, the right efforts, the legs of miraculous power, the faculties, the powers, the limbs of awakening, and the path, and become absorbed in the emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness meditative stabilizations, but without taking birth through their influence. [F.39.a] Having pleased the lord buddhas who have manifested themselves, and practiced celibacy there, and having taken birth sharing in the good fortune of the Tuṣita gods, remaining there for as long as they live without their faculties declining, mindful, with introspection, and surrounded by, and at the head of, many hundred thousand one hundred million billion gods, they demonstrate a birth here and fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening in various buddhafiields.

3.67 “Śāriputra, there are also those bodhisattva great beings who have acquired the six clairvoyances and do not take birth in the desire realm, do not take birth in the form and formless realms, but passing on from buddhafiield to buddhafiield they respect, revere, honor, and worship those lord buddhas, the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfect complete buddhas.

3.68 “Śāriputra, there are also those bodhisattva great beings who have acquired the six clairvoyances and who,<sup>77</sup> sporting by means of the six clairvoyances, pass on from buddhafiield to buddhafiield—buddhafiields where, over and above the Buddha Vehicle, there is not even the sound of the words Śrāvaka Vehicle or Pratyekabuddha Vehicle.

3.69 “Śāriputra, there are also those bodhisattva great beings who have acquired the six clairvoyances and who, sporting by means of the six clairvoyances, pass on from buddhafiield to buddhafiield—buddhafiields where the lifespan of beings is infinite.

3.70 “Śāriputra, there are also those bodhisattva great beings who have acquired the six clairvoyances and who pass on from world system to world system—world systems where there is not even the sound of the word Buddha, of the word Dharma, or of the word Saṅgha, and, having arrived, [F.39.b] there they proclaim the word Buddha, proclaim the word Dharma, and proclaim the word Saṅgha, speaking in praise of the Three Jewels. The word Buddha, the word Dharma, and the word Saṅgha cause those beings, furthermore, to become serenely confident and to take birth, after their death there, where the lord buddhas are dwelling.

- 3.71 “Śāriputra, there are bodhisattva great beings who, after producing the first thought of awakening, have acquired the four concentrations, four immeasurables, and four formless absorptions; who cultivate the applications of mindfulness, right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and the noble path; and who have acquired the ten tathāgata powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, and eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha. They do not take birth in the desire realm, do not take birth in the form realm, and do not take birth in the formless realm but work there for the welfare of beings.
- 3.72 “Śāriputra, there are bodhisattva great beings who, having entered right from the production of the first thought of awakening into flawlessness,<sup>78</sup> stand on the irreversible level.
- 3.73 “Śāriputra, there are bodhisattva great beings who, right from the production of the first thought of awakening, fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, turn the wheel of the Dharma, work for the welfare of countless beings beyond measure, and enter into complete nirvāṇa in the element of nirvāṇa without any aggregates left behind. Even though they have entered into nirvāṇa, their good Dharma lasts for an eon or more than an eon.
- 3.74 “Śāriputra, there are bodhisattva great beings who, right from the production of the first thought, [F.40.a] become absorbed in the yogic practice of the perfection of wisdom and pass on from buddhafiield to buddhafiield together with many hundred thousand one hundred million billion bodhisattvas in order to see the lord buddhas and in order to bring beings to maturity and purify a buddhafiield.
- 3.75 “Śāriputra, there are bodhisattva great beings who practice the six perfections and have acquired the four concentrations, have acquired the four immeasurables, and have acquired the four formless absorptions. They sport with the concentrations, the immeasurables, and the formless absorptions in different ways, that is, they become absorbed in the first concentration and, having emerged from that, become absorbed in the cessation absorption; having emerged from that, they become absorbed in the second concentration, and having emerged from that become absorbed in the cessation absorption; having emerged from that, they become absorbed in the third concentration, and having emerged from that become absorbed in the cessation absorption; having emerged from that, they become absorbed in the fourth concentration, and having emerged from that become absorbed in the cessation absorption; having emerged from that, they become absorbed in the station of endless space, and having emerged from that become absorbed in the cessation absorption; having emerged from that, they become absorbed in the station of endless consciousness, and having emerged from that become absorbed in the cessation absorption; having emerged from that, they become absorbed in the station of nothing-at-all, and having emerged from that become absorbed in the cessation absorption; having emerged from that, [F.40.b] they become absorbed in the station of neither perception nor nonperception, and having emerged from that become absorbed in the cessation absorption. Śāriputra, those bodhisattva great beings thus practicing the perfection of wisdom with skillful means become absorbed into those concentrations, immeasurables, meditative stabilizations, and absorptions by leaping above.<sup>79</sup>

3.76 “Śāriputra, there are bodhisattva great beings who have acquired the applications of mindfulness, the right efforts, the legs of miraculous power, the faculties, the powers, the limbs of awakening, and the noble path; who have acquired the ten tathāgata powers, the four fearlessnesses, the four detailed and thorough knowledges, and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha; who do not reach the result of stream enterer, and who do not reach the result of once-returner, the result of non-returner, the state of a worthy one, or a pratyekabuddha’s awakening. They practice the perfection of wisdom and with skillful means cause the mental continuums of beings to be led into the path, cause them to be purified, and cause them to reach the result of stream enterer and to reach the result of once-returner, the result of non-returner, the state of a worthy one, and a pratyekabuddha’s awakening. Śāriputra, the knowledge that is the cause of reaching the result state of a worthy one and a pratyekabuddha’s awakening is a bodhisattva great being’s forbearance. Śāriputra, you should know those bodhisattva great beings dwelling in this perfection of wisdom are irreversible from awakening.

3.77 “Śāriputra, there are bodhisattva great beings standing in the six perfections who make the Tuṣita abode pure. Śāriputra, you should know that they are bodhisattva great beings [F.41.a] of the Fortunate Age.

3.78 “Śāriputra, there are bodhisattva great beings who acquire the four concentrations, up to who acquire the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha. They practice in order to understand the four truths but do not penetrate the four truths. Śāriputra, you should know that they are bodhisattva great beings interrupted by a single birth.

3.79 “Śāriputra, there are bodhisattva great beings standing in the six perfections who pass on from world system to world system. They cause beings to be led to awakening. They make a buddhafield pure. Śāriputra, you should know that they are bodhisattva great beings who will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening over the course of immeasurable, incalculable eons.

- 3.80 “Śāriputra, there are bodhisattva great beings standing in the six perfections who, ever striving for the sake of beings, never speak an unprofitable word and never do an unprofitable physical, verbal, or mental deed.
- 3.81 “Śāriputra, there are bodhisattva great beings practicing the six perfections who, ever striving for the sake of beings, pass on from buddhafiield to buddhafiield, cutting off the path to the terrible forms of life.
- 3.82 “Śāriputra, there are bodhisattva great beings standing in the six perfections who, focusing<sup>80</sup> on the perfection of giving, supply beings with all their requirements for happiness: food for those seeking food and drink for those seeking drink. They supply as appropriate flowers, flower garlands, perfumes, creams, incense, [F.41.b] beds and seats, clothes, ornaments, sustenance, homes, money, grain, jewels, pearls, gold, silver, and coral.
- 3.83 “Śāriputra, there are bodhisattva great beings standing in the six perfections who, focusing on the perfection of morality, establish beings in restraint of body, speech, and mind.
- 3.84 “Śāriputra, there are bodhisattva great beings standing in the six perfections who, focusing on the perfection of patience, establish beings in non-anger and non-malice.
- 3.85 “Śāriputra, there are bodhisattva great beings standing in the six perfections who, focusing on the perfection of perseverance, establish beings in a zeal for all wholesome dharmas.
- 3.86 “Śāriputra, there are bodhisattva great beings standing in the six perfections who, focusing on the perfection of concentration, establish beings in a calm abiding single-pointedness and detachment from sense objects.
- 3.87 “Śāriputra, there are bodhisattva great beings standing in the six perfections who, focusing on the perfection of wisdom, magically produce a body just like the shape a tathāgata assumes<sup>81</sup> and teach the Dharma in order to lead beings in the hells, those in the animal world, and beings in the world of Yama beyond all the terrible forms of life.
- 3.88 “Śāriputra, there are bodhisattva great beings standing in the six perfections who magically produce a body just like the shape a buddha assumes, [F.42.a] betake themselves to as many buddhafiields in the eastern direction as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River, teach the Dharma, attend on the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas, listen to the Dharma, see the bodhisattva saṅgha and the array of buddhafiield qualities, apprehend the causal signs<sup>82</sup> of those buddhafiields and perfect many buddhafiields even more expansive and more special than those, perfecting themselves in those buddhafiields as bodhisattva great beings interrupted by a single birth. Similarly, they betake themselves to each of as many buddhafiels as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River to the south, west, and north, in the intermediate directions to the northeast, southeast, southwest, and northwest, below and above, teach the Dharma, attend on the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas, listen to the Dharma, see the bodhisattva saṅgha and the array of buddhafiels qualities, apprehend the causal signs of those buddhafiels and perfect many buddhafiels even more expansive and more special than those, perfecting themselves in those buddhafiels as bodhisattva great beings interrupted by a single birth.

3.89 “Śāriputra, there are bodhisattva great beings practicing the six perfections who, having become fully endowed with the thirty-two major marks of a great person, become endowed with refined and purified faculties. With their purified bodies they make beings feel a joy and serene confidence. They become dear to and loved by many people. Just that wholesome root of those beings [F.42.b] with that serene mental confidence furthermore causes them to gradually enter into complete nirvāṇa by means of the three vehicles.

3.90 “Thus indeed, Śāriputra, should bodhisattva great beings practicing the six perfections train in the purified body; thus should they train in the purified speech and in the purified mind.

3.91 “Śāriputra, there are bodhisattva great beings practicing the six perfections who, having acquired refined faculties, do not, on account of their refined faculties, praise themselves and disparage others.

3.92 “Śāriputra, there are bodhisattva great beings who, after producing the first thought of awakening, stand in the perfection of giving and the perfection of morality. Until they reach the irreversible stage they never become destitute and never tumble into terrible, catastrophic forms of life.

3.93 “Śāriputra, there are bodhisattva great beings who, after producing the first thought of awakening until they reach the irreversible stage, never quit the ten wholesome actions.

3.94 “Śāriputra, there are bodhisattva great beings standing in the perfection of giving and the perfection of morality who become wheel-turning emperors, establish beings in the ten wholesome actions, and gather beings together through giving and kind words.

3.95 “Śāriputra, there are bodhisattva great beings standing in the perfection of giving and the perfection of morality who, protecting many empires of wheel-turning emperors, dealing with many hundreds of thousands of empires of wheel-turning emperors, standing there pleasing many hundred thousand one hundred million billion buddhas, respect, revere, honor, and worship those lord buddhas [F.43.a] with all requirements and all offerings.

- 3.96 “Śāriputra, there are bodhisattva great beings standing in the six perfections who lighten the darkness of beings standing in wrong views with the light of the buddhadharmas, and they never separate themselves from the light of the buddhadharmas up until they fully awaken to the unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.<sup>83</sup>
- 3.97 “This, Śāriputra, is the origination of the bodhisattva great beings in the buddhadharmas.<sup>84</sup>
- 3.98 “Therefore, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom would provide no opportunity for basic<sup>85</sup> immoral physical, verbal, and mental action.” [B4]
- 3.99 The Lord having spoken thus, venerable Śāriputra then inquired of him, “What, Lord, is a bodhisattva great being’s basic immoral physical action, basic immoral verbal action, and basic immoral mental action?”
- 3.100 Venerable Śāriputra having thus inquired, the Lord said to him, “Śāriputra, when it occurs to a bodhisattva great being, ‘This is the body with which I should undertake physical action, this the voice with which I should undertake verbal action, and this the thinking mind with which I should undertake mental action,’ Śāriputra, that undertaking of a physical, verbal, or mental action is a basic immorality of a bodhisattva great being. This is because, Śāriputra, a bodhisattva great being’s practice of the perfection of wisdom does not apprehend a body, does not apprehend a voice, and does not apprehend a thinking mind. [F.43.b]
- 3.101 “Śāriputra, were bodhisattva great being practicing the perfection of wisdom to apprehend a body, to apprehend a voice, and to apprehend a thinking mind, they would with that body, voice, and thinking mind cause a miserly thought to arise, or cause an immoral thought, a malicious thought, a lazy thought, a distracted thought, or a confused thought to arise. But something like that, Śāriputra, will never be known, because it is impossible for bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom to cause the final physical, verbal, and thinking mind basis of suffering to arise. And why? Because, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the six perfections are causing the final physical basis of suffering to be cleansed, the final verbal basis of suffering to be cleansed, and the final thinking mind basis of suffering to be cleansed. And that, Śāriputra, is the bodhisattva great beings’ absence of basic immoral physical, verbal, and mental action.”
- 3.102 “How, Lord, do bodhisattva great beings cleanse basic immoral physical, verbal, and mental action?” asked Śāriputra.
- 3.103 The Lord replied, “Śāriputra, because bodhisattva great beings do not apprehend a body, do not apprehend a voice, and do not apprehend a thinking mind, they thus cleanse basic immoral physical, verbal, and mental action. I say, Śāriputra, were bodhisattva great beings after producing the first thought of awakening to have taken and pursued the ten wholesome actions without producing a śrāvaka thought or a pratyekabuddha thought, were they to have constantly attended to a greatly compassionate thought for beings, in that case bodhisattva great beings [F.44.a] would have thoroughly cleansed the final physical basis of suffering, the final verbal basis of suffering, and the final mental basis of suffering.

3.104 “Śāriputra, there are bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom cleansing the awakening path who are practicing the perfection of giving and practicing the perfection of morality, the perfection of patience, the perfection of perseverance, the perfection of concentration, and the perfection of wisdom.”

3.105 “What, Lord, is the bodhisattva great beings’ awakening path?” asked Śāriputra.

The Lord replied, “Śāriputra, when bodhisattva great beings practice the awakening path they do not apprehend a body, do not apprehend a voice, do not apprehend a thinking mind, do not apprehend the perfection of giving, do not apprehend the perfection of morality, do not apprehend the perfection of patience, do not apprehend the perfection of perseverance, do not apprehend the perfection of concentration, do not apprehend the perfection of wisdom, do not apprehend a Śrāvaka Vehicle, do not apprehend a Pratyekabuddha Vehicle, do not apprehend a Bodhisattva Vehicle, and do not apprehend a perfectly complete Buddha Vehicle. That is to say, this not apprehending all dharmas is the bodhisattva great beings’ awakening path because, Śāriputra, nobody is capable of breaking bodhisattva great beings traveling on this path practicing the six perfections.”

3.106 “How, Lord, do bodhisattva great beings who cannot be broken practice?” asked Śāriputra.

3.107 The Lord replied, “Śāriputra, here bodhisattva great beings [F.44.b] practicing the six perfections do not falsely project form, and they do not falsely project feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness; they do not falsely project the earth element, and they do not falsely project the water element, fire element, wind element, space element, or consciousness element; they do not falsely project eyes and form, and they do not falsely project ears and sound, nose and smell, tongue and taste, body and touch, or thinking mind and dharmas; they do not falsely project the eye constituent, form constituent, and eye consciousness constituent, and they do not falsely project the ear constituent, sound constituent, and ear consciousness constituent, the nose constituent, smell constituent, and nose consciousness constituent, the tongue constituent, taste constituent, and tongue consciousness constituent, the body constituent, touch constituent, and body consciousness constituent, or the thinking mind constituent, dharma constituent, and thinking-mind consciousness constituent. They do not falsely project the applications of mindfulness, right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, or path; they do not falsely project the perfection of giving, and they do not falsely project the perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, or perfection of wisdom; they do not falsely project the ten tathāgata powers, and they do not falsely project the four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, or eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha; [F.45.a] they do not falsely project the result of stream enterer, and they do not falsely project the result of once-returner, the result of non-returner, or the state of a worthy one; and they do not falsely project a pratyekabuddha's awakening, they do not falsely project a bodhisattva, and they do not falsely project unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings growing in the six perfections like that cannot be broken by anyone.

3.108 “Śāriputra, there are bodhisattva great beings standing in the six perfections who perfect the knowledge of a knower of all aspects. In possession of that knowledge they block all the gateways to terrible forms of life, do not become destitute, worn-out people, and do not appropriate the sort of body<sup>86</sup> this world with its celestial beings criticizes.”

3.109 Venerable Śāriputra then asked the Lord, “What, Lord, is the bodhisattva great beings' knowledge of a knower of all aspects?”

3.110 The Lord replied, “Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings in possession of that knowledge behold as many tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River residing in as many world systems in the eastern direction as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River. They listen to their Dharma, and they also see the bodhisattva saṅghas and behold the arrays of buddhafiield qualities. Similarly, they behold as many tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River residing in world systems to the south, west, and north, in the intermediate directions to the northeast, southeast, southwest, and northwest, below and above, [F.45.b] as many as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River. They listen to their Dharma, and they also see those bodhisattva saṅghas and behold the arrays of buddhafiield qualities.

3.111 “Bodhisattva great beings in possession of that knowledge form no notion of a buddha, form no notion of a bodhisattva, form no notion of a śrāvaka, form no notion of a pratyekabuddha, form no notion of a self, form no notion of an other, and form no notion of a buddhafiield. Bodhisattva great beings in possession of that knowledge practice the perfection of giving and practice the perfection of morality, patience, perseverance, concentration, and wisdom but do not apprehend those six perfections. They cultivate the applications of mindfulness but do not apprehend the applications of mindfulness. They cultivate the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and path but do not apprehend the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and path. They do not apprehend the powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, or distinct attributes of a buddha. That, Śāriputra, is the bodhisattva great beings' knowledge of a knower of all aspects, and bodhisattva great beings in possession of that knowledge perfect all the buddhadharmas but still do not see<sup>87</sup> all the buddhadharmas.

3.112 “Śāriputra, there are bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom who acquire the five eyes and cleanse them. [F.46.a] And what are the five? They are the flesh eye, divine eye, wisdom eye, dharma eye, and buddha eye.”

3.113 “What, Lord, is a bodhisattva great being's perfectly pure flesh eye?” asked Śāriputra.

The Lord replied, “There is the flesh eye of a bodhisattva great being that sees for one hundred yojanas. There is the flesh eye of a bodhisattva great being that sees Jambudvīpa. There is the flesh eye of a bodhisattva great being that sees two continents. There is the flesh eye of a bodhisattva great being that sees a four-continent world system. There is the flesh eye of a bodhisattva great being that sees a thousand world systems. There is the flesh eye of a bodhisattva great being that sees a million world systems. And there is the flesh eye of a bodhisattva great being that sees the great billionfold world system. That, Śāriputra, is a bodhisattva great being's perfectly pure flesh eye.”

3.114 “What, Lord, is a bodhisattva great being's perfectly pure divine eye?” asked Śāriputra.

The Lord replied, “Śāriputra, bodhisattvas know the divine eye of the Cāturmahārājika gods. Bodhisattvas know the divine eye of the Trāyastriṃśa, Yāma, Tuṣita, Nirmāṇarati, and Paranirmitavaśavartin gods. Bodhisattvas know the divine eye of the Brahmapurohita, Brahmakāyika, Brahmapāṛṣadya, Parīttābha, Apramāṇābha, Ābhāsvara, Parīttāśubha, Apramāṇāśubha, and Śubhakṛtsna; of the Anabhakā, Puṇyaprasava, and Bṛhatphala; and [F.46.b] of the Asaṃjñisattva, Śuddhāvāsa,<sup>88</sup> Avṛha, Atapa, Sudṛśa, Sudarśana, and Akaniṣṭha gods. Śāriputra, the Cāturmahārājika gods do not know the divine eye of bodhisattva great beings. Construe as before, up to the Akaniṣṭha gods do not know the divine eye of bodhisattvas.

3.115 “With just that perfectly pure divine eye they know as they are the deaths and rebirths of beings established in as many world systems in the eastern direction as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River. Similarly, they know as they are the deaths and rebirths of beings established in as many world systems in each of the southern, western, northern, northeastern, southeastern, southwestern, and northwestern directions, below and above, as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River. That, Śāriputra, is the perfectly pure divine eye of bodhisattva great beings.”

3.116 “What, Lord, is a bodhisattva great being’s perfectly pure wisdom eye?” asked Śāriputra.

The Lord replied, “There is no phenomenon that is compounded or un-compounded, wholesome or unwholesome, a basic immorality or not a basic immorality, with outflows or without outflows, with afflictions or without afflictions, ordinary or extraordinary, defiled or purified that bodhisattva great beings in possession of that wisdom eye do not know. There is no phenomenon at all that bodhisattva great beings in possession of that wisdom eye have not seen, or heard, or of which they have not been mindful, or of which they have not been aware. That, Śāriputra, is [F.47.a] the perfectly pure wisdom eye of a bodhisattva great being.”

The Lord replied,<sup>89</sup> “Here a bodhisattva great being’s dharma eye knows, ‘This person is a faith follower, this one is a Dharma follower, this one dwells in emptiness, this one dwells in signlessness, this one dwells in wishlessness. Through the gateways to liberation the five faculties of this person will be produced, with the five faculties they will experience the uninterrupted meditative stabilization, with the uninterrupted meditative stabilization they will produce the knowledge and seeing of liberation, and with the knowledge and seeing of liberation they will eliminate the three fetters—the view of the perishable collection, doubt, and grasping rules and rituals as absolute. That person is called a stream enterer. This one, having reached the path of meditation, weakens attachment to sense objects and malice. That person is called a once-returner. And this one, by intense meditation on just that path eliminates attachment to sense objects and malice. That person is called a non-returner. This one, by intense meditation on just that path eliminates attachment to forms, attachment to formless states, ignorance, pride, and gross mental excitement. That person is called a worthy one.’<sup>90</sup>

3.118 “ ‘This person dwells in emptiness. Through the emptiness gateway to liberation they will gain the five faculties, with the five faculties they will experience the uninterrupted meditative stabilization, with the uninterrupted meditative stabilization they will produce the knowledge and seeing of liberation, construing it as before, up to that person will reach the state of a worthy one.

3.119 “ ‘This person dwells in signlessness. Through the signless gateway to liberation they will gain the five faculties, construing it as before, up to that person will reach the state of a worthy one. [F.47.b]

3.120 “ ‘This person dwells in wishlessness. Through the wishless gateway to liberation they will gain the five faculties. Then, with the five faculties they will experience the uninterrupted meditative stabilization; having reached the uninterrupted meditative stabilization they will produce the knowledge and seeing of liberation, up to they will reach the state of a worthy one.’ That, Śāriputra, is a bodhisattva great being’s perfectly pure dharma eye.

3.121 “Furthermore,<sup>91</sup> Śāriputra, that a bodhisattva, having thus realized that everything qualified by origination is qualified by cessation, will gain the five faculties, faith, and so on—that too, Śāriputra, is a bodhisattva great being’s perfectly pure dharma eye.

3.122 “Furthermore, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings know as follows: ‘This bodhisattva great being has produced the first thought of awakening, practices the perfection of giving, the perfection of morality, up to the perfection of wisdom, and gains the faculty of faith and the faculty of perseverance from that. Possessed of skillful means and stable with wholesome roots, they intentionally appropriate a body. This bodhisattva great being is born in great sāla tree-like royal families, this one in great sāla tree-like brahmin families, this one in great sāla tree-like business families, this one is born among the Cāturmahārājika gods, this one among the Trāyastriṃśa gods, this one the Yāma, this one the Tuṣita, this one the Nirmāṇarati, and this one the Paranirmitavaśavartin gods. [F.48.a] One, standing there, will bring beings to maturity, make available to those beings all their requirements for happiness, purify a buddhafiield, please the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas, and respect, revere, honor, and worship them. One will not fall to the śrāvaka level or to the pratyekabuddha level. This bodhisattva great being will be irreversible up until they have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.’ That too, Śāriputra, is a bodhisattva great being’s perfectly pure dharma eye.

3.123 “Furthermore, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings know that these bodhisattva great beings have been prophesied to reach unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, these are definite, these are indefinite, these will be prophesied, these will not be prophesied, these are irreversible, these are not irreversible, the clairvoyances of these are complete, and the clairvoyances of these are not complete. These bodhisattva great beings with their completed clairvoyances go to as many world systems in the eastern direction as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River, please the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas, and respect, revere, honor, and worship them. Similarly, they go to as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River to the south, west, and north, in the intermediate directions to the northeast, southeast, [F.48.b] southwest, and northwest, below and above, please the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas, and respect, revere, honor, and worship them. This one will acquire the clairvoyances, this one will not acquire the clairvoyances. This one has acquired the forbearance,<sup>92</sup> this one has not acquired the forbearance. The buddhafield of this bodhisattva great being will become perfectly pure, the buddhafield of this one will not become perfectly pure. This bodhisattva great being has made the great prayer that is a vow, this one has not made the great prayer that is a vow.<sup>93</sup> This one has brought beings to maturity, this one has not brought beings to maturity. The lord buddhas in the ten directions in as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River speak in praise of this bodhisattva great being, but they do not speak in praise of this one. These bodhisattva great beings will stay close<sup>94</sup> to the lord buddhas, these ones will not stay close. This bodhisattva's lifespan will be finite, this one's lifespan will be infinite. This one's radiance, voice, and community of monks<sup>95</sup> will be infinite, this one's will be finite. This one will undertake the difficult practices, this one will not undertake them. This one is in a final existence, this one is not in a final existence. This one will be seated at the site of awakening, [F.49.a] this one will not be seated there. These bodhisattva great beings will have Māras, these will not have them.' That too, Śāriputra, is a bodhisattva great being's perfectly pure dharma eye."

3.124 "What, Lord, is a bodhisattva great being's perfectly pure buddha eye?" asked Śāriputra.

The Lord replied, "Bodhisattva great beings, right after the thought of awakening, become absorbed in the vajropama meditative stabilization and gain the knowledge of all aspects. They are endowed with the ten tathāgata powers, and they are endowed with the four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, great love, great compassion, and a buddha's liberation without obscurations. This is their eye, endowed with which there is nothing bodhisattva great beings do not see, or hear, or remember, or know. That, Śāriputra, is a bodhisattva great being's perfectly pure eye of a buddha who has fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

- 3.125 “Therefore, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want to cleanse and want to acquire the five eyes should make endeavors in the six perfections. And why? Because, Śāriputra, all wholesome dharmas, all śrāvaka dharmas, all pratyekabuddha dharmas, all bodhisattva dharmas, and all buddha dharmas are included in the six perfections. Śāriputra, if perfect teachers teach that all wholesome dharmas are inside the perfection of wisdom they are perfect teachers [F.49.b] teaching perfectly. And why? Because, Śāriputra, the perfection of wisdom produces all the perfections and those five eyes, because bodhisattva great beings training in the five eyes will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.
- 3.126 “Śāriputra, those bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom will acquire the six clairvoyances and experience<sup>96</sup> the performance of miraculous power in its various aspects. They will, furthermore, cause shaking.<sup>97</sup> They will experience being one and becoming many, being many and becoming one, and appearing and disappearing. They will even go right through walls, even go right through fences, and even go right through mountains without them obstructing their bodies, just as they would through the sky. They will even travel cross-legged through the air like a bird on the wing. They will also emerge onto the earth and sink down into it, as they would do in water. They will also walk on water without sinking, as they would do on the earth. They will also emit smoke and flames, like a big bonfire. Even the sun and the moon, as incredibly magical, powerful, and grand as they are, they will touch and stroke with their hands. They extend their power up to the Brahmaloaka with their bodies.
- 3.127 “Because its intrinsic nature is empty, its intrinsic nature is isolated,<sup>98</sup> and its intrinsic nature is not produced, they do not apprehend a false projection of miraculous power, they do not apprehend what they might falsely project, or what might be falsely projecting; apart from paying attention to the knowledge of all aspects they do not intend miraculous power, or intend to accomplish miraculous power. [F.50.a] Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom like that accomplish knowledge of the clairvoyance that realizes the performance of miraculous power.
- 3.128 “Because its intrinsic nature is empty, its intrinsic nature is isolated, and its intrinsic nature is not produced, they hear sounds with the purified divine ear that transcends the human—namely, human and divine ones.<sup>99</sup> Thus they do not apprehend the sound, thinking, ‘I hear a sound with my divine hearing,’ so they do not falsely project it. Apart from paying attention to the knowledge of all aspects they do not intend that, or intend to accomplish that. Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom like that accomplish knowledge of the clairvoyance that realizes divine hearing.

3.129        “With their mind they know the thought of other beings, of other persons, for what it is. They know a greedy thought for what it is: a greedy thought. They know a mind free from greed for what it is: a mind free from greed. Similarly, they know a mind with hate and free from hate, with confusion and free from confusion, with craving and free from craving, with appropriation and free from appropriation, collected and distracted, narrow and inclusive,<sup>100</sup> absorbed and not absorbed, emancipated and not emancipated, with outflows and without outflows, blemished and unblemished, and they know a surpassed thought for what it is—a surpassed thought—and they know an unsurpassed thought for what it is: an unsurpassed thought. Because even that thought is no thought—because it is inconceivable—it [F.50.b] does not falsely project anything. They do not apprehend even that very thought that does not falsely project anything. Because its intrinsic nature is empty, its intrinsic nature is isolated, and its intrinsic nature is not produced, they do not falsely project ‘I know.’ Apart from paying attention to the knowledge of all aspects, they do not intend a thought. Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom like that accomplish knowledge of the clairvoyance that realizes the thought activity of all beings.

3.130        “Śāriputra, they accomplish knowledge of the clairvoyance that realizes knowledge that recollects past lives in various aspects: they recollect from one thought up to even a hundred thoughts, or they recollect one day up to a hundred days, one month up to a hundred months, one year up to a hundred years, one eon up to a hundred eons, or even up to many hundred eons, or up to many thousand eons, or up to many hundred thousand eons, or up to many hundred thousand one hundred million billion eons, recollecting right up to the very limit of the past. ‘I was in such-and-such a place, named so-and-so, in such-and-such a lineage, with such-and-such a birth status, following such-and-such a diet, pursuing such-and-such a livelihood, with an allotted lifespan of such-and-such a duration, actually living for such-and-such a length of time; having died there I was born in such-and-such places, and having died there then I took birth here.’ Thus, they recollect their own and others’ past lives in their various aspects along with the appearances,<sup>101</sup> locations, and places of origin. Because even that knowledge is no knowledge—because it is inconceivable—that knowledge of clairvoyance that recollects past lives does not falsely project anything. They do not apprehend even that very knowledge [F.51.a] that does not falsely project anything. Because its intrinsic nature is empty, its intrinsic nature is isolated, and its intrinsic nature is not produced, they do not falsely project ‘I know.’ Apart from paying attention to the knowledge of all aspects, they do not intend to know recollection. Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom like that accomplish knowledge of the clairvoyance that realizes previous states of existence.

3.131 “With their purified divine eye that far surpasses the human they see beings, and they know beings that are dying and being born; are beautiful, ugly, vile, or exemplary; are in a good form of life and in a terrible form of life—exactly in accord with the action.<sup>102</sup> They know those beings who have bad physical behavior, who have bad verbal behavior and bad mental behavior, who speak ill of noble beings, and who hold wrong views, and who with the action of those wrong views as a foundation and cause, on the breakup of their body after death tumble into and take birth in terrible, catastrophic forms of life. They know those beings who have good physical behavior, who have good verbal behavior and good mental behavior, who do not speak ill of noble beings, and who hold right views, and who with the action of that good physical, verbal, and mental behavior as a foundation and cause, take birth among the gods in good forms of life in the heavenly worlds. Thus, with their purified divine eye that far surpasses the human they know as they are the deaths and births of beings in the six forms of life in worlds in the ten directions as vast as the dharma-constituent and as far-reaching as the space element in all world systems. Because even that eye is no eye—because it is inconceivable—it does not falsely project anything. They do not apprehend even that very eye [F.51.b] that does not falsely project anything. Because its intrinsic nature is empty, its intrinsic nature is isolated, and its intrinsic nature is not produced, they do not falsely project ‘I know.’ Apart from paying attention to the knowledge of all aspects, they do not intend an eye. Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom like that accomplish knowledge of the clairvoyance that realizes the divine eye.

3.132 “They accomplish knowledge of the clairvoyance that realizes the extinction of outflows and do not fall to the śrāvaka or pratyekabuddha level. They do not wish to attain any dharma apart from full awakening to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.<sup>103</sup> With that clairvoyance, based on the vajropama meditative stabilization they eliminate all residual impressions, connections, and afflictions. Because even that knowledge is no knowledge—because it is inconceivable—the wholesomeness, when knowledge of the clairvoyance that realizes the extinction of outflows has been accomplished, does not falsely project anything. They do not apprehend even that very knowledge. Because its intrinsic nature is empty, its intrinsic nature is isolated, and its intrinsic nature is not produced, they do not falsely project ‘I know.’ Apart from paying attention to the knowledge of all aspects, they do not intend even that knowledge. Śāriputra,

- bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom like that accomplish knowledge of the clairvoyance that realizes the extinction of outflows.
- 3.133 “Śāriputra, practicing the perfection of wisdom like that the six clairvoyances of bodhisattva great beings are perfected and purified, and those purified clairvoyances cause them to gain the knowledge of all aspects.
- 3.134 Therefore, Śāriputra, there are bodhisattva great beings [F.52.a] practicing the perfection of wisdom who, standing in the perfection of giving, cleanse the path to the knowledge of all aspects based on not holding on to anything because of the emptiness that transcends limits.
- 3.135 “Śāriputra, there are bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom who, standing in the perfection of morality, cleanse the path to the knowledge of all aspects based on not incurring a downfall or a compounded downfall because of the emptiness that transcends limits.
- 3.136 “Śāriputra, there are bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom who, standing in the perfection of patience, cleanse the path to the knowledge of all aspects based on there being no disturbance because of the emptiness that transcends limits.
- 3.137 “Śāriputra, there are bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom who, standing in the perfection of perseverance, cleanse the path to the knowledge of all aspects based on being physically and mentally indefatigable because of the emptiness that transcends limits.
- 3.138 “Śāriputra, there are bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom who, standing undistracted in the perfection of concentration, cleanse the path to the knowledge of all aspects because of the emptiness that transcends limits.
- 3.139 “Śāriputra, there are bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom who, standing in the perfection of wisdom, cleanse the path to the knowledge of all aspects based on not apprehending intellectually confused thoughts<sup>104</sup> because of the emptiness that transcends limits.
- 3.140 “Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom like that, standing in the six perfections, cleanse the path to the knowledge of all aspects based on not having gone, not having come, and not having grasped anything [F.52.b] because of the emptiness that transcends limits.
- 3.141 “Śāriputra, giving is designated<sup>105</sup> based on holding on to things; morality is designated based on immorality; patience is designated based on disturbance; perseverance is designated based on laziness; concentration is designated based on an uncollected state; and wisdom is designated based on intellectual confusion.

3.142 “They do not falsely project ‘they have gotten beyond that.’ They do not falsely project ‘they have not gotten beyond that.’ They do not falsely project ‘giving and miserliness.’ They do not falsely project ‘morality and not morality.’ They do not falsely project ‘patience and disturbance.’ They do not falsely project ‘perseverance and laziness.’ They do not falsely project ‘a collected state and an uncollected state.’ They do not falsely project ‘wisdom and intellectual confusion.’ They do not falsely project ‘I have been snubbed.’ They do not falsely project ‘I have been saluted.’ They do not falsely project ‘I have been honored.’ They do not falsely project ‘I have not been honored.’ And why? Because, Śāriputra, a nonproduction does not falsely project ‘I have been snubbed.’ It does not falsely project ‘I have been saluted.’ It does not falsely project ‘I have been honored.’ It does not falsely project ‘I have not been honored.’ And why? Because the perfection of wisdom cuts off all false projection.

3.143 “Here, Śāriputra, no śrāvakas or pratyekabuddhas have these good qualities that bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom have. Completing those qualities, they bring beings to maturity, purify a buddhafield, [F.53.a] and reach the knowledge of all aspects.

3.144 “Furthermore, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom produce the thought, in regard to all beings, that they are the same, and having produced the thought that all beings are the same, they attain the state in which all phenomena are the same; having attained the state in which all phenomena are the same, they establish all beings in the state in which all phenomena are the same.<sup>106</sup> In this very life they become loved by and a pleasure to the lord buddhas; they also become loved by and a pleasure to all bodhisattvas, all śrāvakas, and all pratyekabuddhas. Wherever they are born they will never again see unpleasant shapes with their eyes, will not hear unpleasant sounds with their ears, will not smell unpleasant smells with their noses, will not taste unpleasant tastes with their tongues, will not feel unpleasant feelings with their bodies, and will not know unpleasant dharmas with their thinking minds. Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom are not lacking in what is necessary for unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.”

3.145 While this exposition of the perfection of wisdom was being expounded three hundred monks<sup>107</sup> dressed<sup>108</sup> the body of the lord in whatever clothes they were wearing and produced the thought of unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.<sup>109</sup>

3.146 At that moment the Lord smiled. Venerable Ānanda then got up from his seat, adjusted his upper robe so it hung down from one shoulder, knelt down with his right knee on the ground, cupped his palms together in a gesture of supplication specifically to the Lord, bowed forward to him, and said to the Lord, “Lord, the tathāgatas, worthy ones, [F.53.b] perfectly complete buddhas do not give a smile without a cause, or without a condition. So why did you smile? What is the cause, and what is the condition?”

3.147 The Lord said to venerable Ānanda, “Ānanda, these three hundred monks, having died here, will be reborn in the buddhafiield of the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha Akṣobhya. In sixty-one eons, during the Tārapopama eon, they will arise in the world as tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas named Mahāketu. And sixty thousand gods living in the desire realm have also produced the thought of unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, and they will please the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha Maitreya. Having gone forth to homelessness right there, they will practice celibacy, and the tathāgata Maitreya will prophesy their unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.”

3.148 Then at that time, through the buddha’s might, the four retinues saw from there ten thousand buddhas seated in the eastern direction. They saw ten thousand buddhas seated in each of the ten directions up to the encircling mountain ranges.<sup>110</sup> The array of the good qualities of the buddhafiields of those lord buddhas that appears in those lord buddhas’ world systems is an array of good qualities of buddhafiields that does not appear in this Sahā world system. As well, ten thousand of those who were in the retinue made this prayer that is a vow: “We will do the work that needs to be done so that we may take birth in those buddhafiields.”

3.149 Then the Buddha, aware of the aspiration of those children of good families, gave a smile.

3.150 Venerable Ānanda then said to the Lord, “Lord, the lord buddhas [F.54.a] do not give a smile without a cause, or without a condition. So why did you smile? What is the cause, and what is the condition?”

3.151 The Lord asked venerable Ānanda, “Ānanda, do you see these ten thousand beings?”

“I see them, Lord,” he replied.

3.152 The Lord said, “Ānanda these ten thousand beings, having died here, will take birth in those buddhafiields and will never be separated from the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas. Afterward they will become the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas named Vyuharāja.

3.153 This was the third chapter, “Designation,” of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.”

4. CHAPTER 4: EQUAL TO THE UNEQUALED

4.1 Then venerable Śāriputra, venerable Mahāmaudgalyāyana, venerable Subhūti, venerable Pūrṇa Maitrāyaṇīputra, and venerable Mahākāśyapa, as well as other monks, nuns, laymen, and laywomen celebrated for the state of their clairvoyance, and very many bodhisattva great beings said to the Lord, “This, Lord—that is, the perfection of wisdom—is the great perfection of bodhisattva great beings. This perfection of wisdom, Lord, is the vast perfection of bodhisattva great beings. This perfection of wisdom, Lord, is the highest perfection of bodhisattva great beings. It is the special perfection, it is the best perfection, it is the superb perfection, it is the sublime [F.54.b] perfection, it is the unsurpassed perfection, it is the unrivaled perfection, it is the unequaled perfection, it is the perfection equal to the unequaled, it is the calm and gentle perfection, it is the matchless perfection, it is the perfection for which no example does justice, it is the space-like perfection, it is the perfection of the emptiness of particular defining marks, it is the perfection endowed with all good qualities. This, Lord—that is, the perfection of wisdom—is the uncrushable perfection of bodhisattva great beings.

4.2 “Lord, bodhisattva great beings practicing in this perfection of wisdom have bestowed a gift equal to the unequaled. They have fulfilled the perfection of giving equal to the unequaled. They have obtained a body equal to the unequaled. And they will obtain this, namely, the dharmas of unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening equal to the unequaled.

4.3 “Similarly with morality, patience, perseverance, and concentration, and they have developed wisdom equal to the unequaled.<sup>111</sup> They have obtained a body equal to the unequaled. And they will obtain this, namely, the dharmas of unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening equal to the unequaled.

4.4 “The Lord, too, practicing this very perfection of wisdom came to acquire a form equal to the unequaled; and he came to acquire feeling, perception, and volitional factors equal to the unequaled, and consciousness [F.55.a] equal to the unequaled. He fully awakened to an awakening equal to the unequaled. He turned the wheel of the Dharma equal to the unequaled. Similarly, past, future, and present buddhas, having practiced this very perfection of wisdom, have fully awakened, will fully awaken, and are awakening to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. Therefore, Lord, bodhisattva great beings who want to perfect all dharmas should make an effort at the perfection of wisdom. Lord, the world with its gods, humans, and asuras rightly bows down to any bodhisattva great being who has practiced in this perfection of wisdom.”

4.5 Those great śrāvakas having spoken thus, the Lord said to them, and to those very many bodhisattva great beings, “Exactly so, children of a good family, exactly so. It is just as you say.<sup>112</sup> The world with its gods, humans, and asuras rightly bows down to any bodhisattva great being who practices this perfection of wisdom. Śāriputra, it is thanks to bodhisattva great beings that the human realm appears in the world and that the realm of gods appears in the world. Similarly, that great sāla tree-like royal families, great sāla tree-like brahmin families, great sāla tree-like business families, and wheel-turning emperors; the Cāturmahārājika gods; the Trāyastriṃśa, Yāma, Tuṣita, Nirmāṇarati, [F.55.b] Parānirmitavaśavartin, Brahmāpurohita, Brahmakāyika, Brahmāpāṣadya, Parīttābha, Apramāṇābha, Ābhāsvara, Parīttāśubha, Apramāṇāśubha, Śubhakarṣna, Brhatphala, Asaṃjñisattva, and Śuddhāvāsa—Avṛha, Sudarśana, Sudṛśa, Atapa, and Akaniṣṭha—gods; and the gods in the Ākāśānantyāyatana, in the Vijñānānantyāyatana, in the Ākiṃcityāyatana, and in the Naivasāṃjñānāsāṃjñāyatana appear in the world, and that stream enterers appear in the world, and that once-returners, non-returners, worthy ones, pratyekabuddhas, bodhisattvas, and tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas appear in the world. Śāriputra, it is thanks to bodhisattva great beings that the Three Jewels appear in this world, and that ordinary requirements for sustaining oneself—food, drink, beds and seats, and medicines for sicknesses, tools, gems, pearls, beryl, conch shells, crystals, corals, silver, and gold—appear in the world. Śāriputra, all the requirements for all the happiness of gods and humans, the happiness of existence, and the happiness of nirvāṇa, they all, Śāriputra, appear in the world thanks to bodhisattva great beings. And why? Because bodhisattvas practicing the bodhisattva practice, standing in the six perfections, personally give gifts and connect others with giving as well, personally protect morality and connect others with morality, personally develop patience and connect others [F.56.a] with patience, personally work hard at perseverance and connect others with perseverance, personally produce concentration and connect others with concentration, and personally develop wisdom and connect others with wisdom. Thereby, Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings have set forth for the benefit and happiness of all beings.”

4.6 This was the fourth chapter, “Equal to the Unequaled,” of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.” [B5]

CHAPTER 5: TONGUE

5.1 Then at that time the Lord extended his tongue and with it covered the great billionfold world system. Then from his tongue light beams of many colors, various colors, issued forth. Having issued forth, a great illumination spread through as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River to the east. Similarly, a great illumination spread through as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River to the south, west, and north, in the intermediate directions to the northeast, southeast, southwest, and northwest, below and above.

5.2 Then those infinite countless bodhisattva great beings in as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River to the east saw that array of light and asked the lord buddhas of each of their respective buddhafiels, “Lord, through whose power has such a great illumination spread through these worlds like this?”

5.3 Those lord buddhas said to those bodhisattva great beings, “In the western direction, O children of a good family, there is a world system called Sahā. There the tathāgata, the worthy one, the perfectly [F.56.b] complete buddha Śākyamuni has extended his tongue in order to demonstrate the perfection of wisdom to the bodhisattva great beings, causing this great illumination to pervade as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River in each of the ten directions.”

5.4 Connect this in the same way with as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River in the south, west, and north, below, and above, up to in all the ten directions in the same way.

5.5 The bodhisattva great beings then said to those lord buddhas, “Lord, we will also go to that Sahā world system to see, salute, and honor that tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha Śākyamuni, to see those bodhisattva great beings who have gathered from the ten directions, and to listen to the perfection of wisdom.”

- 5.6 Those lord buddhas replied, “Go then, you children of a good family, if you feel that now is the right time.”
- 5.7 Those bodhisattva great beings then bowed their heads to the feet of those tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas, circumambulated them seven times, and, carrying many parasols, flags, and banners, flowers, garlands, incense, creams, powders, and robes, and gold flowers and silver flowers, proceeded toward the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha Śākyamuni with a great chorus produced by a marching band with instruments and drums<sup>113</sup> from the ten directions.
- 5.8 Then the Cāturmahārājika gods, up to the Akaniṣṭha gods, took [F.57.a] celestial flowers, garlands, incense, creams, and powders; celestial blue lotus, lotus, red lotus, white lotus, mandārava, big mandārava, and nāgavṛkṣa flowers; and tamāla leaves and approached the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha Śākyamuni. Then those bodhisattva great beings and those gods strewed near, strewed in front, and strewed flowers all around the body of the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha Śākyamuni those flowers, garlands, incenses, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners.
- 5.9 Those flowers and so on then rose up and stayed there suspended in the sky over the great billionfold world system—a second floor of flowers, square with four corners and four pillars, equidimensional, and perfectly proportioned, delightful and pleasing to the mind.
- 5.10 Then from that retinue hundreds of thousands of a hundred million billion beings rose from their seats, cupped their palms together in a gesture of supplication to the Lord, bowed forward to him, and said to the Lord, “Lord, in a future time may we too obtain just such attributes as the tathāgata, worthy one, perfect, complete Buddha has acquired; may we impart moral instructions<sup>114</sup> to the śrāvaka community just as the Tathāgata teaches today; and may we teach the Dharma to just this sort of retinue.”<sup>115</sup>
- 5.11 Then the Lord, aware of the aspiration of those children of a good family, and aware of their forbearance for all dharmas that are not produced,<sup>116</sup> do not occasion anything, and do not appear, smiled. [F.57.b]
- 5.12 Venerable Ānanda then inquired of the Lord, “Lord, why did you smile? What is the cause, and what is the condition?”
- 5.13 “Ānanda,” replied the Lord, “from this retinue a hundred thousand one hundred million billion beings have gained forbearance for dharmas that are not produced. In a future time in sixty four ten millions eons,<sup>117</sup> during the Puṣpākara eon they will arise in the world as tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas called Bodhyaṅgapuṣpa.”
- 5.14 This was the fifth chapter, “Tongue,” of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.”<sup>118</sup>

CHAPTER 6: SUBHŪTI

- 6.1 The Lord then said to venerable Subhūti, “Subhūti, starting with the perfection of wisdom, be confident in your readiness to give a Dharma discourse to the bodhisattva great beings about how bodhisattva great beings go forth in the perfection of wisdom.”
- 6.2 Then it occurred to those bodhisattva great beings, those great śrāvakas, and those gods to think, “Will venerable Subhūti instruct the bodhisattva great beings in the perfection of wisdom on account of armor in which reposes the power of his own intellect and confident readiness, or will he instruct them through the power of the Buddha?”
- 6.3 Then through the power of the Buddha venerable Subhūti, understanding in his mind the thought processes occurring to those bodhisattva great beings, those great śrāvakas, and those gods, said to venerable Śāriputra, “Venerable Śāriputra, whatever the Lord’s śrāvakas say, teach, and expound, it is all through the Tathāgata’s power. [F.58.a] And whatever the Tathāgata teaches, none of it contradicts the true nature of dharmas. When those children of a good family are training in that Dharma teaching they are also directly confronting the true nature of dharmas. Śāriputra, it is just the Tathāgata who, by skillful means, will expound the perfection of wisdom to the bodhisattva great beings. Śāriputra, teaching the perfection of wisdom here is not within the scope of any of the śrāvakas or pratyekabuddhas or bodhisattva great beings.”<sup>119</sup>
- 6.4 Venerable Subhūti then said to the Lord, “Lord, you say this—namely, ‘bodhisattva great being.’ What phenomenon is this, the word bodhisattva great being, for? Lord, I do not see that—namely, the phenomenon with the name bodhisattva. Lord, I do not see those bodhisattva great beings, that perfection of wisdom, nor that word bodhisattva, so which bodhisattva great beings will I advise and instruct in what perfection of wisdom?”

- 6.5        “Subhūti,” the Lord replied, “those—namely, perfection of wisdom, bodhisattva, and the word bodhisattva—are just words. They do not exist inside, they do not exist outside, and they cannot be apprehended where both do not exist.<sup>120</sup> Subhūti, it is like this: the word being is uttered again and again, but you cannot apprehend any being. It is a mere name designation, and except for being used conventionally as a mere word and conventional term, any phenomenon that is a designation is not produced and does not stop.<sup>121</sup> Similarly with self, [F.58.b] living being, creature, one who lives, individual, person, one born of Manu, a child of Manu, one who does, one who makes someone else do, motivator, one who motivates, one who feels, one who makes someone else feel, one who knows, and one who sees—they are all phenomena that are designations, and thus, being used conventionally as just names and conventional terms, phenomena that are designations are not produced and do not stop. Those names do not exist inside, they do not exist outside, and they cannot be apprehended where both do not exist.
- 6.6        “Similarly, Subhūti, perfection of wisdom, bodhisattva, and the word bodhisattva are all phenomena that are designations, and that phenomenon that is a designation, except for being used conventionally as just a name and a conventional term, is not produced and does not stop.
- 6.7        “Subhūti it is like this: the form this inner body<sup>122</sup> has is just a dharma designation, and that dharma designation, except for being used conventionally as just a name and a conventional term, is not produced and does not stop. That name does not exist inside, it does not exist outside, and it cannot be apprehended where both do not exist.
- 6.8        “Similarly, feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is just a dharma designation, and except for being used conventionally as just a name and a conventional term, is not produced and does not stop. That name does not exist inside, it does not exist outside, and it cannot be apprehended where both do not exist. Similarly, Subhūti, perfection of wisdom, bodhisattva, and the word bodhisattva are all phenomena that are designations; that phenomenon that is a designation, except for being used conventionally as just a name and a conventional term, is not produced and does not stop.
- 6.9        “Subhūti, this—namely, [F.59.a] eyes—is just a dharma designation, and, except for being used conventionally as just a name and a conventional term, a dharma designation is not produced and does not stop. That name—eyes—does not exist inside, it does not exist outside, and it cannot be apprehended where both do not exist. Similarly, Subhūti, ears ... nose ... tongue ... body ... and thinking mind is just a dharma designation, and that dharma designation, except for being used conventionally as just a name and a conventional term, - is not produced and does not stop. That name—thinking mind—does not exist inside, it does not exist outside, and it cannot be apprehended where both do not exist.

- 6.10 “Subhūti, a form is just a dharma designation, and, except for being used conventionally as just a name and a conventional term, a dharma designation is not produced and does not stop. That name also does not exist inside, it does not exist outside, and it cannot be apprehended where both do not exist. Similarly, Subhūti, a sound ... a smell ... a taste ... a feeling ... and a dharma is just a dharma designation, and that dharma designation, except for being used conventionally as just a name and a conventional term, is not produced and does not stop. That name dharma does not exist inside, it does not exist outside, and it cannot be apprehended where both do not exist.
- 6.11 “Subhūti, eye constituent<sup>123</sup> is just a dharma designation, and, except for being used conventionally as just a name and a conventional term, a dharma designation is not produced and does not stop. That name eye constituent does not exist inside, it does not exist outside, and it cannot be apprehended where both do not exist.
- 6.12 “Subhūti, form constituent is just a dharma designation, and, except for being used conventionally as just a name and a conventional term, a dharma designation is not produced and does not stop. That name form constituent does not exist inside, does not exist outside, [F.59.b] and it cannot be apprehended where both do not exist.
- 6.13 “Subhūti, eye consciousness constituent is just a dharma designation, and, except for being used conventionally as just a name and a conventional term, a dharma designation is not produced and does not stop. That name eye consciousness constituent does not exist inside, it does not exist outside, and it cannot be apprehended where both do not exist.
- 6.14 “Similarly, Subhūti, ear constituent ... sound constituent ... and ear consciousness constituent ... ; nose constituent ... smell constituent ... and nose consciousness constituent ... ; tongue constituent ... taste constituent ... and tongue consciousness constituent...; body constituent ... touch constituent ... and body consciousness constituent...; and thinking-mind constituent ... dharma constituent ... and thinking-mind consciousness constituent is just a dharma designation, and except for being used conventionally as just a name and a conventional term, a dharma designation is not produced and does not stop. That name thinking-mind consciousness constituent does not exist inside, it does not exist outside, and it cannot be apprehended where both do not exist.
- 6.15 “Similarly, Subhūti, perfection of wisdom, bodhisattva, and the word bodhisattva are thus phenomena that are designations; those phenomena that are designations, except for being used conventionally as just names and

- conventional terms, are not produced and do not stop. Those terms—perfection of wisdom, bodhisattva, and the word bodhisattva—do not exist inside, do not exist outside, and cannot be apprehended where both do not exist.
- 6.16 “Subhūti, it is like this: inner body<sup>124</sup> is being used conventionally as a mere term. Skull, neck bone, shoulder blade, arm bone, spine, rib, hip bone, thigh bone, [F.60.a] lower leg bone, and foot bone are conventions designated just by names. They are just dharma designations, and those dharma designations, except for being used conventionally as just names and conventional terms, are not produced and do not stop. Those names do not exist inside, do not exist outside, and cannot be apprehended where both do not exist.
- 6.17 “Similarly, Subhūti, perfection of wisdom, bodhisattva, and the word bodhisattva are phenomena that are designations, and those phenomena that are designations, except for being used conventionally as just names and conventional terms, are not produced and do not stop. Those terms do not exist inside, do not exist outside, and cannot be apprehended where both do not exist.
- 6.18 “Subhūti, it is like outer grass,<sup>125</sup> wood, branch, leaf, and petal. Those are all are just conventions designated by various words, and those words, except for being used conventionally as just names and conventional terms, are not produced and do not stop. Those names do not exist inside, do not exist outside, and cannot be apprehended where both do not exist.
- 6.19 “Similarly, Subhūti, perfection of wisdom, bodhisattva, and the word bodhisattva are phenomena that are designations, and those phenomena that are designations, except for being used conventionally as just names and conventional terms, are not produced and do not stop. Those terms do not exist inside, do not exist outside, and cannot be apprehended where both do not exist.
- 6.20 “Subhūti, it is like<sup>126</sup> the names of past lord buddhas—except for being used conventionally as just names and conventional terms, they are not produced and do not stop. Those names do not exist inside, do not exist outside, and cannot be apprehended where both do not exist.
- 6.21 “Subhūti, it is like [F.60.b] a dream, an echo, an apparition, an illusion, a mirage, a reflection of the moon in water, and a tathāgata’s magical creation. All those phenomena are just merely designated and, except for being used conventionally as just names and conventional terms, are not produced and do not stop. Those terms do not exist inside, do not exist outside, and cannot be apprehended where both do not exist.
- 6.22 “Similarly, Subhūti, all those phenomena—namely, perfection of wisdom, bodhisattva, and the word bodhisattva—are just merely designated, and those phenomena that are designations, except for being used conventionally as just names and conventional terms, are not produced and do not stop. Those terms do not exist inside, do not exist outside, and cannot be apprehended where both do not exist.

6.23 “Therefore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings thus practicing the perfection of wisdom should train in names that are conventional terms making things known, in advice that makes things known, and in dharmas that make things known.<sup>127</sup>

6.24 “Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings thus practicing the perfection of wisdom do not view ‘form is permanent.’ They do not view ‘form is impermanent.’ They do not view ‘form is happiness’ or ‘is suffering,’ ‘has a self’ or ‘is selfless,’ ‘is calm’ or ‘is not calm,’ ‘is empty’ or ‘is not empty,’ ‘has a sign,’ or ‘is signless,’ ‘is wished for’ or ‘is wishless,’ ‘is compounded’ or ‘is un-compounded,’ ‘is arising’ or ‘is stopping,’ ‘is isolated’ or ‘is not isolated,’ ‘is wholesome’ or ‘is unwholesome,’ ‘is with basic immorality’ or ‘is without basic immorality,’ ‘is with outflows’ or ‘is without outflows,’ [F.61.a] ‘is afflicted’ or ‘is unafflicted,’ ‘is ordinary’ or ‘is extraordinary,’ ‘is defilement’ or ‘is purification,’ or ‘form is saṃsāra.’ Neither do they view ‘form is nirvāṇa.’

6.25 “Similarly, they do not view ‘feeling...,’ ‘perception...,’ ‘volitional factors...,’ or ‘consciousness is permanent.’ They do not view ‘it is impermanent.’ Similarly they do not view it ‘is happiness’ or ‘is suffering,’ ‘has a self’ or ‘is selfless,’ ‘is calm’ or ‘is not calm,’ ‘is empty’ or ‘is not empty,’ ‘has a sign,’ or ‘is signless,’ ‘is a wish for’ or ‘is wishless,’ ‘is compounded’ or ‘is un-compounded,’ ‘is arising’ or ‘is stopping,’ ‘is isolated’ or ‘is not isolated,’ ‘is wholesome’ or ‘is unwholesome,’ ‘is with basic immorality’ or ‘is without basic immorality,’ ‘is with outflows’ or ‘is without outflows,’ ‘is afflicted’ or ‘is unafflicted,’ ‘is ordinary’ or ‘is extraordinary,’ ‘is defilement’ or ‘is purification,’ or ‘is saṃsāra’ or ‘is nirvāṇa.’

6.26 “Similarly, they do not view ‘the eye constituent is permanent’ or ‘is impermanent,’ ‘the form constituent is permanent’ or ‘is impermanent,’ or ‘the eye consciousness constituent is permanent’ or ‘is impermanent,’ up to they do not view it ‘is saṃsāra’ or ‘is nirvāṇa.’

6.27 “Similarly, they do not view ‘the ear constituent...,’ the sound constituent...,’ or ‘the ear consciousness constituent...’; ‘the nose constituent...,’ ‘the smell constituent...,’ or ‘the nose consciousness constituent...’; ‘the tongue constituent...,’ ‘the taste constituent...,’ or ‘the tongue consciousness constituent...’; ‘the body constituent...,’ [F.61.b] ‘the touch constituent...,’ or ‘the body consciousness constituent...’; or the thinking-mind constituent...,’ ‘the dharma constituent...,’ or ‘the thinking-mind consciousness constituent is permanent’ or ‘is impermanent,’ up to they do not view it ‘is saṃsāra’ or ‘is nirvāṇa.’

6.28 “They do not view that any ‘pleasurable feeling’ or ‘suffering feeling’ or ‘neither pleasurable nor suffering feeling’ that arises from the condition of contact between the eyes, form, and eye consciousness ‘is permanent’ or ‘is impermanent,’ up to they do not view that it ‘is saṃsāra’ or ‘is nirvāṇa.’ Similarly, they do not view that any ‘pleasurable feeling’ or ‘suffering feeling’ or ‘neither pleasurable nor suffering feeling’ that arises from the condition of contact between the ear constituent, sound constituent, and ear consciousness constituent; the nose constituent, smell constituent, and nose consciousness constituent; the tongue constituent, taste constituent, and tongue consciousness constituent; the body constituent, touch constituent, and body consciousness constituent; or the thinking-mind constituent, dharma-constituent, and thinking-mind consciousness constituent ‘is permanent’ or ‘is impermanent,’ up to they do not view that it ‘is saṃsāra’ or ‘is nirvāṇa.’

6.29 “And why? Because bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom do not view the perfection of wisdom, a bodhisattva, or the word bodhisattva in the compounded element or un-compounded element. And why? Because, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom do not mentally construct and do not conceptualize any of those dharmas. Standing without mentally constructing any dharma,<sup>128</sup> they cultivate the applications of mindfulness. Practicing the perfection of wisdom, they do not view [F.62.a] the perfection of wisdom or even the name perfection of wisdom; they do not view a bodhisattva or even the name bodhisattva. Similarly, when they cultivate the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and path; the perfection of giving, perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and perfection of wisdom; the powers and fearlessnesses, up to the distinct attributes of a buddha, and are practicing the perfection of wisdom, they do not, except for paying attention to the knowledge of all aspects, view the perfection of wisdom, the name perfection of wisdom, a bodhisattva, or the name bodhisattva. Those bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom excellently realize the defining marks of the dharmas. And that defining mark of a dharma, of the dharmas, is not defiled and is not purified.

6.30 “Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings thus practicing the perfection of wisdom should understand that they are just names and conventional terms that are dharma designations. Having understood that they are just names and conventional terms that are dharma designations, they do not settle down on form. They do not settle down on feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness. They do not settle down on the eyes. They do not settle down on a form, eye consciousness, and eye contact. They do not settle down on any pleasurable feeling or suffering feeling or neither pleasurable nor suffering feeling that arises from the condition of eye contact. [F.62.b]

6.31 “Similarly, they do not settle down on the ears..., the nose..., the tongue..., or the body..., or on the thinking-mind, dharma, thinking-mind consciousness, and thinking-mind contact. They do not settle down on any pleasurable feeling or suffering feeling or neither pleasurable nor suffering feeling that arises from the condition of thinking-mind contact. They do not settle down on the compounded element or the uncompounded element. They do not settle down on the perfection of giving. They do not settle down on the perfection of morality, patience, perseverance, concentration, or wisdom. They do not settle down on any of their names or marks.

6.32 “They do not settle down on a bodhisattva’s body. They do not settle down on the flesh eye, divine eye, wisdom eye, dharma eye, or buddha eye. Similarly, they do not settle down on the perfection of clairvoyance, inner emptiness, outer emptiness, or inner and outer emptiness, up to they do not settle down on emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature. They do not settle down on suchness. They do not settle down on the very limit of reality. They do not settle down on the dharma-constituent. They do not settle down on bringing beings to maturity, purifying a buddhafiield, or skillful means. And why? Because something that might settle down, something on account of which it might settle down, and something on which it might settle down—none of those dharmas exist.

6.33 “Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings thus practicing the perfection of wisdom who do not settle down on [F.63.a] all dharmas grow in the perfection of giving. They grow in the perfection of morality, patience, perseverance, concentration, and wisdom. They enter into the secure state of a bodhisattva, step onto the irreversible level, complete the clairvoyances, and, having completed the clairvoyances, bring beings to maturity, and they respect, revere, honor, and worship the lord buddhas. They roam from buddhafiield to buddhafiield in order to purify a buddhafiield and behold the lord buddhas. Having beheld those lord buddhas, the wholesome roots on account of which they would respect, revere, honor, and worship those lord buddhas will come about in them. And because of those wholesome roots they will come to be right in the presence of the lord buddhas.<sup>129</sup> They will hear the Dharma from those lord buddhas, and the continuum of the Dharma they have heard will not be cut until reaching the site of awakening. They will obtain the dhāraṇī gateways. They will obtain the meditative stabilization gateways.

6.34 “Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings thus practicing the perfection of wisdom should understand that it is a designation that is a name and conventional term for something.

6.35 “This ‘bodhisattva’<sup>130</sup>—what do you think, Subhūti, is the bodhisattva form, or is the bodhisattva other than form, or is the bodhisattva in form, or is form in the bodhisattva, or is the bodhisattva without form?”

“None of those, Lord,” he replied. [F.63.b]

6.36 The Lord then asked, “What do you think, Subhūti, is the bodhisattva feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... or consciousness, or is the bodhisattva other than consciousness, or is the bodhisattva in consciousness, or is consciousness in the bodhisattva, or is the bodhisattva without consciousness?”

“None of those, Lord,” he replied.

6.37 The Lord then asked, “What do you think, Subhūti, is the bodhisattva eyes, or is the bodhisattva other than eyes, or is the bodhisattva in eyes, or are eyes in the bodhisattva, or is the bodhisattva without eyes?”

“None of those, Lord,” he replied.

6.38 The Lord then asked, “What do you think, Subhūti, is the bodhisattva ears ... a nose ... a tongue ... a body ... or a thinking mind, or is the bodhisattva other than a thinking mind, or is the bodhisattva in a thinking mind, or is a thinking mind in the bodhisattva, or is the bodhisattva without a thinking mind?”

“None of those, Lord,” he replied.

6.39 The Lord then asked, “What do you think, Subhūti, is the bodhisattva a form, or is the bodhisattva other than a form, or is the bodhisattva in a form, or is a form in the bodhisattva, or is the bodhisattva without a form?”

“None of those, Lord,” he replied.

6.40 The Lord then asked, “What do you think, Subhūti, is the bodhisattva a sound ... a smell ... a taste ... [F.64.a] a feeling ... or dharmas, or is the bodhisattva other than dharmas, or is the bodhisattva in dharmas, or are dharmas in the bodhisattva, or is the bodhisattva without dharmas?”

“None of those, Lord,” he replied.

6.41 The Lord then asked, “What do you think, Subhūti, is the bodhisattva eyes, form, and eye consciousness; or is the bodhisattva other than eyes, form, and eye consciousness; or is the bodhisattva in eyes, form, and eye consciousness; or are eyes, form, and eye consciousness in the bodhisattva; or is the bodhisattva without eyes, form, and eye consciousness?”

“None of those, Lord,” he replied.

6.42 The Lord then asked, “What do you think, Subhūti, is the bodhisattva ears, sound, and ear consciousness ... nose, smell, and nose consciousness ... tongue, taste, and tongue consciousness ... body, touch, and body consciousness ... or thinking mind, dharma, and thinking-mind consciousness? Or is the bodhisattva other than them, or is the bodhisattva in them, or are they in the bodhisattva, or is the bodhisattva without thinking mind, dharma, and thinking-mind consciousness?"

"None of those, Lord," he replied.

6.43 The Lord then asked, "What do you think, Subhūti, is the bodhisattva the earth element, or is the bodhisattva other than the earth element, or is the bodhisattva in the earth element, or is the earth element in the bodhisattva, or is the bodhisattva without the earth element?"

"None of those, Lord," he replied. [F.64.b]

6.44 The Lord then asked, "What do you think, Subhūti, is the bodhisattva the water element ... the fire element ... the wind element ... the space element ... or the consciousness element, or is the bodhisattva other than the consciousness element, or is the bodhisattva in the consciousness element, or is the consciousness element in the bodhisattva, or is the bodhisattva without the consciousness element?"

"None of those, Lord," he replied.

6.45 The Lord then asked, "What do you think, Subhūti, is the bodhisattva ignorance, or is the bodhisattva other than ignorance, or is the bodhisattva in ignorance, or is ignorance in the bodhisattva, or is the bodhisattva without ignorance?"

"None of those, Lord," he replied.

6.46 The Lord then asked, "What do you think, Subhūti, is the bodhisattva volitional factors ... consciousness ... name and form ... the six sense fields ... contact ... feeling ... craving ... appropriation ... existence ... birth ... or old age and death, or is the bodhisattva other than old age and death, or is the bodhisattva in old age and death, or is old age and death in the bodhisattva, or is the bodhisattva without old age and death?"

"None of those, Lord," he replied.

6.47 The Lord then asked, "What do you think, Subhūti, is the bodhisattva the suchness of form, or is the bodhisattva other than the suchness of form, or is the bodhisattva in the suchness [F.65.a] of form, or is the suchness of form in the bodhisattva, or is the bodhisattva without the suchness of form?"

"None of those, Lord," Subhūti replied.

6.48 The Lord then asked, "Similarly, is the bodhisattva the suchness of feeling ... the suchness of perception ... the suchness of volitional factors ... or the suchness of consciousness, or is the bodhisattva other than the suchness of consciousness, or is the bodhisattva in the suchness of consciousness, or is the suchness of consciousness in the bodhisattva, or is the bodhisattva without the suchness of consciousness?"

"None of those, Lord," Subhūti replied.

6.49 The Lord then asked, “Similarly, is the bodhisattva the suchness of the constituents, sense fields, or dependent origination, up to old age and death? Or is the bodhisattva other than the suchness of old age and death, or is the bodhisattva in the suchness of old age and death, or is the suchness of old age and death in the bodhisattva, or is the bodhisattva without the suchness of old age and death?”

“None of those, Lord,” Subhūti replied.

6.50 The Lord then asked, “Subhūti, for what reason do you say, ‘The bodhisattva is not form, and the bodhisattva is not the aggregates, constituents, sense fields, or dependent origination, up to the suchness of old age and death?’ ”

6.51 “Lord,” Subhūti replied, “when a being<sup>131</sup> absolutely does not exist and cannot be apprehended, how could that form be a bodhisattva? How could something other than form be a bodhisattva? How could a bodhisattva [F.65.b] be in form? How could form be in a bodhisattva? How could something without form be a bodhisattva? How could feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... or consciousness be a bodhisattva? How could something other than consciousness be a bodhisattva? How could a bodhisattva be in consciousness? How could consciousness be in a bodhisattva? How could something without consciousness be a bodhisattva?”

Connect this in the same way with constituents, sense fields, and dependent origination.

6.52 “Lord, when a being absolutely does not exist and cannot be apprehended, how could old age and death be a bodhisattva? How could something other than old age and death be a bodhisattva? How could a bodhisattva be in old age and death? How could old age and death be in a bodhisattva? How could something without old age and death be a bodhisattva?”

6.53 “Lord, when a being absolutely does not exist and cannot be apprehended, how could the suchness of form be apprehended in it?”

6.54 Connect this in the same way with the aggregates, constituents, sense fields, and dependent origination.

6.55 “Lord, when a being absolutely does not exist and cannot be apprehended, how could the suchness of old age and death be apprehended in it? It is impossible.”

6.56 “Excellent, excellent, Subhūti!” said the Lord. “Bodhisattvas, Subhūti, should train in the perfection of wisdom like that, without apprehending a being.

6.57 “And again, Subhūti, where you said, ‘Lord, [F.66.a] you say this, that is, “bodhisattva great being.”<sup>132</sup> What phenomenon is this, the word bodhisattva great being, for?’ What do you think? Is bodhisattva the word for form? Or do you think bodhisattva is the word for feeling, perception, or volitional factors, or consciousness?”

“None of those, Lord,” Subhūti replied.

6.58 The Lord then asked, “What do you think, Subhūti, is bodhisattva the word for the permanence of form, or is bodhisattva the word for the impermanence of form? Similarly, is bodhisattva the word for the pleasurable state of form, the suffering state of form, the selfness of form, the selflessness of form, the calmness of form, or the noncalmness of form?”

6.59 “Similarly, is bodhisattva the word for the permanence of feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... or consciousness? Or for the impermanence of consciousness, the pleasurable state of consciousness, the suffering state of consciousness, the selfness of consciousness, the selflessness of consciousness, the calmness of consciousness, or the noncalmness of consciousness?”

6.60 “What do you think, Subhūti, is bodhisattva the word for the emptiness of form, the nonemptiness of form, the sign of a form, the signlessness of form, the form that is wished for, or the wishlessness of form? Is bodhisattva the word for the emptiness of feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... or consciousness, [F.66.b] the nonemptiness of consciousness, the sign of consciousness, the signlessness of consciousness, the consciousness that is wished for, or the wishlessness of consciousness?”

“None of those, Lord.” Subhūti replied.

6.61 The Lord said, “Subhūti, for what reason do you say that bodhisattva is not the word for the permanence of form and is not the word for the impermanence of form? Similarly, that bodhisattva is not the word for the pleasurable state or the suffering state of form, it is not the word for the self, it is not the word for selflessness, it is not the word for calmness, and it is not the word for noncalmness? That it is not the word for emptiness, it is not the word for nonemptiness, it is not the word for the state of having a sign, it is not the word for signlessness, it is not the word for the state of being a wish for, and it is not the word for wishlessness? Similarly, that bodhisattva<sup>133</sup> is not the word for the permanence and is not the word for the impermanence of feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness? And that neither is it the word for the pleasurable state, the suffering state, the self, selflessness, calmness, noncalmness, emptiness, nonemptiness, the state of having a sign, signlessness, the state of being a wish for, or wishlessness?”

- 6.62 “Lord,” Subhūti replied, “when a form absolutely does not exist and cannot be apprehended, how could bodhisattva be the word for form? Lord, when feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness absolutely do not exist and cannot be apprehended, how could bodhisattva be the word for consciousness? [F.67.a]
- 6.63 “Lord, when permanence and impermanence absolutely do not exist and cannot be apprehended, how could bodhisattva be the word for the permanence and the word for the impermanence of form?
- 6.64 “Similarly, when the pleasurable state ... the suffering state ... self ... selflessness ... calmness ... noncalmness ... emptiness ... nonemptiness ... the state of having a sign ... signlessness ... the state of being a wish for ... and wishlessness absolutely does not exist and cannot be apprehended, how could bodhisattva be the word for the wishlessness of form?
- 6.65 “Similarly, Lord, when permanence and impermanence absolutely do not exist and cannot be apprehended, how could bodhisattva be the word for the permanence and for the impermanence of consciousness?
- 6.66 “Similarly, when the pleasurable state ... the suffering state ... self ... selflessness ... calmness ... noncalmness ... emptiness ... nonemptiness ... the state of having a sign ... signlessness ... the state of being a wish for ... and wishlessness absolutely does not exist and cannot be apprehended, how could bodhisattva be the word for the wishlessness of consciousness?”
- 6.67 “Excellent, excellent, Subhūti!” said the Lord. “Bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom like that should train in the perfection of wisdom without apprehending a word for form; without apprehending a word for feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness; without apprehending the words for form as permanent, impermanent, a pleasurable state, a suffering state, self, selflessness, calmness, noncalmness, emptiness, nonemptiness, the state of having a sign, signlessness, the state of being a wish for, or wishlessness; and without apprehending the words for feeling, [F.67.b] perception, volitional factors, or consciousness as permanent, impermanent, a pleasurable state, a suffering state, selfness, selflessness, calmness, noncalmness, emptiness, nonemptiness, the state of having a sign, signlessness, the state of having a wish, or wishlessness.
- 6.68 “Again, Subhūti, you say, ‘I do not see that—namely, the phenomenon with the name bodhisattva.’ The dharma does not see the dharma-constituent; the dharma-constituent does not see the dharma. Subhūti, the form constituent does not see the dharma-constituent, and the dharma-constituent does not see the form constituent. Similarly, Subhūti, the feeling constituent ... the perception constituent ... the volitional factors constituent ... and the consciousness constituent do not see the dharma-constituent, and the dharma-constituent does not see the consciousness constituent. The eye constituent does not see the dharma-constituent. Similarly, the ear constituent ... the nose constituent ... the tongue constituent ... the body constituent ... and the thinking-mind constituent does not see the dharma constituent, and the dharma-constituent does not see the thinking-mind constituent. Subhūti, the compounded element does not see the un-compounded element, and the un-compounded element does not see the compounded element. And why? You cannot make the un-compounded known without the compounded, and you cannot make the compounded known without the un-compounded. Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom [F.68.a] like that do not see any dharma at all, but they do not tremble, feel frightened, or become terrified at not seeing; their minds are not cowed by any dharma, do not tense up, and do not experience regret.

6.69 “And why? Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom do not see form; do not see feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness; do not see eyes; do not see ears, nose, tongue, body, or thinking mind; do not see a form, a sound, a smell, a taste, a feeling, or a dharma; do not see ignorance; do not see volitional factors, consciousness, name and form, the six sense fields, contact, feeling, craving, appropriation, existence, birth, or old age and death; do not see greed; do not see hatred or confusion; do not see a self; do not see a being, a living being, one who lives, an individual, a person, one born of Manu, a child of Manu, one who does, one who feels, one who knows, or one who sees; do not see the desire realm; do not see the form realm or formless realm; do not see śrāvakas and the śrāvaka dharmas; do not see pratyekabuddhas and the pratyekabuddha dharmas; do not see bodhisattvas and do not see bodhisattva dharmas; do not see buddhas [F.68.b] and do not see buddha dharmas; do not see awakening, up to do not see all dharmas. And while not seeing all dharmas they do not tremble, feel frightened, or become terrified.”

6.70 “Lord, why do the minds of a bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom not become cowed by all dharmas and not tense up?” asked Subhūti.

6.71 The Lord replied, “It is because, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings do not apprehend and do not view mind and mental factor dharmas. Therefore, Subhūti, the minds of bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom do not become cowed by all dharmas and do not tense up.”

6.72 “Lord, how is it that the thinking minds of bodhisattva great beings do not tremble?” asked Subhūti.

6.73 The Lord replied, “Because, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings do not apprehend and do not view mind and mental factor dharmas or thinking mind and thinking-mind dharmas. Therefore the thinking minds of bodhisattva great beings do not tremble at all dharmas.

6.74 “Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should practice the perfection of wisdom like that, without apprehending all dharmas. Subhūti, if bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom do not apprehend a perfection of wisdom, that bodhisattva, that word for bodhisattva, or even that bodhicitta, then just that is the advice about the perfection of wisdom of bodhisattvas; just that is the instruction.” [F.69.a]

6.75 This was the sixth chapter, “Subhūti,” of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.”

7. CHAPTER 7: ENTRY INTO FLAWLESSNESS

- 7.1 Venerable Subhūti then said to the Lord, “Lord, bodhisattva great beings who want to comprehend<sup>134</sup> form should train in the perfection of wisdom. Bodhisattva great beings who want to comprehend feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness should train in the perfection of wisdom. Bodhisattva great beings who want to comprehend eyes should train in the perfection of wisdom. Similarly, bodhisattva great beings who want to comprehend ears, nose, tongue, body, and thinking mind should train in the perfection of wisdom. Bodhisattva great beings who want to comprehend a form should train in the perfection of wisdom. Similarly, bodhisattva great beings who want to comprehend a sound, a smell, a taste, a feeling, and a dharma should train in the perfection of wisdom. Bodhisattva great beings who want to comprehend eye consciousness should train in the perfection of wisdom. Bodhisattva great beings who want to comprehend up to thinking-mind consciousness should train in the perfection of wisdom. Bodhisattva great beings who want to comprehend eye contact up to who want to comprehend thinking-mind contact should train in the perfection of wisdom. Bodhisattva great beings who want to comprehend the feeling that arises from the condition of eye contact, up to [F.69.b] who want to comprehend the feeling that arises from the condition of thinking-mind contact should train in the perfection of wisdom. Bodhisattva great beings who want to comprehend ignorance should train in the perfection of wisdom. Similarly, bodhisattva great beings who want to comprehend volitional factors, consciousness, name and form, the six sense fields, contact, feeling, craving, appropriation, existence, birth, and old age and death should train in the perfection of wisdom.
- 7.2 “Bodhisattva great beings who want to eliminate greed, hatred, and confusion should train in the perfection of wisdom. Bodhisattva great beings who want to eliminate the view of the perishable collection, doubt, and grasping rules and rituals as absolute, as well as attachment to sense objects - and malice; who want to eliminate attachment to sense objects, attachment to forms, and attachment to formless states; and who want to eliminate fetters, proclivities, and obsessions should train in the perfection of wisdom.

- 7.3 “Furthermore, bodhisattva great beings who want to eliminate the four bonds, four floods, four knots, four appropriations, and four errors<sup>135</sup> should train in the perfection of wisdom.
- 7.4 “Bodhisattva great beings who want to eliminate the ten unwholesome actions should train in the perfection of wisdom.
- 7.5 “Bodhisattva great beings who want to complete the ten wholesome actions should train in the perfection of wisdom.
- 7.6 “Bodhisattva great beings who want to complete the [F.70.a] perfection of giving should train in the perfection of wisdom. Similarly, bodhisattva great beings who want to complete the perfection of morality, the perfection of patience, the perfection of perseverance, the perfection of concentration, and the perfection of wisdom should train in the perfection of wisdom.
- 7.7 “Bodhisattva great beings who want to complete the four concentrations, four immeasurables, four formless absorptions, four applications of mindfulness, four right efforts, four legs of miraculous power, five faculties, five powers, seven limbs of awakening, and the eightfold noble path, as well as the four detailed and thorough knowledges, four fearlessnesses, six clairvoyances, ten tathāgata powers, and eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha should train in the perfection of wisdom.
- 7.8 “Bodhisattva great beings who want to become absorbed in the bodhyaṅgavatin<sup>136</sup> meditative stabilization should train in the perfection of wisdom. Bodhisattva great beings who want to become absorbed in the siṃhaviṅkrīḍita meditative stabilization, who want to become absorbed in the siṃhaviṅrmbhita meditative stabilization, who want to obtain all the dhāraṇī gateways and meditative stabilization gateways, who want to become absorbed in the śūraṅgama meditative stabilization, and who want to become absorbed in the ratnamudra meditative stabilization, candraprabha meditative stabilization, candradhvojaketu meditative stabilization, sarvadharmamudrāgata meditative stabilization, avalokita<sup>137</sup> meditative stabilization, dharmadhātunīyata meditative stabilization, niyatadhvojaketu meditative stabilization, [F.70.b] vajropama meditative stabilization, sarvadharmapraveśamukha meditative stabilization, samādhirāja meditative stabilization, rājamudra meditative stabilization, balavyūha meditative stabilization, samudgata meditative stabilization, sarvadharmāniruktiniyatapraveśa meditative stabilization, sarvadharmajñānādhivāsanapraveśa<sup>138</sup> meditative stabilization, daśadigvyavalokita meditative stabilization, sarvadharmadhāraṇīmukhamudra meditative stabilization, sarvadharmāsaṃpramoṣa meditative stabilization, sarvadharmasamavasaraṇākāramudra<sup>139</sup> meditative stabilization, trimaṇḍalapariśuddha meditative stabilization, ākāśāvasthita meditative stabilization, acyutābhijñā meditative stabilization, pātragata meditative stabilization, dhvajāgrakeyūna meditative stabilization, sarvokleśanirdahana meditative stabilization, caturmāra-balavikaraṇa<sup>140</sup> meditative stabilization, jñānolka meditative stabilization, daśabalodgata meditative stabilization, and ākāśasaṃgavimuktinirupalepa meditative stabilization should train in the perfection of wisdom. Bodhisattva great beings who want to obtain all those meditative stabilization gateways and others as well should train in the perfection of wisdom. [B6]

7.9 “Furthermore, Lord, bodhisattva great beings who want to fulfill all the intentions of beings should train in the perfection of wisdom.

7.10 “Furthermore, Lord, bodhisattva great beings who want to complete all the wholesome roots which, when those wholesome roots are completed, cause them not to fall into terrible forms of life, not to be born [F.71.a] in families that are wanting, not to fall to the śrāvaka level or the pratyekabuddha level, and not to fall into a bodhisattva’s hardheadedness<sup>141</sup> should train in the perfection of wisdom.”

7.11 Then venerable Śāriputra asked venerable Subhūti, “How, Venerable Subhūti, do they fall into a bodhisattva’s hardheadedness?”

7.12 Venerable Subhūti replied, “Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practice the six perfections without skillful means. Having resorted to the meditative stabilization on emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness without skillful means, they do not fall to the śrāvaka level or the pratyekabuddha level, but still they do not enter into the secure state of a bodhisattva.<sup>142</sup> This is called ‘a bodhisattva’s hardheadedness.’ ”<sup>143</sup>

7.13 “Why, Venerable Subhūti, is this a bodhisattva’s hardheadedness?” asked Śāriputra.

Subhūti replied, “Venerable Śāriputra, a bodhisattva great being’s ‘hardheadedness’ is just this: a love for dharmas.”

7.14 “What, Venerable Subhūti, is a love for dharmas?” asked Śāriputra.

Subhūti replied, “Venerable Śāriputra, here bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom settle down on, stand upon, and form the notion<sup>144</sup> that form is ‘empty.’ Similarly, they settle down on, stand upon, and form the notion that feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are ‘empty.’ That, Venerable Śāriputra, is the love for dharmas called hardheadedness that can come along with being a bodhisattva great being.

7.15 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattvas bodhisattvas settle down on, stand upon, and form the notion that form is ‘impermanent,’ and they also settle down on, stand upon, [F.71.b] and form the notion that to the notion that form is ‘suffering, selfless, unpleasant, and calm, empty, signless, and wishless.’<sup>145</sup> Venerable Śāriputra, that love for dharmas that can come along with being a bodhisattva is hardheadedness.

7.16 “Similarly, they settle down on, stand upon, and form the notion that feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are ‘impermanent,’ and they also settle down on, stand upon, and form the notion that feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are ‘suffering, selfless, unpleasant, and calm, empty, signless, and wishless.’ Venerable Śāriputra, that love for dharmas that can come along with being a bodhisattva is hardheadedness.

7.17 “Bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom might settle down on, stand upon, and form the notion about these dharmas: ‘Thus form should be abandoned; with this, form should be abandoned. Thus feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness should be abandoned; with this, they should be abandoned. Thus should suffering be comprehended; with this should suffering be comprehended. Thus should origination be abandoned; with this should origination be abandoned. Thus should cessation be actualized; with this should cessation be actualized. Thus should the path be cultivated; with this should the path be cultivated. This is defilement, this is purification; these dharmas are to be resorted to, these dharmas are not to be resorted to; this should be practiced by a bodhisattva, this should not be practiced; this is a bodhisattva’s path, this is not the path; this is a bodhisattva’s training, this is not the training; this is a bodhisattva’s perfection of giving, and this is the perfection of morality, patience, perseverance, concentration, and wisdom; [F.72.a] this is not a bodhisattva’s perfection of giving, morality, patience, perseverance, concentration, or wisdom; this is a bodhisattva’s skillful means, this is not skillful means; and this is the secure state of a bodhisattva, this is hardheadedness.’ If so, then that love for dharmas that can come along with being a bodhisattva is hardheadedness.”

7.18 “What, Venerable Subhūti, is a bodhisattva great being’s flawlessness?”<sup>146</sup> asked venerable Śāriputra.

7.19 Venerable Subhūti replied, “Venerable Śāriputra, here bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom do not see in inner emptiness outer emptiness, and do not see in outer emptiness inner emptiness; do not see in inner and outer emptiness the emptiness of emptiness, and do not see in the emptiness of emptiness inner and outer emptiness; do not see in the emptiness of emptiness the great emptiness, and do not see in the great emptiness the emptiness of emptiness; do not see in the great emptiness the emptiness of ultimate reality, and do not see in the emptiness of ultimate reality the great emptiness; do not see in the emptiness of ultimate reality the emptiness of the compounded, and do not see in the emptiness of the compounded the emptiness of ultimate reality; do not see in the emptiness of the compounded the emptiness of the uncompounded, and do not see in the emptiness of the uncompounded the emptiness of the compounded; do not see in the emptiness of the uncompounded the emptiness of what transcends limits, and do not see in the emptiness of what transcends limits the emptiness of the uncompounded; do not see in the emptiness of what transcends limits the emptiness of no beginning and no end, and do not see in the emptiness of no beginning and no end the emptiness of what transcends limits; do not see in the emptiness of no beginning and no end the emptiness of nonrepudiation, and do not see in the emptiness of nonrepudiation the emptiness of no beginning and no end; do not see in the emptiness of nonrepudiation the emptiness of a basic nature, and do not see in the emptiness of a basic nature the emptiness of nonrepudiation; [F.72.b] do not see in the emptiness of a basic nature the emptiness of its own mark, and do not see in the emptiness of its own mark the emptiness of a basic nature; do not see in the emptiness of its own mark the emptiness of all dharmas, and do not see in the emptiness of all dharmas the emptiness of its own mark;<sup>147</sup> do not see in the emptiness of all dharmas the emptiness of a nonexistent thing, and do not see in the emptiness of a nonexistent thing the emptiness of all dharmas; do not see in the emptiness of a nonexistent thing the emptiness of an intrinsic nature, and do not see in the emptiness of an intrinsic nature the emptiness of a nonexistent thing; do not see in the emptiness of an intrinsic nature the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, and do not see in the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature the emptiness of an intrinsic nature. Venerable Śāriputra, when bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of wisdom like that they enter into the secure state of a bodhisattva.

7.20 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, here bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom train so that<sup>148</sup> they know form but do not falsely project anything because of it; they know feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness but do not falsely project anything because of them; they know the eyes, ears, nose, tongue, body, and thinking mind but do not falsely project anything because of them; they know a form, a sound, a smell, a taste, a feeling, and a dharma but do not falsely project anything because of them; they know the perfection of giving but do not falsely project anything because of it; they know the perfection of morality, patience, perseverance, [F.73.a] concentration, and wisdom but do not falsely project anything because of them; they know the concentrations, immeasurables, and formless absorptions but do not falsely project anything because of them; and similarly they know the five clairvoyances, five eyes, applications of mindfulness, right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, path, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, and eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha but do not falsely project anything because of them.

7.21 “Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom train so that they do not falsely project anything even because of the thought of awakening; they do not falsely project anything even because of the thought equal to the unequalled, the prodigious thought.<sup>149</sup> And why? Because that thought is no thought<sup>150</sup> because the basic nature of thought is clear light.”<sup>151</sup>

7.22 “Venerable Subhūti, what is the clear light that is the basic nature of thought?” asked Śāriputra.

Subhūti replied, “Venerable Śāriputra, a thought that is neither conjoined with greed nor disjoined from greed, neither conjoined with hatred and confusion nor disjoined from hatred and confusion, and neither conjoined with obsessions, obscurations, proclivities, fetters, distortions, and śrāvaka and pratyekabuddha thoughts nor disjoined from them—that, venerable Śāriputra, is the clear light that is the basic nature of a bodhisattva great being’s thought.”

7.23 “Venerable Subhūti, the thought of which you say ‘it is no thought,’ does it exist?”<sup>152</sup> asked Śāriputra.

7.24 “Venerable Śāriputra,” Subhūti asked in return, “can you apprehend existence or nonexistence there, in that state of no thought? [F.73.b]

“No, Venerable Subhūti,” replied Śāriputra.

7.25 Subhūti then asked, “Venerable Śāriputra, if you cannot apprehend existence or nonexistence there, in that state of no thought, is then, Venerable Śāriputra, this argumentative investigation of yours—‘The thought of which you say “it is no thought,” does it exist?’—appropriate?”

7.26 “Venerable Subhūti,” Śāriputra asked in return, “what is the state of no thought?”

“Venerable Śāriputra,” replied Subhūti, “the state of no thought is a state without distortion and without conceptualization; it is the state in which all dharmas are just so. It is called the state of no thought’s ‘unthinkability.’ ”

7.27 Śāriputra then asked, “Venerable Subhūti, just as thought is without distortion and without conceptualization, so too is form without distortion and without conceptualization, and similarly feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are without distortion and without conceptualization as well; and just as thought is without distortion and without conceptualization so too are the eye constituent, form constituent, and eye consciousness constituent without distortion and without conceptualization, and similarly the ear constituent ... the nose constituent ... the tongue constituent ... the body constituent ... and the thinking-mind constituent, dharma-constituent, and thinking-mind consciousness constituent without distortion and without conceptualization as well—similarly, are the sense fields, dependent originations, perfections, clairvoyances, applications of mindfulness, right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, path, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, powers, distinct attributes of a buddha, and unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening without distortion and without conceptualization as well?”

7.28 “Exactly so, Venerable Śāriputra!” replied Subhūti. [F.74.a] “Just as thought is without distortion and without conceptualization, so too are the aggregates, constituents, sense fields, dependent origination, perfections, clairvoyances, dharmas on the side of awakening, powers, fearlessnesses, distinct attributes of a buddha, and unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening without distortion and without conceptualization as well.”

7.29 “Excellent, excellent, Venerable Subhūti!” said Śāriputra. “Because you are the Lord’s son, close to his bosom, born from his mouth, born from his Dharma, magically produced from his Dharma, his Dharma heir and not heir to material possessions, a direct eyewitness to the dharmas who witnesses with your body—that is, because the Lord has proclaimed you the foremost of śrāvakas who are at the conflict-free stage, this is an exhibition of that fact.

7.30 “Venerable Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should train in the perfection of wisdom like that, and because of that bodhisattva great beings must be considered irreversible, and should be known as not lacking in the perfection of wisdom. Venerable Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings who want to train in the śrāvaka level should concentrate and listen to, take up, bear in mind, read aloud, study, and properly pay attention to this perfection of wisdom; and bodhisattva great beings who want to train in the pratyekabuddha level, the bodhisattva level, and the buddha level should also concentrate and listen to, take up, bear in mind, read aloud, master, and properly pay attention to this perfection of wisdom. And why? [F.74.b] Because in this perfection of wisdom is detailed instruction for the three vehicles in which bodhisattva great beings should train on the level of śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas, bodhisattvas, and buddhas.”<sup>153</sup>

7.31 This was the seventh chapter, “Entry into Flawlessness,” of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.”

- 8.4        “The name form, and the names feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness, as well as ears, nose, tongue, body, and thinking mind, do not stand alone and do not meet up with anything. And why? Those names do not exist, therefore they do not stand alone and do not meet up with anything.
- 8.5        “Lord, I do not apprehend and do not see the waxing and waning of eye consciousness. Lord, I do not apprehend and do not see the waxing and waning of ear consciousness, nose consciousness, tongue consciousness, body consciousness, or thinking-mind consciousness, so how will I, while not apprehending and not seeing eye consciousness, or ear, nose, tongue, body, or thinking-mind consciousness, label anything with the name bodhisattva? Lord, also those names do not stand alone and do not meet up with anything. And why? Those names do not exist, therefore they do not stand alone and do not meet up with anything.
- 8.6        “Lord, I [F.75.b] do not apprehend and do not see the waxing and waning of eye contact, of ear, nose, tongue, body, and thinking-mind contact, or of feeling that arises from the condition of eye contact. Lord, I do not apprehend and do not see the waxing and waning of feeling that arises from the condition of ear, nose, tongue, and body, or thinking-mind contact. Lord, I do not apprehend and do not see the waxing and waning of the earth element, and I do not apprehend and do not see the waxing and waning of the water element, fire element, wind element, space element, or consciousness element. Lord, I do not apprehend and do not see the waxing and waning of ignorance, and, Lord, I do not apprehend and do not see the waxing and waning of volitional factors, consciousness, name and form, the six sense fields, contact, feeling, craving, appropriation, existence, birth, or old age and death. Lord, I do not apprehend and do not see the waxing and waning of greed, hatred, or confusion. Lord, I do not apprehend and do not see the waxing and waning of obsessions, obscurations, proclivities, or fetters. Lord, I do not apprehend and do not see the waxing and waning of the sixty-two views. Lord, I do not apprehend and do not see the waxing and waning of self, and, Lord, I do not apprehend and do not see the waxing and waning of a living being, a creature, one who lives, an individual, a person, one born of Manu, a child of Manu, one who does, [F.76.a] one who feels, one who knows, or one who sees. Lord, I do not apprehend and do not see the waxing and waning of the perfection of giving, and, Lord, I do not apprehend and do not see the waxing and waning of the perfection of morality, patience, perseverance, concentration, or wisdom. Lord, I do not apprehend and do not see the waxing and waning of any of the emptinesses. Lord, I do not apprehend and do not see the waxing and waning of the applications of mindfulness, Lord, and similarly I do not apprehend and do not see the waxing and waning of the four right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, or path. Lord, I do not apprehend and do not see the waxing and waning of the gateways to liberation—emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness. Lord, I do not apprehend and do not see the waxing and waning of the four concentrations, four immeasurables, or four formless absorptions. Lord, I do not apprehend and do not see the waxing and waning of mindfulness of the Buddha, mindfulness of the Dharma, mindfulness of the Saṅgha, mindfulness of morality, mindfulness of giving away, mindfulness of the gods, mindfulness of what is included in the body, mindfulness of disgust, mindfulness of breathing in and out, or mindfulness of death.

8.7 “And, Lord, given that I do not apprehend and do not see the waxing and waning of the five eyes, six clairvoyances, ten powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, [F.76.b] or eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, what will I label with the name bodhisattva? That name, furthermore, does not stand alone and does not meet up with anything. And why? That name does not exist, therefore it does not stand alone and does not meet up with anything.

8.8 “Lord, I do not apprehend and do not see the waxing and waning of the five appropriating aggregates, which are like a dream, and, Lord, I do not apprehend and do not see the waxing and waning of the five appropriating aggregates, which are like an illusion, a mirage, a city of the gandharvas, an echo, an apparition, a reflection in the mirror, and a magical creation. Lord, I do not apprehend and do not see the waxing and waning of isolation, calm, nonproduction, nonstopping, nonappearing, not occasioning anything, nondefilement, or nonpurification. Lord, I do not apprehend and do not see the waxing and waning of suchness, unmistakable suchness, unaltered suchness, the true nature of dharmas, the dharma-constituent, the establishment of dharmas, the certification of dharmas, the very limit of reality, or the inconceivable element.<sup>157</sup>

8.9 “Similarly, Lord, I do not apprehend and do not see the waxing and waning of the dharmas that are wholesome and unwholesome, basic immorality and not basic immorality, with outflows and without outflows, with afflictions and without afflictions, ordinary and extraordinary, compounded and uncompounded, defiled and purified, [F.77.a] or saṃsāra and nirvāṇa. Lord, I do not apprehend and do not see the waxing and waning of dharmas that are past, future, or present. Lord, I do not apprehend and do not see the waxing and waning of the Lord. Lord, I do not apprehend and do not see the waxing and waning of tathāgatas, worthy ones, unsurpassed, perfect, complete buddhas seated together with their śrāvaka saṅghas and bodhisattva communities in as many world systems in the eastern direction as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River. Lord, given that I do not apprehend and do not see the waxing and waning of tathāgatas, worthy ones, unsurpassed, perfect, complete buddhas seated together with their śrāvaka saṅghas and bodhisattva communities in as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River in each of the southern, western, northern, northeastern, southeastern, southwestern, or northwestern directions, below or above, which bodhisattva will I advise and instruct in what perfection of wisdom? Lord, that name, furthermore, does not stand alone and does not meet up with anything. And why? That name does not exist, therefore it does not stand alone and does not meet up with anything.

8.10 “Thus, Lord, I do not apprehend and do not see the waxing and waning of the suchness of all phenomena. Given that I do not apprehend and do not see even the waxing and waning of the name of the suchness of all phenomena, which bodhisattva will I advise and instruct in what perfection of wisdom? Lord, that name suchness, furthermore, does not stand alone [F.77.b] and does not meet up with anything. And why? That name does not exist, therefore it does not stand alone and does not meet up with anything.

8.11 “Lord, whatever this designation bodhisattva that is a conventional term for the true nature of dharmas is, it cannot be said to be aggregates, or constituents, or sense fields, up to the distinct attributes of a buddha—or anything at all, insofar as it is just a dharma designation. Lord, it is just as the name dream cannot be said to be anything at all, and the names illusion, echo, apparition, mirage, a reflection of the moon in water, and magical creation cannot be said to be anything at all. That which is the name space cannot be said to be anything at all, and similarly the names earth, water, fire, and wind cannot be said to be anything at all. That which is the name suchness cannot be said to be anything at all, and the names unmistaken suchness, unaltered suchness, true nature of dharmas, dharma-constituent, establishment of dharmas, certification of dharmas, and very limit of reality cannot be said to be anything at all; the names perfection of giving, morality, patience, perseverance, concentration, and perfection of wisdom cannot be said to be anything at all; and the names morality, meditative stabilization, wisdom, liberation, and knowledge and seeing of liberation cannot be said to be anything at all. That which is the name stream enterer cannot be said to be anything at all, and the name stream enterer dharmas and the names once-returned, non-returned, [F.78.a] worthy one, pratyekabuddha, bodhisattva, and bodhisattva dharmas cannot be said to be anything at all. That which is the name buddha and the name buddha dharmas cannot be said to be anything at all—to be wholesome or unwholesome or neutral, to be basic immorality or not basic immorality, to be permanent or impermanent, or to be happiness or suffering, self or no self, calm or not calm, isolated or not isolated, or a real thing or not a real thing. Having seen the reason for this, Lord, I said, ‘Given that I do not apprehend and do not see the waxing and waning of all dharmas, this really is something I might be uneasy about, namely, were I to label with the name bodhisattva or perfection of wisdom.’ Lord, that name, furthermore, does not stand alone and does not meet up with anything. And why? That name does not exist, therefore it does not stand alone and does not meet up with anything.

8.12 “Lord, if the minds of bodhisattva great beings are not cowed, do not tense up, and do not experience regret, and if they do not tremble, feel frightened, or become terrified when the perfection of wisdom is being spoken about, you should know that those bodhisattva great beings stand on the irreversible level by way of not taking their stand on it and will go forth to the knowledge of all aspects.<sup>158</sup>

8.13 “Furthermore, Lord, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom should not stand in form; they should not stand in feeling, perception, volitional factors, [F.78.b] or consciousness; they should not stand in the eyes, ears, nose, tongue, body, or thinking mind; and they should not stand in a form, a sound, a smell, a taste, a feeling, or a dharma. They should not stand in the eye consciousness, and they should not stand in the ear consciousness, nose consciousness, tongue consciousness, body consciousness, or thinking-mind consciousness. They should not stand in eye contact; they should not stand in feeling that arises from the condition of eye contact; they should not stand in ear, nose, tongue, body, or thinking-mind contact; and they should not stand in feeling that arises from the condition of ear, nose, tongue, body, or thinking-mind contact. They should not stand in the earth element, and they should not stand in the water element, fire element, wind element, space element, or consciousness element. They should not stand in ignorance, and they should not stand in volitional factors, consciousness, name and form, the six sense fields, contact, feeling, craving, appropriation, existence, birth, or old age and death.

8.14 “And why? Lord, it is because form is empty of form, and because feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is empty of consciousness. Lord, that emptiness of form is not form, and emptiness is not other than form. Form itself is emptiness, and emptiness itself is form. Lord, that emptiness of feeling is not feeling, and emptiness is not other than feeling. Feeling itself is emptiness, and emptiness itself is feeling. Lord, that emptiness of perception is not perception, and emptiness is not other [F.79.a] than perception. Perception itself is emptiness, and emptiness itself is perception. Lord, that emptiness of volitional factors is not volitional factors, and emptiness is not other than volitional factors. Volitional factors themselves are emptiness, and emptiness itself is volitional factors. Lord, that emptiness of consciousness is not consciousness, and emptiness is not other than consciousness. Consciousness itself is emptiness, and emptiness itself is consciousness.

8.15 “Because of this one of many explanations, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom should not stand in form, and they should not stand in feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness. Connect this in the same way with the constituents and sense fields.

8.16 “The earth element is empty of the earth element. The emptiness of the earth element is not the earth element, and emptiness is not other than the earth element. The earth element itself is emptiness, and emptiness itself is the earth element. The water element ... the fire element ... the wind element ... the space element ... and the consciousness element is empty of the consciousness element. The emptiness of the consciousness element is not the consciousness element, and emptiness is not other than the consciousness element. The consciousness element itself is emptiness, and emptiness itself is the consciousness element.

8.17 “Ignorance is empty of ignorance. The emptiness of ignorance is not ignorance, and emptiness is not other than ignorance. Ignorance itself is emptiness, and emptiness itself is ignorance. Volitional factors ... consciousness ... [F.79.b] name and form ... the six sense fields ... contact ... feeling ... craving ... appropriation ... existence ... birth ... and old age and death is empty of old age and death. The emptiness of old age and death is not old age and death, and emptiness is not other than old age and death. Old age and death themselves are emptiness, and emptiness itself is old age and death. Because of this one of many explanations, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom should not stand in ignorance, up to old age and death.

8.18 “Furthermore, Lord, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom should not stand in the applications of mindfulness. And why? Because the applications of mindfulness are empty of the applications of mindfulness. That emptiness of the applications of mindfulness is not the applications of mindfulness, and emptiness is not other than the applications of mindfulness. The applications of mindfulness themselves are emptiness, and emptiness itself is the applications of mindfulness. Because of this one of many explanations, Lord, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom should not stand in the applications of mindfulness.

8.19 “Similarly, they should not stand in the right efforts ... legs of miraculous power ... faculties ... powers ... limbs of awakening ... path ... noble truths ... concentrations ... immeasurables ... formless absorptions ... eight deliverances ... nine serial absorptions ... emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness ... clairvoyances ... ten powers ... fearlessnesses ... detailed and thorough knowledges ... great love ... great [F.80.a] compassion ... or the distinct attributes of a buddha.

8.20 “And why? Because the distinct attributes of a buddha are empty of the distinct attributes of a buddha. That emptiness of the distinct attributes of a buddha is not the distinct attributes of a buddha, and emptiness is not other than the distinct attributes of a buddha. The distinct attributes of a buddha themselves are emptiness, and emptiness itself is the distinct attributes of a buddha. Because of this one of many explanations, Lord, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom should not stand in the distinct attributes of a buddha.

8.21 “Furthermore, Lord, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom should not stand in the perfection of giving. And why? Because the perfection of giving is empty of the perfection of giving. Lord, that emptiness of the perfection of giving is not the perfection of giving, and emptiness is not other than the perfection of giving. The perfection of giving itself is emptiness, and emptiness itself is the perfection of giving. Similarly, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom should not stand in the perfection of morality ... the perfection of patience ... the perfection of perseverance ... the perfection of concentration ... or the perfection of wisdom. And why? Because the perfection of wisdom is empty of the perfection of wisdom. Lord, that emptiness of the perfection of wisdom is not the perfection of wisdom, and emptiness is not other than the perfection of wisdom. The perfection of wisdom itself is emptiness, and [F.80.b] emptiness itself is the perfection of wisdom. Because of this one of many explanations, Lord, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom should not stand in the perfection of wisdom.

8.22 “Furthermore, Lord, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom should not stand in syllables, in syllable accomplishment,<sup>159</sup> in a single explanation, in two explanations, or in a number of different explanations. And why? Lord, it is because syllables are empty of syllables. Lord, that emptiness of syllables is not syllables, and emptiness is not other than syllables. The syllables themselves are emptiness, and emptiness itself is the syllables. Because of this one of many explanations, Lord, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom should not stand in syllables.

8.23 “Furthermore, Lord, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom should not stand in ‘form is impermanent,’ and they should not stand in ‘feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness is impermanent.’ And why? Lord, it is because form that is impermanent<sup>160</sup> is empty of the intrinsic nature of form that is impermanent. That which is the emptiness of impermanence is not impermanence, and impermanence is not other than emptiness. Impermanence itself is emptiness, and emptiness itself is impermanence. Because of this one of many explanations, Lord, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom should not stand in 'form is impermanent.'

8.24 "Similarly, they should not stand in 'feeling is impermanent' ... 'perception is impermanent' ... [F.81.a] 'volitional factors are impermanent' ... or 'consciousness is impermanent.' And why? Lord, it is because consciousness that is impermanent is empty of the intrinsic nature of consciousness that is impermanent. That which is the emptiness of impermanence is not impermanence, and impermanence is not other than emptiness. Impermanence itself is emptiness, and emptiness itself is impermanence. Because of this one of many explanations, Lord, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom should not stand in consciousness.

8.25 "Similarly, they should not stand in 'form is suffering, selfless, calm, empty, signless, wishless, or isolated.' Similarly, they should not stand in 'feeling...'; 'perception...'; 'volitional factors...'; or consciousness is suffering, selfless, calm, empty, signless, wishless, or isolated.' And why? Lord, it is because consciousness that is isolated is empty of consciousness that is isolated. Lord, the isolation of consciousness is not consciousness, and isolation is not other than consciousness. Consciousness itself is isolation, and isolation itself is consciousness. Because of this one of many explanations, Lord, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom should not stand in 'consciousness is isolated.'

8.26 "Furthermore, Lord, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom should not stand in suchness. And why? Lord, it is because suchness is empty of suchness. Lord, the emptiness of suchness is not suchness, [F.81.b] and suchness is not other than emptiness. Suchness itself is emptiness, and emptiness itself is suchness. Because of this one of many explanations, Lord, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom should not stand in suchness. Similarly, they should not stand in the true nature of dharmas, the dharma-constituent, the certification of dharmas, or the very limit of reality.

8.27 "Furthermore, Lord, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom should not stand in all the dhāraṇī gateways. And why? Lord, it is because the dhāraṇī gateways are empty of the dhāraṇī gateways. Lord, the emptiness of the dhāraṇī gateways is not the dhāraṇī gateways, and the dhāraṇī gateways are not other than emptiness. The dhāraṇī gateways themselves are emptiness, and emptiness itself is the dhāraṇī gateways.

Because of this one of many explanations, Lord, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom should not stand in all the dhāraṇī gateways.

8.28 “Furthermore, Lord, if bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom without skill in means stand in form with a mind that has descended<sup>161</sup> into grasping at ‘I’ and grasping at ‘mine,’ they practice an enactment of form,<sup>162</sup> and they do not practice the perfection of wisdom. If they stand in feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... or consciousness, they practice an enactment of consciousness, and they do not practice the perfection of wisdom. And why? Because bodhisattva great beings practicing an enactment do not cultivate the perfection of wisdom, do not fully grasp<sup>163</sup> the perfection of wisdom, do not [F.82.a] become absorbed in the yoga of the perfection of wisdom, and therefore do not fulfill the perfection of wisdom and go forth to the knowledge of all aspects.

8.29 “Lord, if bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom without skill in means stand in the dhāraṇī gateways with minds that have descended into grasping at ‘I’ and grasping at ‘mine,’ they practice an enactment of them, and they do not practice the perfection of wisdom. And why? Because bodhisattva great beings practicing an enactment do not cultivate the perfection of wisdom, do not fully grasp the perfection of wisdom, do not become absorbed in the yoga of the perfection of wisdom, and therefore do not fulfill the perfection of wisdom and go forth to the knowledge of all aspects.

8.30 “Lord, if bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom without skill in means stand in suchness, unmistaken suchness, unaltered suchness, the true nature of dharmas, the dharma-constituent, the establishment of dharmas, the certification of dharmas, or the very limit of reality with minds that have descended into grasping at ‘I’ and grasping at ‘mine,’ they practice an enactment of those, and they do not practice the perfection of wisdom. And why? Because bodhisattva great beings practicing an enactment do not cultivate the perfection of wisdom, do not fully grasp the perfection of wisdom, do not become absorbed in the yoga of the perfection of wisdom, and therefore do not complete the perfection of wisdom and go forth to the knowledge of all aspects. [F.82.b]

8.31 “And why? It is because, Lord, form is not fully grasped, and feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are not fully grasped. And why? Because a form not fully grasped is not form because of the emptiness of a basic nature, and feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness not fully grasped is not consciousness, because of the emptiness of a basic nature, up to the very limit of reality is not fully grasped. And why? Because the very limit of reality not fully grasped is not the very limit of reality because of the emptiness of a basic nature. And also, the perfection of wisdom is not fully grasped ... because of the emptiness of a basic nature.

8.32 “Lord, bodhisattva great beings thus practicing the perfection of wisdom should analyze how all dharmas are empty of a basic nature, and the investigation of them should be done in such a way that the thinking mind does not consider any dharma at all. Lord, this meditative stabilization sphere of bodhisattva great beings is called sarvadharmāpariṅhīta; it is vast, prized, infinite, fixed,<sup>164</sup> cannot be stolen, and is not shared in common with śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas.

8.33 “Bodhisattva great beings abiding in that sphere of meditative stabilizations will go forth to the knowledge of all aspects. And that knowledge of all aspects is not fully grasped, because of inner emptiness, outer emptiness, inner and outer emptiness, the emptiness of emptiness, great emptiness, the emptiness of ultimate reality, the emptiness of the compounded, the emptiness of the uncompounded, the emptiness of what transcends limits, [F.83.a] the emptiness of no beginning and no end, the emptiness of nonrepudiation, the emptiness of a basic nature, the emptiness of all dharmas, the emptiness of its own mark, the emptiness of not apprehending, the emptiness of a nonexistent thing, the emptiness of an intrinsic nature, and the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature. And why? Because it cannot be expressed as a causal sign, because a causal sign is an affliction.

8.34 “What is a causal sign? Form is a causal sign. Feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are causal signs. Eyes are a causal sign. Ears, nose, tongue, body, and thinking mind are causal signs. A form is a causal sign. A sound, a smell, a taste, a feeling, and a dharma are causal signs. Eye consciousness is a causal sign. Ear consciousness, nose consciousness, tongue consciousness, body consciousness, and thinking-mind consciousness are causal signs. Eye contact is a causal sign. Ear contact, nose contact, tongue contact, body contact, and thinking-mind contact are causal signs. Feeling that arises from the condition of eye contact is a causal sign. Feeling that arises from the condition of ear contact, feeling that arises from the condition of nose contact, feeling that arises from the condition of tongue contact, feeling that arises from the condition of body contact, and feeling that arises from the condition of thinking-mind contact are causal signs. The earth element is a causal sign. The water element, fire element, wind element, space element, and consciousness element are causal signs. Ignorance is a causal sign. [F.83.b] Volitional factors, consciousness, name and form, the six sense fields, contact, feeling, craving, appropriation, existence, birth, and old age and death are causal signs. The applications of mindfulness, the right efforts, the legs of miraculous power, the faculties, the powers, the limbs of awakening, the path, the perfections, the ten powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, the distinct attributes of a buddha, emptiness, signlessness, wishlessness, not occasioning anything, the dharma-constituent, the true nature of dharmas, the certification of dharmas, the meditative stabilization gateways, and the dhāraṇī gateways are all causal signs. Syllables are causal signs. A single explanation, two explanations, and a number of different explanations are causal signs. Clairvoyance is a causal sign. All the meditative stabilization gateways and dhāraṇī gateways are causal signs. They are all called affliction.

8.35 “If the perfection of wisdom were something that could be taken up through a causal sign, then the religious mendicant Śreṇika<sup>165</sup> would not have gained faith in the knowledge of a knower of all here in this teaching. Which faith? The trust, feeling of confidence, and belief in the perfection of wisdom, the feeling that it is reliable, and the thinking about, weighing, and testing of it—and this not by way of a causal sign and not by way of the absence of a causal sign. Thus, it should be taken up by way of no causal sign and no absence of causal sign, without taking it up.

8.36 “The religious mendicant Śreṇika also believed in this knowledge of a knower of all. As a faith follower he comprehended with partial knowledge, and having thus comprehended did not fully grasp form. Similarly, he did not fully grasp feeling, perception, volitional factors, [F.84.a] or consciousness. And why? Because he did not apprehend a grasper of all dharmas that are empty of their own mark. And again, why? Because he did not see that knowledge as an inner attainment and clear realization, and he did not see it as an outer one. He did not see that knowledge as an inner and outer attainment and clear realization, and he did not see that knowledge as some other attainment and clear realization either.

8.37 “And why? Because he did not apprehend and see any dharma with which he might know, or which might know, or which he might know, because he did not see that knowledge inside form, and he did not see that knowledge inside feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness; he did not see that knowledge outside form, and he did not see that knowledge outside feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness; he did not see that knowledge inside and outside of form, and he did not see that knowledge inside and outside of feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness; and he did not see that knowledge as other than form, and he did not see that knowledge as other than feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness, because of the emptiness of outer and inner. Similarly, up to he did not see that knowledge inside the very limit of reality, he did not see that knowledge outside the very limit of reality, he did not see that knowledge inside and outside the very limit of reality, and he did not see that knowledge as other than the very limit of reality, [F.84.b] because of the emptiness of outer and inner.

8.38 “The religious mendicant Śreṇika believed in this one of many explanations, and, because he could not find all dharmas, as a faith follower believing in it he took the true nature of dharmas as his authority and entered into the knowledge of a knower of all. Believing like that, he did not fully grasp any dharma, because he did not pay attention to any causal signs. He did not apprehend any dharma to seize or release, because all dharmas are not seized and are not released; and he did not even falsely project nirvāṇa, because he did not falsely project all dharmas. Lord, this—namely, that he does not fully grasp form, that he does not fully grasp feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness because he has not fully grasped all dharmas, up to that he has not fully grasped even the very limit of reality because he has not fully grasped all dharmas—is the state in which the bodhisattva great beings have gone beyond the others;<sup>166</sup> it is the perfection of wisdom.

8.39 “In the interim they do not pass into complete nirvāṇa until their prayers are completed, up to until the eighteen distinct attributes are completed. And why? Because those prayers are nonprayers, those powers are nonpowers, those fearlessnesses are nonfearlessnesses, those detailed and thorough knowledges are nondetailed and nonthorough knowledges, up to those eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha are nonbuddhadharmas—they are not dharmas and they are not nondharmas. Lord, this—namely, that they do not fully grasp form, up to that they do not fully grasp even the very limit of reality because they have not fully grasped all dharmas—is the state in which [F.85.a] bodhisattva great beings have gone beyond the others; it is the perfection of wisdom. [B7]

8.40 “Furthermore, Lord, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom should make an investigation like this: ‘Just what is the perfection of wisdom? Of what is it a perfection of wisdom? Why is it the perfection of wisdom? And what is the perfection of wisdom for?’ If, when they investigate and ponder like that, they see that the dharma that does not exist and that they do not find is the perfection of wisdom, they see it well, because, Lord, all dharmas do not exist and are not found.”

8.41 Then venerable Śāriputra asked venerable Subhūti, “Venerable Subhūti, what dharmas do not exist and are not found?”

8.42 “Venerable Śāriputra,” replied Subhūti, “because of inner emptiness, outer emptiness, inner and outer emptiness, the emptiness of emptiness, great emptiness, the emptiness of ultimate reality, the emptiness of the compounded, the emptiness of the uncompounded, the emptiness of what transcends limits, the emptiness of no beginning and no end, the emptiness of nonrepudiation, the emptiness of a basic nature, the emptiness of all dharmas, the emptiness of its own mark, the emptiness of not apprehending, the emptiness of a nonexistent thing, the emptiness of an intrinsic nature, and the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, the perfection of wisdom, Venerable Śāriputra, does not exist and is not found. The perfection of concentration, the perfection of perseverance, the perfection of patience, [F.85.b] the perfection of morality, and the perfection of giving do not exist and are not found. Venerable Śāriputra, inner emptiness does not exist and is not found. Venerable Śāriputra, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature also does not exist and is not found. Venerable Śāriputra, because of inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, form does not exist and is not found. Venerable Śāriputra, feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness do not exist and are not found, up to the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening do not exist and are not found. The clairvoyances do not exist and are not found, up to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha do not exist and are not found. Venerable Śāriputra, suchness does not exist and is not found. Venerable Śāriputra, the true nature of dharmas, the dharma-constituent, the establishment of dharmas, the certification of dharmas, up to the very limit of reality does not exist and is not found. Venerable Śāriputra, a stream enterer also does not exist and is not found, up to Venerable Śāriputra, a worthy one, pratyekabuddha, bodhisattva, and buddha do not exist and are not found. Venerable Śāriputra, because of inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, all-knowledge also does not exist and is not found. The knowledge of all path aspects does not exist and is not found. Venerable Śāriputra, the knowledge of all aspects also does not exist and is not found.

8.43 “Venerable Śāriputra, if the minds of bodhisattva great beings thus practicing the perfection of wisdom are not cowed, do not tense up, and do not experience regret—if they do not tremble, feel frightened, or become terrified—you should know that those bodhisattva great beings are not separated from the knowledge of all aspects.”

8.44 Then venerable Śāriputra asked venerable Subhūti, “Venerable Subhūti, why should you know that bodhisattva great beings [F.86.a] are not separated from the knowledge of all aspects?”

8.45 “Venerable Śāriputra,” replied Subhūti, “form is separated from the intrinsic nature of form, and bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom know that as it really is. Venerable Śāriputra, feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is separated from the intrinsic nature of consciousness. Venerable Śāriputra, the perfection of giving ... the perfection of morality ... the perfection of patience ... the perfection of perseverance ... the perfection of concentration ... and the perfection of wisdom is separated from the intrinsic nature of the perfection of wisdom. Connect this in the same way with Venerable Śāriputra, the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha are separated from the intrinsic nature of the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, and the very limit of reality is separated from the intrinsic nature of the very limit of reality.”

8.46 Śāriputra then asked, “Venerable Subhūti, what intrinsic nature does form have, and what intrinsic nature do feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness have?”

8.47 “Venerable Śāriputra,” replied Subhūti, “the intrinsic nature of form is not a real thing, and the intrinsic nature of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness is not a real thing. Venerable Śāriputra, the intrinsic nature of the very limit of reality is not a real thing, so, Venerable Śāriputra, because of this one of many explanations, form is separated from the intrinsic nature of form, feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is separated from the intrinsic nature of consciousness. And similarly, up to the very limit of reality is separated from the intrinsic nature of the very limit of reality. [F.86.b]

8.48 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, form is separated from the defining mark of form. Feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is separated from the defining mark of consciousness. And similarly, up to the very limit of reality is separated from the defining mark of the very limit of reality.

8.49 “A defining mark too is separated from the intrinsic nature of a defining mark. The intrinsic nature of a defining mark is separated from the intrinsic nature of a defining mark.”

8.50 Śāriputra then asked, “Venerable Subhūti, do bodhisattva great beings training in this training go forth to the knowledge of all aspects?”

8.51 “Exactly so. Venerable Śāriputra, exactly so,” replied Subhūti. “Bodhisattva great beings who are training in this training go forth to the knowledge of all aspects. And why? Venerable Śāriputra, it is because all dharmas have not been produced and have not gone forth.”

8.52 “Venerable Subhūti, why have all dharmas not been produced and not gone forth?” asked Śāriputra.

8.53 “Venerable Śāriputra,” replied Subhūti, “form is empty of form. You cannot get at its production and going forth. Similarly, feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is empty of consciousness. You cannot get at its production and going forth. Similarly, up to the very limit of reality is empty of the very limit of reality. You cannot get at its production and going forth.

8.54 “Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings thus practicing the perfection of wisdom are near<sup>167</sup> unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. And as they get ever nearer to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening they get ever closer to attaining a perfectly pure body, a perfectly pure voice, a perfectly pure mind, and perfectly pure marks. And as bodhisattva great beings attain an ever more perfectly pure [F.87.a] body, an ever more perfectly pure voice, an ever more perfectly pure mind, and ever more perfectly pure marks, they do not produce a greedy thought, and they do not produce any thought with hatred, confusion, pride, deviousness, envy, miserliness, attachment, or view, so they never are born in a mother’s womb, they constantly and always take birth apparitionally, and, except to bring beings to maturity, they are never born in the terrible forms of life. They will bring beings to maturity, purify a buddhafiield, and pass on from buddhafiield to buddhafiield without ever being separated from the lord buddhas until awakening in unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. Therefore, Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who want to attain these good qualities and benefits should practice the perfection of wisdom without giving up perseverance. Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings thus practicing the perfection of wisdom are near unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.”

CHAPTER 9: CAUSAL SIGNS

9.1

Then venerable Subhūti said to the Lord, “Lord, if bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom without skillful means [F.87.b] practice form<sup>169</sup> they practice a causal sign; they do not practice the perfection of wisdom. If they practice feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness they practice a causal sign; they do not practice the perfection of wisdom. If they practice ‘form is permanent’ or ‘impermanent’ they practice a causal sign; they do not practice the perfection of wisdom. If they practice ‘feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness is permanent’ or ‘impermanent’ they practice a causal sign; they do not practice the perfection of wisdom. If they practice ‘form is happiness’ or ‘suffering’ they practice a causal sign. If they practice ‘feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness is ‘happiness’ or ‘suffering’ they practice a causal sign. If they practice ‘form is self’ or ‘no self’ they practice a causal sign. If they practice ‘feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness is self’ or ‘no self’ they practice a causal sign. If they practice ‘form is calm’ or ‘not calm’ they practice a causal sign. If they practice ‘feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness is calm’ or ‘not calm’ they practice a causal sign. If they practice ‘form is isolated’ or ‘not isolated’ they practice a causal sign. If they practice ‘feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness is isolated’ or ‘not isolated’ they practice a causal sign; they do not practice the perfection of wisdom.

“Lord, if bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom [F.88.a] without skillful means practice the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening they practice a causal sign. Similarly, if they practice the clairvoyances, the perfections, the five eyes, the powers, and the four fearlessnesses, up to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, they practice a causal sign; they do not practice the perfection of wisdom.

- 9.3 “Lord, if it occurs to bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom, ‘I am practicing the perfection of wisdom,’ they practice what they falsely consider a fact.<sup>170</sup> Those bodhisattva great beings practice just a causal sign.
- 9.4 Lord, if it occurs to bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom, ‘Someone who practices thus, practices the perfection of wisdom and cultivates the perfection of wisdom,’ they practice just a causal sign. You should know that this is the bodhisattva great beings’ lack of skillful means.”
- 9.5 Śāriputra asked, “Venerable Subhūti, why should one know that this is the bodhisattva great beings’ lack of skillful means?”
- 9.6 “Venerable Śāriputra,” replied Subhūti, “bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom like that possess, form a notion of, and believe in form, and possess, form a notion of, and believe in feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness, so they practice an enactment of form, and they practice an enactment of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness. I say that this creates their birth, old age, sickness, death, pain, lamentation, suffering, mental anguish, and grief. [F.88.b]
- 9.7 “Furthermore, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom without skillful means possess, form a notion of, and believe in eyes; possess, form a notion of, and believe in ears, nose, tongue, body, and thinking mind; possess, form a notion of, and believe in a form; possess, form a notion of, and believe in a sound, a smell, a taste, a feeling, and a dharma; possess, form a notion of, and believe in eye consciousness; and possess, form a notion of, and believe in ear consciousness, nose consciousness, tongue consciousness, body consciousness, and thinking-mind consciousness.
- 9.8 “If they possess, form a notion of, and believe in eye contact; if they possess, form a notion of, and believe in ear, nose, tongue, body, or thinking-mind contact; if they possess, form a notion of, and believe in a pleasurable feeling or suffering feeling, or a neither pleasurable nor suffering feeling that arises from the condition of eye contact; if they possess, form a notion of, and believe in a pleasurable feeling or suffering feeling, or a neither pleasurable nor suffering feeling that arises from the condition of ear, nose, tongue, body, or thinking-mind contact; if they possess, form a notion of, and believe in the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, five eyes, six clairvoyances, six perfections, four fearlessnesses, four immeasurables, four concentrations, four absorptions, or ten tathāgata powers; if they possess, form a notion of, and believe in the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha; or if they possess, form a notion of, and believe in the dharmas of the state of a worthy one, of a pratyekabuddha, of a bodhisattva, or of a buddha, they

- practice an enactment. [F.89.a] I say that those practicing enactments are not released from birth, old age, sickness, death, pain, lamentation, suffering, mental anguish, and grief; they are not released from suffering, and so on.
- 9.9 “Venerable Śāriputra, if those bodhisattvas do not even have the good fortune to realize the śrāvaka or pratyekabuddha level, how could they fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening? It is impossible.
- 9.10 “Venerable Śāriputra, you should know that bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom like that are without skillful means.”
- 9.11 Śāriputra then asked, “Venerable Subhūti, how do you know when bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom have skillful means?”
- 9.12 “Venerable Śāriputra,” replied Subhūti, “if, when bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of wisdom they do not practice form; do not practice feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness; do not practice the causal sign of form; do not practice the causal sign of feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness; do not practice ‘form is permanent’ or ‘impermanent’; and similarly do not practice ‘form is happiness’ or ‘suffering,’ ‘self’ or ‘no self,’ or ‘calm’ or ‘not calm’; do not practice ‘feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness is permanent’ or ‘impermanent,’ ‘happiness’ or ‘suffering,’ ‘self’ or ‘no self,’ or ‘calm’ or ‘not calm’; do not practice ‘form is empty’ or ‘not empty,’ ‘has a sign’ or ‘is signless,’ [F.89.b] or ‘is wished for’ or ‘is wishless’; do not practice ‘feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness is empty’ or ‘not empty,’ ‘has a sign’ or ‘is signless,’ or ‘is wished for’ or ‘is wishless’; do not practice ‘form is isolated’ or practice ‘it is not isolated’; do not practice ‘feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness is isolated’ or practice ‘it is not isolated,’ then, Venerable Śāriputra, when bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of wisdom like that you should know that they have skillful means.
- 9.13 “And why? Venerable Śāriputra, because that emptiness of form is not form, form is not other than emptiness, and emptiness is not other than form. Form itself is emptiness and emptiness itself is form. And the emptiness of feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is not consciousness, and consciousness is not other than emptiness, and emptiness is not other than consciousness. Consciousness itself is emptiness and emptiness itself is consciousness. Similarly, Venerable Śāriputra, because the emptiness of the constituents ... sense fields ... and dependent originations ... and the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening ... the perfections ... the clairvoyances ... the tathāgata powers ... the fearlessnesses ... the detailed and thorough knowledges ... up to the emptiness of the distinct attributes of a buddha are not the distinct attributes of a buddha, the distinct attributes of a buddha are not other than emptiness, and emptiness is not other than the distinct attributes of a buddha. Emptiness [F.90.a] is the distinct attributes of a buddha and the distinct attributes of a buddha are emptiness.

9.14 “Venerable Śāriputra, when bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of wisdom like that you should know that they have skillful means. Venerable Śāriputra, when bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of wisdom like that they have the good fortune to awaken fully to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

9.15 “If, while practicing the perfection of wisdom they assert any dharma, they are not practicing the perfection of wisdom. Even if they do not so assert, they are not practicing the perfection of wisdom. Even if they do assert when they so assert and do not assert when they do not so assert,<sup>171</sup> they are not practicing the perfection of wisdom. Even if they neither so assert nor do not so assert, they are not practicing the perfection of wisdom.”

9.16 “Venerable Subhūti, why do bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom not so assert?” asked Śāriputra.

9.17 Subhūti replied, “Because, Venerable Śāriputra, the perfection of wisdom is without an intrinsic nature and cannot be found. And why? Because, Venerable Śāriputra, the perfection of wisdom is not a real thing. Because of this one of many explanations bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom do not assert ‘I am practicing,’ do not assert ‘I am not practicing,’ do not assert ‘I am practicing when I am practicing and not practicing when I am not practicing,’ and do not assert, ‘I am neither practicing nor not practicing.’ And why? Because they have comprehended all dharmas as things that are not real and do not accept them, so<sup>172</sup> bodhisattva great beings thus practicing the perfection of wisdom are close to the knowledge of all aspects.

9.18 “Furthermore, because all dharmas are the same<sup>173</sup> as [F.90.b] things that are not real, that knowledge of all aspects is not two and cannot be divided into two.

9.19 “It is the vast, prized, infinite, constant meditative stabilization, sarva-dharmānutpāda by name, of bodhisattva great beings that cannot be stolen and is not shared in common with śrāvakas or pratyekabuddhas.

9.20 Bodhisattva great beings abiding by means of this meditative stabilization quickly and fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.”

9.21 Śāriputra then asked, “Venerable Subhūti, do bodhisattva great beings abiding by means of this meditative stabilization alone quickly and fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, or do they also do so by means of other meditative stabilizations?”

- 9.22 “Venerable Śāriputra,” replied Subhūti, “bodhisattva great beings abiding by means of other meditative stabilizations as well also quickly and fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.”
- 9.23 Śāriputra then asked, “Venerable Subhūti, what are those other meditative stabilizations, abiding by means of which bodhisattva great beings quickly and fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening?”
- 9.24 “Venerable Śāriputra,” replied Subhūti, “there is a meditative stabilization of bodhisattva great beings, śūraṅgama by name. Abiding by means of that meditative stabilization bodhisattva great beings quickly and fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. Similarly, there is the meditative stabilization rājamudra, the meditative stabilization siṃhavikrāḍita, the meditative stabilization sucandra, the meditative stabilization sarvadharmodgata, the meditative stabilization sarvadharmamudra, [F.91.a] the meditative stabilization vilokitamūrdhā, the meditative stabilization dharmadhātuniyata, the meditative stabilization niyatadhvajaketu, the meditative stabilization vajratna,<sup>174</sup> the meditative stabilization sarvadharmapraveśamudra, the meditative stabilization samādhirāja, the meditative stabilization raśmipramukha, the meditative stabilization balavyūha, the meditative stabilization samāhitāvasthāpratiṣṭhāna, the meditative stabilization rājamudra the meditative stabilization balavīrya, the meditative stabilization samudgata, the meditative stabilization niruktiniyatapraveśa, the meditative stabilization adhivacanapraveśa, the meditative stabilization digvilokita, the meditative stabilization ādhāramudrā, the meditative stabilization asaṃpramoṣa, the meditative stabilization sarvadharmasamavasaraṇasamudra, the meditative stabilization ākāśaspharaṇa, the meditative stabilization vajramaṇḍala, the meditative stabilization dhvajāgrakeyūra, the meditative stabilization indraketu, the meditative stabilization śroto’nugata, the meditative stabilization siṃhavijṛmbhita, the meditative stabilization vyatyasta,<sup>175</sup> the meditative stabilization ratnajahā, the meditative stabilization vairocana, the meditative stabilization aneṣa, the meditative stabilization aniketasthita, the meditative stabilization nīścitta, the meditative stabilization vimalapradīpa, the meditative stabilization anantaprabha, the meditative stabilization prabhākara, the meditative stabilization samantāvabhāsa, the meditative stabilization śuddhasāra,<sup>176</sup> [F.91.b] the meditative stabilization vimalaprabha, the meditative stabilization ratikara, the meditative stabilization vidutpradīpa, the meditative stabilization akṣaya, the meditative stabilization ajeya, the meditative stabilization tejovatin,<sup>177</sup> the meditative stabilization kṣayāpagata, the meditative stabilization āniñjya, the meditative stabilization avivartta, the meditative stabilization sūryapradīpa, the meditative stabilization candravimala, the meditative stabilization prajñāpradīpa, the meditative stabilization śuddhapratibhāsa, the meditative stabilization ālokakara, the meditative stabilization kārākāra, the meditative stabilization jñānaketu, the meditative stabilization vajropama, the meditative stabilization cittasthiti, the meditative stabilization samantāvaloka, the meditative stabilization supraṭiṣṭhita, the meditative stabilization ratnakoti, the meditative stabilization varadharmamudra, the meditative stabilization sarvadharmasamatā, the meditative stabilization ratijaha, the meditative stabilization dharmasamudgatapūrṇa, the meditative stabilization vikiraṇa, the meditative stabilization sarvadharmapadaprabheda, the meditative stabilization samākṣarāvākāra, the meditative stabilization akṣarāpagata, the meditative stabilization ārambanacchedaḥ, the meditative stabilization avikāra, the meditative stabilization aprakāra, the meditative stabilization nāmaniyatapraveśa, the meditative stabilization aniketacārī, the meditative stabilization vitimirāpagata, the meditative stabilization cāritravatin, the meditative stabilization acala, the meditative stabilization viṣayatīrṇa, the meditative stabilization sarvagūṇasaṃcaya, [F.92.a] the meditative stabilization sthitaniścitta, the meditative stabilization śubhapuṣpitaśuddhi, the meditative stabilization bodhyaṅgavatin, the meditative stabilization anantapratibhāna,<sup>178</sup> the meditative stabilization asamasama, the meditative stabilization sarvadharmātikramaṇa, the meditative stabilization paricchedakara, the meditative stabilization vimativikaraṇa, the meditative stabilization niradhiṣṭhāna, the meditative stabilization ekavyūha, the meditative stabilization ākārābhīnirhāra, the meditative stabilization ekākāra, the meditative stabilization ākārānavākāra, the meditative stabilization nairvedhikasarvabhavatamo'pagata,<sup>179</sup> the meditative stabilization sarvasaṅketarūtapraveśa, the meditative stabilization sarvagiri-ghoṣākṣaravimukta, the meditative stabilization jvalanolka, the meditative stabilization anāvīlakṣānti,<sup>180</sup> the meditative stabilization lakṣanapariśodhaṇa, the meditative stabilization sarvākāraravropeta, the meditative stabilization sarvasukhaduḥkhanirabhinandin, the meditative stabilization akṣayakaraṇḍa, the meditative stabilization dhāraṇīmati, the meditative stabilization samyaktva-mithyātvasarvasaṅgrasana,<sup>181</sup> the meditative stabilization sarvarodhanīrodhasaṅgpraśamana, the meditative stabilization anurodhāpratirodha, the meditative stabilization vimalaprabha, the meditative stabilization sāravatin, the meditative stabilization paripūrṇavimalacandraprabha, the meditative stabilization vidyutprabha, the meditative stabilization mahāvvyūha, the meditative stabilization sarvalokaprabhākara, [F.92.b] the meditative stabilization samādhisamata, the meditative stabilization arajoviraṇayayukta, the meditative stabilization araṇasaraṇasarvasamavasaraṇa,<sup>182</sup> the meditative stabilization araṇasamavasaraṇa, the meditative stabilization anīlambhanīketanirata, the meditative stabilization tathatāsthīniścitta,<sup>183</sup> the meditative stabilization kāyakali-saṅgpramathana, the meditative stabilization vākkalīvidhvaṃsanaganakalpa,<sup>184</sup> and the meditative stabilization ākāśasaṅgavimuktinirupalepa. Abiding by means of those meditative stabilizations, bodhisattva great beings quickly and fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. Venerable Śāriputra, those are the meditative stabilizations of bodhisattva great beings. Abiding by means of those meditative stabilizations, bodhisattva great beings quickly and fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. And there are infinite, countless other meditative stabilization gateways and dhāraṇī gateways as well, having trained in which bodhisattva great beings quickly and fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.”

9.25 Then through the Lord’s might venerable Subhūti also spoke as follows: “Ah! Venerable Śāriputra, you should know the earlier tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas have prophesied the unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening of bodhisattva great beings abiding by means of those meditative stabilizations, and those tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas, now dwelling and maintaining themselves in the ten directions in as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River, those tathāgatas, [F.93.a] worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas too prophesy those bodhisattva great beings. But those who abide by means of those meditative stabilizations do not see even those meditative stabilizations, because they do not falsely project on account of those meditative stabilizations, ‘I have been absorbed; I am absorbed; I will become absorbed.’ Those bodhisattva great beings do not conceive of those. They do not occur to them.”

9.26 Śāriputra then asked, “Venerable Subhūti, do tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas prophesy bodhisattva great beings who have stood in those meditative stabilizations?”

9.27 “No indeed, Venerable Śāriputra,” replied Subhūti. “And why? Because, Venerable Śāriputra, the perfection of wisdom is not one thing, the meditative stabilization another, and the bodhisattva yet another. Bodhisattvas themselves are the meditative stabilization, and the meditative stabilization itself is the bodhisattva.”

9.28 Śāriputra then asked, “If, Venerable Subhūti, the meditative stabilization is not one thing and the bodhisattva another, the bodhisattva not one thing and the meditative stabilization another—that is, if just the meditative stabilization is the bodhisattva and just the bodhisattva is the meditative stabilization because all dharmas are the same, then is it possible to teach the meditative stabilization?”

“No indeed, Venerable Śāriputra,” replied Subhūti.

9.29 “Venerable Subhūti, do the children of a good family form a notion of those meditative stabilizations?” asked Śāriputra.

“No, Venerable Śāriputra, they do not form such notions,” replied Subhūti.

- 9.30 “Venerable Subhūti, how do they not form such notions?” asked Śāriputra.
“They [F.93.b] do not mentally construct them, Venerable Śāriputra,” replied Subhūti.
- 9.31 “How, Venerable Subhūti, do they not mentally construct them?” asked Śāriputra.
“They do not mentally construct those meditative stabilizations because all phenomena do not exist.<sup>185</sup> Venerable Śāriputra, by the same token, those children of a good family do not distinguish them and do not form a notion of them,” replied Subhūti.
- 9.32 “Why, Venerable Subhūti, do they not distinguish or form a notion of them?” asked Śāriputra.
“Venerable Śāriputra, they do not distinguish or form a notion of them because that meditative stabilization and those bodhisattva great beings do not exist.”<sup>186</sup> replied Subhūti.
- 9.33 The Lord then complimented venerable Subhūti: “You who are the foremost of śrāvakas at the conflict-free stage have, as is to be expected, given an explanation of what I have taught.<sup>187</sup> Those are eloquent statements. Excellent, excellent, Subhūti. Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should train like that in the perfection of wisdom. They should train like that in the perfection of concentration, the perfection of perseverance, the perfection of patience, the perfection of morality, and the perfection of giving. Similarly, they should train like that in the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, up to they should train like that in the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha.”
- 9.34 Then venerable Śāriputra asked of the Lord, “Lord, do bodhisattva great beings training like that train in the perfection of wisdom?”
- 9.35 “Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “bodhisattva great beings training like that do train in the perfection of wisdom, by way of not apprehending anything. Similarly, they train in the perfection of concentration, the perfection of perseverance, the perfection of patience, [F.94.a] the perfection of morality, and the perfection of giving, by way of not apprehending anything. Similarly, they train in the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, by way of not apprehending anything, and similarly, up to they train in the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, by way of not apprehending anything.”
- 9.36 Then venerable Śāriputra asked the Lord, “Lord, do bodhisattva great beings training like that train in the perfection of wisdom by way of not apprehending anything?”
- 9.37 “Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “bodhisattva great beings training like that do train in the perfection of wisdom, by way of not apprehending anything.”

9.38 “Lord what do you mean, they do not apprehend anything?” asked Śāriputra.

“Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “because of the state of absolute purity they do not apprehend a self, up to they do not apprehend one who knows, or one who sees. Because of the state of absolute purity they do not apprehend aggregates, constituents, sense fields, or dependent origination; because of the state of absolute purity they do not apprehend suffering; because of the state of absolute purity they do not apprehend origination, cessation, or the path; because of the state of absolute purity they do not apprehend the desire realm, form realm, or formless realm; because of the state of absolute purity they do not apprehend the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening; because of the state of absolute purity they do not apprehend ... up to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha; because of the state of absolute purity they do not apprehend a stream enterer; because of the state of absolute purity they do not apprehend a once-returner, a non-returner, the state of a worthy one, or a pratyekabuddha; and because of the state of absolute purity [F.94.b] they do not apprehend ... up to a bodhisattva, awakening, or a buddha.”

9.39 “Lord, what is purity?” asked Śāriputra.

“Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “not being produced, not stopping, not being defilement, not being purification, not appearing, not being apprehended, and not occasioning anything is called the purity of all dharmas.”

9.40 “Lord, in what dharmas do bodhisattva great beings training like that train?” asked Śāriputra.

9.41 “Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “bodhisattva great beings training like that do not train in any dharma. And why? Because, Śāriputra, those dharmas do not exist in the way foolish, ordinary people take them to be.”

9.42 “Lord, how do those dharmas exist?”<sup>188</sup> asked Śāriputra.

“Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “as they do not exist, so do they exist. Thus, they do not exist, so one says ‘ignorance.’”<sup>189</sup>

9.43 “Lord, why are the nonexistent called ignorance?”<sup>190</sup> asked Śāriputra.

“Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “form does not exist because of inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature. Feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness do not exist because of inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature. The constituents, the sense fields, dependent origination, and the perfections do not exist because of inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature. The thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening do not exist because of inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature ... up to

[F.95.a] the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha do not exist because of inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature.

9.44 “Those foolish people settle down on them because of ignorance and craving, mentally constructing what does not exist. Having settled down on what does not exist, they are attached to the two extremes, namely permanence and annihilation. They do not know, and they do not see. They imagine dharmas where those dharmas do not exist, so they settle down on name and form, they settle down on the applications of mindfulness, up to they settle down on the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha. When they have thus settled down on them, they mentally construct dharmas that do not exist, hence they do not know and do not see them.

9.45 “Why do they not know and see them? Because they do not know and see form. They do not know and see feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness. They do not know and see the constituents, the sense fields, dependent origination, or the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, up to they do not know and see the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, and they are, therefore, counted as fools.

9.46 “They will not emerge. From what will they not emerge? They will not emerge from the desire realm. They will not emerge from the form realm. They will not emerge from the formless realm. They will not emerge from śrāvaka and pratyekabuddha dharmas.

9.47 “There is nothing in which they place their faith. What does it mean that there is nothing in which they place their faith? They do not place their faith in ‘form is empty of form,’ up to they do not place their faith in ‘awakening is empty of awakening.’

9.48 “They do not rest.<sup>191</sup> In what do they not rest? They do not rest in the perfection of giving, and they do not rest [F.95.b] in the perfection of morality, the perfection of patience, the perfection of perseverance, the perfection of concentration, or the perfection of wisdom. They do not rest on the irreversible level, up to they do not rest in the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha. That is why they are called fools.

9.49 “They settle down. What does it mean that they settle down? They settle down on form. They settle down on feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness. They settle down on the eyes. They settle down on the ears, nose, tongue, body, and thinking mind. They settle down on a form. They settle down on a sound, a smell, a taste, a feeling, and a dharma. They settle down on the aggregates, constituents, and sense fields. They settle down on greed, hatred, and confusion, they settle down on distortion, up to they settle down on awakening. They are, therefore, counted as fools.”

- 9.50 “Lord, do bodhisattva great beings training like that not train in the perfection of wisdom and do they not go forth to the knowledge of all aspects?” asked Śāriputra.
- 9.51 “Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “bodhisattva great beings training like that do not train in the perfection of wisdom and do not go forth to the knowledge of all aspects.”
- 9.52 “Why, Lord, do those bodhisattva great beings not train in the perfection of wisdom and not go forth to the knowledge of all aspects?” asked Śāriputra.
- 9.53 “Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “here [F.96.a] bodhisattva great beings without skillful means mentally construct a perfection of wisdom and settle down on it. Similarly, they mentally construct a perfection of concentration, perfection of perseverance, perfection of patience, perfection of morality, and perfection of giving, and settle down on them. They mentally construct all the buddhadharmas, all-knowledge, the knowledge of path aspects, and the knowledge of all aspects. Śāriputra, because of this one of many explanations, those bodhisattva great beings do not train in the perfection of wisdom and do not go forth to the knowledge of all aspects.”
- 9.54 “It is the case, then, Lord,” said Śāriputra, “that bodhisattva great beings training like that do not train in the perfection of wisdom and do not go forth to the knowledge of all aspects.”
- 9.55 “Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings training like that do not train in the perfection of wisdom and do not go forth to the knowledge of all aspects,” said the Lord.
- 9.56 Śāriputra then asked, “Lord, how do bodhisattva great beings train in the perfection of wisdom so that while training they do go forth to the knowledge of all aspects?”
- 9.57 “Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “when bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom do not apprehend and do not see the perfection of wisdom, then, Śāriputra, the bodhisattva great beings training in the perfection of wisdom like that go forth to the knowledge of all aspects by way of not apprehending anything. Similarly, when they are practicing the perfection of concentration ... the perfection of perseverance ... [F.96.b] the perfection of patience ... the perfection of morality ... and the perfection of giving and do not apprehend and do not see the perfection of giving, up to do not apprehend and do not see awakening; when they do not apprehend and do not see all-knowledge, the knowledge of path aspects, up to the knowledge of all aspects, then, Śāriputra, the bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom like that are training in the perfection of wisdom and go forth to the knowledge of all aspects by way of not apprehending anything.”

- 9.58 “Lord, by way of not apprehending what do they go forth to the knowledge of all aspects?” asked Śāriputra.
- 9.59 “Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “they go forth to the knowledge of all aspects by way of not apprehending the emptiness of the knowledge of all aspects.”<sup>192</sup>

CHAPTER 10: ILLUSION-LIKE

10.1 Then venerable Subhūti said to the Lord, “Lord, suppose someone were to ask, ‘Does this illusory being, having trained in the perfection of wisdom, go forth to the knowledge of all aspects or reach the knowledge of all aspects?’ What, Lord, should be said to that questioner? And similarly, suppose someone were to ask, ‘Does this illusory being, having trained in the perfection of concentration, perfection of perseverance, perfection of patience, perfection of morality, and perfection of giving go forth to the knowledge of all aspects or reach the knowledge of all aspects?’ What, Lord, should be said to that questioner? And as to ‘Do they, having trained in, up to the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, [F.97.a] up to the knowledge of all aspects, go forth to the knowledge of all aspects or reach the knowledge of all aspects?’—what, Lord, should be said to that questioner?”

10.2 The Lord replied, “Subhūti, I will put a question about that right to you. Answer as best you can. What do you think about this: Is illusion one thing and form another? Is illusion one thing and feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness another?”

“No, Lord,” answered Subhūti.

10.3 The Lord then asked, “Subhūti, what do you think about this: Is illusion one thing and the eyes another, or is illusion one thing and the ears, nose, tongue, body, and thinking mind another? Or is illusion one thing and a form another, or is illusion one thing and a sound, a smell, a taste, a feeling, and a dharma another? Or is illusion one thing and eye consciousness another, or is illusion one thing and ear consciousness, nose consciousness, tongue consciousness, body consciousness, and thinking-mind consciousness another? Or is illusion one thing and eye contact another, or is illusion one thing and ear contact, nose contact, tongue contact, body contact, and thinking-mind contact another?”

“No, Lord,” answered Subhūti.

10.4 The Lord then asked, “Subhūti, what do you think about this: Is illusion one thing and the pleasurable, or suffering, or neither pleasurable nor suffering [F.97.b] feeling from the condition of eye contact another? Is illusion one thing and the pleasurable, or suffering, or neither pleasurable nor suffering feeling from the condition of ear contact, feeling from the condition of nose contact, feeling from the condition of tongue contact, feeling from the condition of body contact, or feeling from the condition of thinking-mind contact another?”

“No, Lord,” answered Subhūti.

10.5 The Lord then asked, “Subhūti, what do you think about this: is illusion one thing and the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening another?”

“No, Lord,” answered Subhūti.

10.6 The Lord then asked, “Subhūti, what do you think about this: is illusion one thing and emptiness another, is illusion one thing and signlessness another, or is illusion one thing and wishlessness another?”

“No, Lord,” answered Subhūti.

10.7 The Lord then asked, “Subhūti, what do you think about this: is illusion one thing and the ten tathāgata powers another, or is illusion one thing and ... up to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha another?”

“No, Lord,” answered Subhūti.

10.8 The Lord then asked, “Subhūti, what do you think about this: is illusion one thing and the knowledge of all aspects another?”

10.9 “No, Lord,” answered Subhūti.<sup>193</sup> “Illusion is not one thing, Lord, and form another; form is itself illusion, Lord, and illusion is itself form. Illusion is not one thing, Lord, [F.98.a] and feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness another; feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are themselves illusion, Lord, and illusion is itself feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness. Illusion is not one thing, Lord, and the eyes themselves another; the eyes are themselves illusion, Lord, and illusion is itself the eyes. Illusion is not one thing, Lord, and the ears ... nose ... tongue ... body ... and thinking mind another; the thinking mind is itself illusion, Lord, and illusion is itself the thinking mind. Illusion is not one thing, Lord, and a form itself another; a form is itself illusion, Lord, and illusion is itself a form. Illusion is not one thing, Lord, and a sound ... a smell ... a taste ... a feeling ... and a dharma another; dharmas are themselves illusion, Lord, and illusion is itself dharmas. Illusion is not one thing, Lord, and eye consciousness itself another; eye consciousness is itself illusion, Lord, and illusion is itself eye consciousness. Illusion is not one thing, Lord, and ear consciousness, nose consciousness, tongue consciousness, body consciousness, and thinking-mind consciousness another; ear consciousness ... nose consciousness ... tongue consciousness ... body consciousness ... and thinking-mind consciousness is itself illusion, Lord, and illusion is itself thinking-mind consciousness. Illusion is not one thing, Lord, and eye contact another; eye contact is itself illusion, Lord, and illusion is itself eye contact. Illusion is not one thing, Lord, and ear contact, [F.98.b] nose contact, tongue contact, body contact, and thinking-mind contact another; ear contact ... nose contact ... tongue contact ... body contact ... and thinking-mind contact is itself illusion, Lord, and illusion is itself thinking-mind contact. Illusion is not one thing, Lord, and the pleasurable, or suffering, or neither pleasurable nor suffering feeling from the condition of eye contact another; the pleasurable, or suffering, or neither pleasurable nor suffering feeling from the condition of eye contact is itself illusion, Lord, and illusion is itself the pleasurable, or suffering, or neither pleasurable nor suffering feeling from the condition of eye contact. Illusion is not one thing, Lord, and the pleasurable, or suffering, or neither pleasurable nor suffering feeling from the condition of ear contact, feeling from the condition of nose contact, feeling from the condition of tongue contact, feeling from the condition of body contact, and feeling from the condition of thinking-mind contact another; the pleasurable, or suffering, or neither pleasurable nor suffering feeling from the condition of ear contact ... feeling from the condition of nose contact ... feeling from the condition of tongue contact ... feeling from the condition of body contact ... and feeling from the condition of thinking-mind contact are themselves illusion, Lord, and illusion is itself the pleasurable, or suffering, or neither pleasurable nor suffering feeling from the condition of thinking-mind contact. Illusion is not one thing, Lord, and the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening another; the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening are themselves illusion, Lord, and illusion is itself the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening. Illusion is not one thing, Lord, and emptiness another; [F.99.a] emptiness is itself illusion, Lord, and illusion is itself emptiness. Illusion is not one thing, Lord, and signlessness another; signlessness is itself illusion, Lord, and illusion is itself signlessness. Illusion is not one thing, Lord, and wishlessness another; wishlessness is itself illusion, Lord, and illusion is itself wishlessness. Illusion is not one thing, Lord, and the ten tathāgata powers another; the ten tathāgata powers are themselves illusion, Lord, and illusion is itself the ten tathāgata powers. Illusion is not one thing, Lord, and ... up to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha another; up to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha are themselves illusion, Lord, and illusion is itself ... up to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha. Illusion is not one thing, Lord, and the knowledge of all aspects another; the knowledge of all aspects is itself illusion, Lord, and illusion is itself the knowledge of all aspects."

- 10.10 The Lord then asked, “Subhūti, what do you think about this: is there defilement and purification of illusion?”
“No, Lord,” answered Subhūti.
- 10.11 The Lord then asked, “Subhūti, what do you think about this: is there production and stopping of illusion?”
“No, Lord,” answered Subhūti.
- 10.12 The Lord then asked, “Subhūti, what do you think about this: does someone who has no production, no stopping, no defilement, [F.99.b] and no purification train in the perfection of wisdom, or go forth to the knowledge of all aspects, up to or reach the knowledge of all aspects?”
“No, Lord,” answered Subhūti. [B8]
- 10.13 The Lord then asked, “Subhūti, what do you think about this: is bodhisattva used conventionally as just a name and conventional term for these five appropriating aggregates?”<sup>194</sup>
“No, Lord,” answered Subhūti.
- 10.14 The Lord then asked, “Subhūti, what do you think about this: can you apprehend production, stopping, defilement, or purification of these five appropriating aggregates that are used conventionally as just names and conventional terms?”
“No, Lord,” answered Subhūti.
- 10.15 The Lord then asked, “Subhūti, what do you think about this: does that of which there is no name and causal sign, no conventional term, no designation, no convention, no name and no name designation, no body, no physical activity, no speech, no verbal activity, no thinking mind, no thinking-mind activity—of which there is no production, stopping, defilement, or purification—train in the perfection of wisdom and go forth to the knowledge of all aspects, or do you think it reaches the knowledge of all aspects?”
“No, Lord,” answered Subhūti.
- 10.16 “Subhūti,” said the Lord, “when bodhisattva great beings train in [F.100.a] the perfection of wisdom like that, by way of not apprehending anything, they go forth to the knowledge of all aspects and reach the knowledge of all aspects.”
- 10.17 Subhūti replied,<sup>195</sup> “Lord, bodhisattva great beings, then, training in the perfection of wisdom like that, who want to go forth to the knowledge of all aspects, should train for unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening as an illusory person would train. And why? Because, Lord, these five aggregates are just what should be known to be an illusory person.”
- 10.18 The Lord then asked, “Subhūti, what do you think about this: do these five aggregates, having trained in the perfection of wisdom, go forth to the knowledge of all aspects, or do you think they reach the knowledge of all

- aspects?”
- 10.19 “No, Lord,” answered Subhūti. “And why? Because, Lord, they are nonexistent things, and you cannot apprehend nonexistent things.”
- 10.20 The Lord then asked, “Subhūti, what do you think about this: do the five dream-like aggregates, having trained in the perfection of wisdom, go forth to the knowledge of all aspects?”
- 10.21 “No, Lord,” answered Subhūti. “And why? Because, Lord, a dream is a nonexistent thing, and you cannot apprehend a nonexistent thing.”
- 10.22 The Lord then asked, “Subhūti, what do you think about this: do the five aggregates that are like an echo, like an apparition, like an image of a moon in water, like an illusion, like a mirage, like a magical creation, and like a reflection in a mirror, having trained in the perfection [F.100.b] of wisdom, go forth to the knowledge of all aspects?”
- 10.23 “No, Lord,” answered Subhūti. “And why? Because, Lord, an echo is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, also an apparition is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, also an image of a moon in water is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, also an illusion is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, also a mirage is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, also a magical creation is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, and also a reflection in a mirror is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, and that nonexistence of an intrinsic nature cannot be apprehended. And why? Because, Lord, form is like an illusion, and feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is like an illusion, and what that consciousness is, the six faculties are. They are the five aggregates,<sup>196</sup> and you cannot apprehend them, because of inner emptiness, up to because of the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature.”
- 10.24 Venerable Subhūti then asked the Lord, “Lord, if bodhisattva great beings who have newly set out in the vehicle were to hear this exposition, would they not<sup>197</sup> tremble, feel frightened, and become terrified?”
- 10.25 “Subhūti,” answered the Lord, “if they are bodhisattva great beings who have newly set out in the vehicle, and are those without skillful means who have not been taken in hand by a spiritual friend, they will tremble, feel frightened, and become terrified.”
- 10.26 Subhūti asked, “Lord, what skillful means do bodhisattva great beings who have newly set out in the vehicle have not to tremble, feel frightened, or become terrified when hearing this exposition?”
- 10.27 “Subhūti,” answered the Lord, “here [F.101.a] bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom with attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects analytically understand about form its impermanent aspect, but do not apprehend it; and with attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects they analytically understand about feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness their impermanent aspect, but do not apprehend it. Subhūti, you should know that this is the skillful means of bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom.

10.28 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom with attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects analytically understand about form its suffering aspect, selflessness aspect, calm aspect, empty aspect, signless aspect, wishless aspect, not occasioning anything aspect, and isolated aspect, but do not apprehend them. Subhūti, you should know that this is the skillful means of bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom.

10.29 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom with attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects analytically understand that form is ‘impermanent,’ but do not apprehend it; and with attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects [F.101.b] they analytically understand that feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are ‘impermanent,’ but do not apprehend it. Subhūti, you should know that this is the skillful means of bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom.

that feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are 'wishless,' but do not apprehend it; they analytically understand that form 'does not occasion anything,' but do not apprehend it; they analytically understand that feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness 'do not occasion anything,' but do not apprehend it; they analytically understand that form is 'isolated,' but do not apprehend it; and they analytically understand that feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are 'isolated,' but do not apprehend it. Subhūti, you should know that this is the skillful means of bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom.

10.31 "Subhūti, when those bodhisattva great beings analytically come to that understanding it occurs to them, 'I will teach all beings the doctrine that "form is impermanent"; and moreover, I will do it by way of not apprehending anything. I will teach all beings the doctrine that "feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are impermanent"; and moreover, I will do it by way of not apprehending anything. I will teach all beings the doctrine that "form is suffering, selfless, calm, empty, signless, wishless, does not occasion anything, and is isolated"; and moreover, I will do it by way of not apprehending anything. I will teach all beings the doctrine that "feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are suffering," as well as "selfless, calm, empty, signless, wishless, do not occasion anything, and are isolated"; and moreover, I will do it by way of not apprehending anything.' [F.102.b]

10.32 "Subhūti, with this, the bodhisattva great beings' perfection of giving, they do not tremble, feel frightened, or become terrified.

10.33 "Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom with objects of attention not connected with śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas pay attention to form being 'impermanent,' and moreover do it by way of not apprehending anything. With objects of attention not connected with śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas they pay attention to feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness being 'impermanent,' and moreover do it by way of not apprehending anything.

10.34 "With objects of attention not connected with śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas they pay attention to form being 'suffering,' and moreover do it by way of not apprehending anything, up to they pay attention to consciousness being 'suffering'; and moreover do it by way of not apprehending anything.

10.35 "They pay attention to form being 'selfless,' form being 'calm,' form being 'empty,' form being 'signless,' form being 'wishless,' form not occasioning anything,' and form being 'isolated,' and moreover do it by way of not apprehending anything. They pay attention to feeling ... perception ...

- volitional factors ... and consciousness being 'selfless,' consciousness being 'calm,' consciousness being 'empty,' consciousness being 'signless,' consciousness being 'wishless,' consciousness 'not occasioning anything,' and consciousness being 'isolated,' and moreover do it by way of not apprehending anything.
- 10.36 "Subhūti, with this, the bodhisattva great beings' untarnished perfection of morality, they do not tremble, feel frightened, or become terrified.
- 10.37 "Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva [F.103.a] great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom analytically understand, tolerate, and accept the impermanent aspect, suffering aspect, selflessness aspect, calm aspect, empty aspect, signless aspect, wishless aspect, not occasioning anything aspect, and isolated aspect of these dharmas, that is the bodhisattva great beings' perfection of patience. With this, they do not tremble, feel frightened, or become terrified.
- 10.38 "Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings with objects of attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects practicing the perfection of wisdom analytically understand that form is 'impermanent,' and moreover do it by way of not apprehending anything. They analytically understand that form is 'suffering,' form is 'selfless,' form is 'calm,' form is 'empty,' form is 'signless,' form is 'wishless,' form 'does not occasion anything,' and form is 'isolated,' and moreover do it by way of not apprehending anything, without giving up objects of attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects, and without forsaking enthusiastic perseverance. With this—the bodhisattva great beings' perfection of perseverance—they do not tremble, feel frightened, or become terrified.
- 10.39 "Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings [F.103.b] practicing the perfection of wisdom do not provide an opportunity for objects of attention connected with śrāvakas or with pratyekabuddhas, or for unwholesome dharmas that are impediments to awakening other than those, that is the bodhisattva great beings' perfection of concentration. Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom like this do not tremble, feel frightened, or become terrified.
- 10.40 "Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom analytically understand thus: Form is not empty because of the emptiness of form; form is itself emptiness, and emptiness is itself form. Feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is not empty because of the emptiness of consciousness; consciousness is itself emptiness, and emptiness is itself consciousness. The eyes are not empty because of the emptiness of the eyes; the eyes are themselves emptiness, and emptiness is itself the eyes. The ears ... the nose ... the tongue ... the body ... and the thinking mind is not empty because of the emptiness of the thinking mind; the thinking mind is itself emptiness, and emptiness is itself the thinking mind. A form is not empty because of the emptiness of a form; a form is itself emptiness, and emptiness is itself a form. A sound ... a smell ... a taste ... a feeling ... and a dharma is not empty because of the emptiness of dharmas; dharmas are themselves emptiness, and emptiness is itself dharmas. Eye consciousness is not empty because of the emptiness of eye consciousness; eye consciousness is itself emptiness, and emptiness is itself eye consciousness. Ear consciousness ... nose consciousness ... tongue consciousness ... body consciousness ... and thinking-mind consciousness is not empty because of the emptiness of thinking-mind consciousness; thinking-mind consciousness is itself emptiness, [F.104.a] and emptiness is itself thinking-mind consciousness. Eye contact is not empty because of the emptiness of eye contact; eye contact is itself emptiness, and emptiness is itself eye contact. Ear contact ... nose contact ... tongue contact ... body contact ... and thinking-mind contact is not empty because of the emptiness of thinking-mind contact; thinking-mind contact is itself emptiness, and emptiness is itself thinking-mind contact. Feeling that arises from the condition of eye contact is not empty because of the emptiness of feeling that arises from the condition of eye contact; feeling that arises from the condition of eye contact is itself emptiness, and emptiness is itself feeling that arises from the condition of eye contact. Feeling that arises from the condition of ear contact ... feeling that arises from the condition of nose contact ... feeling that arises from the condition of tongue contact ... feeling that arises from the condition of body contact ... and feeling that arises from the condition of thinking-mind contact is not empty because of the emptiness of feeling that arises from the condition of thinking-mind contact; feeling that arises from the condition of thinking-mind contact is itself emptiness, and emptiness is itself feeling that arises from the condition of thinking-mind contact. The applications of mindfulness are not empty because of the emptiness of the applications of mindfulness; the applications of mindfulness are themselves emptiness, and emptiness is itself the applications of mindfulness. The right efforts ... the legs of miraculous power ... the faculties ... the powers ... the limbs of awakening ... and the path is not empty because of the emptiness of the path; the path is itself emptiness, and emptiness is itself the path. The powers, the fearlessnesses, up to the distinct attributes of a buddha are not empty because of the emptiness of the distinct attributes of a buddha; the distinct attributes of a buddha are themselves emptiness, and emptiness is itself [F.104.b] the distinct attributes of a buddha. Subhūti, that is the bodhisattva great beings' perfection of wisdom.

- 10.41 “Subhūti, those are the skillful means of bodhisattva great beings who are practicing the perfection of wisdom, and when they are fully endowed with those means they will not tremble, feel frightened, or become terrified when they hear this exposition.”
- 10.42 Subhūti then asked, “Lord, who are those spiritual friends, taken in hand by whom bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom do not tremble, feel frightened, or become terrified when they hear this exposition?”<sup>198</sup>
- 10.43 The Lord replied, “Subhūti, the spiritual friends of bodhisattva great beings are those who teach them the doctrine that ‘form is impermanent,’ and moreover, teach by way of not apprehending anything, and without dedicating those wholesome roots to the śrāvaka level or pratyekabuddha level, or to anything other than to the knowledge of all aspects. Similarly, they are those who teach them the doctrine that ‘feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are impermanent,’ and moreover, teach by way of not apprehending anything, and without dedicating those wholesome roots to the śrāvaka level or pratyekabuddha level, or to anything other than to the knowledge of all aspects. You should know that they, Subhūti, are the spiritual friends of bodhisattva great beings.
- 10.44 “Furthermore, Subhūti, the spiritual friends of bodhisattva great beings are those who teach them ‘form is suffering,’ ‘selfless,’ ‘calm,’ ‘empty,’ ‘signless,’ ‘wishless,’ ‘does not occasion anything,’ and is ‘isolated,’ and moreover, teach by way of not apprehending anything, and without dedicating those wholesome roots to the śrāvaka level or pratyekabuddha level, [F.105.a] or to anything other than to the knowledge of all aspects. And similarly, they are those who teach them ‘feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are suffering,’ ‘selfless,’ ‘calm,’ ‘empty,’ ‘signless,’ ‘wishless,’ ‘do not occasion anything’ and are ‘isolated,’ and moreover, teach by way of not apprehending anything, and without dedicating those wholesome roots to the śrāvaka level or pratyekabuddha level, or to anything other than to the knowledge of all aspects. You should know that they, Subhūti, are the spiritual friends of bodhisattva great beings.
- 10.45 “Furthermore, Subhūti, the spiritual friends of bodhisattva great beings are those who teach them ‘the eyes are impermanent,’ ‘suffering,’ ‘selfless,’ ‘calm,’ ‘empty,’ ‘signless,’ ‘wishless,’ ‘do not occasion anything,’ and are ‘isolated,’ and moreover, teach by way of not apprehending anything, and without dedicating those wholesome roots to the śrāvaka level or pratyekabuddha level, or to anything other than to the knowledge of all aspects. Similarly, they are those who teach them the ‘ears, nose, tongue, body, and thinking mind are impermanent,’ ‘suffering,’ ‘selfless,’ ‘calm,’ ‘empty,’ ‘signless,’ ‘wishless,’ ‘do not occasion anything,’ and are ‘isolated,’ and moreover, teach by way of not apprehending anything, and without dedicating those wholesome roots to the śrāvaka level or pratyekabuddha level, or to anything other than to the knowledge of all aspects. You should know that they, Subhūti, are the spiritual friends of bodhisattva great beings.

10.46 “Furthermore, Subhūti, the spiritual friends of bodhisattva great beings are those [F.105.b] who teach them ‘a form is impermanent,’ ‘suffering,’ ‘selfless,’ ‘calm,’ ‘empty,’ ‘signless,’ ‘wishless,’ ‘does not occasion anything,’ and is ‘isolated,’ and, moreover, teach by way of not apprehending anything, and without dedicating those wholesome roots to the śrāvaka level or pratyekabuddha level, or to anything other than to the knowledge of all aspects. Similarly, they are those who teach them ‘a sound, a smell, a taste, a feeling, and a dharma are impermanent,’ ‘suffering,’ ‘selfless,’ ‘calm,’ ‘empty,’ ‘signless,’ ‘wishless,’ ‘do not occasion anything,’ and are ‘isolated,’ and moreover, teach by way of not apprehending anything, and without dedicating those wholesome roots to the śrāvaka level or pratyekabuddha level, or to anything other than to the knowledge of all aspects. You should know that they, Subhūti, are the spiritual friends of bodhisattva great beings.

10.47 “Furthermore, Subhūti, the spiritual friends of a bodhisattva great being are those who teach them the doctrine that ‘eye consciousness, eye contact, and feeling that arises from the condition of eye contact are impermanent,’ ‘suffering,’ ‘selfless,’ ‘calm,’ ‘empty,’ ‘signless,’ ‘wishless,’ ‘do not occasion anything,’ and are ‘isolated,’ and moreover, teach by way of not apprehending anything, and without dedicating those wholesome roots to the śrāvaka level or pratyekabuddha level, or to anything other than to the knowledge of all aspects. Similarly, they are those who teach them the doctrine that ‘ear consciousness, ear contact and feeling that arises from the condition of ear contact,’ and similarly, ‘nose consciousness ... tongue consciousness ... body consciousness ... and thinking-mind consciousness, [F.106.a] thinking-mind contact, and feeling that arises from the condition of thinking-mind contact are impermanent,’ ‘suffering,’ ‘selfless,’ ‘calm,’ ‘empty,’ ‘signless,’ ‘wishless,’ ‘do not occasion anything,’ and are ‘isolated,’ and moreover, teach by way of not apprehending anything, and without dedicating those wholesome roots to the śrāvaka level or pratyekabuddha level, or to anything other than to the knowledge of all aspects. You should know that they, Subhūti, are the spiritual friends of bodhisattva great beings.

10.48 “Furthermore, Subhūti, the spiritual friends of bodhisattva great beings are those who teach them the doctrine that ‘the applications of mindfulness are impermanent,’ and moreover, teach by way of not apprehending anything, and without dedicating those wholesome roots to the śrāvaka level or pratyekabuddha level, or to anything other than to the knowledge of all aspects. And similarly, they are those who teach them the doctrine that

‘the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and path are impermanent,’ and moreover, teach by way of not apprehending anything, and without dedicating those wholesome roots to the śrāvaka level or pratyekabuddha level, or to anything other than to the knowledge of all aspects. And similarly, they are those who teach them ‘the fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, powers, and distinct attributes of a buddha are impermanent’; who teach them so they will cultivate the knowledge of all aspects; and moreover, teach by way of not apprehending anything, and without dedicating those wholesome roots to the śrāvaka level or pratyekabuddha level, or to anything other than to the knowledge of all aspects. [F.106.b] You should know that they, Subhūti, are the spiritual friends of bodhisattva great beings. If they have taken them in hand they do not tremble, feel frightened, or become terrified when they hear this exposition of the perfection of wisdom.”

10.49 Subhūti then asked, “Lord, how do bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom who are unskilled in means fall into the clutches of bad friends, become shunned by spiritual friends,<sup>199</sup> and tremble, feel frightened, and become terrified when they hear this exposition of the perfection of wisdom?”

10.50 The Lord replied, “Subhūti, here bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom, because of lacking attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects, apprehend a perfection of wisdom while cultivating it, and falsely project it as the perfection of wisdom;<sup>200</sup> similarly, they apprehend a perfection of concentration ... a perfection of perseverance ... a perfection of patience ... a perfection of morality ... and a perfection of giving while cultivating it, and also falsely project it as the perfection of giving.

10.51 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom, because of lacking attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects, pay attention to ‘form empty of an inner subject,’ pay attention to ‘form empty of an outer object,’ pay attention to ‘form empty of subject and object,’ up to pay attention to ‘form empty of the nonexistence of intrinsic nature.’ They also pay attention to ‘feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness empty of an inner subject,’ pay attention to ‘consciousness empty of an outer object,’ pay attention to ‘consciousness empty of subject and object,’ up to pay attention to ‘consciousness empty of the nonexistence of intrinsic nature.’ They also apprehend that inner emptiness, also apprehend [F.107.a] that outer emptiness, also apprehend that inner and outer emptiness, up to they also apprehend that emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, falsely projecting it by way of apprehending something.

- 10.52        “They pay attention to ‘the eye empty of an inner subject,’ pay attention to ‘the eye empty of an outer object,’ pay attention to ‘the eye empty of subject and object,’ up to pay attention to ‘the eye empty of the nonexistence of intrinsic nature.’ They also apprehend those emptinesses, falsely projecting them by way of apprehending something. They pay attention to ‘the ear ... the nose ... the tongue ... the body ... and the thinking mind empty of an inner subject,’ pay attention to ‘the thinking mind empty of an outer object,’ pay attention to ‘the thinking mind empty of subject and object,’ up to pay attention to ‘the thinking mind empty of the nonexistence of intrinsic nature.’ They also apprehend those emptinesses, falsely projecting them by way of apprehending something.”
- 10.53        Connect this in the same way with “a form, a sound, a smell, a taste, a feeling, and a dharma.
- 10.54        “Similarly, they pay attention to ‘eye consciousness’ and ‘ear, nose, tongue, body, and thinking-mind consciousness’; ‘eye contact’ and ‘ear, nose, tongue, body, and thinking-mind contact’; and ‘feeling that arises from the condition of eye contact’ and ‘feeling that arises from the condition of ear, nose, tongue, body, and thinking-mind contact,’ and they pay attention to them ‘empty of an inner subject,’ pay attention to them ‘empty of an outer object,’ pay attention to them ‘empty of subject and object,’ up to pay attention to them ‘empty of the nonexistence of intrinsic nature.’ They also apprehend those emptinesses, falsely projecting them by way of apprehending something.”
- 10.55        Connect this in the same way with “they pay attention to ‘ignorance,’ up to ‘old age and death empty of an inner subject,’ and they pay attention to them ‘empty of an outer object,’ pay attention to them ‘empty of subject and object,’ up to pay attention to them ‘empty of the nonexistence of intrinsic nature.’ They also apprehend those emptinesses, falsely projecting them by way of apprehending something.
- 10.56        “Furthermore, Subhūti, [F.107.b] bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom, because of lacking attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects cultivate the applications of mindfulness, also apprehend those applications of mindfulness, and falsely project them by way of apprehending them. Similarly, they cultivate the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, eightfold noble path, ten powers of a tathāgata, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, and eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, and they also apprehend them, and falsely project them by way of apprehending them.

- 10.57 “Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings thus practicing the perfection of wisdom unskilled in means tremble, feel frightened, and become terrified when they hear this exposition of the perfection of wisdom.”<sup>201</sup>
- 10.58 Subhūti then asked, “Lord, why does a bodhisattva great being fall into the clutches of a bad friend, and, mentored by that bad friend, tremble, feel frightened, and become terrified when they hear this exposition of the perfection of wisdom?”
- 10.59 The Lord replied, “Subhūti, here a bad friend of a bodhisattva great being dissuades them from the perfection of wisdom and dissuades them from the perfection of concentration, perfection of perseverance, perfection of patience, perfection of morality, and perfection of giving, saying, ‘Do not train in these, because they have not been said by the tathāgata, the worthy one, the perfectly complete Buddha; do not listen to these, because they are compositions made up by rhymesters; do not take them up, do not study them, do not bear them in mind, [F.108.a] do not recite them, do not cultivate them, do not properly pay attention to them, and do not teach them to others.’ Subhūti, you should know that this is a bad friend of a bodhisattva great being.
- 10.60 “Furthermore, Subhūti, a bad friend of a bodhisattva great being is someone who, when Māra the wicked one, disguised in the form of a buddha, approaches and dissuades them, saying, ‘Child of a good family, what use is cultivating the perfection of wisdom to you, what use is the perfection of concentration to you, what use is the perfection of perseverance to you, what use is the perfection of patience to you, what use is the perfection of morality to you, and what use is cultivating the perfection of giving to you?’ does not teach them it is the work of Māra and does not explain<sup>202</sup> the faults of Māra. Subhūti, you should know that this is a bad friend of a bodhisattva great being.
- 10.61 “Furthermore, Subhūti,<sup>203</sup> Māra the wicked one thus disguised in the form of a buddha approaches a bodhisattva great being and teaches, throws light on, reveals, illuminates, and makes clear a discourse, melodious narration, prediction, account, birth story, introduction, and tale connected with śrāvakas. A bad friend is someone who does not teach the bodhisattva great being that ‘such works of Māra as those will arise,’ that they are the works of Māra. Subhūti, you should know that this is a bad friend of a bodhisattva great being.
- 10.62 “Furthermore, Subhūti, a bad friend of a bodhisattva great being is someone who, when Māra the wicked one disguised in the form of a buddha approaches a bodhisattva [F.108.b] great being and says, ‘Child of a good family, you do not have the slightest thought of awakening. You are not irreversible from awakening. You are not able to awaken fully to perfect, complete awakening,’ does not explain and teach that such things are the work of Māra. Subhūti, you should know that this is a bad friend of a bodhisattva great being.

10.63 “Furthermore, Subhūti, about a bad friend of a bodhisattva great being—when Māra the wicked one disguised in the form of a buddha approaches a bodhisattva great being and says, ‘Child of a good family, the eyes are empty of self and what belongs to self, and the ears, nose, tongue, body, and thinking mind are empty of self and what belongs to self; a form is empty of self and what belongs to self, and a sound, a smell, a taste, a feeling, and dharmas are empty of self and what belongs to self; eye consciousness is empty of self and what belongs to self, and ear consciousness, nose consciousness, tongue consciousness, body consciousness, and thinking-mind consciousness are empty of self and what belongs to self; eye contact is empty of self and what belongs to self, and ear contact, nose contact, tongue contact, body contact, and thinking-mind contact is empty of self and what belongs to self; feeling that arises from the condition of eye contact is empty of self and what belongs to self, and feeling that arises from the condition of ear contact, feeling that arises from the condition of nose contact, feeling that arises from the condition of tongue contact, feeling that arises from the condition of body contact, and feeling that arises from the condition of thinking-mind contact is empty of self and what belongs to self; and similarly, the perfection of giving, perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and [F.109.a] perfection of wisdom is empty of self and what belongs to self; the applications of mindfulness are empty of self and what belongs to self; the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, path, up to the distinct attributes of a buddha are empty of self and what belongs to self, so what use is fully awakening to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening to you?’—it is someone who does not explain and teach to them that such things as those are the works of Māra. Subhūti, you should know that this is a bad friend of a bodhisattva great being.

10.64 “Furthermore, Subhūti, a bad friend of a bodhisattva great being is someone who, when Māra the wicked one disguised in the form of a buddha approaches a bodhisattva, a great being, and says, ‘Child of a good family, the eastern direction is empty of lord buddhas, bodhisattvas, and śrāvakas; there are no buddhas here, there are no bodhisattvas either, and there are no śrāvakas. Similarly, all the ten directions are empty of lord buddhas, bodhisattvas, and śrāvakas; there are no buddhas here, there are no bodhisattvas either, and there are no śrāvakas,’ does not teach and explain to them that such things as those are the works of Māra. Subhūti, you should know that this is a bad friend of a bodhisattva great being.

- 10.65 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when Māra the wicked one disguised in the form of a śrāvaka approaches a bodhisattva great being and dissuades them from attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects, and advises and instructs them in objects of attention connected with śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas—someone who does not teach and explain to them that such things as those are works of Māra, Subhūti, you should know is a bad friend of a bodhisattva great being.
- 10.66 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when Māra the wicked one disguised in the form of a preceptor or [F.109.b] teacher of proper conduct approaches a bodhisattva great being and dissuades them from the career of a bodhisattva, dissuades them from attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects, and enjoins on them the applications of mindfulness, up to the eightfold noble path, enjoins on them the dharmas of emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness, and says to them, ‘Child of a good family, you should meditate on these dharmas and directly realize them as a śrāvaka. What use is unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening to you?’—someone who does not teach and explain to them that such things as those are works of Māra, Subhūti, you should know is a bad friend of a bodhisattva great being.
- 10.67 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when Māra the wicked one disguised in the form of a mother or father approaches a bodhisattva great being and says, ‘Child of a good family, what use is unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening to you, for the sake of which you pass immeasurable, incalculable eons in saṃsāra experiencing an infinity of your arms, legs, and heads being cut off? Become absorbed in the yoga that effects direct realization of the result of stream enterer, become absorbed in the yoga that effects direct realization of the result of a worthy one’—someone who does not teach and explain to them that such things as those are works of Māra, Subhūti, you should know is a bad friend of a bodhisattva great being.
- 10.68 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when Māra the wicked one disguised in the form of a monk approaches a bodhisattva great being and teaches them ‘the eyes are impermanent’ by way of apprehending something, and similarly ‘the eyes are suffering,’ ‘selfless,’ ‘calm,’ ‘empty,’ ‘signless,’ ‘wishless,’ ‘do not occasion anything,’ and are ‘isolated’; teaches them ‘the ears, nose, tongue, body, and thinking-mind are impermanent,’ ‘suffering,’ ‘selfless,’ ‘calm,’ ‘empty,’ ‘signless,’ ‘wishless,’ [F.110.a] ‘do not occasion anything,’ and are ‘isolated’ by way of apprehending something; and similarly, teaches them ‘the applications of mindfulness are impermanent,’ ‘suffering,’ ‘selfless,’ ‘calm,’ ‘empty,’ ‘signless,’ ‘wishless,’ ‘do not occasion anything,’ and are ‘isolated,’ and ‘the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and path are impermanent,’ ‘selfless,’ ‘calm,’ ‘empty,’ 'signless,' 'wishless,' 'do not occasion anything,' and are 'isolated' by way of apprehending something, up to teaches them 'the distinct attributes of a buddha are impermanent,' 'suffering,' 'selfless,' 'calm,' 'empty,' 'signless,' 'wishless,' 'do not occasion anything,' and are not enacted,' 'isolated' by way of apprehending something—someone who does not teach and explain to them that such things as those are works of Māra, Subhūti, they should know is a bad friend of a bodhisattva great being, and knowing that, they should shun them."

CHAPTER 11: EMBARRASSMENT

- 11.1 Then venerable Subhūti said to the Lord, “Lord, you say ‘bodhisattva’ again and again. What is its basis in reality?”<sup>204</sup>
- 11.2 The Lord [F.110.b] replied to venerable Subhūti, “Subhūti, the basis in reality for bodhisattva is an absence of a basis in reality. And why? Subhūti, it is because bodhi and sattva are not produced. Awakening and a being do not have an arising or an existence. They cannot be apprehended. Subhūti, awakening has no basis in reality and a being has no basis in reality, therefore a bodhisattva’s basis in reality is an absence of a basis in reality.
- 11.3 “To illustrate, Subhūti, the track<sup>205</sup> of a bird in space does not exist and cannot be apprehended; similarly, the basis in reality for a bodhisattva does not exist and cannot be apprehended. Subhūti, in a dream a basis does not exist and cannot be apprehended; similarly, the basis in reality for a bodhisattva also does not exist and cannot be apprehended. In a magical illusion a basis does not exist and cannot be apprehended; similarly, in a mirage, a reflection of the moon in water, an echo, an apparition, a reflection in a mirror, and a tathāgata’s magical creation a basis does not exist and cannot be apprehended. Similarly, Subhūti, a basis in reality for a bodhisattva also does not exist and cannot be apprehended.
- 11.4 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, in suchness a basis does not exist and cannot be apprehended; similarly, the basis in reality for a bodhisattva also does not exist and cannot be apprehended. Subhūti, in unmistaken suchness a basis does not exist and cannot be apprehended, and in unaltered suchness, the true nature of dharmas, the dharma-constituent, the establishment of dharmas, the certification of dharmas, and the very limit of reality a basis does not exist and cannot be apprehended.
- 11.5 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, in an illusory person a basis of form, feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness does not exist and cannot be apprehended, and similarly, Subhūti, a basis in reality for a bodhisattva when a bodhisattva great being is practicing the perfection of wisdom does not exist and cannot be apprehended.

11.6 “To illustrate further, [F.111.a] Subhūti, in an illusory person a basis of the eyes does not exist and cannot be apprehended; a basis of the ears, nose, tongue, body, and thinking mind does not exist and cannot be apprehended, and a basis of a form, a sound, a smell, a taste, a feeling, and a dharma does not exist and cannot be apprehended. Similarly, Subhūti, a basis in reality for a bodhisattva when a bodhisattva great being is practicing the perfection of wisdom does not exist and cannot be apprehended.

11.7 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, a basis in the eye consciousness of an illusory person does not exist and cannot be apprehended, and a basis in the ear consciousness, nose consciousness, tongue consciousness, body consciousness, and thinking-mind consciousness of an illusory person does not exist and cannot be apprehended. Similarly, Subhūti, a basis in reality for a bodhisattva when a bodhisattva great being is practicing the perfection of wisdom does not exist and cannot be apprehended.

11.8 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, a basis in reality for an illusory person practicing inner emptiness does not exist and cannot be apprehended, and similarly, Subhūti, a basis in reality for a bodhisattva when a bodhisattva great being is practicing the perfection of wisdom does not exist and cannot be apprehended.

11.9 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, a basis in reality for an illusory person practicing up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature does not exist and cannot be apprehended, and similarly, Subhūti, a basis in reality for a bodhisattva when a bodhisattva great being is practicing the perfection of wisdom does not exist and cannot be apprehended.

11.10 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, a basis in reality for an illusory person practicing the applications of mindfulness does not exist and cannot be apprehended. Subhūti, a basis in reality for an illusory person practicing up to the eightfold noble path, and up to the ten powers of a tathāgata, the four fearlessnesses, and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha does not exist and cannot be apprehended, and similarly, Subhūti, a basis in reality for a bodhisattva when a bodhisattva great being is practicing the perfection of wisdom [F.111.b] does not exist and cannot be apprehended.

11.11 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, a basis of the form of a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha does not exist and cannot be apprehended. Similarly, Subhūti, a basis in reality for a bodhisattva when a bodhisattva great being is practicing the perfection of wisdom does not exist and cannot be apprehended.

- 11.12 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, in a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha a basis of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness does not exist and cannot be apprehended. Similarly, Subhūti, a basis in reality for a bodhisattva when a bodhisattva great being is practicing the perfection of wisdom does not exist and cannot be apprehended.
- 11.13 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, in a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha a basis of the eyes does not exist; a basis of the ears, nose, tongue, body, and thinking mind does not exist; and similarly, Subhūti, a basis in reality of a bodhisattva when a bodhisattva great being is practicing the perfection of wisdom does not exist.
- 11.14 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, in a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha a basis of inner emptiness does not exist, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature does not exist, and similarly, Subhūti, a basis in reality for a bodhisattva when a bodhisattva great being is practicing the perfection of wisdom does not exist.
- 11.15 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, in a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha a basis of the applications of mindfulness does not exist, up to a basis of the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha does not exist, and similarly, Subhūti, a basis in reality for a bodhisattva when a bodhisattva great being is practicing the perfection of wisdom does not exist.
- 11.16 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, in the un compounded element a basis of the compounded element does not exist, and similarly in the compounded element [F.112.a] a basis of the un compounded element also does not exist. Similarly, Subhūti, a basis in reality for a bodhisattva when a bodhisattva great being is practicing the perfection of wisdom does not exist.
- 11.17 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, in the absence of production a basis does not exist, and similarly, Subhūti, a basis in reality for a bodhisattva when a bodhisattva great being is practicing the perfection of wisdom does not exist. Subhūti, in the absence of stopping, the absence of occasioning anything, the absence of appearing, the absence of being apprehended, the absence of defilement and the absence of purification a basis does not exist, and similarly, Subhūti, a basis in reality for a bodhisattva when a bodhisattva great being is practicing the perfection of wisdom does not exist.”
- 11.18 “Lord, in the absence of the production of what does a basis not exist, up to in the absence of the defilement, and the absence of the purification of what does a basis not exist?” asked Subhūti.
- 11.19 The Lord replied, “Subhūti, in the absence of production a basis of form does not exist; in the absence of production a basis of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness does not exist; up to Subhūti, in the absence of defilement and the absence of purification, a basis of form does not exist; and in the absence of defilement and the absence of purification, a basis of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness does not exist. Similarly, in the absence of production a basis of the constituents and sense fields does not exist, up to in the absence of defilement and the absence of purification, a basis of the constituents and sense fields does not exist. In the absence of production a basis of the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, up to the powers, fearlessnesses and eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha does not exist; up to in the absence of defilement and the absence of purification, [F.112.b] a basis of the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha does not exist. Similarly, Subhūti, a basis in reality for a bodhisattva when a bodhisattva great being is practicing the perfection of wisdom does not exist.

11.20 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, in form a basis in reality for the absence of production, the absence of stopping, the absence of occasioning anything, the absence of appearing, the absence of being apprehended, the absence of defilement and the absence of purification does not exist, and similarly, Subhūti, a basis in reality for a bodhisattva when a bodhisattva great being is practicing the perfection of wisdom does not exist.

11.21 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, in feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness a basis in reality for the absence of production, the absence of stopping, up to the absence of defilement and the absence of purification does not exist, and similarly, Subhūti, a basis in reality for a bodhisattva when a bodhisattva great being is practicing the perfection of wisdom does not exist.

11.22 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, in the state of the absolute purity of form a basis for a causal sign does not exist, and similarly, Subhūti, a basis in reality for a bodhisattva when a bodhisattva great being is practicing the perfection of wisdom does not exist. As a further instance, Subhūti, in the state of the absolute purity of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness a basis for a causal sign does not exist, and similarly, Subhūti, a basis in reality for a bodhisattva when a bodhisattva great being is practicing the perfection of wisdom does not exist. Similarly, in the state of the absolute purity of the constituents, sense fields, and dependent origination a basis for a causal sign does not exist, and similarly, Subhūti, a basis in reality for a bodhisattva when a bodhisattva great being is practicing the perfection of wisdom does not exist.

11.23 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, in the state of the absolute purity of the applications of mindfulness a basis for a causal sign does not exist, and similarly, Subhūti, [F.113.a] a basis in reality for a bodhisattva when a bodhisattva great being is practicing the perfection of wisdom does not exist.

- 11.24 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, in the state of the absolute purity of the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and path, up to the ten powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, and eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha a basis for a causal sign does not exist, and similarly, Subhūti, a basis in reality for a bodhisattva when a bodhisattva great being is practicing the perfection of wisdom does not exist.
- 11.25 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, because of the nonexistence of self, in the state of the absolute purity of the self a basis does not exist, up to because of the nonexistence of one who knows and one who sees, in the state of the absolute purity of one who knows and one who sees a basis does not exist. Similarly, Subhūti, a basis in reality for a bodhisattva when a bodhisattva great being is practicing the perfection of wisdom does not exist.
- 11.26 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, when the disk of the sun rises, a basis for darkness does not exist, and similarly, Subhūti, a basis in reality for a bodhisattva when a bodhisattva great being is practicing the perfection of wisdom does not exist.
- 11.27 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, in the eon conflagration a basis for compounded phenomena does not exist, and similarly, Subhūti, a basis in reality for a bodhisattva when a bodhisattva great being is practicing the perfection of wisdom does not exist.
- 11.28 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, in the morality of a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha a basis for immorality does not exist, and similarly, Subhūti, a basis in reality for a bodhisattva when a bodhisattva great being is practicing the perfection of wisdom does not exist.
- 11.29 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, in the meditative stabilization of a tathāgata a basis for distraction does not exist, in the wisdom of a tathāgata [F.113.b] a basis for intellectual confusion does not exist, in the liberation of a tathāgata a basis for not being liberated does not exist, and in the knowledge and seeing of liberation of a tathāgata nonknowledge and nonseeing of liberation does not exist. Similarly, Subhūti, a basis in reality for a bodhisattva when a bodhisattva great being is practicing the perfection of wisdom does not exist.
- 11.30 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, in the radiance of the sun and moon a basis for darkness does not exist, and similarly, Subhūti, a basis in reality for a bodhisattva when a bodhisattva great being is practicing the perfection of wisdom does not exist.
- 11.31 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, a basis for the light of the planets, the stars, jewels, and lightning does not exist, and similarly, Subhūti, a basis in reality for a bodhisattva when a bodhisattva great being is practicing the perfection of wisdom does not exist.

- 11.32 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, a basis for the light of the Cāturmahārājika and the Trāyastriṃśa gods, Yāma gods, Tuṣita gods, Nirmānarati gods, Paranirmitavaśavartin gods, Brahmakāyika, up to the Akaniṣṭha gods does not exist, up to a basis for the light of a tathāgata does not exist, and similarly, Subhūti, a basis in reality for a bodhisattva when a bodhisattva great being is practicing the perfection of wisdom does not exist.
- 11.33 “And why? Because, Subhūti, all those phenomena—that which is the awakening, that which is the bodhisattva, that which is the basis in reality of a bodhisattva—are not conjoined, are not disjoined, are formless, cannot be pointed out, do not obstruct, and have only one mark—that is, no mark. Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should train in the nonexistence<sup>206</sup> of all phenomena. Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should know all dharmas.” [F.114.a]
- 11.34 Subhūti then asked, “Lord, what are all phenomena? How do bodhisattva great beings train in the nonexistence of all phenomena? How do bodhisattva great beings know all phenomena?”
- 11.35 The Lord replied, “Subhūti, all phenomena are said to be wholesome, unwholesome, objects of moral inquiry and not objects of moral inquiry, ordinary and extraordinary, with outflows and without outflows, compounded and uncompounded, basic immorality and not basic immorality, and shared in common and not shared in common. Subhūti, these are said to be all phenomena. Bodhisattva great beings should train in their nonexistence. All those are the phenomena bodhisattva great beings should know.” [B9]
- 11.36 “Lord, what are ordinary wholesome phenomena?” asked Subhūti.
The Lord replied, “Subhūti, ordinary wholesome phenomena are said to be honoring mothers, honoring fathers, honoring those following a secluded religious life, and honoring brahmins; attending to the needs of family elders; the basis of meritorious action arisen from giving; the basis of meritorious action arisen from morality and arisen from meditation, that which accompanies service, and skillful means;<sup>207</sup> the ten wholesome actions; the ordinary perception of a bloated corpse, the cleaned-out-by-worms perception, the perception of it as putrid, the bloodied perception, the black-and-blue perception, the savaged perception, the torn-asunder perception, the bones perception, [F.114.b] and the burnt-bones perception; the four ordinary concentrations, four immeasurables, and four formless absorptions; and the ordinary mindfulness of the Buddha, mindfulness of the Dharma, mindfulness of the Saṅgha, mindfulness of morality, mindfulness of giving away, mindfulness of the gods, mindfulness of breathing in and out, mindfulness of death, mindfulness of what is included in the body, and mindfulness of disgust. Those, Subhūti, are said to be ordinary wholesome phenomena.”

11.37 “Lord, what are ordinary unwholesome phenomena?” asked Subhūti.

The Lord replied, “Subhūti, ordinary unwholesome phenomena are killing, stealing, illicit sex because of lust, lying, backbiting,<sup>208</sup> insulting, babbling nonsense, coveting, malice, wrong view, anger, bearing a grudge, dissembling, nursing pent-up anger, violence, jealousy, envy, and pride. Those, Subhūti, are said to be ordinary unwholesome phenomena.”

11.38 “Lord, what are ordinary neutral phenomena?” asked Subhūti.

The Lord replied, “Subhūti, physical karma is neutral, verbal karma is neutral, and thinking-mind karma is neutral.<sup>209</sup> The four great elements are neutral, the five faculties are neutral, the six sense fields are neutral, the four formless absorptions are neutral, the aggregates, constituents, and sense fields are neutral, and maturation is neutral. Those, Subhūti, are said to be ordinary neutral phenomena.”

11.39 “Lord, what are ordinary phenomena?” asked Subhūti.

The Lord replied, [F.115.a] “Subhūti, ordinary phenomena are said to be the five aggregates, twelve sense fields, eighteen constituents, ten wholesome actions, four concentrations, four immeasurables, four formless absorptions, five clairvoyances, and as many ordinary dharmas not included with extraordinary dharmas as there are. Those are said to be ordinary phenomena.”

11.40 “Lord, what are said to be extraordinary phenomena?” asked Subhūti.

The Lord replied, “Subhūti, extraordinary phenomena are said to be the four applications of mindfulness, the four right efforts, the four legs of miraculous power, the five faculties, the five powers, the seven limbs of awakening, and the eightfold noble path; the emptiness gateway to liberation, the signless gateway to liberation, and the wishless gateway to liberation; the faculty of coming to understand what has not yet been understood, the faculty of understanding, and the faculty of having understood; meditative stabilization with applied and sustained thought, meditative stabilization without applied thought but with sustained thought, and meditative stabilization without either applied or sustained thought; and knowledge, freedom, mindfulness, introspection, correct attention, and the eight deliverances.

11.41 “What are the eight deliverances? With form one sees form. This is the first deliverance. With the perception of no form inside one sees form outside. This is the second deliverance. One believes it is pleasant. This is the third deliverance.<sup>210</sup> Totally transcending perceptions of form, setting to rest perceptions of obstruction, not paying attention to perceptions of difference, in endless space one perfectly accomplishes and dwells in the station of endless space. This is [F.115.b] the fourth deliverance. Totally transcending the station of endless space, in endless consciousness one perfectly accomplishes and dwells in the station of endless consciousness. This is the fifth deliverance. Totally transcending the station of endless consciousness, in nothing-at-all one perfectly accomplishes and dwells in the station of nothing-at-all. This is the sixth deliverance. Totally transcending the station of nothing-at-all, in neither perception nor nonperception one perfectly accomplishes and dwells in the station of neither perception nor nonperception. This is the seventh deliverance. Totally transcending the station of neither perception nor nonperception one perfectly accomplishes and dwells in the cessation of perception and feeling. This is the eighth deliverance.

11.42      “Then there are the nine serial absorptions.

“What are the nine? Detached from sense objects, and detached from wrong unwholesome dharmas, one perfectly accomplishes and dwells in the first concentration that has applied thought and sustained thought, and enjoyment and pleasure born of detachment. Relieved of applied thought and sustained thought, with an inner serene confidence and a mind that has become a single continuum one perfectly accomplishes and dwells in the second concentration that has enjoyment and pleasure born of a meditative stabilization without applied thought and without sustained thought. Because one is free from attachment to enjoyment one abides in equanimity, and with equanimity and recollection and introspection one experiences pleasure with the body, and one perfectly accomplishes and dwells in the third concentration without enjoyment, about which the noble beings say, ‘They have equanimity and recollection and dwell in pleasure.’ Because one has forsaken pleasure, has earlier forsaken suffering, has set to rest mental happiness and mental unhappiness and has equanimity that is neither pleasure nor suffering, and has recollection, one perfectly accomplishes and dwells in the fourth concentration. Totally transcending of form, [F.116.a] setting to rest perceptions of obstruction, not paying attention to perceptions of difference, in endless space one perfectly accomplishes and dwells in the station of endless space. Totally transcending the station of endless space, in endless consciousness one perfectly accomplishes and dwells in the station of endless consciousness. Totally transcending the station of endless consciousness, in nothing-at-all one perfectly accomplishes and dwells in the station of nothing-at-all. Totally transcending the station of nothing-at-all, in neither perception nor nonperception one perfectly accomplishes and dwells in the station of neither perception nor nonperception. Totally

- transcending the station of neither perception nor nonperception one perfectly accomplishes and dwells in the cessation of perception and feeling. Those are the nine serial absorptions.
- 11.43 “And from inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, the ten tathāgata powers, the four fearlessnesses, the four detailed and thorough knowledges, and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha—these are said to be extraordinary phenomena.
- 11.44 “What are phenomena with outflows? They are the five aggregates, twelve sense fields, eighteen constituents, four concentrations, four immeasurables, and four formless absorptions. Those are said to be phenomena with outflows.
- 11.45 “What are phenomena without outflows? They are the four applications of mindfulness, four right efforts, four legs of miraculous power, five faculties, five powers, seven limbs of awakening, and eightfold noble path; the ten powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges; [F.116.b] up to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha. Those are said to be phenomena without outflows.
- 11.46 “What are compounded phenomena? The desire realm, form realm, and formless realm, and whatever other phenomena included with the compounded that are not those: the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, up to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha. Those are said to be compounded phenomena.
- 11.47 “What are uncompounded phenomena? Phenomena that do not arise, that do not pass away, and where otherness does not appear;<sup>211</sup> the extinction of greed, extinction of hatred, and extinction of confusion; suchness, unmistakable suchness, and unaltered suchness; the true nature of dharmas, the dharma-constituent, the establishment of dharmas, the certification of dharmas, and the very limit of reality—those are said to be uncompounded phenomena.
- 11.48 “What are phenomena shared in common? They are the four concentrations, four immeasurables, four formless absorptions, and five clairvoyances. Those are said to be phenomena shared in common.
- 11.49 “What are phenomena not shared in common? They are the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, ten powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, three gateways to liberation, up to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha. Those are said to be phenomena not shared in common.
- 11.50 “Bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom should train in nonattachment to all phenomena that are empty of their own marks, and in their nonexistence, by not constructing any phenomena and not entertaining any ideas about them.<sup>212</sup> They should know all phenomena in a nondual way.”

- 11.51 Then venerable Subhūti said to the Lord, [F.117.a] “Lord, you say ‘bodhisattva great beings.’ Why do you say ‘bodhisattva great beings?’”
- 11.52 The Lord replied, “Subhūti, they will become the foremost<sup>213</sup> of a great mass of beings, a great collection<sup>214</sup> of groups of beings; therefore, they are said to be ‘bodhisattva great beings.’ ”
- 11.53 “Lord, who are the great mass of beings, the collection of groups of beings of whom bodhisattva great beings will become foremost?” asked Subhūti.
- 11.54 The Lord replied, “Subhūti, those said to be the great assembly of beings are those at the Gotra level, those at the Aṣṭamaka level, stream enterers, once-returners, non-returners, worthy ones, pratyekabuddhas, bodhisattvas with the first production of the thought, up to bodhisattva great beings standing on the irreversible level. Subhūti, those are said to be the great mass of beings, the great collection of groups of beings. Bodhisattva great beings will become the foremost of them.
- 11.55 “There bodhisattva great beings, having produced the vajra-like thought, should become the foremost of a great mass of beings, of a great collection of groups of beings.”
- 11.56 “Lord, what is the production of the vajra-like thought?” asked Subhūti.
- The Lord replied, “Subhūti, here bodhisattva great beings produce such thoughts as these: ‘I must buckle on armor for the sake of all beings in infinite saṃsāra’; ‘I must give away all my personal possessions’; ‘I must adopt the same attitude of mind toward all beings’; ‘I must lead all beings to nirvāṇa by means of the three vehicles’; ‘I must understand that [F.117.b] even having led all beings to nirvāṇa, still there are no beings at all in nirvāṇa,<sup>215</sup> and all phenomena are not produced and do not stop’; ‘I must practice the six perfections with the unmixed<sup>216</sup> thought of the knowledge of all aspects’; ‘I must train in the all-pervasive, thoroughly established realization of dharmas’; and ‘I must train in order to awaken to finding and producing within myself all dharmas in accord with one principle, up to in order to awaken to finding and producing within myself infinite dharmas.’ They produce such thoughts, and that, Subhūti, is the bodhisattva great beings’ production of the vajra-like thought, abiding in which they become the foremost of a great mass of beings, of a great collection of groups of beings, and they do so, furthermore, by way of not apprehending anything.
- 11.57 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings produce such a thought as this: ‘Whatever feelings of suffering beings in hell, in the animal world, and in the world of Yama experience, I must experience those feelings of suffering for them.’ They produce that thought.
- 11.58 “There bodhisattva great beings should produce a higher thought like this: ‘Until those beings are in complete nirvāṇa, in the element of nirvāṇa without any aggregates left behind, I must, even for the sake of one being,<sup>217</sup> experience the suffering of beings in hells for many hundreds of thousands of one hundred million billion eons, and through such means, until those beings are in complete nirvāṇa, in the element of nirvāṇa without any aggregates left behind, I must, for the sake of all beings, experience the suffering of beings in hells. Afterward, having set down wholesome roots, [F.118.a] having accumulated equipment for hundreds of thousands of one hundred million billion eons, I must fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening for my own sake.’ They should produce that thought. That, Subhūti, is the bodhisattva great beings’ production of the vajra-like thought, abiding in which they become the foremost of a great mass of beings, of a great collection of groups of beings.

11.59 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should constantly and always cultivate a prodigious thought, the thought on account of which they become the foremost of all beings. There the bodhisattva great beings’ prodigious thought is that from their first production of that thought onward they will not have a greedy thought, will not have a hateful thought, will not have a confused thought, will not have a violent thought, and will not have a śrāvaka or pratyekabuddha thought. That, Subhūti, is the bodhisattva great beings’ prodigious thought on account of which they become the foremost of all beings, but without falsely projecting anything.

11.60 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should have an unshakable thought. There the bodhisattva great beings’ unshakable thought is that their attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects does not falsely project anything. That, Subhūti, is the bodhisattva great beings’ unshakable thought.

11.61 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should think to be of benefit and bring happiness to all beings. There, the bodhisattva great beings’ thought to be of benefit and bring happiness is that they protect all beings and do not give up on all beings, but without falsely projecting anything. That, Subhūti, is the bodhisattva great beings’ thought to be of benefit [F.118.b] and bring happiness.

11.62 “Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom like that become the foremost of all beings, and they do so, furthermore, by way of not apprehending anything.

11.63 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings must constantly and always want Dharma, enjoy Dharma, delight in Dharma, and be preoccupied with being delighted by Dharma. In regard to that, what is Dharma? It is this: the unbroken unity of all dharmas.

11.64 “What is it to want Dharma? It is to hope for and want Dharma. That is called to want Dharma.

- 11.65 “What is it to enjoy Dharma? It is to enjoy and take pleasure in Dharma. That is called to enjoy Dharma.
- 11.66 “What is it to delight in Dharma? It is to behold good qualities and benefits in Dharma. That is called to delight in Dharma.
- 11.67 “What is it to be preoccupied with being delighted<sup>218</sup> by Dharma? It is to meditate on and greatly increase just that Dharma. That is called to be preoccupied with being delighted by Dharma.
- 11.68 “Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom like that become the foremost of a great mass of beings, of a great collection of groups of beings and they do so, furthermore, by way of not apprehending anything.
- 11.69 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom should stand in inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, and become the foremost of a great mass of beings, of a great collection of groups of beings, and do so, furthermore, by way of not apprehending anything.
- 11.70 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom should stand in the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, and in the ten powers, the four fearlessnesses, the four detailed and thorough knowledges, up to [F.119.a] the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, and become the foremost of a great mass of beings, of a great collection of groups of beings, and do so, furthermore, by way of not apprehending anything.
- 11.71 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom should abide in the vajropama meditative stabilization, up to<sup>219</sup> abide in the ākāśaṃgavimuktinirupalepa meditative stabilization and become the foremost of a great mass of beings, of a great collection of groups of beings, and do so, furthermore, by way of not apprehending anything.
- 11.72 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom, having stood in those dharmas, become the foremost of a great mass of beings, of a great collection of groups of beings. Hence, bodhisattvas are said to be great beings.
- 11.73 This was the eleventh chapter, “Embarrassment,”<sup>220</sup> of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.”

12. CHAPTER 12: ELIMINATION OF VIEWS

- 12.1 Then venerable Śāriputra said to the Lord, “Lord, I too am confident in my readiness to speak the sense in which bodhisattvas are said to be ‘great beings.’ ”
- 12.2 “Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “be confident in your readiness to explain the sense in which bodhisattvas are said to be great beings.”
- 12.3 Śāriputra then explained, “Lord, they reveal the Dharma to beings to eliminate the view of a self and, similarly, the view of a being, a living being, a person, one who lives, an individual, one born of Manu, a child of Manu, one who does, one who makes someone else do, a motivator, one who motivates, one who feels, one who makes someone else feel, one who knows, and one who sees. And by way of not apprehending anything they reveal the Dharma to beings to eliminate the view of annihilation, the view of permanence, the view of existence, and the view [F.119.b] of nonexistence; the view of aggregates, the view of constituents, the view of sense fields, the view of isolation, and the view of dependent origination; and the view of the perfections, the view of the dharmas on the side of awakening, the view of the powers and fearlessnesses, the view of the distinct attributes of a buddha, the view of bringing beings to maturity, the view of the purification of a buddhafiield, the view of awakening, the view of the Buddha, the view of the Dharma, the view of the Saṅgha, the view of turning the wheel of the Dharma, and the view of complete nirvāṇa. It is in this sense bodhisattvas are said to be great beings.”
- 12.4 Then venerable Subhūti asked venerable Śāriputra, “What causes bodhisattva great beings to have a view about form, and to have a view about feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness, up to to have a view about the distinct attributes of a buddha?”
- 12.5 “Venerable Subhūti,” replied Śāriputra, “bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom without skill in means apprehend form, and by way of apprehending it produce a view about it. Similarly, they apprehend feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness, and by way of apprehending it produce a view about it, up to they apprehend the distinct attributes of a buddha, and by way of apprehending them produce a view about them. That, venerable Subhūti, causes bodhisattva great beings to have a view about form, up to have a view about the distinct attributes of a buddha, whereas bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom with skillful means reveal the Dharma by way of not apprehending anything, [F.120.a] to eliminate those views.”

12.6 Then venerable Subhūti said to the Lord, “Lord, I too am confident in my readiness to speak the sense in which bodhisattvas are said to be great beings.”

“Subhūti, be confident in your readiness to speak!” replied the Lord.

12.7 Subhūti then explained, “Lord, because they are unattached even to that unequaled thought of awakening without outflows, a thought equal to the unequaled, a thought not shared in common with any śrāvakas or pratyekabuddhas, in that sense bodhisattvas are said to be great beings. And why? Because that thought of all-knowing is a thought that is without outflows and does not belong in the three realms<sup>221</sup>—and even to that thought of all-knowing that is without outflows and does not belong they are unattached. That is why they are counted as great beings.”<sup>222</sup>

12.8 Then venerable Śāriputra asked venerable Subhūti, “Venerable Subhūti, what is the thought of bodhisattva great beings that is equal to the unequaled, a thought not shared in common with any śrāvakas or pratyekabuddhas?”

12.9 “Venerable Śāriputra,” replied Subhūti, “here after the production of the first thought of awakening they do not see either the production or stopping of any dharma at all—they do not see its decrease, increase, coming, going, defilement, or purification. Venerable Śāriputra, that thought in which there is no production, no stopping, no decrease, no increase, no coming, no going, no defilement, and no purification—in [F.120.b] which there is no śrāvaka thought, no pratyekabuddha thought, no bodhisattva thought, and no perfectly complete buddha thought—that, Venerable Śāriputra, is the thought of bodhisattva great beings that is equal to the unequaled, a thought not shared in common with any śrāvakas or pratyekabuddhas.”

12.10 Śāriputra then said, “Venerable Subhūti, you said, ‘Even to that thought of all-knowing that is without outflows and does not belong they are unattached.’ Venerable Subhūti, would not form, then, also be unattached? Would not feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness also be unattached?”

12.11 “Venerable Śāriputra,” replied Subhūti, “form is also unattached. Feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are also unattached. The thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, the powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, up to the distinct attributes of a buddha are also unattached.”

12.12 Śāriputra then said, “Venerable Subhūti, you said, ‘That thought of all-knowing is without outflows and does not belong in the three realms.’ Venerable Subhūti, would not the thought of ordinary foolish beings, then, because it is empty of a basic nature, also be without outflows and not belong? Would not the śrāvakas’ and pratyekabuddhas’ thought, and the thought of lord buddhas, then, because they are empty of a basic nature, also be without outflows and not belong?”

“Exactly so, Venerable Śāriputra,” replied Subhūti.

12.13 Śāriputra then asked, “Venerable Subhūti, would not form, because it is empty of a basic nature, also be without outflows and not belong? [F.121.a] Would not feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness, because they are empty of a basic nature, also be without outflows and not belong?”

“Exactly so, Venerable Śāriputra,” replied Subhūti.

12.14 Śāriputra then asked, “Venerable Subhūti, would not the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, the ten powers, the four fearlessnesses, the four detailed and thorough knowledges, up to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, because they are empty of a basic nature, also be without outflows and not belong?”

12.15 “Exactly so, Venerable Śāriputra,” replied Subhūti. “The thought of ordinary foolish beings, because it is empty of a basic nature, is without outflows and does not belong. All śrāvaka and pratyekabuddha thought, and the thought of lord buddhas, because it is empty of a basic nature, is also without outflows and does not belong. Form, because it is empty of a basic nature, also is without outflows and does not belong, up to consciousness, because it is empty of a basic nature, is also without outflows and does not belong. The thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, the ten powers, the four fearlessnesses, the four detailed and thorough knowledges, up to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, because they are empty of a basic nature, are also without outflows and do not belong.”

12.16 Śāriputra then said, “Venerable Subhūti, you said ‘unattached even to that thought because it is no thought.’<sup>223</sup> Venerable Subhūti, would not no-form, then, also be unattached to form?<sup>224</sup> Would not no-feeling also be unattached to feeling? Would not no-perception also be unattached to perception? Would not no-volitional factors also be unattached to volitional factors? And would not no-consciousness [F.121.b] also be unattached to consciousness?”

“Exactly so, Venerable Śāriputra,” replied Subhūti.

- 12.17 Śāriputra then asked, “Venerable Subhūti, would not no-thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, then, also be unattached to the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, up to would not no-distinct attributes of a buddha also be unattached to the distinct attributes of a buddha?”
- 12.18 “Exactly so, Venerable Śāriputra,” replied Subhūti. “It is exactly as you say. No-form is unattached to form. No-feeling ... no-perception ... no-volitional factors ... and no-consciousness is also unattached to consciousness. No-constituents ... no-sense fields ... no-dependent originations ... no-dharmas on the side of awakening ... no-powers ... no-fearlessnesses ... no-detailed and thorough knowledges ... up to and no-distinct attributes of a buddha are unattached to the distinct attributes of a buddha.
- 12.19 “Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom like that do not apprehend all dharmas, whereby they do not falsely project and do not settle down on reality, even with that thought of awakening equal to the unequalled, a thought not shared in common with any śrāvakas or pratyekabuddhas. Therefore, bodhisattvas are said to be great beings.
- 12.20 This was the twelfth chapter, “Elimination of Views,” of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.”

CHAPTER 13: THE SIX PERFECTIONS

13.1 Then venerable Pūrṇa Maitrāyaṇīputra said to the Lord, “Lord, I too am confident in my readiness to speak the sense in which bodhisattvas are said to be great beings.”

“Pūrṇa, be confident in your readiness to speak,” replied the Lord.

13.2 Pūrṇa then said, “Lord, those beings are armed with great armor, [F.122.a] those beings have set out in a Great Vehicle, and those beings have mounted on a Great Vehicle. It is in this sense, Lord, that bodhisattvas are said to be great beings.”

13.3 Then venerable Śāriputra asked venerable Pūrṇa Maitrāyaṇīputra, “Venerable Pūrṇa, to what extent<sup>225</sup> is it said that bodhisattva great beings are ‘armed with great armor’?”

13.4 “Venerable Śāriputra,” replied Pūrṇa, “here bodhisattva great beings do not practice for awakening for a partial number of beings and do not, having stood in the perfection of giving, give gifts for them, but rather they practice the perfection of giving and give gifts for the sake of all beings. They do not, having stood in the perfection of morality, protect morality for a partial number of beings, but rather they practice the perfection of morality and protect morality for the sake of all beings. They do not, having stood in the perfection of patience, cultivate patience for a partial number of beings, but rather they practice the perfection of patience and cultivate patience for the sake of all beings. They do not, having stood in the perfection of perseverance, exert themselves vigorously for a partial number of beings, but rather they practice the perfection of perseverance and exert themselves vigorously for the sake of all beings. They do not, having stood in the perfection of concentration, generate concentration for a partial number of beings, but rather they practice the perfection of concentration and generate concentration for the sake of all beings. And they do not, having stood in the perfection of wisdom, cultivate wisdom for a partial number of beings, but rather they practice the perfection of wisdom and cultivate wisdom for the sake of all beings.

13.5 “Bodhisattva great beings [F.122.b] do not carve out a certain section of beings and buckle on armor just for them, thinking, ‘I have to lead just this many into the element of nirvāṇa without any aggregates left behind; this many I do not have to lead to nirvāṇa. I have to establish just this many in awakening; this many I do not have to establish in awakening.’ On the contrary, bodhisattva great beings buckle on armor for all beings. They think, ‘I myself have to complete the perfection of giving, and I have to connect all beings with the perfection of giving. Similarly, I myself have to complete the perfection of morality ... the perfection of patience ... the perfection of perseverance ... the perfection of concentration ... and the perfection of wisdom, and I have to connect all beings with the perfection of wisdom.’<sup>226</sup>

13.6 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of giving give gifts with objects of attention not connected with śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas but with attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects and, having made that wholesome root into something shared in common by all beings, grow it<sup>227</sup> into unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. That, Venerable Śāriputra, is the perfection of giving armor of bodhisattvas, great beings practicing the perfection of giving.<sup>228</sup>

13.7 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, gift-giving bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of giving with attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects do not dedicate it to the level of śrāvakas or pratyekabuddhas. That, Venerable Śāriputra, is the perfection of morality armor of gift-giving bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of giving. [F.123.a]

13.8 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, gift-giving bodhisattva great beings with attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects have forbearance for and belief in those phenomena. That is the perfection of patience armor of gift-giving bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of giving.

13.9 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, gift-giving bodhisattva great beings with attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects do not slack in perseverance. That is the perfection of perseverance armor of gift-giving bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of giving.

13.10 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, gift-giving bodhisattva great beings with attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects make their minds one-pointed without providing an opportunity for thoughts

- connected with śrāvakas or pratyekabuddhas. That is the perfection of concentration armor of gift-giving bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of giving.
- 13.11 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, because gift-giving bodhisattva great beings have only that as their focus and have attended to the perception that all dharmas are conjured up, they do not apprehend a giver, do not apprehend giving, and do not apprehend a recipient. That is the perfection of wisdom armor of gift-giving bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of giving.
- 13.12 “Venerable Śāriputra, when bodhisattva great beings with attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects do not grasp a causal sign<sup>229</sup> of those perfections and do not apprehend them, you should know, Venerable Śāriputra, that bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom like that are armed with great armor. [F.123.b]
- 13.13 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of morality standing with attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects give gifts and, having made that into something shared in common by all beings, dedicate it to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. That, Venerable Śāriputra, is the perfection of giving of bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of morality.
- 13.14 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of morality do not hanker after even śrāvaka or pratyekabuddha levels, not to mention the level of an ordinary person. That is the perfection of morality of bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of morality.
- 13.15 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of morality with attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects have forbearance for and belief in doing those things. That is the perfection of patience of bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of morality.
- 13.16 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of morality with attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects do not slack in perseverance and do not tense up. That is the perfection of perseverance of bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of morality.
- 13.17 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of morality abide with attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects without providing an opportunity for thoughts connected with śrāvakas or pratyekabuddhas, and having made the mind<sup>230</sup> they have produced into something shared in common by all beings,

- dedicate it to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. [F.124.a] That is the perfection of concentration of bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of morality.
- 13.18 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of morality abiding with attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects attend to the perception that all dharmas are conjured up. They do not falsely project and apprehend morality because of its emptiness of a basic nature. That is the perfection of wisdom of bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of morality.
- 13.19 “Venerable Śāriputra, because bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of morality like that incorporate all six perfections, they are said to be armed with great armor.
- 13.20 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of patience with objects of attention not connected with śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas, but with attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects, give gifts and, having made those wholesome roots into something shared in common by all beings, grow them into unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. That, Venerable Śāriputra, is the perfection of giving armor of bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of patience.
- 13.21 “The perfection of morality, perfection of perseverance, and perfection of concentration when practicing the perfection of patience are similar.
- 13.22 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, in order to fully accomplish all the buddhadharmas and bring all beings to maturity through wisdom, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of patience with objects of attention not connected with śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas, but with attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects, having made [F.124.b] those wholesome roots into something shared in common by all beings, grow them into unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. That, Venerable Śāriputra, is the perfection of wisdom of bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of patience.
- 13.23 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings standing in the perfection of perseverance with objects of attention not connected with śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas, but with attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects, give gifts and, having made those wholesome roots into something shared in common by all beings, grow them into unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. That, Venerable Śāriputra, is the perfection of giving of bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of perseverance.
- 13.24 “The perfection of morality, perfection of patience, and perfection of concentration when practicing the perfection of perseverance are similar.

- 13.25 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings standing in the perfection of perseverance with objects of attention not connected with śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas, but with attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects, cultivate the perfection of wisdom and, having made those wholesome roots into something shared in common by all beings, grow them into unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. That is the perfection of wisdom of bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of perseverance.
- 13.26 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings standing in the perfection of concentration with objects of attention not connected with śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas, but with attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects, give gifts and, having made those wholesome roots into something shared in common by all beings, grow them into unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. That is the perfection of giving of bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of perseverance.
- 13.27 “The perfection of morality, perfection of patience, and perfection of perseverance when practicing the perfection of concentration are similar.
- 13.28 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings standing in the perfection of concentration, cultivating the perfection of wisdom, attend to the perception that all dharmas are conjured up. With objects of attention not connected with śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas, but with attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects, they make those wholesome roots into something shared in common by all beings, and they grow them into unsurpassed, perfect, [F.125.a] complete awakening. That is the perfection of wisdom of bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of concentration.
- 13.29 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings standing in the perfection of wisdom with objects of attention not connected with śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas, but with attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects, give gifts with the purity of the three spheres<sup>231</sup> and, having made those wholesome roots into something shared in common by all beings, grow them into unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. That is the perfection of giving of bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom.
- 13.30 “The perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, and perfection of concentration when practicing the perfection of wisdom are similar.
- 13.31 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings standing in the perfection of wisdom, cultivating [F.125.b] the perfection of wisdom, attend to the perception that all dharmas are like an illusion, a dream, an apparition, an echo, a reflection in the mirror, and a magical creation. Standing with objects of attention not connected with śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas, but with attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects, they make those wholesome roots into something shared in common by all beings and grow them into unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. That is the perfection of wisdom of bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom.

13.32 “Thus, Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings standing in each of the six perfections perfect all six perfections.

13.33 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings become absorbed in the concentrations but do not dwell on the experience, are not captured by them, and are not reborn under their power. They become absorbed in the immeasurables and formless absorptions but do not dwell on the experience, are not captured by them, and are not reborn under their power. That, Venerable Śāriputra, you should know is the bodhisattva great beings’ perfection of wisdom endowed with skillful means.

13.34 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings dwell in a vision of isolation and dwell in a vision of emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness in the concentrations, the immeasurables, and the formless absorptions but still do not actualize the very limit of reality. Venerable Śāriputra, that is the great skillful-means armor of bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom. In that way bodhisattva great beings, Venerable Śāriputra, [F.126.a] are said to be armed with great armor.

13.35 “Venerable Śāriputra, the lord buddhas standing in the ten directions also cry out with cries of delight and raise their voices in praise of bodhisattva great beings thus armed with great armor, announcing their titles, saying the names of those bodhisattvas out loud, and proclaiming, ‘A bodhisattva great being armed with great armor in such-and-such a world system is bringing beings to maturity and purifying a buddhafiield.’ ”

13.36 Śāriputra then asked, “Venerable Pūrṇa, to what extent have bodhisattva great beings set out in a great vehicle, and what is the bodhisattva great beings’ Great Vehicle?”<sup>232</sup>

13.37 “Venerable Śāriputra,” replied Pūrṇa, “here when bodhisattva great beings who practice the six perfections are practicing the perfection of giving, they complete and dwell in the first concentration, where there is detachment from sense objects and detachment from wrong, unwholesome dharmas, and have applied thought and have sustained thought and joy and happiness born of detachment. Similarly, they attain and dwell in the second, third, and fourth concentrations.

13.38 “They dwell having pervaded the ten directions of a world that is vast because of the dharma-constituent and that extends as far as the space element with a vast, inclusive, infinite, nondual mind endowed with love without enmity, unrivaled, not harmful, and well cultivated. Similarly, they dwell having pervaded the ten directions of a world that is vast because of the dharma-constituent and that extends as far as the space element with a vast, inclusive, infinite, nondual mind endowed with compassion, endowed with joy, and endowed with equanimity without enmity, unrivaled, not harmful, [F.126.b] and well cultivated.

13.39 “Similarly, they attain and dwell in the station of endless space, the station of endless consciousness, the station of nothing-at-all, and the station of neither perception nor nonperception.

13.40 “Those are the concentrations, immeasurables, and formless absorptions of bodhisattva great beings. When bodhisattva great beings who practice the perfection of giving set out into and arise from those concentrations, immeasurables, and formless absorptions, they make those wholesome roots into something shared in common by all beings as well, and they grow them into unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.”

13.41 Construe when practicing the perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, and perfection of concentration as above.

13.42 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings who practice the perfection of wisdom become absorbed in the four concentrations, the four immeasurables, and the four formless absorptions. When bodhisattvas dwell in those concentrations, those immeasurables, and those formless absorptions, becoming absorbed into and arising from those concentrations, immeasurables, and formless absorptions, they pay attention to the attributes, tokens, and signs of space.<sup>233</sup> Practicing the perfection of wisdom, with attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects, they make those wholesome roots, and others as well, into something shared in common by all beings, and [F.127.a] they grow them into unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. That, Venerable Śāriputra, is the bodhisattva great beings’ Great Vehicle, and in that way bodhisattva great beings have set out in the Great Vehicle.

13.43 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings dwell having pervaded one direction, up to dwell having pervaded the ten directions of a world as vast as the dharma-constituent and as far-reaching as the space element with a vast, inclusive, infinite, nondual mind endowed with love without enmity, unrivaled, not harmful, and well cultivated. And similarly, Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings dwell having pervaded one direction, up to dwell having pervaded the ten directions of a world as vast as the dharma-constituent and as far-reaching as the space element with a vast, inclusive, infinite, nondual mind endowed with compassion, endowed with joy, and similarly endowed with equanimity without enmity, unrivaled, not harmful, and well cultivated. That is said to be the bodhisattva great beings’ meditative stabilization.

- 13.44 “Furthermore, bodhisattva great beings with a mind connected with the knowledge of all aspects, preceded by great compassion, explain and demonstrate, illuminate, reveal, and make clear the concentrations, immeasurables, and formless absorptions to others in order to destroy the afflictions of all beings, properly demonstrating the experience of and faults in them, and the release from them. This is the bodhisattva great beings’ perfection of giving.
- 13.45 “With just that attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects, they do the suppressing meditation on the first, up to the fourth concentration, standing in the first, up to [F.127.b] the fourth concentration—that is, they do not provide an opportunity for the production of other thoughts connected with śrāvaka thoughts or with pratyekabuddha thoughts. This is the bodhisattva great beings’ untarnished perfection of morality.
- 13.46 “Bodhisattva great beings dwelling with just that attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects think, ‘I will teach the Dharma in order to put an end to the afflictions of all beings.’ The enjoyment, toleration, investigation, understanding of, and pondering on that attention is the bodhisattva great beings’ perfection of patience.
- 13.47 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings with that attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects make all the wholesome roots into something shared in common by all beings, and they grow them into the knowledge of all aspects without relaxing their perseverance. That is the bodhisattva great beings’ perfection of perseverance.
- 13.48 “When bodhisattva great beings with that attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects become absorbed in and emerge from all those concentrations, deliverances, meditative stabilizations, and absorptions and, without falling to the śrāvaka level or pratyekabuddha level, also make the wholesome roots into something shared in common by all beings and grow them into the knowledge of all aspects, that is the bodhisattva great beings’ perfection of concentration.
- 13.49 “When bodhisattva great beings with that attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects understand analytically the branches of the first concentration and the branches of the second, of the third, and of the fourth concentration in their impermanent [F.128.a] aspect, suffering aspect, selflessness aspect, calm aspect, empty aspect, signless aspect, and wishless aspect, that is the bodhisattva great beings’ perfection of wisdom.
- 13.50 “That, Venerable Śāriputra, is the bodhisattva great beings’ Great Vehicle that is the six perfections,<sup>234</sup> and in that way bodhisattva great beings have set out in the Great Vehicle.

- 13.51 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, the bodhisattva great beings’ Great Vehicle is fully meditating on the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, fully meditating on the meditative stabilizations on emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness that are gateways to liberation, and fully meditating on the powers, the fearlessnesses, up to and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha. That, Venerable Śāriputra, is the bodhisattva great beings’ Great Vehicle, and in that way bodhisattva great beings have set out in the Great Vehicle.
- 13.52 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings become absorbed in the meditative stabilization on loving-kindness and become dedicated to the thought ‘I will protect all beings’; become absorbed in the meditative stabilization on compassion and dedicated to empathy and compassion for all beings; become absorbed in the meditative stabilization on joy and dedicated to the thought ‘I will free all beings’; and become absorbed in the meditative stabilization on equanimity and dedicated to putting an end to the outflows of all beings. That, Venerable Śāriputra, is the perfection of giving of bodhisattva great beings practicing the immeasurables.
- 13.53 “When bodhisattva great beings [F.128.b] become absorbed in and emerge from those attributes, tokens, and signs of those concentrations and immeasurables and dedicate it not to the śrāvaka and pratyekabuddha level but only to the knowledge of all aspects, that is the untarnished perfection of morality of bodhisattva great beings practicing the immeasurables.
- 13.54 “When bodhisattva great beings stand in those concentrations, immeasurables, and formless absorptions without mixing them up and do not hanker after the śrāvaka level or the pratyekabuddha level, or both of them, but tolerate and accept the knowledge of all aspects, that is the perfection of patience of bodhisattva great beings practicing the immeasurables.
- 13.55 “When bodhisattva great beings with the thought of awakening connected with the knowledge of all aspects do not give up the endeavor to abandon unwholesome dharmas and fully complete wholesome dharmas, that is the perfection of perseverance of bodhisattva great beings practicing the immeasurables.
- 13.56 “When bodhisattva great beings become absorbed in those concentrations, in those immeasurables, and even in those formless absorptions but are not reborn under the power of the concentrations, immeasurables, or formless absorptions, do not dwell on the experience of them, and are not captured by them, that is the perfection of concentration of bodhisattva great beings practicing the immeasurables.

- 13.57 “When bodhisattva great beings with attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects become absorbed in and emerge again from those concentrations, immeasurables, and formless absorptions, understanding analytically [F.129.a] their impermanent aspect, suffering aspect, selflessness aspect, calm aspect, empty aspect, signless aspect, and wishless aspect but without entering into the secure state of a śrāvaka, and without entering into the secure state of a pratyekabuddha either, that is the perfection of wisdom of bodhisattva great beings.<sup>235</sup>
- 13.58 “That, Venerable Śāriputra, is the bodhisattva great beings’ Great Vehicle, and in that way bodhisattva great beings have set out in the Great Vehicle.
- 13.59 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, the bodhisattva great beings’ Great Vehicle is a knowledge of inner emptiness by way of not apprehending anything, up to a knowledge of the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature by way of not apprehending anything. That, Venerable Śāriputra, is the bodhisattva great beings’ Great Vehicle, and in that way bodhisattva great beings have set out in the Great Vehicle.
- 13.60 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, the bodhisattva great beings’ Great Vehicle is the knowledge of all dharmas that is an unscattered thought in meditative equipoise. That, Venerable Śāriputra, is the bodhisattva great beings’ Great Vehicle, and in that way bodhisattva great beings have set out in the Great Vehicle.
- 13.61 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, the bodhisattva great beings’ Great Vehicle is where knowledge that ‘it is permanent’ does not happen, and where knowledge that ‘it is impermanent,’ ‘it is happiness,’ ‘it is suffering,’ ‘it has a self,’ ‘it is selfless,’ ‘it is calm,’ ‘it is not calm,’ ‘it is empty,’ ‘it is not empty,’ ‘it has a sign,’ ‘it is signless,’ ‘it is wished for,’ and ‘it is wishless’ [F.129.b] does not happen, and that again by way of not apprehending anything. That, Venerable Śāriputra, is the bodhisattva great beings’ Great Vehicle, and in that way bodhisattva great beings have set out in the Great Vehicle.
- 13.62 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, the bodhisattva great beings’ Great Vehicle is where knowledge does not happen at a time in the past, where knowledge does not happen at a time in the future, where knowledge does not happen in the present time, and yet where they are also not non-knowers of the three time periods,<sup>236</sup> and that again by way of not apprehending anything. That, Venerable Śāriputra, is the bodhisattva great beings’ Great Vehicle, and in that way bodhisattva great beings have set out in the Great Vehicle.
- 13.63 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, the bodhisattva great beings’ Great Vehicle is where knowledge does not happen in the desire realm, where knowledge does not happen in the form realm or the formless realm, and yet where they are also not non-knowers of the desire realm, form realm, and formless realm, and that again, Venerable Śāriputra, by way of not apprehending anything. That is the bodhisattva great beings' Great Vehicle, and in that way bodhisattva great beings have set out in the Great Vehicle.

13.64 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, the bodhisattva great beings' Great Vehicle is where knowledge of ordinary dharmas does not happen; where knowledge of extraordinary dharmas, of dharmas with outflows and without outflows, and of compounded and uncompounded dharmas does not happen; and yet where they are also not non-knowers of ordinary dharmas, and are not non-knowers of extraordinary dharmas, of dharmas with outflows and without outflows, of compounded and uncompounded dharmas, and that again, [F.130.a] Venerable Śāriputra, by way of not apprehending anything. That is the bodhisattva great beings' Great Vehicle, and in that way bodhisattva great beings have set out in the Great Vehicle.”

13.65 Then venerable Śāriputra asked venerable Pūrṇa Maitrāyaṇīputra, “Venerable Pūrṇa, to what extent has a bodhisattva great being mounted<sup>237</sup> on the Great Vehicle?”

13.66 Pūrṇa said, “Venerable Śāriputra, here bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom mount up on<sup>238</sup> the perfection of giving. They do not apprehend a perfection of giving, they do not apprehend a bodhisattva, and they do not apprehend a recipient. It is said that bodhisattva great beings have ‘mounted up on the perfection of giving’ by way of not apprehending anything in that way. They have mounted up on the perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, and perfection of concentration like that as well. Venerable Śāriputra, here bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom mount up on the perfection of wisdom. They do not apprehend a perfection of wisdom, they do not apprehend a bodhisattva, and they do not apprehend attention. Venerable Śāriputra, it is said that bodhisattva great beings have ‘mounted up on the perfection of wisdom’ by way of not apprehending anything in that way.

13.67 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, here bodhisattva great beings meditate on inner emptiness with a thought connected with the knowledge of all aspects without any admixture because of the investigation of the meditation,<sup>239</sup> and that meditation, again, by way of not apprehending anything. They meditate up to on the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature with a thought connected with the knowledge of all aspects without any admixture [F.130.b] because of the investigation of the meditation, and that meditation, again, by way of not apprehending anything. Venerable Śāriputra, it is said that bodhisattva great beings have ‘mounted up on the Great Vehicle’ in that way.

13.68 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings meditate on the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening with thoughts connected with the knowledge of all aspects without any admixture because of the investigation of the meditation, and that meditation, again, by way of not apprehending anything. They meditate on the meditative stabilizations on emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness with thoughts connected with the knowledge of all aspects without any admixture because of the investigation of the meditation, and that meditation, again, by way of not apprehending anything. They meditate on the ten powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, up to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha with thoughts connected with the knowledge of all aspects without any admixture because of the investigation of the meditation, and that meditation, again, by way of not apprehending anything. Venerable Śāriputra, it is said that bodhisattva great beings have ‘mounted up on the Great Vehicle’ in that way.

13.69 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings know that bodhisattva is just a convention because beings cannot be found;<sup>240</sup> that form is just a name because form cannot be found; up to that feeling..., perception..., volitional factors..., and consciousness is just a name because consciousness cannot be found; that eye is just a name because eye cannot be found; up to that thinking mind is just a name because thinking mind cannot be found, and so too with the constituents, [F.131.a] sense fields, dependent origination, thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, ten powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, and eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha. They know that inner emptiness is just a name because inner emptiness cannot be found, up to that emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature is just a name because the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature cannot be found; that buddhadharma is just a name because a buddhadharma cannot be found; that suchness..., the true nature of dharmas..., the dharma-constituent..., the certification of dharmas..., and the very limit of reality is just a name because the very limit of reality cannot be found; and that awakening ... and buddha is just a name because a buddha cannot be found. Venerable Śāriputra, it is said that bodhisattva great beings have ‘mounted up on the Great Vehicle’ in that way.

13.70 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, because they have completed the clairvoyances, bodhisattva great beings from the first thought of awakening up until sitting at the site of awakening bring beings to maturity, roam from buddhfield to buddhfield, and with whatever worship and attendance is suitable, in whichever the buddhfield, they respect, revere, honor, and worship the lord buddhas. They hear just this—that is, the Great Vehicle doctrine—from those lord buddhas, and mounted on this Great Vehicle they pass on from buddhahood to buddhahood, purify a buddhahood, and bring beings to maturity. But they have no notion of a buddhahood, and they have no notion [F.131.b] of beings either. They stand on the nondual ground, intentionally appropriate whatever sort of body is able to look after the needs of beings, and until they gain the knowledge of a knower of all aspects, they are never separated from that vehicle. And having gained the knowledge of a knower of all aspects, they turn the wheel of the Dharma that all śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas, and the world with its gods, nāgas, yakṣas, gandharvas, asuras, garuḍas, kinnaras, mahoragas, humans, and ghosts, cannot turn. When they have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, the lord buddhas living in as many worlds in the eastern direction as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River raise their voices in praise of them, proclaiming their glory and making this proclamation:<sup>241</sup> ‘In such-and-such a vast world system the bodhisattva great being so-and-so, having mounted up onto the Great Vehicle, has gained the knowledge of all aspects, and having gained the knowledge of all aspects has turned the wheel of Dharma.’ Similarly the lord buddhas living in as many worlds as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River to the south, west, and north, in the intermediate directions to the northeast, southeast, southwest, and northwest, below and above, raise their voices in praise of them, proclaiming their glory and making this proclamation: ‘In such-and-such a world system the bodhisattva great being so-and-so, having mounted up onto the Great Vehicle, has gained the knowledge of all aspects, and having gained the knowledge of all aspects has turned the wheel of Dharma.’ Venerable Śāriputra, it is said that bodhisattva great beings [F.132.a] have ‘mounted up onto the Great Vehicle’ in that way.”

14. CHAPTER 14: NEITHER BOUND NOR FREED

14.1 Then venerable Subhūti inquired of the Lord, “Lord, you say ‘armed with great armor’ again and again. Lord, to what extent are bodhisattva great beings armed with great armor?”

14.2 The Lord said, “Subhūti, here bodhisattva great beings, having become armed with great armor—that is, armed with perfection of giving armor, and armed with perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and perfection of wisdom armor; armed with applications of mindfulness armor, and armed with right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and path armor; armed with inner emptiness armor, up to armed with emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature armor; and armed with powers armor, armed with fearlessnesses armor, armed with detailed and thorough knowledges armor, and armed with distinct attributes of a buddha armor—and having become armed with the armor of the knowledge of all aspects and the body of a buddha, they pervade world systems in the great billionfold world system with light and shake the earth. Having blown out all the fires in the hell dwellings, extinguished the sufferings of the beings in the hells, and caused them to know their suffering is extinguished, those bodhisattvas [F.132.b] say, ‘I bow to you, tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete Buddha!’ proclaiming the name out loud, and then those beings in the hells, having heard the sound buddha, find pleasure and mental happiness. They emerge from those hells just because of that pleasure and mental happiness, and wherever lord buddhas are standing and can be seen and can be pleased they take birth in those world systems, reborn as gods and humans.

14.3 “Similarly, beings emerge from animal dwellings and the world of Yama and are reborn wherever lord buddhas are standing.

- 14.4 “Similarly, they pervade with light as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River to the south, west, and north, in the intermediate directions to the northeast, southeast, southwest, and northwest, below and above, and they shake them in the six ways. Having blown out all the fires in the hell dwellings, extinguished the sufferings of the beings in the hells, and caused them to know their suffering is extinguished, those bodhisattvas say ‘I bow to you, tathāgata, worthy one, perfect complete Buddha!’ proclaiming the name out loud. Then those beings in the hells, having heard the sound buddha, find pleasure and mental happiness. They emerge from those hells just because of that pleasure and mental happiness, and wherever lord buddhas are standing and can be seen and attended to, they take birth in those world systems, reborn as gods and humans.
- 14.5 “Similarly, those beings die in animal dwellings and the world of Yama [F.133.a] and take birth in whichever world systems lord buddhas are standing.
- 14.6 “Subhūti, it is said that bodhisattva great beings are ‘armed with great armor’ in that way.
- 14.7 “To illustrate, Subhūti, were a clever magician or magician’s apprentice to have conjured up the hells, animal dwellings, and the worlds of Yama in front of a gathering of beings at the junction of two main roads, and having conjured them up were they to proclaim to those beings the word ‘Buddha,’ the word ‘Dharma,’ and the word ‘Saṅgha,’ then, when those they have conjured up have emerged from those hells, animal dwellings, and the worlds of Yama because of the word Buddha, the word Dharma, and the word Saṅgha, Subhūti, what do you think, would that magician or magician’s apprentice have caused any beings to emerge from the hells, animal dwellings, or the worlds of Yama?”
“No, Lord,” answered Subhūti.
- 14.8 “Similarly, Subhūti,” said the Lord, “even though bodhisattva great beings have released beings from the three terrible forms of life in an unbounded, infinite number of world systems, still no beings at all have been released. And why? Because, Subhūti, this is just the way things are, given the illusory nature of dharmas.<sup>242</sup> Subhūti, it is said that bodhisattva great beings are ‘armed with great armor’ in that way.
- 14.9 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings stand in the perfection of giving and armed with great armor conjure up a great billionfold world system made of beryl. [F.133.b] Having conjured up a great billionfold world system made of beryl, they conjure up a splendid array of a wheel-turning emperor. Having conjured up a splendid array of a wheel-turning emperor, they give food to those seeking food, and similarly they give drink, clothes, transport, perfume, flower garlands, flowers, incense, creams, powders, requirements, houses, bedding, shawls, and requirements for sustaining themselves, as well as medicines, gold, silver, jewels, gems, corals, conch shells, crystals, pearls, and ornaments—whatever requirements are appropriate. Having given food to those seeking food, up to and having given whatever requirements are appropriate, they then teach those beings the Dharma—that is, just this Dharma conjoined with the six perfections—and, having heard that exposition of the Dharma those beings, never become separated from the six perfections right up until they fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

14.10 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, suppose a clever magician or magician’s apprentice were to have conjured up a huge crowd of beings in front of a gathering of other beings at the junction of two main roads and given food to those seeking food, up to and given whatever requirements are appropriate. What do you think, Subhūti, would that magician or magician’s apprentice have given anything to anybody?”

“No, Lord,” answered Subhūti.

14.11 “Similarly, Subhūti,” said the Lord, “even though bodhisattva great beings conjure up a splendid array of a wheel-turning emperor and give food to those seeking food, up to give whatever requirements are appropriate, still they do not give anything to any being. [F.134.a] And why? Because, Subhūti, this is just the way things are, given the illusory nature of dharmas. Subhūti, it is said that bodhisattva great beings are ‘armed with great armor’ in that way.

14.12 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings stand in the perfection of morality and intentionally take birth. Born in the family of a wheel-turning emperor, they stand in that wheel-turning majesty, establish beings in the ten wholesome actions, establish beings in the four concentrations, the four immeasurables, and the four formless absorptions, up to establish beings in the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, and those beings never become separated from that teaching right up until they fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

14.13 “To illustrate, Subhūti, suppose a clever magician or magician’s apprentice were to have conjured up a huge crowd of beings in front of a gathering of other beings at the junction of two main roads and established them in the ten wholesome actions, up to established them in the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha. What do you think, Subhūti, would that magician or magician’s apprentice have established any beings in the ten wholesome actions, up to would they have established them in the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha?”

“No, Lord,” answered Subhūti.

- 14.14 “Similarly, Subhūti,” said the Lord, “even though bodhisattva great beings establish an unbounded, infinite number of beings in the ten wholesome actions, up to establish them in the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, still they do not establish any beings [F.134.b] in the ten wholesome actions, up to they do not establish any beings in the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha. And why? Because, Subhūti, this is just the way things are, given the illusory nature of dharmas. Subhūti, it is said that bodhisattva great beings are ‘armed with great armor’ in that way.
- 14.15 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings standing in the perfection of patience cause beings to engage in the perfection of patience and establish them in it. And how, Subhūti, do bodhisattva great beings standing in the perfection of patience cause beings to engage in the perfection of patience and establish them in it? Subhūti, after bodhisattva great beings have produced their first thought of awakening they arm themselves with great armor in this way: they think, ‘Even if all beings deal me a blow with a stick, a stone, their fists, a knife, or a sword,<sup>243</sup> I will not let myself feel any sort of mental anguish,’ and they also establish all beings in such patience.
- 14.16 “To illustrate, Subhūti, were a clever magician or magician’s apprentice to have conjured up a huge crowd of beings in front of a gathering of other beings at the junction of two main roads and caused them to engage in the perfection of patience and established them in it, what do you think, Subhūti, would that magician or magician’s apprentice have established any beings in the perfection of patience?”
- “No, Lord,” answered Subhūti.
- 14.17 “Similarly, Subhūti,” said the Lord, “even though bodhisattva great beings establish an unbounded, infinite number of beings in the perfection of patience, still they do not establish any beings in the perfection of patience. And why? Because, Subhūti, this is just the way things are, given the illusory nature [F.135.a] of dharmas. Subhūti, it is said that bodhisattva great beings are ‘armed with great armor’ in that way.
- 14.18 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings standing in the perfection of perseverance cause beings to take up, enter into, and be established in the perfection of perseverance. And how, Subhūti, do bodhisattva great beings standing in the perfection of perseverance cause beings to take up, enter into, and be established in the perfection of perseverance? Subhūti, here bodhisattva great beings standing in the perfection of perseverance with attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects cause beings to take up, enter into, and be established in physical and mental perseverance.<sup>244</sup>

14.19 “To illustrate, Subhūti, were a clever magician or magician’s apprentice to have conjured up a huge crowd of beings in front of a gathering of other beings at the junction of two main roads and caused them to take up, enter into, and be established in physical and mental perseverance, what do you think, Subhūti, would that magician or magician’s apprentice have caused any beings to take up, enter into, and be established in physical and mental perseverance?”

14.20 “Similarly, Subhūti,” said the Lord, “even though bodhisattva great beings establish all beings in physical and mental perseverance, still they do not cause any beings to take up, enter into, and be established in physical and mental perseverance. And why? Because, Subhūti, this is just the way things are, given the illusory nature of dharmas. [F.135.b] Subhūti, it is said that bodhisattva great beings are ‘armed with great armor’ in that way.

14.21 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings standing in the perfection of concentration cause all beings to take up, enter into, and be established in the perfection of concentration. And how, Subhūti, do bodhisattva great beings standing in the perfection of concentration cause all beings to take up, enter into, and be established in the perfection of concentration? Subhūti, here bodhisattva great beings standing in the sameness of all dharmas do not consider any dharma to be wavering or not wavering. Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings stand in the perfection of concentration in that way, and they cause all beings to take up, enter into, and be established in the perfection of concentration like that. And those whom they have caused to take it up never become separated from that perfection of concentration, right up until they fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

14.22 “To illustrate, Subhūti, were a clever magician or magician’s apprentice to have conjured up a huge crowd of beings in front of a gathering of other beings at the junction of two main roads and caused them to take up, enter into, and be established in the perfection of concentration, what do you think, Subhūti, would that magician or magician’s apprentice have caused any beings to take up, enter into, and be established in the perfection of concentration?”

“No, Lord,” answered Subhūti.

14.23 “Similarly, Subhūti,” said the Lord, “even though bodhisattva great beings [F.136.a] establish all beings in the perfection of concentration, still they do not cause any beings to take up, enter into, and be established in the perfection of concentration. And why? Because, Subhūti, this is just the way things are, given the illusory nature of dharmas. Subhūti, it is said that bodhisattva great beings are ‘armed with great armor’ in that way.

- 14.24 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings standing in the perfection of wisdom cause all beings to take up, enter into, and be established in the perfection of wisdom. And how, Subhūti, do bodhisattva great beings standing in the perfection of wisdom cause all beings to take up, enter into, and be established in the perfection of wisdom? Subhūti, here bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom do not apprehend the production, cessation, defilement, purification, proximity, or remoteness of any dharma. Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings stand in the perfection of wisdom in that way, and they cause all beings to take up, enter into, and be established in the perfection of wisdom like that.
- 14.25 “To illustrate, Subhūti, were a clever magician or magician’s apprentice to have conjured up a huge crowd of beings in front of a gathering of other beings at the junction of two main roads and caused them to take up, enter into, and be established in the perfection of wisdom, what do you think, Subhūti, would that magician or magician’s apprentice have caused any beings to take up, enter into, and be established in the perfection of wisdom?”
- “No, Lord,” [F.136.b] answered Subhūti.
- 14.26 “Similarly, Subhūti,” said the Lord, “even though bodhisattva great beings establish all beings in the perfection of wisdom, still they do not establish any beings in the perfection of wisdom. And why? Because, Subhūti, this is just the way things are, given the illusory nature of dharmas. Subhūti, it is said that bodhisattva great beings are ‘armed with great armor’ in that way.
- 14.27 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings armed with great armor, having gone<sup>245</sup> to as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River to the east, in the same way they personally stand in the perfection of giving they cause the beings who are standing in those world systems to take up the perfection of giving, and to enter into and be established in it. Similarly, in the same way they personally stand in the perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and perfection of wisdom, they also cause those beings to take up ... up to the perfection of wisdom, and to enter into and be established in them. They teach the Dharma—that is, just this Dharma conjoined with the six perfections—and, having heard that Dharma, those beings never become separated from the six perfections, right up until they fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.
- 14.28 “Similarly, having gone to as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River in each of the directions to the south, west, and north; the northeast, southeast, southwest, and northwest; and below and above, in the same way that they personally stand in the perfection of giving [F.137.a] they cause the beings who are standing in those world systems to take up the perfection of giving, and to enter into and be established in it. Similarly, in the same way they personally stand in the perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and perfection of wisdom they also cause those beings to take up ... up to the perfection of wisdom, and to enter into and be established in them. They teach the Dharma—that is, just this Dharma conjoined with the six perfections—and, having heard that Dharma, those beings never become separated from the six perfections right up until they fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

14.29 “To illustrate, Subhūti, were a clever magician or magician’s apprentice to have conjured up a huge crowd of beings in front of a gathering of other beings at the junction of two main roads and caused them to take up, enter into, and be established in the six perfections, what do you think, Subhūti, would that magician or magician’s apprentice have caused any beings to take up, enter into, and be established in the six perfections?”

14.30 “Similarly, Subhūti,” said the Lord, “even though bodhisattva great beings establish all beings in as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River to the east and in all ten directions in the six perfections, still they do not establish any beings in the six perfections. And why? Because, Subhūti, this is just the way things are, given the illusory nature of dharmas. Subhūti, it is said bodhisattva great beings are ‘armed with great armor’ in that way.

14.31 “Furthermore, [F.137.b] Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings, having become armed with great armor, stand with their thought connected with the knowledge of all aspects without giving an opportunity for the production of other thoughts, such as<sup>246</sup> ‘I have to establish just this many in the perfection of giving; this many I do not have to establish. I have to establish just this many in the perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and perfection of wisdom; this many I do not have to establish. I have to establish just this many in the applications of mindfulness; this many I do not have to establish. I have to establish just this many in ... up to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha; this many I do not have to establish. I have to establish just this many in the result of stream enterer; this many I do not have to establish. I have to establish just this many in the result of once-returner; this many I do not have to establish. I have to establish just this many in the result of non-returner; this many I do not have to establish. I have to establish just this many in the state of a worthy one; this many I do not have to establish. I have to establish just this many in a pratyekabuddha’s awakening; this many I do not have to establish. I have to establish just this many in the knowledge of all aspects; this many I do not have to establish.’ On the contrary, they think, ‘I have to establish an unbounded, infinite number of beings in the six perfections, I have to establish them in the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, and I have to establish them in the ten tathāgata powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, and eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha. I have to establish them in the result of stream enterer, and I have to establish them in the result of once-returner, in the result of non-returner, [F.138.a] in the state of a worthy one, and in a pratyekabuddha’s awakening. I have to establish an unbounded, infinite number of beings in the knowledge of all aspects.’

14.32 “To illustrate, Subhūti, were a clever magician or magician’s apprentice to have conjured up a huge crowd of beings in front of a gathering of other beings at the junction of two main roads and to have produced the thought, ‘I have to establish an unbounded, infinite number of beings in the six perfections, I have to establish them in the applications of mindfulness, in the eightfold noble path, and I have to establish them in ... up to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha; I have to establish them in the result of stream enterer, up to I have to establish them in the state of a worthy one, and in a pratyekabuddha’s awakening; I have to establish them in the knowledge of all aspects,’ what do you think, Subhūti, would that magician or magician’s apprentice have established any beings in the six perfections, up to established any beings in the knowledge of all aspects?”

“No, Lord,” answered Subhūti.

14.33 “Similarly, Subhūti,” said the Lord, “even if bodhisattva great beings were to produce the thought, ‘I have to establish an unbounded, infinite number of beings in the six perfections, up to the knowledge of all aspects furnished with the best of all aspects,’ they would not have produced a thought for the welfare of any being. And why? Because, Subhūti, this is just the way things are, given the illusory nature of dharmas. Subhūti, it is said that bodhisattva great beings are ‘armed with great armor’ in that way.”

14.34 Subhūti then said, “The way I understand what you, Lord, have said is that those bodhisattva great beings should be understood to be armed with no armor<sup>247</sup> [F.138.b] because all dharmas, given the illusory nature of dharmas, are empty of their own mark. And why? Because, Lord, form is empty of form, and because feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is empty of consciousness; because eyes are empty of eyes, and because ears ... nose ... tongue ... body ... and thinking mind is empty of thinking mind; because a form is empty of a form, and because a sound ... a smell ... a taste ... a feeling ... and a dharma is empty of a dharma; because eye consciousness is empty of eye consciousness, and because ear consciousness ... nose consciousness ... tongue consciousness ... body consciousness ... and thinking-mind consciousness is empty of thinking-mind consciousness; because eye contact is empty of eye contact, and because ear contact ... nose contact ... tongue contact ... body contact ... and thinking-mind contact is empty of thinking-mind contact; because feeling that arises from the condition of eye contact is empty of feeling that arises from the condition of eye contact, and because feeling that arises from the condition of ear contact ... feeling that arises from the condition of nose contact ... feeling that arises from the condition of tongue contact ... feeling that arises from the condition of body contact ... and feeling that arises from the condition of thinking-mind contact is empty of feeling that arises from the condition of thinking-mind contact; because the perfection of giving is empty of the perfection of giving, up to the perfection of wisdom is empty of the perfection of wisdom; because inner emptiness is empty of inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature is empty of the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature; because the applications of mindfulness are empty of the applications of mindfulness, up to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha are empty of the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha; and because, Lord, even a bodhisattva is empty of bodhisattva, and great armor is empty of great armor. I understand that bodhisattva great beings are armed with no armor, Lord, through this one of many explanations." [F.139.a]

- 14.35 Subhūti having spoken thus, the Lord said to him, "Exactly so, Subhūti, exactly so. It is just as you say. And why? Because, Subhūti, the knowledge of all aspects is not made, is not unmade, and does not occasion anything,<sup>248</sup> and those beings for whose sake bodhisattva great beings are armed with great armor are not made, not unmade, and do not occasion anything either."
- 14.36 Subhūti then asked, "Why is the knowledge of all aspects not made, not unmade, and why does it not occasion anything? And why are those beings for whose sake bodhisattva great beings are armed with great armor not made, not unmade, and why do they not occasion anything?"
- 14.37 "Subhūti," said the Lord, "given that you cannot apprehend a maker, the knowledge of all aspects is not made, not unmade, and does not occasion anything, and those beings for whose sake bodhisattva great beings are armed with great armor are also not made, not unmade, and do not occasion anything. And why? Because, Subhūti, form is not made, not unmade, and does not occasion anything, and those beings for whose sake bodhisattva great beings are armed with great armor are also not made, not unmade, and do not occasion anything."
- 14.38 "And why? Because, Subhūti, form does not make, does not unmake, and does not occasion anything, and feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness do not make, do not unmake, and do not occasion anything; the eyes do not make, do not unmake, and do not occasion anything, and the ears, nose, tongue, body, and thinking mind do not make, do not unmake, and do not occasion anything; a form does not make, does not unmake, and does not occasion anything, and a sound, a smell, a taste, a feeling, and a dharma do not make, do not unmake, and do not occasion anything; the eye consciousness does not make, does not unmake, and does not occasion anything, and the ear consciousness, nose consciousness, tongue consciousness, body [F.139.b] consciousness, and thinking-mind consciousness do not make, do not unmake, and do not occasion anything; eye contact does not make, does not unmake, and does not occasion anything, and ear contact, nose contact, tongue contact, body contact, and thinking-mind contact do not make, do not unmake, and do not occasion anything; and feeling that arises from the condition of eye contact does not make, does not unmake, and does not occasion anything, and feeling that arises from the condition of ear, nose, tongue, body, and thinking-mind contact does not make, does not unmake, and does not occasion anything. Subhūti, a self does not make, does not unmake, and does not occasion anything, and a living being, a creature, up to one who knows and one who sees<sup>249</sup> does not make, does not unmake, and does not occasion anything. And why? Because they absolutely do not exist and absolutely cannot be apprehended. Subhūti, a dream does not make, does not unmake, and does not occasion anything, and an illusion, an echo, an apparition, a reflection in the mirror, a mirage, and a magical creation do not make, do not unmake, and do not occasion anything. And why? Because they absolutely do not exist and absolutely cannot be apprehended. Subhūti, inner emptiness does not make, does not unmake, and does not occasion anything. And why? Because it absolutely does not exist and absolutely cannot be apprehended. Subhūti, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature does not make, does not unmake, and does not occasion anything. And why? Because they absolutely do not exist and absolutely cannot be apprehended. Subhūti, the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening do not make, do not unmake, and do not occasion anything. And why? Because they absolutely do not exist and absolutely cannot be apprehended. The ten powers, the four fearlessnesses, the four detailed and thorough knowledges, up to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha do not make, do not unmake, and do not occasion anything. And why? Because they absolutely do not exist and absolutely cannot be apprehended. [F.140.a] Subhūti, suchness does not make, does not unmake, and does not occasion anything. And why? Because it absolutely does not exist and absolutely cannot be apprehended. Similarly, Subhūti, unmistaken suchness, unaltered suchness, the true nature of dharmas, the dharma-constituent, the establishment of dharmas, the certification of dharmas, and the very limit of reality do not make, do not unmake, and do not occasion anything. And why? Because they absolutely do not exist and absolutely cannot be apprehended. Subhūti, awakening does not make, does not unmake, and does not occasion anything. All-knowledge, the knowledge of paths, and the knowledge of all aspects do not make, do not unmake, and do not occasion anything. And why? Because they absolutely do not exist and absolutely cannot be apprehended.

14.39 “Subhūti, through this one of many explanations you should understand that the knowledge of all aspects is not made, not unmade, and does not occasion anything, and those beings for whose sake bodhisattva great beings are armed with great armor are not made, not unmade, and do not occasion anything. Subhūti, it is said that bodhisattva great beings are ‘armed with great armor’ in that way.”

14.40 “Lord,” said Subhūti, “the way I understand what you have said, Lord, is that form is not bound and is not freed, and feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness, Lord, are not bound and are not freed.”

14.41 Pūrṇa Maitrāyaṇīputra then said, “Venerable Subhūti, you are saying form is not bound and is not freed? You are saying feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are not bound and are not freed?”

14.42 “Exactly so, Venerable Pūrṇa, [F.140.b] exactly so, Venerable Pūrṇa,” replied Subhūti. “Form, Venerable Pūrṇa, is not bound and is not freed; feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are not bound and are not freed.”

14.43 Pūrṇa then asked, “Venerable Subhūti, what is form that is not bound and is not freed? What is feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness that are not bound and are not freed?”

14.44 “Venerable Pūrṇa,” replied Subhūti, “dream-like form is not bound and is not freed; dream-like feeling, perception, volitional factors, and dream-like consciousness are not bound and are not freed. Similarly, form that is like an echo, like an illusion, like a mirage, like an apparition, like a reflection in the mirror, and like a magical creation is not bound and is not freed; feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness ... that are like a magical creation are not bound and are not freed.

14.45 “Venerable Pūrṇa, past form is not bound and is not freed. Venerable Pūrṇa, past feeling, perception, volitional factors, and past consciousness are not bound and are not freed. Similarly, Venerable Pūrṇa, future form is not bound and is not freed. Venerable Pūrṇa, future feeling, perception, volitional factors, and future consciousness are not bound and are not freed.

Venerable Pūrṇa, present form is not bound and is not freed. Venerable Pūrṇa, present feeling, perception, volitional factors, and present consciousness are not bound and are not freed.

14.46 “And why? Because form does not exist,<sup>250</sup> form is not bound and is not freed. Because feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness does not exist, [F.141.a] consciousness is not bound and is not freed. Similarly, it is because form ... feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is isolated, calm, empty, signless, wishless, does not occasion anything, and is not produced that consciousness is not bound and is not freed. Venerable Pūrṇa, a form that is wholesome, unwholesome, with afflictions, without afflictions, with basic immorality, without basic immorality, with outflows, without outflows, ordinary, extraordinary, defiled, and purified is not bound and is not freed. And why? Because form does not exist. That is why form is not bound and is not freed. Similarly, Venerable Pūrṇa, feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness that is wholesome or unwholesome, up to purified is not bound and is not freed. And why? Because consciousness does not exist. That is why consciousness is not bound and is not freed.

14.47 “Venerable Pūrṇa, all dharmas are not bound and are not freed. And why? Because all dharmas do not exist. That is why they are not bound and are not freed. Similarly, because they are isolated and so on, they are not bound and are not freed.

14.48 “Venerable Pūrṇa, the perfection of giving is not bound and is not freed. Similarly, the perfection of morality ... the perfection of patience ... the perfection of perseverance ... the perfection of concentration ... and the perfection of wisdom is not bound and is not freed—because it does not exist it is not bound and is not freed; because it is isolated and so on it is not bound and is not freed.

14.49 “Venerable Pūrṇa, inner emptiness is also not bound and is not freed. Venerable Pūrṇa, up to emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature is also not bound and is not freed. [F.141.b] Venerable Pūrṇa, the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening are also not bound and are not freed. Venerable Pūrṇa, the ten powers, the four fearlessnesses, the four detailed and thorough knowledges, up to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha are also not bound and are not freed—because they do not exist they are not bound and are not freed, because they are isolated and so on they are not bound and are not freed.

14.50 “Venerable Pūrṇa, awakening is also not bound and is not freed, the knowledge of all aspects is also not bound and is not freed, and a bodhisattva is also not bound and is not freed—because they do not exist they are not bound and are not freed, because they are isolated they are not bound and are not freed, and because they are not produced they are not bound and are not freed.

14.51 “Venerable Pūrṇa, suchness is also not bound and is not freed. Venerable Pūrṇa, unmistaken suchness..., unaltered suchness..., the true nature of dharmas..., the dharma-constituent..., the establishment of dharmas..., the certification of dharmas..., and the very limit of reality is also not bound and is not freed—because it does not exist and is isolated it is not bound and is not freed, because it is not produced it is not bound and is not freed.

14.52 “In that way, Venerable Pūrṇa, bodhisattva great beings are not bound and are not freed. In that way the six perfections are also not bound and are not freed, up to the knowledge of all aspects is not bound and is not freed. Those beings they will lead to nirvāṇa are also not bound and are not freed, those buddhafiels that they will purify are also not bound and are not freed, those lord buddhas on whom they will attend are also not bound and are not freed, the Dharma they will hear is also not bound and is not freed, the lord buddhas from whom they will never again be separated are also not bound and are not freed, and the clairvoyances from which they will not be separated, [F.142.a] the five eyes from which they will not be separated, and the meditative stabilizations from which they will not be separated are also not bound and are not freed. The knowledge of path aspects they will produce is not bound and is not freed, the knowledge of all aspects they will awaken to is not bound and is not freed, the wheel of Dharma they will turn is not bound and is not freed, and the beings they will lead to nirvāṇa in the three vehicles are not bound and are not freed.

14.53 “Thus indeed, Venerable Pūrṇa, will bodhisattva great beings who are not bound and are not freed awaken in the six perfections to all dharmas, given that they do not exist, are isolated, and are not produced.”

14.54 This was the fourteenth chapter, “Neither Bound nor Freed,” of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.”

15. CHAPTER 15: MEDITATIVE STABILIZATION

15.1 Then venerable Subhūti inquired of the Lord, “Lord, what is the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings? Lord, to just what extent should bodhisattva great beings be known to have set out in the Great Vehicle?<sup>251</sup> Where<sup>252</sup> will the Great Vehicle have set out? Where will the Great Vehicle stand?<sup>253</sup> Who will go forth in the Great Vehicle?”

15.2 Subhūti having said asked this, the Lord said to him, “Subhūti, in regard to what you have asked—‘Lord, what is the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings?—Subhūti, the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings is this: the six perfections. And what are the six? They are the perfection of giving, perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, [F.142.b] perfection of concentration, and perfection of wisdom.

15.3 “What is the perfection of giving? Here, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings with the thought of awakening connected with the knowledge of all aspects cause the giving<sup>254</sup> of inner and outer things as gifts, and, having made those wholesome roots into something shared in common by all beings, by way of not apprehending anything grow them into unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. That is the bodhisattva great beings’ perfection of giving.”

15.4 “Lord, what is the bodhisattva great beings’ perfection of morality?” asked Subhūti.

The Lord said, “Here, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings with the thought of awakening connected with the knowledge of all aspects by way of not apprehending anything personally take up and pursue the ten wholesome actions and cause other beings as well to take up the ten wholesome actions, to enter into and be established in them. That is the bodhisattva great beings’ untarnished perfection of morality.”

15.5 “Lord, what is the bodhisattva great beings’ perfection of patience?” asked Subhūti.

The Lord said, "Here, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings with the thought of awakening connected with the knowledge of all aspects, personally in possession of complete patience, cause others as well to be patient, and that by way of not apprehending anything. That is the bodhisattva great beings' perfection of patience."

15.6 "Lord, what is the bodhisattva great beings' [F.143.a] perfection of perseverance?" asked Subhūti.

15.7 The Lord said, "Here, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings with the thought of awakening connected with the knowledge of all aspects do not personally forsake persevering in the five perfections, and cause others as well to persevere in the five perfections, and that by way of not apprehending anything. That is the bodhisattva great beings' perfection of perseverance."

15.8 "Lord, what is the bodhisattva great beings' perfection of concentration?" asked Subhūti.

The Lord said, "Here, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings with the thought of awakening connected with the knowledge of all aspects, with skillful means personally become absorbed in concentration, and, without taking birth through its power, cause others to take up concentration as well, and that by way of not apprehending anything. That is the bodhisattva great beings' perfection of concentration."

15.9 "Lord, what is the bodhisattva great beings' perfection of wisdom?"

The Lord said, "Here, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings with the thought of awakening connected with the knowledge of all aspects by way of not apprehending anything personally do not settle down on all dharmas, and they analytically understand the nature of all dharmas. They also cause others as well not to settle down on all dharmas, and to analytically understand the nature all dharmas. That is the bodhisattva [F.143.b] great beings' perfection of wisdom. [B11]

"That, Subhūti, is the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings.

15.10 "Furthermore, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings is this: inner emptiness, outer emptiness, inner and outer emptiness, the emptiness of emptiness, great emptiness, the emptiness of ultimate reality, the emptiness of the compounded, the emptiness of the uncompounded, the emptiness of what transcends limits, the emptiness of no beginning and no end, the emptiness of nonrepudiation, the emptiness of a basic nature, the emptiness of all dharmas, the emptiness of its own mark, the emptiness of not apprehending, the emptiness of a nonexistent thing, the emptiness of an intrinsic nature, and the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature.

- 15.11      “What is inner emptiness? It is the emptiness of inner dharmas: the eyes, ears, nose, tongue, body, and thinking mind. There, eyes are empty of eyes because they are neither unmoved<sup>255</sup> nor destroyed. And why? Because that is their basic nature. Ears are empty of ears because they are neither unmoved nor destroyed. And why? Because that is their basic nature. The nose is empty of the nose because it is neither unmoved nor destroyed. And why? Because that is its basic nature. The tongue is empty of the tongue because it is neither unmoved nor destroyed. And why? Because that is its basic nature. The body is empty of the body because it is neither unmoved nor destroyed. And why? Because that is its basic nature. The thinking mind is empty of the thinking mind because it is neither unmoved nor destroyed. And why? [F.144.a] Because that is its basic nature.
- 15.12      “What is outer emptiness? It is the emptiness of outer dharmas: a form, a sound, a smell, a taste, a feeling, and a dharma. There, a form is empty of a form because it is neither unmoved nor destroyed. And why? Because that is its basic nature. Similarly, a sound ... a smell ... a taste ... a feeling ... and a dharma is empty of a dharma because it is neither unmoved nor destroyed. And why? Because that is its basic nature.
- “That is called outer emptiness.
- 15.13      “What is inner and outer emptiness? The six outer sense fields and the six inner sense fields are the outer and inner dharmas.
- 15.14      “What are inner dharmas empty of outer dharmas? The inner eyes, ears, nose, tongue, body, and thinking mind are empty of an outer form, sound, smell, taste, feeling, and dharma because they are neither unmoved nor destroyed. And why? Because that is their basic nature. Outer forms, sounds, smells, tastes, feelings, and dharmas are empty of the inner eyes, ears, nose, tongue, body, and thinking mind because they are neither unmoved nor destroyed. And why? Because that is their basic nature.
- “That is called inner and outer emptiness.
- 15.15      “What is the emptiness of emptiness? The emptiness of that emptiness that is the emptiness of all dharmas is empty, because it is neither unmoved nor destroyed. And why? Because that is its basic nature.
- “That is called the emptiness of emptiness.
- 15.16      “What is great emptiness? [F.144.b] The eastern direction is empty of the eastern direction, the southern direction empty of the southern direction, the western direction empty of the western direction, and the northern direction empty of the northern direction because they are neither unmoved nor destroyed. The above direction is empty of the above direction, and the below direction is empty of the below direction. Similarly, the intermediate directions are empty of the intermediate directions. And why? Because that is their basic nature.

- “That is called great emptiness.
- 15.17 “What is the emptiness of ultimate reality? Ultimate reality is said to be nirvāṇa. Nirvāṇa is also empty of nirvāṇa because it is neither unmoved nor destroyed. And why? Because that is its basic nature.
- “That is called the emptiness of ultimate reality.
- 15.18 “What is the emptiness of the compounded? There the compounded is said to be the desire realm, the form realm, and the formless realm. The desire realm is empty of the desire realm, the form realm is empty of the form realm, and the formless realm is empty of the formless because they are neither unmoved nor destroyed. And why? Because that is their basic nature.
- “That is called the emptiness of the compounded.
- 15.19 “What is the emptiness of the un compounded? There the un compounded is said to be what has no production, no stopping, no destruction, no lasting, and no changing into something else. The un compounded is empty of the un compounded because it is neither unmoved nor destroyed. And why? Because that is its basic nature.
- “That is called the emptiness of the un compounded.
- 15.20 “What is the emptiness of what transcends limits? That of which a limit is not found transcends limits. Because it is neither unmoved nor destroyed, what transcends limits is empty of what transcends limits. [F.145.a] And why? Because that is its basic nature.
- “That is called the emptiness of what transcends limits.
- 15.21 “What is the emptiness of no beginning and no end? That of which a beginning and an end are not found has no middle. That of which there is no beginning, end, or middle has no coming or going. A beginning, middle, and end are empty of a beginning, middle, and end because they are neither unmoved nor destroyed. And why? Because that is their basic nature.
- “That is called the emptiness of no beginning and no end.
- 15.22 “What is the emptiness of nonrepudiation? It is the nonrejection of any dharma at all. Nonrepudiation is empty of nonrepudiation because it is neither unmoved nor destroyed. And why? Because that is its basic nature.
- “That is called the emptiness of nonrepudiation.
- 15.23 “What is the emptiness of a basic nature? The basic nature of all dharmas, be they compounded or un compounded, is not made by śrāvakas, is not made by pratyekabuddhas, is not made by bodhisattvas, and is not made by tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas. A basic nature is empty of a basic nature because it is neither unmoved nor destroyed. And why? Because that is its basic nature.
- “That is called the emptiness of a basic nature.

15.24      “What is the emptiness of all dharmas? All dharmas are said to be form, feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness; eyes, ears, nose, tongue, body, and thinking mind; a form, a sound, a smell, a taste, a feeling, and a dharma; eye consciousness, ear consciousness, nose consciousness, tongue consciousness, body consciousness, and thinking-mind consciousness; eye [F.145.b] contact and ear, nose, tongue, body, and thinking-mind contact; feeling that arises from the condition of eye contact and feeling that arises from the condition of ear, nose, tongue, body, and thinking-mind contact; and dharmas that have form, formless dharmas, compounded dharmas, and uncompounded dharmas. Those are said to be all dharmas. All dharmas are empty of all dharmas because they are neither unmoved nor destroyed. And why? Because that is their basic nature.

15.25      “What is the emptiness of its own mark? The mark of form is something that shows itself,<sup>256</sup> the mark of feeling is experience, the mark of perception is taking up, the mark of volitional factors is occasioning something, and the mark of consciousness is making conscious. Whatever the marks of compounded dharmas and whatever the marks of uncompounded dharmas, all those dharmas are each empty of their own marks because they are neither unmoved nor destroyed. And why? Because that is their basic nature.

            “That is called the emptiness of its own mark.

15.26      “What is the emptiness of not apprehending? Any past, future, or present dharma cannot be apprehended. Pasts cannot be apprehended in a future, and futures cannot be apprehended in a past. Presents cannot be apprehended in a past and future. Not apprehending is empty of not apprehending because it is neither unmoved nor destroyed. And why? Because that is its basic nature.

            “That is called the emptiness of not apprehending.

15.27      “What is the emptiness of a nonexistent thing? It is that in which nothing can be apprehended. [F.146.a] The nonexistent thing is empty of the nonexistent thing because it is neither unmoved nor destroyed. And why? Because that is its basic nature.

            “That is called the emptiness of a nonexistent thing.

15.28      “What is the emptiness of an intrinsic nature? It is that in which no intrinsic nature can be apprehended. An intrinsic nature is empty of an intrinsic nature because it is neither unmoved nor destroyed. And why? Because that is its basic nature.

            “That is called the emptiness of an intrinsic nature.

15.29      “What is the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature? The intrinsic nature of a phenomenon that has arisen from a union does not exist, because phenomena have originated dependently. A union is empty of a union because it is neither unmoved nor destroyed. And why? Because that is its basic nature.

“That is called the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature.

15.30 “Furthermore, Subhūti, in regard to what is called the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, an existent thing is empty of an existent thing, a nonexistent thing is empty of a nonexistent thing, intrinsic nature is empty of intrinsic nature, and a nature from something else is empty of a nature from something else.<sup>257</sup>

15.31 “What is an existent thing? That which is called an existent thing is the five aggregates. There you cannot apprehend those five aggregates, because they have not been produced. Hence an existent thing is empty of an existent thing.

15.32 “Why is a nonexistent thing also empty of a nonexistent thing? That which is called a nonexistent thing is the uncompounded. There the uncompounded is also empty of the uncompounded, so a nonexistent thing is also empty of a nonexistent thing.

15.33 “Why is intrinsic nature also empty of intrinsic nature? Intrinsic nature is unmistaken, basic nature. There that emptiness has not been made by knowledge and has not been made by seeing, hence the emptiness of an intrinsic nature.

15.34 “What is the emptiness of a nature from something else? It is this establishment of dharmas that simply remains whether the tathāgatas arise or whether the tathāgatas do not arise, the true nature of dharmas, the dharma [F.146.b] constituent, the certification of dharmas, suchness, unmistaken suchness, unaltered suchness, and the very limit of reality. Thus, that which is empty of something else is the emptiness of a nature from something else.

15.35 “Furthermore, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings is this: the meditative stabilization sūraṅgama, the meditative stabilization ratnamudra, the meditative stabilization siṃhavikrīḍita, the meditative stabilization sucandra, the meditative stabilization candradhvajaketu, the meditative stabilization sarvadharmodgata, the meditative stabilization vilokita-mūrdhā, the meditative stabilization dharmadhātuniyata, the meditative stabilization niyatadvhajaketu, the meditative stabilization vajraratna, the meditative stabilization sarvadharmapraveśamudra, the meditative stabilization samādhinījasupratiṣṭhita,<sup>258</sup> the meditative stabilization raśmipramukha, the meditative stabilization balavyūha, the meditative stabilization samudgata,<sup>259</sup> the meditative stabilization niruktinirdeśapraveśa, the meditative stabilization adhivacanasampraveśa, the meditative stabilization digvilokita, the meditative stabilization ādhāramudrā, the meditative stabilization asaṃpramoṣa, the meditative stabilization sarvadharmasamavasaraṇasāgaramudra,<sup>260</sup> the meditative stabilization ākāśaspharaṇa, the meditative stabilization vajramaṇḍala, the meditative stabilization ratnajahā, the meditative stabilization vairocana, [F.147.a] the meditative stabilization aneṣa, the meditative stabilization aniketasthita, the meditative stabilization niścitta, the meditative stabilization vimalapradīpa, the meditative stabilization anantaprabha, the meditative stabilization prabhākara, the meditative stabilization samantāvabhāsa, the meditative stabilization śuddhasāra, the meditative stabilization vimalaprabha, the meditative stabilization ratikara, the meditative stabilization vidyutpradīpa, the meditative stabilization akṣaya, the meditative stabilization tejovatin, the meditative stabilization kṣayāpagata, the meditative stabilization āniñjya, the meditative stabilization avivartta, the meditative stabilization sūryapradīpa, the meditative stabilization candravimala, the meditative stabilization śuddhapratibhāsa, the meditative stabilization ālokakara, the meditative stabilization kārākāra, the meditative stabilization jñānaketu, the meditative stabilization vajropama, the meditative stabilization cittasthiti, the meditative stabilization samantāvāloka, the meditative stabilization supraṭiṣṭhita, the meditative stabilization ratnakoṭi, the meditative stabilization varadharmamudra, the meditative stabilization sarvadharmasamatā, the meditative stabilization ratijaha, the meditative stabilization dharmasamudgatapūrṇa, the meditative stabilization vikiraṇa, the meditative stabilization sarvadharmapadaprabheda, the meditative stabilization samākṣarāvākāra, the meditative stabilization akṣarāpagata, the meditative stabilization ārambanacchedaḥ, the meditative stabilization avikāra, [F.147.b] the meditative stabilization aparakāra, the meditative stabilization nāmaniyatapraveśa,<sup>261</sup> the meditative stabilization aniketacārī, the meditative stabilization vitimirāpagata, the meditative stabilization cāritravatin, the meditative stabilization acala, the meditative stabilization viśayatīrṇa, the meditative stabilization sarvagunaśaṃcaya, the meditative stabilization sthitanīścitta, the meditative stabilization śubhapuṣpitaśuddhi, the meditative stabilization bodhyaṅgavatin, the meditative stabilization anantapratibhāna, the meditative stabilization asamasama, the meditative stabilization sarvadharmātikramaṇa, the meditative stabilization paricchedakara, the meditative stabilization vimatīvikaraṇa, the meditative stabilization niradhiṣṭhāna, the meditative stabilization ekavyūha, the meditative stabilization ākārābhīnīrhāra, the meditative stabilization ekākāra, the meditative stabilization ākārānavākāra, the meditative stabilization nairvedhika-sarvabhavatamo'pagata, the meditative stabilization sarvasaṃketarūtapraveśa, the meditative stabilization sarvagiriḥhoṣākṣaravimukta, the meditative stabilization jvalanolka,<sup>262</sup> the meditative stabilization lakṣanapariśodhaṇa, the meditative stabilization anabhilakṣita,<sup>263</sup> the meditative stabilization sarvākānavaropeta, the meditative stabilization sarvasukhaduḥkhanirabhinandin, the meditative stabilization akṣayakaraṇḍa, the meditative stabilization dhāraṇīmati, the meditative stabilization samyaktva mithyātvasarvasaṃgrasana, [F.148.a] the meditative stabilization sarvarodhanirodhasaṃpraśamana, the meditative stabilization anurodhāpratirodha,<sup>264</sup> the meditative stabilization vimalaprabha,<sup>265</sup> the meditative stabilization sāravatin, the meditative stabilization paripūrṇa-vimalacandraprabha, the meditative stabilization vidyutprabha,<sup>266</sup> the meditative stabilization mahāvīyūha, the meditative stabilization sarvākāraprabhākara,<sup>267</sup> the meditative stabilization samādhisamata, the meditative stabilization araṇa-samavasaraṇa,<sup>268</sup> the meditative stabilization araṇasaraṇasarvasamavasaraṇa,<sup>269</sup> the meditative stabilization anilambhaniketānirata, the meditative stabilization tathatāsthitiṅścitta,<sup>270</sup> the meditative stabilization kāyakalisaṃpramathana, the meditative stabilization vākkalividhvamaṇsanaganakalpa, and the meditative stabilization ākāśasaṃgavimuktinirupalepa.

- 15.36 “What is the sūraṅgama meditative stabilization? The meditative stabilization that causes an experience of the range of all meditative stabilizations is called the sūraṅgama meditative stabilization.
- 15.37 “What is the ratnamudra meditative stabilization? The meditative stabilization sealed by all meditative stabilizations is called the ratnamudra meditative stabilization.
- 15.38 “What is the siṃhavikrīḍita meditative stabilization? The meditative stabilization standing in which bodhisattvas<sup>271</sup> sport with all meditative stabilizations is called the siṃhavikrīḍita meditative stabilization.
- 15.39 “What is the sucandra meditative stabilization? The meditative stabilization standing in which they illuminate all meditative stabilizations is called the sucandra meditative stabilization.
- 15.40 “What [F.148.b] is the candradhvajaketu meditative stabilization? The meditative stabilization standing in which they bear the royal ensign of all meditative stabilizations is called the candradhvajaketu meditative stabilization.
- 15.41 “What is the sarvadharmodgata meditative stabilization? The meditative stabilization standing in which they distinguish themselves with all meditative stabilizations is called the sarvadharmodgata meditative stabilization.<sup>272</sup>
- 15.42 “What is the vilokitamūrdhā meditative stabilization? The meditative stabilization standing in which they look down on the peaks of all meditative stabilizations is called the vilokitamūrdhā meditative stabilization.
- 15.43 “What is the dharmadhātunīyata meditative stabilization? The meditative stabilization standing in which they move toward certainty about the dharma-constituent is called the dharmadhātunīyata meditative stabilization.
- 15.44 “What is the niyatadhvajaketu meditative stabilization? The meditative stabilization standing in which they bear the royal ensign of those assured of all meditative stabilizations is called the niyatadhvajaketu meditative

- stabilization.
- 15.45 “What is the vajraratna<sup>273</sup> meditative stabilization? The meditative stabilization standing in which meditative stabilizations are not broken apart is called the vajraratna meditative stabilization.
- 15.46 “What is the sarvadharmapraveśamudra meditative stabilization? The meditative stabilization standing in which they enter into the seal of all dharmas is called the sarvadharmapraveśamudra meditative stabilization.
- 15.47 “What is the samādhirājasupratīṣṭhita meditative stabilization? The meditative stabilization standing in which they stand with a king-like stance in all meditative stabilizations is called the samādhirājasupratīṣṭhita meditative stabilization.<sup>274</sup>
- 15.48 “What is the raśmīpramukha meditative stabilization? [F.149.a] The meditative stabilization standing in which they emit the light rays of all meditative stabilizations is called the raśmīpramukha meditative stabilization.
- 15.49 “What is the balavyūha meditative stabilization? The meditative stabilization standing in which they set out an array of the powers of all meditative stabilizations is called the balavyūha meditative stabilization.
- 15.50 “What is the samudgata meditative stabilization? The meditative stabilization standing in which they perfectly accomplish all meditative stabilizations is called the samudgata meditative stabilization.
- 15.51 “What is the niruktinirdeśapraveśa meditative stabilization? The meditative stabilization standing in which they enter into expositions of the creative explanations of all meditative stabilizations is called the niruktinirdeśapraveśa meditative stabilization.
- 15.52 “What is the adhivacanasampraveśa meditative stabilization? The meditative stabilization standing in which they enter into the names and words for all meditative stabilizations is called the adhivacanasampraveśa meditative stabilization.
- 15.53 “What is the digvilokita meditative stabilization? The meditative stabilization standing in which they see the directions of all meditative stabilizations is called the digvilokita meditative stabilization.
- 15.54 “What is the ādhāramudrā meditative stabilization? The meditative stabilization standing in which they hold the seals of all meditative stabilizations is called the ādhāramudrā meditative stabilization.
- 15.55 “What is the asaṃpramoṣa meditative stabilization? The meditative stabilization standing in which they do not forget any meditative stabilization is called the asaṃpramoṣa meditative stabilization.
- 15.56 “What is the sarvadharmasamavasaraṇasāgaramudra meditative stabilization? The meditative stabilization standing in which all meditative stabilizations [F.149.b] are collected and into which they flow down is called the sarvadharmasamavasaraṇasāgaramudra meditative stabilization.

- 15.57 “What is the ākāśaspharaṇa meditative stabilization? The meditative stabilization standing in which they pervade all meditative stabilizations by pervading like space is called the ākāśaspharaṇa meditative stabilization.
- 15.58 “What is the vajramaṇḍala meditative stabilization? The meditative stabilization standing in which they bear in mind the maṇḍalas of all meditative stabilizations is called the vajramaṇḍala meditative stabilization.
- 15.59 “What is the ratnajahā<sup>275</sup> meditative stabilization? It is the meditative stabilization standing in which it would be enough that they forsake the causal signs for afflictions, but they also forsake the causal signs of all meditative stabilizations as well. Therefore it is called the ratnajahā meditative stabilization.
- 15.60 “What is the vairocana meditative stabilization? It is the meditative stabilization standing in which they illuminate, irradiate, and light up<sup>276</sup> all meditative stabilizations. Therefore it is called the vairocana meditative stabilization.
- 15.61 “What is the aneṣa meditative stabilization? It is the meditative stabilization standing in which they do not seek any dharma. Therefore it is called the aneṣa meditative stabilization.
- 15.62 “What is the aniketasthita meditative stabilization? It is the meditative stabilization standing in which they do not see any dharma as a dwelling place to stand on. Therefore it is called the aniketasthita meditative stabilization.
- 15.63 “What is the niścitta meditative stabilization? It is the meditative stabilization standing in which minds and mental factors do not operate. Therefore it is called the niścitta meditative stabilization.
- 15.64 “What is the vimalapradīpa meditative stabilization? It is the meditative stabilization standing in which they are a stainless lamp for all meditative stabilizations. Therefore [F.150.a] it is called the vimalapradīpa meditative stabilization.
- 15.65 “What is the anantaprabha meditative stabilization? It is the meditative stabilization standing in which they are an infinite light for all meditative stabilizations. Therefore it is called the anantaprabha meditative stabilization.
- 15.66 “What is the prabhākara meditative stabilization? It is the meditative stabilization standing in which they make light for all meditative stabilizations. Therefore it is called the prabhākara meditative stabilization.
- 15.67 “What is the samantāvabhāsa meditative stabilization? It is the meditative stabilization that illuminates the entrances to all meditative stabilizations as soon as it is gained. Therefore it is called the samantāvabhāsa meditative stabilization.

- 15.68 “What is the śuddhasāra meditative stabilization? It is the meditative stabilization standing in which they gain the purity that is the same for all meditative stabilizations. Therefore it is called the śuddhasāra meditative stabilization.
- 15.69 “What is the vimalaprabha meditative stabilization? It is the meditative stabilization standing in which they clear away the stains of all meditative stabilizations and illuminate all meditative stabilizations.<sup>277</sup> Therefore it is called the vimalaprabha meditative stabilization.
- 15.70 “What is the ratikara meditative stabilization? It is the meditative stabilization standing in which causes an experience of the pleasure of all meditative stabilizations. Therefore it is called the ratikara meditative stabilization.
- 15.71 “What is the vidyutpradīpa meditative stabilization? It is the meditative stabilization standing in which they act as a lamp to all meditative stabilizations. Therefore it is called the vidyutpradīpa meditative stabilization.
- 15.72 “What is the akṣaya meditative stabilization? It is the meditative stabilization standing in which they do not see the extinction or nonextinction of any meditative stabilization. Therefore it is called the akṣaya meditative stabilization.
- 15.73 “What is the tejovatin meditative stabilization? It is the meditative stabilization standing in which they blaze with the splendor [F.150.b] and glory of all meditative stabilizations. Therefore it is called the tejovatin meditative stabilization.
- 15.74 “What is the kṣayāpagata meditative stabilization? It is the meditative stabilization standing in which they do not see the extinction of any meditative stabilization. Therefore it is called the kṣayāpagata meditative stabilization.
- 15.75 “What is the āniñjya meditative stabilization? It is the meditative stabilization standing in which they do not move, do not shake, do not falsely project, and do not construct any meditative stabilizations in thought. Therefore it is called the āniñjya meditative stabilization.
- 15.76 “What is the avivartta meditative stabilization? It is the meditative stabilization standing in which they do not see a turning<sup>278</sup> in any meditative stabilization. Therefore it is called the avivartta meditative stabilization.
- 15.77 “What is the sūryapradīpa meditative stabilization? It is the meditative stabilization standing in which they illuminate the entrance of the light rays of all meditative stabilizations. Therefore it is called the sūryapradīpa meditative stabilization.
- 15.78 “What is the candravimāla meditative stabilization? It is the meditative stabilization standing in which they lift the darkness of all meditative stabilizations. Therefore it is called the candravimāla meditative stabilization.

CHAPTER 16: DHĀRAṆĪ GATEWAY

- 16.1 “Furthermore, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings is this: the four applications of mindfulness. What are the four? They are the application of mindfulness to the body, the application of mindfulness to feeling, the application of mindfulness to mind, and the application of mindfulness to dharmas.
- 16.2 “What is the application of mindfulness to the body? Here enthusiastic, introspective, mindful bodhisattva great beings, having cleared away ordinary covetousness and depression, dwell while viewing in a body the inner body by way of not apprehending anything, and without indulging in speculations to do with the body. They dwell while viewing in a body the outer body, and they dwell while viewing in a body [F.155.b] the inner and outer body by way of not apprehending anything, and without indulging in speculations to do with the body.
- 16.3 “Enthusiastic, introspective, mindful bodhisattva great beings, having cleared away ordinary covetousness and depression, dwell while viewing in dharmas inner feelings, mind, and inner dharmas, by way of not apprehending anything, and without indulging in speculations to do with dharmas. They dwell while viewing in dharmas outer feelings, mind, and outer dharmas, and dwell while viewing in dharmas inner and outer feelings, mind, and inner and outer dharmas by way of not apprehending anything, and without indulging in speculations to do with the body.
- 16.4 “And how, Subhūti, do bodhisattva great beings dwell while viewing in a body the inner body? Subhūti, here bodhisattva great beings dwell, while viewing in a body the inner body, aware when practicing, ‘I am practicing’; aware when they have stood, ‘I am standing’; aware when they have sat down, ‘I am sitting’; aware when they have laid down, ‘I am lying down.’ Whatever the position their body is in, they are aware of what it is. Subhūti,

16.5 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings who dwell while viewing in a body the inner body, while going out or coming back, are those who are clearly conscious of what they are doing. When they have looked around or peered, they are clearly conscious of what they are doing. When they have pulled in; [F.156.a] stretched out; are wearing an under robe, carrying a begging bowl, or wearing an outer robe; or have eaten, drunk, chewed, savored, warded off being overcome by drowsiness,<sup>285</sup> come, gone, stood, sat down, slept, awoken, spoken, remained silent, or withdrawn for meditation, they are those who are clearly conscious of what they are doing. Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom dwell while viewing in a body the inner body by way of not apprehending anything like that.

16.6 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings are mindful when breathing in, aware of the fact ‘I am breathing in’; are mindful when breathing out, aware of the fact ‘I am breathing out’; when breathing in long, are aware of the fact ‘I am breathing in long’; when breathing out long, are aware of the fact ‘I am breathing out long’; when breathing in short, are aware of the fact ‘I am breathing in short’; and when breathing out short, are aware of the fact ‘I am breathing out short.’

16.7 “To illustrate, Subhūti, when a skillful potter or potter’s apprentice<sup>286</sup> turns the wheel they are aware when they give it a long spin, ‘I am giving it a long spin,’ and they are aware when they give it a short spin, ‘I am giving it a short spin.’ Similarly, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings when mindfully breathing in are mindfully aware of the fact ‘I am breathing in’; when mindfully breathing out are mindfully aware of the fact ‘I am breathing out’; when breathing in long are aware of the fact ‘I am breathing in long’; [F.156.b] when breathing out long are aware of the fact ‘I am breathing out long’; when breathing in short are aware of the fact ‘I am breathing in short’; and when breathing out short are aware of the fact ‘I am breathing out short.’ Subhūti, enthusiastic, introspective, mindful bodhisattva great beings, having cleared away ordinary covetousness and depression, dwell viewing in a body the inner body like that, and that by way of not apprehending anything.

16.8 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom examine how this very body in fact has constituents, how in this body are the earth element, water element, fire element, and wind element. As an example, Subhūti, when a skillful butcher of cows or apprentice to a butcher of cows has killed a cow with a sharp knife and quartered it, they examine it while standing or sitting. Similarly, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom also examine how this very body in fact has constituents, how in this body are the earth element, water element, fire element, and wind element. Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom dwell viewing in a body the inner body like that while standing or sitting, and that by way of not apprehending anything.

16.9 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom examine properly how this very body is full of various types of filth from the soles of the feet on up, from the top of the head on down, and out as far as the nails, hairs, and skin. They examine on this body [F.157.a] the hair on the head and hairs on the body, the nails, the teeth, the covering of skin, and the flesh, sinew, blood, bone, marrow, heart, kidney, liver, lungs, spleen, gut, intestines, coiled intestines, colon, urine, excrement, tears, sweat, fat, snot, mucus, pus, bile, phlegm, oil, marrow, plasma, dirt, cranium, brain, discharge from the eyes, and ear wax. As an analogy, Subhūti, when those with eyes untie and inspect a farmer’s sack full of different types of unhusked rice, unhusked grains, sesame seeds, husked grains, mung beans,<sup>287</sup> kidney beans, lentils, barley, wheat, and mustard seeds, they know ‘this is unhusked rice, these are unhusked grains, these are sesame seeds, these are mung beans, these are kidney beans, these are lentils, this is barley, this is wheat, and these are mustard seeds.’ Similarly, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom examine how this very body is full of various types of filth from the soles of the feet on up, from the top of the head on down, and out as far as the nails, hairs, and skin. They examine on this body the hair on the head and hairs on the body, the nails, the teeth, the covering of skin, and the flesh, sinew, blood, bone, marrow, heart, kidney, liver, lungs, spleen, gut, intestines, coiled intestines, colon, urine, excrement, [F.157.b] tears, sweat, fat, snot, mucus, pus, bile, phlegm, oil, marrow, plasma, dirt, cranium, brain, discharge from the eyes, and ear wax. Subhūti, enthusiastic, introspective, mindful bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom, having cleared away ordinary covetousness and depression, dwell viewing while in a body the inner body like that, by way of not apprehending anything.

16.10 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings staying in a charnel ground see various bodies thrown out in the charnel ground that have been dead for one day, dead for two days, dead for three days, dead for four days, or dead for five days, or are bloated, black and blue, rotten, or cleaned out by worms, they connect this very body with that reality: ‘This body too has such a quality, is of such a nature, and does not avoid having

- that as its natural state.' Subhūti, enthusiastic, introspective, mindful bodhisattva great beings, having cleared away ordinary covetousness and depression, dwell while viewing in a body the body<sup>288</sup> like that.
- 16.11 "Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings see human corpses thrown out in the charnel ground dead for six days or dead for seven days or lying there being eaten by crows, kites, buzzards, vultures, hawks,<sup>289</sup> jackals, foxes, or dogs, or being eaten by any other of the various kinds of creatures, they connect this very body with that reality: 'This body too is of such a quality, is of such a nature, and does not avoid having that as its natural state.' Subhūti, enthusiastic, [F.158.a] introspective, mindful bodhisattva great beings, having cleared away ordinary covetousness and depression, dwell while viewing in a body the outer body like that.
- 16.12 "Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings see human corpses thrown out in the charnel ground that are chewed up, filthy, rotten, and stinking, they connect this very body with that reality: 'This body too is of such a quality, is of such a nature, and does not avoid having that as its natural state.' Subhūti, enthusiastic, introspective, mindful bodhisattva great beings, having cleared away ordinary covetousness and depression, dwell while viewing in a body the body like that.
- 16.13 "Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings see a complete skeleton thrown out in the charnel ground daubed with flesh and blood and hardly connected by sinews, they connect this very body with that reality: 'This body too is of such a quality, is of such a nature, and does not avoid having that as its natural state.' [F.158.b] Subhūti, enthusiastic, introspective, mindful bodhisattva great beings, having cleared away ordinary covetousness and depression, dwell while viewing in a body the body like that.
- 16.14 "Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings see the bones of a skeleton in the charnel ground without flesh and blood, colored like a conch shell and unconnected by sinews, they connect this very body with that reality: 'This body too is of such a quality, is of such a nature, and does not avoid having that as its natural state.' Subhūti, enthusiastic, introspective, mindful bodhisattva great beings, having cleared away ordinary covetousness and depression, are those who view in a body the body like that.
- 16.15 "Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings see in the charnel ground the bones no longer held in the frame of a skeleton, detached from each other, scattered about like conch shells, they connect this very body with that reality: 'This body too is of such a quality, is of such a nature, and does not avoid having that as its natural state.' Subhūti, enthusiastic, introspective, mindful bodhisattva great beings, having cleared away ordinary covetousness and depression, dwell while viewing in a body the body like that.

16.16 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings see in the charnel ground bones scattered on the ground in the main and intermediate directions—in one the bones of the feet, in another the bones of the lower leg, in another the bones of the upper leg, in another hip bones, in another rib bones, in another vertebrae, in another shoulder bones, in another neck bones, in another the skull and jaw bone—they connect this very body with that reality: ‘This body too is of such a quality, is of such a nature, and does not avoid having that as its natural state.’ Subhūti, enthusiastic, introspective, mindful bodhisattva great beings, having cleared away ordinary covetousness and depression, dwell while viewing in a body the body like that.

16.17 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings see in the charnel ground bones [F.159.a] that have been there for years bleached by the wind and the sun, colored like conch shells, they connect this very body with that reality: ‘This body too is of such a quality, is of such a nature, and does not avoid having that as its natural state.’ Subhūti, enthusiastic, introspective, mindful bodhisattva great beings, having cleared away ordinary covetousness and depression, dwell while viewing in a body the body like that.

16.18 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings see in the charnel ground decayed bones the dark color of the wood pigeon, crumbled to bits and become like the soil of the earth, they connect this very body with that reality: ‘This body too is of such a quality, is of such a nature, and does not avoid having that as its natural state.’ Subhūti, enthusiastic, introspective, mindful bodhisattva great beings, having cleared away ordinary covetousness and depression, are those who view in a body the inner body, are those who view in a body the outer body, and dwell as those who view in a body the inner and outer body like that.

16.19 “Similarly, enthusiastic, introspective, mindful bodhisattva great beings, having cleared away ordinary covetousness and depression, are those who view the dharmas of feelings, minds, and dharmas.

16.20 “Furthermore, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings is this: the four right efforts. What are the four? Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings generate the desire not to produce wrong unwholesome dharmas not yet produced, making an effort at it, making a vigorous attempt, [F.159.b] tightening up the mind and perfectly settling it down.<sup>290</sup> They generate the desire to abandon wrong unwholesome dharmas already produced, making an effort at it, making a vigorous attempt, exerting themselves mentally, and setting it out as a perfect goal. They generate the desire to produce wholesome dharmas not yet produced, making an effort at it, making a vigorous attempt, exerting themselves mentally, and setting it out as a perfect goal. They generate the desire that wholesome dharmas already produced will remain, will increase, will not be forgotten, will not degenerate, and will be completed, making an effort at it, making a vigorous attempt, tightening up the mind and perfectly settling it down by way of settling it down without apprehending anything.

16.21 “Furthermore, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings is this: the four legs of miraculous power. What are the four?<sup>291</sup> Subhūti, here bodhisattva great beings develop a leg of miraculous power endowed with meditative stabilization and the volitional effort to eliminate caused by yearning based on isolation, based on detachment, based on cessation, and transformed by renunciation; and they develop a leg of miraculous power endowed with meditative stabilization and the volitional effort to eliminate caused by perseverance, concentrated mind, and examination based on isolation, based on detachment, based on cessation, and transformed by renunciation, and that without apprehending anything.

16.22 “Furthermore, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings is this: the five faculties. What are the five? They are the faith faculty, perseverance faculty, mindfulness faculty, meditative stabilization faculty, and wisdom faculty. [F.160.a]

“That, Subhūti, is the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings.

16.23 “Furthermore, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings is this: the five powers. What are the five? They are the power of faith, power of perseverance, power of mindfulness, power of meditative stabilization, and power of wisdom, by way of not apprehending anything.

- 16.25 “Furthermore, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings is this: the eightfold noble path. What are the eight limbs of the noble path? They are right view, right idea, right speech, right conduct, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, and right meditative stabilization, by way of not apprehending anything.
- “That, Subhūti, is the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings. [F.160.b]
- 16.26 “Furthermore, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings is this: the three meditative stabilizations that are the three gateways to liberation. What are the three? They are the emptiness meditative stabilization, the signless meditative stabilization, and the wishless meditative stabilization.
- 16.27 “What is the emptiness meditative stabilization? The stability of mind that understands analytically that all dharmas are empty of their own mark is the emptiness gateway to liberation called the emptiness meditative stabilization.
- 16.28 “What is the signlessness meditative stabilization? The stability of mind that understands analytically that all dharmas are without a causal sign is the signlessness gateway to liberation called the signlessness meditative stabilization.
- 16.29 “What is the meditative stabilization on the wishlessness? The stability of mind that understands analytically that all dharmas do not occasion anything is the wishlessness gateway to liberation called the wishlessness meditative stabilization.
- 16.30 “The meditative stabilizations that are those three gateways to liberation are the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings. They should train in those three gateways to liberation.
- 16.31 “Furthermore, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings is this: the eleven knowledges. What are the eleven? They are knowledge of suffering, knowledge of origination, knowledge of cessation, knowledge of the path, knowledge of extinction, knowledge of nonproduction, knowledge of dharma, subsequent realization knowledge, conventional knowledge, knowledge of mastery, and knowledge in accord with sound.
- 16.32 “What is knowledge of suffering? The knowledge that suffering is not produced is called knowledge of suffering.
- 16.33 “What is knowledge of origination? The knowledge of the abandonment of origination is called knowledge of origination.
- 16.34 “What is knowledge of cessation? [F.161.a] The knowledge of the cessation of suffering is called knowledge of cessation.
- 16.35 “What is knowledge of the path? The knowledge of the eightfold noble path is called knowledge of the path.
- 16.36 “What is knowledge of extinction? It is the knowledge that greed, hatred, and confusion have been extinguished.

- 16.37 “What is knowledge of nonproduction? It is the knowledge that a form of life in suffering existence is not produced.
- 16.38 “What is knowledge of dharma? It is knowledge that knows decisively that the aggregates are artificial.<sup>292</sup>
- 16.39 “What is subsequent realization knowledge? It is knowledge that the eyes and the ears, nose, tongue, body, and thinking mind are impermanent. Connect this in the same way with the aggregates, constituents, and sense fields, up to all dharmas.
- 16.40 “What is conventional knowledge? It is knowledge of the thoughts of other beings and other persons by the thought to know them.
- 16.41 “What is knowledge of mastery? Knowledge of the path and knowledge of extinction is called knowledge of mastery.
- 16.42 “What is knowledge in accord with sound? It is a tathāgata’s knowledge of all sounds. It is knowledge, furthermore, by way of not apprehending anything.
“That, Subhūti, is the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings.
- 16.43 “Furthermore, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle of a bodhisattva great being is this: the three faculties. They are the faculty of coming to understand what one does not understand, the faculty of understanding, and the faculty of having understood.
- 16.44 “What is the faculty of coming to understand what one does not understand? The faith faculty, perseverance faculty, mindfulness faculty, meditative stabilization faculty, and wisdom faculty without appearances that tame the arrogance [F.161.b] of trainee persons who have not had a clear realization is called the faculty of coming to understand what one does not understand.
- 16.45 “What is the faculty of understanding? The faith faculty, perseverance faculty, mindfulness faculty, meditative stabilization faculty, and wisdom faculty of trainees who have understood is called the faculty of understanding.
- 16.46 “What is the faculty of having understood? The faith faculty, perseverance faculty, mindfulness faculty, meditative stabilization faculty, and wisdom faculty of nontrainee persons—worthy ones, pratyekabuddhas, bodhisattvas, and tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas—is called the faculty of having understood.
“That, Subhūti, is the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings.
- 16.47 “Furthermore, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings is this: the three meditative stabilizations. They are the meditative stabilization with applied thought and with sustained thought, the meditative stabilization without applied thought with only sustained thought, and the meditative stabilization without either applied or sustained thought.

- 16.48 “What is the meditative stabilization with applied thought and with sustained thought? Subhūti, here bodhisattva great beings detached from sense objects, detached from wrong unwholesome dharmas, perfectly accomplish and dwell in the first concentration that has applied thought and has sustained thought and joy and happiness born of detachment. That is called the meditative stabilization with applied thought and with sustained thought.
- 16.49 “What is the meditative stabilization without applied thought with only sustained thought? It is between the first concentration and the second concentration. That is called the meditative stabilization without applied thought with only sustained thought.
- 16.50 “What [F.162.a] is the meditative stabilization without either applied or sustained thought? It is from the second concentration, up to the station of the neither perception nor nonperception absorption. That is called the meditative stabilization without either applied or sustained thought.
“That, Subhūti, is the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings.
- 16.51 “Furthermore, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great being is this: the ten mindfulnesses. What are the ten? They are mindfulness of the Buddha, mindfulness of the Dharma, mindfulness of the Saṅgha, mindfulness of morality, mindfulness of giving away, mindfulness of the gods, mindfulness of disgust, mindfulness of death, mindfulness of what is included in the body, and mindfulness of breathing in and out. That mindfulness, furthermore, is by way of not apprehending anything.
“That, Subhūti, is the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings.
- 16.52 “Furthermore, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings is this: the four immeasurables.<sup>293</sup> What are the four? They dwell having pervaded the ten directions of a world that is vast because of the dharma-constituent and that extends as far as the space element with a vast, inclusive, infinite, nondual mind endowed with love without enmity, unrivaled, not harmful, and well cultivated.
- 16.53 “They dwell having pervaded the ten directions of a world as vast as the dharma-constituent and as far-reaching as the space element with a vast, inclusive, infinite, nondual mind endowed with compassion, endowed with joy, and endowed with equanimity without enmity, unrivaled, not harmful, and well cultivated.
“That, Subhūti, [F.162.b] is the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings.
- 16.54 “Furthermore, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings is this: the four concentrations.<sup>294</sup> What are the four?
- 16.55 “Detached from sense objects, detached from wrong unwholesome dharmas, they perfectly accomplish and dwell in the first concentration that has applied thought and has sustained thought and joy and happiness born of detachment.

- 16.56 “Relieved of applied thought and sustained thought, with an inner serene confidence and a mind that has become a single continuum, they perfectly accomplish and dwell in the second concentration that has joy and happiness born of a meditative stabilization without applied thought and without sustained thought.
- 16.57 “Because they are free from attachment to joy they abide in equanimity, and with equanimity and recollection and introspection they experience pleasure with their body, and they perfectly accomplish and dwell in the third concentration without enjoyment, about which the noble beings say, ‘They have equanimity and recollection and dwell in happiness.’
- 16.58 “Because they have forsaken pleasure, have earlier forsaken suffering, have set to rest mental happiness and mental unhappiness and have equanimity that is neither happiness nor suffering, and have an extremely pure equanimity and recollection, they perfectly accomplish and dwell in the fourth concentration.
- “That, Subhūti, is the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings.
- 16.59 “Furthermore, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings is this: the four formless absorptions. What are the four?
- 16.60 “Totally transcending perceptions of form, setting to rest perceptions of obstruction, not paying attention to perceptions of difference, in endless space they perfectly accomplish and dwell in the station of endless space.
- 16.61 “Totally transcending [F.163.a] the station of endless space, in endless consciousness they perfectly accomplish and dwell in the station of endless consciousness.
- 16.62 “Totally transcending the station of endless consciousness, in nothing-at-all they perfectly accomplish and dwell in the station of nothing-at-all.
- 16.63 “Totally transcending the station of nothing-at-all, in neither perception nor nonperception they perfectly accomplish and dwell in the station of neither perception nor nonperception.
- “That, Subhūti, is the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings.
- 16.64 “Furthermore, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings is this: the eight deliverances. What are the eight?
- 16.65 “With form they see forms. This is the first deliverance.
- “With the perception of form inside they see forms outside. This is the second deliverance.
- 16.66 “They have admiration for the pleasant. This is the third deliverance.
- “Totally transcending perceptions of form, setting to rest perceptions of obstruction, not paying attention to perceptions of difference, in endless space they perfectly accomplish and dwell in the station of endless space. This is the fourth deliverance.

- 16.67 “Totally transcending the station of endless space, in endless consciousness they perfectly accomplish and dwell in the station of endless consciousness. This is the fifth deliverance.
- 16.68 “Totally transcending the station of endless consciousness, in nothing-at-all they perfectly accomplish and dwell in the station of nothing-at-all. This is the sixth deliverance.
- 16.69 “Totally transcending the station of nothing-at-all, in neither perception nor nonperception they perfectly accomplish and dwell in the station of neither perception nor nonperception. This is the seventh deliverance.
- 16.70 “Totally transcending [F.163.b] the station of neither perception nor nonperception they perfectly accomplish and dwell in the cessation of perception and feeling. This is the eighth deliverance.
“That, Subhūti, is the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings.
- 16.71 “Furthermore, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings is this: the nine serial absorptions. What are the nine?
- 16.72 “Detached from sense objects, detached from wrong unwholesome dharmas, they perfectly accomplish and dwell in the first concentration that has applied thought and has sustained thought and joy and happiness born of detachment.
- 16.73 “Relieved of applied thought and sustained thought, with an inner serene confidence and a mind that has become a single continuum, they perfectly accomplish and dwell in the second concentration that has joy and happiness born of a meditative stabilization without applied thought and without sustained thought.
- 16.74 “Because they are free from attachment to joy they abide in equanimity, and with equanimity and recollection and introspection they experience happiness with their bodies, and they perfectly accomplish and dwell in the third concentration without joy, about which the noble beings say, ‘They have equanimity and recollection and dwell in happiness.’
- 16.75 “Because they have forsaken happiness, have earlier forsaken suffering, have set to rest mental happiness and mental unhappiness and have pure equanimity that is neither happiness nor suffering, and have recollection, they perfectly accomplish and dwell in the fourth concentration.
- 16.76 “Totally transcending perceptions of form, setting to rest perceptions of obstruction, not paying attention to perceptions of difference, thinking ‘it is endless space’ they perfectly accomplish and dwell in the station of endless space.
- 16.77 “Totally transcending the station of endless space, [F.164.a] thinking ‘it is endless consciousness’ they perfectly accomplish and dwell in the station of endless consciousness.

- 16.78 “Totally transcending the station of endless consciousness, in nothing-at-all they perfectly accomplish and dwell in the station of nothing-at-all.
- 16.79 “Totally transcending the station of nothing-at-all, in neither perception nor nonperception they perfectly accomplish and dwell in the station of neither perception nor nonperception.
- 16.80 “Totally transcending the station of neither perception nor nonperception they perfectly accomplish and dwell in the cessation of perception and feeling.
 “That, Subhūti, is the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings.
- 16.81 “Furthermore, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings is this: the ten powers of a tathāgata. What are the ten?
- 16.82 “Accurately knowing the possible as possible, and accurately knowing the impossible as impossible.
- 16.83 “Accurately knowing past, present, and future actions, and the place of the undertaking of the actions, and the results.<sup>295</sup>
- 16.84 “Accurately knowing the world with its various constituents and multiplicity of constituents.<sup>296</sup>
- 16.85 “Accurately knowing the various beliefs and many beliefs of other beings and other persons.
- 16.86 “Accurately knowing the stages of faculties and perseverance of other beings and other persons.
 “Accurately knowing the path wherever it goes.
- 16.87 “Accurately knowing the defilement and purification of all concentrations, deliverances, meditative stabilizations, and absorptions, and the emergence from them. [F.164.b]
- 16.88 “Accurately recollecting and knowing many various previous lives and knowing deaths and rebirths with the divine eye.
- 16.89 “Perfectly accomplishing and dwelling in a freedom in their minds that they have realized themselves in this very life with clairvoyance, a freedom and wisdom without outflows because of having put an end to outflows. They know, ‘Birth has come to an end for me. I have lived the pure life. My work is done. From now on there will be nothing like this.’ And that, furthermore, is by way of not apprehending anything.
 “That, Subhūti, is the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings.
- 16.90 “Furthermore, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings is this: the four fearlessnesses. What are the four?
- 16.91 “When I claim, ‘I am perfectly completely awakened,’ ah! I see no cause that would make me think that anyone in this world of beings, together with the gods, Māra, Brahmā, those leading a secluded religious life, and brahmins, could in truth argue there that these dharmas have not become perfectly, completely awakened. Because I do not see here that cause, I, who have found happiness, found fearlessness, and found a ground for self-confidence, claim the exalted status of the dominant bull. I roar the lion's perfect roar in the assembly. I, Brahmā-like, turn the wheel that no one in this world—not a god or Māra or Brahmā or one leading a secluded religious life or a brahmin—can in truth turn.

16.92 “When I claim, ‘I have put an end to outflows,’ ah! I see there no cause that would make me think that anyone in this world of beings, together with the gods, Māra, Brahmā, those leading a secluded religious life, and brahmins, could in truth argue, [F.165.a] ‘You have not put an end to those outflows.’ Because I do not see that cause here I have found happiness, found fearlessness, and found a ground for self-confidence, and I claim the exalted status of the dominant bull. I roar the lion's perfect roar in the assembly. I, Brahmā-like, turn the wheel that no one in this world—not a god or Māra or Brahmā or one leading a secluded religious life or a brahmin—can in truth turn.

16.93 “There are no grounds for those phenomena that I have explained to be hindrances not to become phenomena that hinder those who resort to them, so I see no cause that would make me think that anyone in this world of beings, together with the gods, Māra, Brahmā, those leading a secluded religious life, and brahmins, could in truth argue that even if they resort to them they do not become hindrances. Because I do not see any cause here, I have found happiness, found fearlessness, found a ground for self-confidence, and claim as my state the exalted state of the dominant bull. I roar the lion's perfect roar in the assembly. I, Brahmā-like, turn the wheel that no one in this world—not a god or Māra or Brahmā or one leading a secluded religious life or a brahmin—can in truth turn.

16.94 “There are no grounds for saying that the noble paths that I have said cause escape do not perfectly put an end to suffering when those escapes that perfectly put an end to the suffering of those who effect them have been accomplished. I see no cause that would make me think that anyone in this world of beings, together with the gods, Māra, Brahmā, those leading a secluded religious life, and brahmins, could in truth argue, ‘Even if they have been accomplished they do not put an end to outflows.’ [F.165.b] Because I do not see any cause here, I have found happiness, found fearlessness, found a ground for self-confidence, and claim as my state the exalted state of the dominant bull. I roar the lion's perfect roar in the assembly. I, Brahmā-like, turn the wheel that no one in this world—not a god or Māra or Brahmā or one leading a secluded religious life or a brahmin—can in truth turn. And that, furthermore, is by way of not apprehending anything.

16.95 “Furthermore, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings is this: the four detailed and thorough knowledges. What are the four? They are detailed and thorough knowledge of meanings, detailed and thorough knowledge of dharmas, detailed and thorough knowledge of creative explanations, and detailed and thorough knowledge of confidence giving a readiness to speak. It is knowledge, furthermore, by way of not apprehending anything.

“That, Subhūti, is the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings.

16.96 “Furthermore, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings is this: the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha. What are the eighteen?

16.97 Between the night when tathāgatas awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening and the night when they pass into complete nirvāṇa in the element of nirvāṇa without any aggregates left behind, while tathāgatas teach the world of beings together with the gods, Māra, Brahmā, those leading a secluded religious life, and brahmins, together with gods, humans, and asuras the path that puts an end to suffering, they do not go wrong, do not shout out, are not robbed of mindfulness, do not discriminate differences, do not have uncollected thoughts, [F.166.a] are not inconsiderately dispassionate, are not deficient in yearning, are not deficient in perseverance, are not deficient in recollection, are not deficient in meditative stabilization, are not deficient in wisdom, are not deficient in liberation, and are not deficient in seeing into knowledge of liberation.<sup>297</sup> All physical actions are preceded by knowledge and informed by knowledge, all verbal actions are preceded by knowledge and informed by knowledge, all mental actions are preceded by knowledge and informed by knowledge; they see past time with knowledge free from attachment and free from obstruction, they see future time with knowledge free from attachment and free from obstruction, and they see the present time with knowledge free from attachment and free from obstruction, and that, furthermore, by way of not apprehending anything.

“That, Subhūti, is the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings.

16.98 “Furthermore, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings is this: the dhāraṇī gateways. What are the dhāraṇī gateways? It is like this: there is the sameness of the way the letters work, the letters as gateways, and entrances through letters.

16.99 “What are the letters as gateways and entrance through letters? The letter a<sup>298</sup> is the gateway to all dharmas because they are unproduced from the very beginning (ādy-anutpannatvād); ra is a gateway to all dharmas because they are without dirt (rajas); pa is a gateway to all dharmas because they are ultimately (paramārtha) without distinctions;<sup>299</sup> tsa is a gateway to all dharmas because of the way death (cyavana) and rebirth are unfindable; na is a gateway to all dharmas because names (nāman) have gone, because of the way names are unfindable; la is a gateway to all dharmas because they transcend the ordinary world (loka), because the vine (latā) of craving and the causes and conditions have been destroyed; [F.166.b] da is a gateway to all dharmas because tamed (dānta) and staying tamed (damatha) have a certain limit; ba is a gateway to all dharmas because they are free from bonds (bandhana); ḍa is a gateway to all dharmas because disorder (ḍamara) has gone; sa is a gateway to all dharmas because attachment (saṅga)<sup>300</sup> is unfindable; wa is a gateway to all dharmas because the sound of speech paths (vāḅpatha) has been cut; ta is a gateway to all dharmas because they do not wander from suchness (tathatā); ya is a gateway to all dharmas because in fact (yathāvat) they are not produced; sta is a gateway to all dharmas because they have nothing to be pretentious about (stambha);<sup>301</sup> ka is a gateway to all dharmas because an agent (kāraḅa) is unfindable; sa is a gateway to all dharmas because they do not pass beyond sameness (samatā), and sameness is unfindable; ma is a gateway to all dharmas because taking something as 'mine' (mamakāra) is unfindable; ga is a gateway to all dharmas because going (gamana) is unfindable; tha is a gateway to all dharmas because a standing place ([s]thāna) is unfindable; dza is a gateway to all dharmas because birth (jāti) is unfindable; shwa is a gateway to all dharmas because breath (śvāsa) is unfindable; dha is a gateway to all dharmas because a dharma (dharma) is unfindable; śa is a gateway to all dharmas because calm abiding (śamatha) is unfindable; kha is a gateway to all dharmas because a state the same as the sky (kha) is unfindable; kṣa is a gateway to all dharmas because extinction (kṣaya) is unfindable; dzjnā is a gateway to all dharmas because knowledge (jñāna) is unfindable; ha is a gateway to all dharmas because a cause (hetu) is unfindable; bha is a gateway to all dharmas because destruction (bhaṅga) is unfindable; tsha [F.167.a] is a gateway to all dharmas because a beautiful skin color (chavi) is unfindable; sma is a gateway to all dharmas because mindfulness (smaraṅa) is unfindable; hva is a gateway to all dharmas because calling out (āhvāna) is unfindable; tsa is a gateway to all dharmas because eagerness (utsāha) for dharmas is unfindable; gha is a gateway to all dharmas because density (ghana) in dharmas is unfindable; ḥha is a gateway to all dharmas because establishment (viḥhapana) is unfindable; ṅa is a gateway to all dharmas because conflict (raṅa) is unfindable; pha is a gateway to all dharmas because a result (phala) is unfindable; ska is a gateway to all dharmas because aggregates (skandha) are unfindable; dza is a gateway to all dharmas because old age (jarā) is unfindable; tsa is a gateway to all dharmas because conduct (carāṇa) is unfindable; ṭa is a gateway to all dharmas because harm (ṭākara) is unfindable;<sup>302</sup> and ḍha is a gateway to all dharmas because grasping at something as 'I' ([ḍ]haṃkāra) is unfindable.

16.100 “There is no expression as a letter above and beyond these. And why? Because there is no name at all by which anything might be conventionally designated, or by which anything might be expressed, expounded, realized, or seen. Like this, Subhūti, you should understand that all dharmas are like space.

16.101 “Subhūti, this letter a, and so on, the entrance into the teaching, is the entrance through a dhāraṇī gateway.

16.102 “Subhūti, any bodhisattva great beings who come to know this skill in the letter a, and so on, will not become perplexed<sup>303</sup> whatever the sound, will succeed though the sameness of dharmas, and will gain skill in understanding sounds.

16.103 “Subhūti, you should know that there are twenty benefits for any bodhisattva great beings [F.167.b] who hear these spoken words stamped with the letter a, and so on, the letter a, and so on, that are the entry stamp,<sup>304</sup> and who, having heard them, with a continuum of mental certainty take them up, bear them in mind, read them out loud, and master and expound them in detail to others by way of not apprehending anything.

16.104 “What are the twenty? They will have mindfulness, will have intelligence, will have understanding, will have awareness, will have steadfastness, will have a sense of shame, will have wisdom, and will have a confidence giving a readiness to speak. They will also gain this dhāraṇī gateway with little difficulty, will not become tongue-tied and will not be of two minds, and will not become attracted even when they hear smooth words from somebody else, will not get offended when they hear harsh words, will not be uplifted and will not be put down, and will remain in an ordinary state. They will also become skilled in sounds, will become skilled in aggregates, will become skilled in constituents, will become skilled in sense fields, will become skilled in dependent origination, will become skilled in causes, will become skilled in conditions, will become skilled in the true nature of dharmas, will become skilled in knowing higher and lower faculties, will become skilled in knowing the thoughts of others, will become skilled in knowledge of the performance of miraculous power, will become skilled in knowing the divine eye, will become skilled in knowledge that recollects past lives, will become skilled in knowledge of death and rebirth, will become skilled in knowledge that outflows are extinguished, will become skilled in knowing what is possible and impossible, and will become skilled in going, skilled in returning, [F.168.a] and skilled in the ways of carrying themselves.

- 16.105 “That dhāraṇī gateway, Subhūti, the letter a, and so on, that are the entrance, is the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings.”
- 16.106 This was the sixteenth chapter, “Dhāraṇī Gateway,” of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.” [B13]

CHAPTER 17: LEVEL PURIFICATION

“Subhūti, in regard to what you have asked—‘How have bodhisattva great beings come to set out in the Great Vehicle?’—Subhūti, here bodhisattva great beings practicing the six perfections change place, going from level to level. And how do bodhisattva great beings practicing the six perfections change place, going from level to level? Like this: by all dharmas not changing place. And why? Because no dharma comes, or goes, or changes place, or is close to changing places. But even though they do not falsely project the level of those dharmas,<sup>305</sup> do not direct their thoughts toward them, they still do the purification<sup>306</sup> for a level, and they do not view those levels.

“And what is the bodhisattva great beings’ purification? Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings occupying the first level, Pramuditā, have to do ten purifications for that level. What are the ten? They are purification of the surpassing aspiration, and that by way of not apprehending anything; purification of the basis for beneficial work through not apprehending causal signs;<sup>307</sup> purification of the same state of mind toward all beings through not apprehending beings; purification of giving up things through not apprehending a gift, giver, or recipient; purification of serving spiritual friends because of not falsely projecting anything on account of them; [F.168.b] purification of seeking the doctrine through not apprehending any dharma; purification of constant renunciation through not apprehending a home; purification of longing for the body of a buddha through not apprehending the causal signs of the auspicious major and minor signs;<sup>308</sup> purification of an exposition of dharmas through not apprehending an analysis of dharmas; purification of preventing being puffed up with pride<sup>309</sup> through not apprehending a state of existence; and purification of making truth statements through not apprehending a statement. These, Subhūti, are the ten purifications bodhisattva great beings occupying the first level, Pramuditā, have to do.

- 17.3       “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings occupying the second level have to constantly pay attention to eight dharmas and focus on them in practice. What are the eight? They are completely pure morality, a feeling of appreciation and gratitude, a foundation of the power of patience, an experience of great delight and joy, not ignoring any being, being deeply moved by great compassion, great reverence because of venerating gurus with faith and by imagining them as the Teacher, and seeking the perfections through the practice of them. These, Subhūti, are the eight dharmas bodhisattva great beings occupying the second level have to constantly pay attention to and focus on in practice.
- 17.4       “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings occupying the third level have to keep on with five dharmas. What are the five? They have to keep on with great learning without complacency, and that without settling down on words; with expositions of the gift of Dharma without concern for material possessions but not falsely projecting anything on account of that; in raising up and transforming wholesome roots for the purification of a buddhafield but not falsely projecting anything on account of that; [F.169.a] with not feeling oppressed by immeasurable cycles of existence but not falsely projecting anything on account of that; and with an abiding sense of shame and embarrassment but not falsely projecting anything on account of those either. Bodhisattva great beings occupying the third level, Subhūti, have to keep on with these five dharmas.
- 17.5       “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings occupying the fourth level have to appropriate and keep ten dharmas and should not give them up. What are the ten? Not giving up dwelling in the forest, having few desires, contentment, not giving up the qualities of the ascetic or austerity, not giving up training, abhorring sense objects, production of a thought associated with nirvāṇa,<sup>310</sup> giving up all possessions, an unmixed mind,<sup>311</sup> and not relying on anything. These, Subhūti, are the ten dharmas a bodhisattva great being occupying the fourth level should not give up and that they have to appropriate and keep.
- 17.6       “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings occupying the fifth level have to avoid ten dharmas.<sup>312</sup> What are the ten? They have to avoid getting tied up with householders, avoid getting tied up with monks and nuns, stop envying status families, avoid places where people get together, stop bearing malice, stop praising themselves and disparaging others, stop the ten unwholesome actions, avoid haughtiness and pride in being superior, stop distortions, avoid doubt,<sup>313</sup> [F.169.b] and avoid the propensity for greed, hatred, and confusion. These, Subhūti, are the ten dharmas bodhisattva great beings occupying the fifth level should avoid.

- 17.7       “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings occupying the sixth level have to complete six dharmas. What are the six? They have to complete the six perfections. There are also another six dharmas they have to avoid. What are the six? They have to avoid śrāvaka states of mind, avoid pratyekabuddha states of mind, avoid wearied states of mind,<sup>314</sup> avoid feeling cowed when they see a beggar, avoid feeling unhappy about all the things they have given up, and not rebuff beggars. These, Subhūti, are the six dharmas bodhisattva great beings occupying the sixth level should avoid.
- 17.8       “Furthermore, Subhūti, there are twenty dharmas that bodhisattva great beings occupying the seventh level should not do. What are the twenty? They should not seize on a self, seize on a sentient being, seize on a living being, seize on a person, seize on annihilation, seize on permanence, perceive a causal sign, view that it is a cause, settle down on name and form, settle down on the aggregates, settle down on the sense fields, settle down on the constituents, settle down on the three realms, cling to the three realms, wallow in the three realms, settle down on the view that the Buddha should be resorted to, settle down on the view that the Dharma should be resorted to, settle down on the view that the Saṅgha should be resorted to, settle down on the view that morality is a place to resort to, or get depressed that [F.170.a] ‘all dharmas are empty’ and oppose emptiness. These, Subhūti, are the twenty dharmas that bodhisattva great beings occupying the seventh level should not do.
- 17.9       “Occupying the seventh level, they also have to complete exactly twenty dharmas. What are the twenty? They are the realization of emptiness, the actualization of signlessness, the knowledge of wishlessness, the purification of the three spheres, empathy and compassion for all beings, not looking down on those beings, viewing the sameness of all dharmas and not settling down on it, realizing the way things are perfect without falsely projecting anything on account of it, forbearance for nonproduction, the knowledge of nonproduction, the exposition of the one way things are, total destruction of thought constructions concerning all phenomena, reversal of views, reversal of afflictions, the level of meditation on calm abiding and skill in insight, a disciplined state of mind, a calmed state of mind, unobstructed knowledge, the attachment-free level,<sup>315</sup> and going as they want to any buddhafield. These, Subhūti, are the twenty dharmas that bodhisattva great beings occupying the seventh level should complete.
- 17.10       “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings occupying the eighth level have to complete four dharmas. What are the four? They have to read the minds of all beings, play with the clairvoyances, view the buddhafields and fully execute them exactly as they have seen them to be, and attend on the buddhas and properly contemplate the buddha bodies. These, Subhūti, are the four dharmas they should complete. Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings [F.170.b] occupying the eighth level have to complete four other dharmas. What are the four? They have to know higher and lower faculties, they have to purify a buddhafiield, they have to be constantly absorbed in the illusion-like meditative stabilization, and they have to intentionally appropriate an existence and bring into being a body in line with the outcome of the wholesome roots of beings. These, Subhūti, are the four other dharmas bodhisattva great beings occupying the eighth level have to complete.

17.11 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings occupying the ninth level have to complete twelve dharmas. What are the twelve? They are the assistance of unending prayers; success in line with the prayers that are made; understanding knowledge of the sounds of gods, nāgas, yakṣas, gandharvas, asuras, garuḍas, kinnaras, mahoragas, humans, and ghosts; understanding a river of confidence giving a readiness to speak; and perfect entry into a womb, a perfect family, a perfect social class and lineage, a perfect retinue, a perfect birth, perfect going forth, the perfect spreading out of a Bodhi tree, and the perfect completion of good qualities. These, Subhūti, are the twelve dharmas bodhisattva great beings occupying the ninth level have to complete.

17.12 “Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings occupying the tenth level have to be called just ‘tathāgata.’ ”

17.13 The Lord having said this, venerable Subhūti inquired of him, “Lord, [F.171.a] what is done in purification of the surpassing aspiration of bodhisattva great beings occupying the first level?”

17.14 The Lord replied, “With attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects, the full accomplishment of all wholesome roots, Subhūti, is the bodhisattva great beings’ purification of the surpassing aspiration.

17.15 “What is the purification of the same state of mind toward all beings? With attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects the full accomplishment of the four immeasurables—love, compassion, joy, and equanimity—Subhūti, is said to be the purification of the same state of mind toward all beings.

17.16 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ purification of giving up? Giving gifts to all beings without conceptualization, Subhūti, is said to be the purification of giving up.

17.17 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ purification of serving spiritual friends? There serving, attending on, and having great reverence for those spiritual friends, the spiritual friends of bodhisattva great beings who cause

- them to take up and enter into the knowledge of all aspects and establish them in it, Subhūti, are said to be the bodhisattva great beings' purification of serving spiritual friends.
- 17.18 "What is the bodhisattva great beings' purification of seeking the doctrine? There with a thought connected with the knowledge of all aspects they seek the doctrine and do not fall to the śrāvaka or pratyekabuddha level. That, Subhūti, is said to be the bodhisattva great beings' purification of seeking the doctrine. [F.171.b]
- 17.19 "What is the bodhisattva great beings' purification of constant renunciation? In all lifetimes they are aloof and renounced, they go forth to homelessness into the Tathāgata's doctrine, and nobody hinders them. - 17.33 "What is the bodhisattva great beings' [F.173.a] great learning without complacency? It is not being complacent, but rather thinking, 'I will bear in mind whatever the lord buddhas have spoken in this world system or in world systems all around in the ten directions.' That is the bodhisattva great beings' great learning without complacency.
- 17.34 "What is the bodhisattva great beings' exposition of the gift of Dharma without concern for material possessions? Bodhisattva great beings teach the Dharma, but without hoping for anything at all, even for personal

- awakening from the wholesome root that comes from the gift of Dharma. That is the bodhisattva great beings' exposition of the gift of Dharma without concern for material possessions.
- 17.35 "What is the bodhisattva great beings' raising up and transforming wholesome roots for the purification of a buddhafiield? They thoroughly establish<sup>316</sup> those wholesome roots that purify the field of their own and others' buddhafiields with whichever wholesome roots cause the purification of a buddhafiield. That is the bodhisattva great beings' raising up and transforming wholesome roots for the purification of a buddhafiield.
- 17.36 "What is the bodhisattva great beings' not feeling oppressed by immeasurable cycles of existence? In a stable state on account of wholesome roots, they bring beings to maturity with those wholesome roots on account of which they are stable, purify a buddhafiield, and never fall into feeling oppressed up until they have completed all the buddhadharmas and the knowledge of all aspects. That is the bodhisattva great beings' not feeling oppressed by immeasurable cycles of existence.
- 17.37 "What [F.173.b] is the bodhisattva great beings' abiding sense of shame and embarrassment? It is the abhorrence of śrāvaka and pratyekabuddha states of mind. That is the bodhisattva great beings' abiding sense of shame and embarrassment.
- 17.38 "What is the bodhisattva great beings' not giving up dwelling in the forest? It is the transcendence of the śrāvaka and pratyekabuddha levels. That is the bodhisattva great beings' not giving up dwelling in the forest.

- 17.40 "What is the bodhisattva great beings' contentment? Not falsely projecting even reaching the knowledge of all aspects. That is the bodhisattva great beings' contentment.
- 17.41 "What is the bodhisattva great beings' not giving up the qualities of the ascetic or austerity? It is this: forbearance for meditation on the deep dharmas. That is the bodhisattva great beings' not giving up the qualities of the ascetic or austerity.
- 17.42 "What is the bodhisattva great beings' not giving up training? It is where all training is without movement. That is the bodhisattva great beings' not giving up training.
- 17.43 "What is the bodhisattva great beings' abhorrence of sense objects? It is not producing desire realm states of mind.<sup>317</sup> That is the bodhisattva great beings' abhorrence [F.174.a] of sense objects.

- 17.44 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ production of a thought associated with nirvāṇa? It is this: not causing all the dharmas to come into being. That is the bodhisattva great beings’ production of a thought associated with nirvāṇa.
- 17.45 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ giving up all possessions? It is not grasping inner or outer dharmas. That is the bodhisattva great beings’ giving up all possessions.
- 17.46 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ unmixed mind?<sup>318</sup> Their minds not connecting with the foundations of consciousness is the bodhisattva great beings’ unmixed mind.
- 17.47 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ not relying on anything? Not paying attention to all things is the bodhisattva great beings’ not relying on anything.
- 17.48 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ avoidance of getting tied up with householders? It is this: roaming from buddhafiield to buddhafiield and miraculously taking birth, appearing with a shaved head and wearing saffron-colored robes. That is the bodhisattva great beings’ avoidance of getting tied up with householders.
- 17.49 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ avoidance of getting tied up with monks and nuns? They do not stay with monks and nuns even for as long as a finger snap, and when they are absent they do not worry.<sup>319</sup> That is the bodhisattva great beings’ avoidance of getting tied up [F.174.b] with monks and nuns.
- 17.50 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ stopping envying status families? Here, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings have to think as follows: ‘I have to supply all beings with their requirements for happiness. These beings here are happy just because of their own merits, so I should not think envious thoughts about this.’ That is the bodhisattva great beings’ stopping envying status families.
- 17.51 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ avoiding places where people get together? Bodhisattva great beings should not get together with people in any place where there might be śrāvakas or pratyekabuddhas, where the conversations might be connected with them, or where there might be the production of thoughts that are connected with them. That is the bodhisattva great beings’ avoiding places where people get together.
- 17.52 “How do bodhisattva great beings stop feeling malice? They do not give an opportunity for malicious thoughts or violent thoughts, and they do not give an opportunity for thinking about fighting or thinking about quarrelling. That is the bodhisattva great beings’ stopping feeling malice.

- 17.53 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ stopping praising themselves? Not viewing inner dharmas is the bodhisattva great beings’ stopping praising themselves.
- 17.54 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ stopping disparaging others? It is this: [F.175.a] not viewing outer dharmas. That is the bodhisattva great beings’ stopping disparaging others.
- 17.55 “How do bodhisattva great beings stop the ten unwholesome actions? Let alone the noble path, let alone awakening, because these ten unwholesome actions are even a hindrance to a good form of life, bodhisattva great beings stop them.
- 17.56 “How do bodhisattva great beings avoid pride in being superior? Let alone something additional that would make them think they are superior, because they do not view any dharma at all bodhisattva great beings avoid pride in being superior.
- 17.57 “How do bodhisattva great beings avoid haughtiness? It is because they do not view any real basis on which they could become haughty that bodhisattva great beings avoid haughtiness.
- 17.58 “How do bodhisattva great beings stop distortions? Given that real bases are unfindable, bodhisattva great beings stop distortions.
- 17.59 “How do bodhisattva great beings avoid the propensity for greed, hatred, and confusion?<sup>320</sup> It is because of not viewing a real basis for greed, hatred, and confusion that bodhisattva great beings avoid the propensity for greed, hatred, and confusion.
- 17.60 “What are the six dharmas bodhisattva great beings on the sixth level [F.175.b] have to complete? They are these six perfections: the perfection of giving, perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and perfection of wisdom. They have to complete those perfections. The lord buddhas, and śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas as well, having stood in these six perfections, have gone, are going, and will go to the other side of the five oceans of knowable things. What are the five? They are these: the past, the future, the present, the inexpressible, and the un compounded. Thus should bodhisattva great beings complete the six perfections.
- 17.61 “There bodhisattva great beings somehow have to avoid śrāvaka thought. And why? Because it is not the path to awakening.
- 17.62 “They have to avoid pratyekabuddha thought. And why? Because it is not the path to awakening.
- 17.63 “They have to avoid a wearied state of mind. And why? Because it is not the path to awakening.
- 17.64 “They should not feel cowed when they see a beggar. And why? Because it is not the path to awakening.

- 17.65 “They should not feel unhappy about all the things they have given up. And why? Because it is not the path to awakening.
- 17.66 “Having produced the first thought, from then on they should always give gifts and should not let that thought be in vain.
“They have to avoid those six dharmas.
- 17.67 “There bodhisattva great beings should somehow not seize on a self because a self absolutely does not exist. [F.176.a] Construe seize on a sentient being, seize on a living being, and seize on a person similarly as well. And why? Because they absolutely do not exist.
- 17.68 “There bodhisattva great beings should somehow not seize on annihilation. And why? Because all dharmas have not been produced, so no dharma at all is annihilated.
- 17.69 “There bodhisattva great beings should somehow not seize on permanence, because a dharma that is not produced is not permanent and is not annihilated.
- 17.70 “There bodhisattva great beings should somehow not perceive a causal sign, because defilement absolutely does not exist.
- 17.71 “There bodhisattva great beings should somehow not view it as a cause. And why? Because they do not consider that view.
- 17.72 “There bodhisattva great beings should somehow not settle down on name and form. And why? Because those things cannot be apprehended. Thus should bodhisattva great beings not settle down on name and form.
- 17.73 “Similarly, they should not settle down on the aggregates, constituents, and sense fields. And why? Because those dharmas do not exist through their intrinsic natures. Thus should they not settle down on the aggregates, constituents, and sense fields.
- 17.74 “There bodhisattva great beings should somehow not settle down on the three realms. And why? Because they do not exist through their intrinsic natures. Thus should they not settle down on the three realms.
- 17.75 “There bodhisattva great beings should somehow not cling to the three realms. And why? Because those things do not exist and cannot be apprehended. Thus should bodhisattva [F.176.b] great beings not cling to the three realms.
- 17.76 “There bodhisattva great beings should somehow not wallow in the three realms. And why? Because they have no intrinsic nature. Thus should bodhisattva great beings not wallow in the three realms.
- 17.77 “There bodhisattva great beings should somehow not resort to a view of the Buddha. And why? Because by resorting to a view of the Buddha they do not see the Buddha. Thus should bodhisattva great beings not resort to a view of the Buddha.

- 17.78 “There bodhisattva great beings should somehow not resort to a view of the Dharma. And why? Because by resorting to a view of the Dharma they do not see the Dharma. Thus should bodhisattva great beings not resort to a view of the Dharma.
- 17.79 “There bodhisattva great beings should somehow not resort to a view of the Saṅgha. And why? Because by resorting to a view of the Saṅgha they do not see the Saṅgha. Thus should bodhisattva great beings not resort to a view of the Saṅgha.
- 17.80 “There bodhisattva great beings should somehow not settle down on the view that morality is a place to resort to. And why? Because from resorting to a view of morality, morality does not become pure. Thus should bodhisattva great beings not settle down on the view that morality is a place to resort to.
- 17.81 “There bodhisattva great beings should somehow not get depressed that ‘all dharmas are empty,’ because they are empty of their own particular characteristics, not empty of emptiness. Thus should bodhisattva great beings [F.177.a] not get depressed that ‘all dharmas are empty.’
- 17.82 “There bodhisattva great beings should somehow not oppose emptiness, because the empty is an emptiness of its own particular characteristic, therefore emptiness does not oppose emptiness. Thus should bodhisattva great beings not oppose emptiness.
- 17.83 “There bodhisattva great beings should somehow realize emptiness, because the empty is the emptiness of emptiness, and they do not cause emptiness to be realized in emptiness. Thus should bodhisattva great beings realize emptiness.
- 17.84 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ actualization of signlessness? It is this: not paying attention to any dharma.
- 17.85 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ knowledge of wishlessness? It is this: that all beings in the three realms have no fixed position.
- 17.86 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ purification of the three spheres? It is this: the completion of the ten wholesome actions.
- 17.87 “What is the completion of the bodhisattva great beings’ empathy and compassion for all beings? It is this: gaining great compassion.
- 17.88 “How do bodhisattva great beings not look down on all beings? It is this: because of the purity of the field of beings.
- 17.89 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ view of the sameness of all dharmas? It is this: not adding to and not taking away from all dharmas.
- 17.90 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ realization of the way things are perfect? It is the absence of a realization of all dharmas.
- 17.91 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ [F.177.b] forbearance for nonproduction? The forbearance for all dharmas that are not produced, do not stop, and do not occasion anything is forbearance for nonproduction.

- 17.92 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ knowledge of nonproduction? The knowledge that name and form are not produced is the bodhisattva great beings’ knowledge of nonproduction.
- 17.93 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ exposition of the one way things are? The absence of habitual ideas about dual phenomena is the exposition of the one way things are.
- 17.94 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ total destruction of thought constructions? It is not entertaining any notion of any dharma.
- 17.95 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ reversal of views? It is the reversal of all the views of śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas.
- 17.96 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ reversal of afflictions? It is the forsaking of all residual impressions, connections, and afflictions.
- 17.97 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ level of calm abiding and insight? It is this: the knowledge of a knower of all aspects.
- 17.98 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ disciplined state of mind? It is not taking pleasure in the three realms.
- 17.99 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ calmed state of mind? It is when all six faculties do not radiate out.
- 17.100 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ unobstructed knowledge? It is obtaining the buddha eye.
- 17.101 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ knowledge that does not enter into attachment? It is remaining indifferent to the six sense fields.
- 17.102 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ going as they want to any field? It is displaying [F.178.a] a body wherever there is a circle of retainers.
- 17.103 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ reading the minds of all beings? It is knowing with their minds the minds and mental factors of all beings.
- 17.104 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ play with the clairvoyances? Playing with the clairvoyances, they roam from buddhafield to buddhafield in order to see the buddhas, but without entertaining any notion of a buddha.
- 17.105 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ viewing of the buddhafields? Without moving from any one buddhafield, they also appear in all buddhafields, but they do not entertain any notion of a buddhafield.
- 17.106 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ viewing the buddhafields and fully executing them exactly as they have seen them to be? Bestriding the level of a majestic wheel-turning emperor of world systems in a great billionfold world system, they abdicate in all those world systems in order to bring beings to maturity, but without falsely projecting anything.
- 17.107 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ attending on the buddhas? It is attending on the Dharma in order to look after beings.

- 17.108 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ properly contemplating the buddha bodies? It is properly contemplating the body of dharmas.
- 17.109 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ knowledge of higher and lower faculties? It is standing in the ten powers and knowing the completion of the faculties by all beings.
- 17.110 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ purification of a buddhafield? It is purifying [F.178.b] the minds of all beings by way of not apprehending anything.
- 17.111 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ illusion-like meditative stabilization? It is the meditative stabilization standing in which bodhisattva great beings do all that has to be done without mentally engaging any dharma.
- 17.112 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ constantly being absorbed in meditation? It is the bodhisattva great beings’ meditative stabilization that has arisen from maturation.<sup>321</sup>
- 17.113 “How do bodhisattva great beings bring into being a body in line with the outcome of the wholesome roots of beings? Here they appropriate a body, when and as they want to, in line with the outcome of the wholesome roots of beings.
- 17.114 “Why do bodhisattva great beings appropriate an existence when and as they want to? It is so they will bring beings to maturity.
- 17.115 “How is it that bodhisattva great beings have success in line with the prayers they have made? Here bodhisattva great beings have success in line with the prayers they have made because they have completed the six perfections.
- 17.116 “How is it that bodhisattva great beings have a knowledge that comprehends the sounds of gods, nāgas, yakṣas, gandharvas, asuras, garuḍas, kinnaras, mahoragas, humans, and ghosts? It is this: a detailed and thorough knowledge of creative explanations.
- 17.117 “How is it that bodhisattva great beings understand a river of confidence giving a readiness to speak? It is this: a detailed and thorough knowledge of the confidence giving a readiness to speak.
- 17.118 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ perfect entry into a womb? The bodhisattva great beings’ [F.179.a] taking birth here miraculously in all lifetimes is the bodhisattva great beings’ perfect entry into a womb.
- 17.119 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ perfect family? That bodhisattva great beings take birth in great families is the bodhisattva great beings’ perfect family.
- 17.120 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ perfect social class? That bodhisattva great beings take birth in great sāla tree–like royal families and great sāla tree–like brahmin families is the bodhisattva great beings’ perfect social class.

- 17.121 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ perfect lineage? That bodhisattva great beings descend on the mother’s side as have the bodhisattvas of the past is the bodhisattva great beings’ perfect lineage.
- 17.122 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ perfect retinue? It is this, namely, having established beings in awakening, they have just a retinue of bodhisattvas. That is the bodhisattva great beings’ perfect retinue.
- 17.123 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ perfect birth? At the moment of their birth, illumination spreads though all the world systems and causes them to shake in six ways. That is the bodhisattva great beings’ perfect birth.
- 17.124 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ perfect going forth? Bodhisattva great beings [F.179.b] go forth to homelessness with many one hundred thousand one hundred million billion beings, and those beings become definite in the three vehicles. That is the bodhisattva great beings’ perfect going forth.
- 17.125 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ perfect spreading out of a Bodhi tree? It has a golden root, a trunk made of beryl, and branches, leaves, and petals made of the seven precious stones. Those branches, leaves, and petals spread an illumination as far as the infinite world systems in the ten directions. That is the bodhisattva great beings’ perfect spreading out of a Bodhi tree.
- 17.126 “What is the bodhisattva great beings’ perfect completion of good qualities? The bodhisattva great beings’ purification of a buddhfield through bringing beings to maturity is the bodhisattva great beings’ perfect completion of good qualities.
- 17.127 “Why is it bodhisattva great beings occupying the tenth level have to be called just ‘tathāgata’? When bodhisattva great beings have completed all ten perfections, up to have completed the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, and knowledge of a knower of all aspects; have eliminated all residual impressions, connections, and afflictions; and have completed all buddha dharmas, because of that, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings occupying the tenth level have therefore to be called just ‘tathāgata.’ [F.180.a]
- 17.128 “Subhūti, what are the ten levels of bodhisattva great beings? Subhūti, here bodhisattva great beings practicing all six perfections with skillful means, trained in the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, up to practicing the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha pass beyond the Śuklavipaśyanā level<sup>322</sup> and pass beyond the Gotra level, Aṣṭamaka level, Darśana level, Tanū level, Vītarāga level, Kṛtāvin level, Pratyekabuddha level, and Bodhisattva level—that is to say, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings pass beyond these nine levels and stand on the buddha level. Those, Subhūti, are the ten levels of bodhisattva great beings.

17.129 This was the seventeenth chapter, “Level Purification,”<sup>323</sup> of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.”

18.           CHAPTER 18: THE EXPOSITION OF GOING FORTH IN THE GREAT VEHICLE

18.1       “Subhūti, in regard to what you have asked—‘From where<sup>324</sup> will the Great Vehicle go forth?’—it will go forth from the three realms and will stand wherever there is knowledge of all aspects, and it will stand, furthermore, by way of nonduality. And why? Because, Subhūti, these two dharmas—the Great Vehicle and the knowledge of all aspects—are not conjoined and not disjoined, are formless, cannot be pointed out, do not obstruct, and have only one mark—that is, no mark. And why? Because, Subhūti, a dharma without a mark is not going forth, nor will it go forth, nor has it gone forth. [F.180.b] Subhūti, someone who would assert that dharmas without marks go forth<sup>325</sup> might as well assert of suchness that it goes forth. Similarly, Subhūti, someone who would assert that dharmas without marks go forth might as well assert of the very limit of reality, the inconceivable element, the abandonment element, the detachment element, and the cessation element that they go forth. And why? Because, Subhūti, the intrinsic nature of suchness does not go forth from the three realms. And why? Because suchness is empty of the intrinsic nature of suchness.”

Connect this in the same way with each, up to the cessation element.

18.2       “Subhūti, someone who would assert that dharmas without marks go forth might as well assert of the emptiness of form that it goes forth. Subhūti, someone who would assert that dharmas without marks go forth might as well assert of the emptiness of feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness that it goes forth. And why? Because, Subhūti, the emptiness of form will not go forth from the three realms, and it will not stand in the knowledge of all aspects. The emptiness of feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness will not go forth from the three realms, and it will not stand in the knowledge of all aspects. And why? Because, Subhūti, form is empty of form, and feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is empty of consciousness.

18.3 “Subhūti, someone who would assert that dharmas without marks go forth might as well assert of the emptiness of the eyes that it goes forth. [F.181.a] Subhūti, someone who would assert that dharmas without marks go forth might as well assert of the emptiness of the ears ... the nose ... the tongue ... the body ... and the thinking mind that it goes forth. Similarly, Subhūti, someone who would assert that dharmas without marks go forth might as well assert of the emptiness of a form..., and the emptiness of a sound..., a smell..., a taste..., a feeling..., and a dharma...; the emptiness of the eye consciousness..., and the emptiness of the ear..., the nose..., the tongue..., the body..., and the thinking-mind consciousness...; the emptiness of eye contact..., and the emptiness of ear..., nose..., tongue..., body..., and thinking-mind contact; the emptiness of the feeling that arises from eye contact..., and the emptiness of the feeling that arises from ear..., nose..., tongue..., body..., and thinking-mind contact that it goes forth. And why? Because, Subhūti, the emptiness of the eyes will not go forth from the three realms, and it will not stand in the knowledge of all aspects. Connect this in the same way with each, up to the emptiness of the feeling that arises from thinking-mind contact will not go forth from the three realms, and it will not stand in the knowledge of all aspects. And why? Because, Subhūti, eyes are empty of eyes. Connect this in the same way with each, up to because the feeling that arises from thinking-mind contact is empty of the feeling that arises from thinking-mind contact.

18.4 “Subhūti, someone who would assert that dharmas without marks go forth might as well assert of a dream that it goes forth. Similarly, Subhūti, someone who would assert that dharmas without marks go forth might as well assert of an illusion, a mirage, an echo, an apparition, or a tathāgata’s [F.181.b] magical creation that it goes forth. And why? Because, Subhūti, the intrinsic nature of a dream will not go forth from the three realms, and it will not stand in the knowledge of all aspects, and similarly, Subhūti, because the intrinsic nature of an illusion, a mirage, an echo, an apparition, or a tathāgata’s magical creation will not go forth from the three realms, and it will not stand in the knowledge of all aspects. And why? Because, Subhūti, the intrinsic nature of a dream is empty of the intrinsic nature of a dream, the intrinsic nature of an illusion is empty of the intrinsic nature of an illusion, the intrinsic nature of a mirage is empty of the intrinsic nature of a mirage, the intrinsic nature of an echo is empty of the intrinsic nature of an echo, the intrinsic nature of an apparition is empty of the intrinsic nature of an apparition, and the intrinsic nature of a tathāgata’s magical creation is empty of the intrinsic nature of a tathāgata’s magical creation.

- 18.5        “Subhūti, someone who would assert that dharmas without marks go forth might as well assert of the perfection of giving that it goes forth. Similarly, Subhūti, someone who would assert that dharmas without marks go forth might as well assert of the perfection of morality, the perfection of patience, the perfection of perseverance, the perfection of concentration, or the perfection of wisdom that it goes forth. And why? Because, Subhūti, the intrinsic nature of the perfection of giving will not go forth from the three realms, and it will not stand in the knowledge of all aspects, and similarly, because the intrinsic nature of the perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and perfection of wisdom will not go forth [F.182.a] from the three realms, and it will not stand in the knowledge of all aspects. And why? Because, Subhūti, the intrinsic nature of the perfection of giving is empty of the intrinsic nature of the perfection of giving, and similarly, the intrinsic nature of the perfection of morality ... the perfection of patience ... the perfection of perseverance ... the perfection of concentration ... and the perfection of wisdom is empty of the intrinsic nature of the perfection of wisdom.
- 18.6        “Subhūti, someone who would assert that dharmas without marks go forth might as well assert of inner emptiness that it goes forth. Similarly, Subhūti, someone who would assert that dharmas without marks go forth might as well assert of ... up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature that it goes forth. And why? Because, Subhūti, the intrinsic nature of inner emptiness ... up to the intrinsic nature of the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature will not go forth from the three realms, and it will not stand in the knowledge of all aspects. And why? Because, Subhūti, the intrinsic nature of inner emptiness is empty of the intrinsic nature of inner emptiness ... up to the intrinsic nature of the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature is empty of the intrinsic nature of the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature.
- 18.7        “Subhūti, someone who would assert that dharmas without marks go forth might as well assert of the applications of mindfulness that they go forth. And why? Because, Subhūti, the intrinsic nature of the applications of mindfulness will not go forth from the three realms, and it will not stand in the knowledge of all aspects. And why? Because, Subhūti, the intrinsic nature of the applications of mindfulness is empty of the intrinsic nature of the applications of mindfulness. [F.182.b]
- 18.8        “Similarly, Subhūti, someone who would assert that dharmas without marks go forth might as well assert of the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, or the path that it goes forth.

And why? Because, Subhūti, the intrinsic nature of ... up to the path will not go forth from the three realms, and it will not stand in the knowledge of all aspects. And why? Because, Subhūti, the path is empty of the path.

18.9 “Similarly, Subhūti, someone who would assert that dharmas without marks go forth might as well assert of the ten powers, the four fearlessnesses, the four detailed and thorough knowledges, and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha that they go forth. And why? Because, Subhūti, the intrinsic nature of the buddhadharmas will not go forth from the three realms, and it will not stand in the knowledge of all aspects. And why? Because, Subhūti, the buddhadharmas are empty of the buddhadharmas.

18.10 “Subhūti, someone who would assert that dharmas without marks go forth might as well assert of the worthy ones that they go forth. And similarly, Subhūti, someone who would assert that dharmas without marks go forth might as well assert of the pratyekabuddhas, the bodhisattvas, and the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas that they go forth. And why? Because, Subhūti, the intrinsic nature of the worthy one, the intrinsic nature of the pratyekabuddha, the intrinsic nature of the bodhisattva, and the intrinsic nature of the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly [F.183.a] complete buddha will not go forth from the three realms, and it will not stand in the knowledge of all aspects. And why? Because, Subhūti, the intrinsic nature of the worthy one is empty of the intrinsic nature of the worthy one, the intrinsic nature of the pratyekabuddha is empty of the intrinsic nature of the pratyekabuddha, the intrinsic nature of the bodhisattva is empty of the intrinsic nature of the bodhisattva, and the intrinsic nature of the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha is empty of the intrinsic nature of the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha.

18.11 “Subhūti, someone who would assert that dharmas without marks go forth might as well assert of the result of stream enterer that it goes forth. And similarly, Subhūti, someone who would assert that dharmas without marks go forth might as well assert of the result of once-returner, the result of non-returner, the state of a worthy one, a pratyekabuddha’s awakening, the knowledge of path aspects, and the knowledge of all aspects that they go forth. And why? Because, Subhūti, the intrinsic nature of the result of stream enterer will not go forth from the three realms, and it will not stand in the knowledge of all aspects, and similarly, Subhūti, because the intrinsic nature of the result of once-returner, the result of non-returner, the state of a worthy one, a pratyekabuddha’s awakening, the knowledge of path aspects, and the knowledge of all aspects will not go forth from the three realms, and it will not stand in the knowledge of all aspects. And why? Because, Subhūti, the intrinsic nature of the result of stream enterer is empty of the intrinsic nature of the result of stream enterer, and similarly, Subhūti, because the intrinsic nature of the result of once-returner ... the result of non-returner ... the state of a worthy one ... a pratyekabuddha's awakening ... [F.183.b] the knowledge of path aspects ... and the knowledge of all aspects is empty of the intrinsic nature of the knowledge of all aspects.

18.12 “Subhūti, someone who would assert that dharmas without marks go forth might as well assert of a name that it goes forth. And similarly, Subhūti, someone who would assert that dharmas without marks go forth might as well assert of a causal sign ... a conventional term ... a communication ... or a designation that it goes forth. And why? Because, Subhūti, the intrinsic nature of a designation will not go forth from the three realms, and it will not stand in the knowledge of all aspects. And why? Because, Subhūti, a designation is empty of the intrinsic nature of a designation.

18.13 “Subhūti, someone who would assert that dharmas without marks go forth might as well assert of nonproduction that it goes forth. Subhūti, someone who would assert that dharmas without marks go forth might as well assert of nonstopping ... nondefilement ... nonpurification ... and not occasioning anything that it goes forth. And why? Because, Subhūti, the intrinsic nature of not occasioning anything will not go forth from the three realms, and it will not stand in the knowledge of all aspects. And why? Because, Subhūti, not occasioning anything is empty of the intrinsic nature of not occasioning anything.

18.14 “Thus, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle will not go forth from the three realms and will not stand in the knowledge of all aspects. That vehicle does not move. [B14]

18.15 “Subhūti, in regard to what you have asked<sup>326</sup>—‘Where will the Great Vehicle stand?’—that [F.184.a] vehicle will not stand anywhere. And why? Because no dharma stands. And yet, Subhūti, that vehicle will stand by way of not standing. Subhūti, it is like this: suchness does not stand or not stand, and similarly, Subhūti, this Great Vehicle does not stand or not stand either. Subhūti, it is like this: the very limit of reality and the inconceivable element do not stand or not stand, and similarly, Subhūti, this Great Vehicle does not stand or not stand either. And why? Because, Subhūti, the intrinsic nature of suchness does not stand or not stand, and the intrinsic nature of the very limit of reality and the inconceivable element does not stand or not stand. And why? Because the intrinsic nature of suchness is empty of the intrinsic nature of suchness, and similarly the intrinsic nature of the very limit of reality is empty of the intrinsic nature of the very limit of reality, and the intrinsic nature of the inconceivable element is empty of the intrinsic nature of the inconceivable element.

- 18.16      “Subhūti, it is like this: the space element does not stand or not stand, and similarly, Subhūti, this Great Vehicle does not stand or not stand either. Subhūti, it is like this: the abandonment element, detachment element, and cessation element do not stand or not stand, and similarly, Subhūti, this Great Vehicle does not stand or not stand either. And why? Because, Subhūti, the intrinsic nature of the space element does not stand or not stand, [F.184.b] and the intrinsic nature of the abandonment element, the intrinsic nature of the detachment element, and the intrinsic nature of the cessation element does not stand or not stand. And why? Because the intrinsic nature of the space element is empty of the intrinsic nature of the space element, the intrinsic nature of the abandonment element is empty of the intrinsic nature of the abandonment element, the intrinsic nature of the detachment element is empty of the intrinsic nature of the detachment element, and the intrinsic nature of the cessation element is empty of the intrinsic nature of the cessation element.
- 18.17      “Subhūti, it is like this: the emptiness of form does not stand or not stand, and similarly, Subhūti, this Great Vehicle does not stand or not stand either. Subhūti, it is like this: the emptiness of feeling, emptiness of perception, emptiness of volitional factors, and emptiness of consciousness does not stand or not stand, and similarly, Subhūti, this Great Vehicle does not stand or not stand either. And why? Because, Subhūti, the intrinsic nature of form does not stand or not stand, up to the intrinsic nature of consciousness does not stand or not stand. And why? Because form is empty of form, up to consciousness is empty of consciousness.
- 18.18      “Subhūti, it is like this: the emptiness of the eyes does not stand or not stand, up to the emptiness of the thinking mind does not stand or not stand, and similarly, Subhūti, this Great Vehicle does not stand or not stand either. And why? Because, Subhūti, the intrinsic nature of the eyes does not stand or not stand, [F.185.a] up to the intrinsic nature of the thinking mind does not stand or not stand. And why? Because the eyes are empty of eyes, up to the thinking mind is empty of thinking mind.
- 18.19      “Subhūti, it is like this: the emptiness of a form does not stand or not stand, up to the emptiness of a dharma does not stand or not stand, and similarly, Subhūti, this Great Vehicle does not stand or not stand either. And why? Because, Subhūti, the intrinsic nature of a form does not stand or not stand, up to the intrinsic nature of a dharma does not stand or not stand. And why? Subhūti, it is because a form is empty of a form, up to a dharma is empty of a dharma.
- 18.20      “Subhūti, it is like this: the emptiness of the eye consciousness does not stand or not stand, up to the emptiness of the thinking-mind consciousness does not stand or not stand, and similarly, Subhūti, this Great Vehicle does not stand or not stand either. And why? Because, Subhūti, the intrinsic nature of the eye consciousness does not stand or not stand, up to the intrinsic nature of the thinking-mind consciousness does not stand or not stand. And why? Subhūti, it is because the eye consciousness is empty of eye consciousness, up to the thinking-mind consciousness is empty of thinking mind consciousness.

18.21 “Subhūti, it is like this: the emptiness of eye contact does not stand or not stand, up to the emptiness of thinking-mind contact does not stand or not stand, and similarly, Subhūti, this Great Vehicle does not stand or not stand either. And why? Because, Subhūti, [F.185.b] the intrinsic nature of eye contact does not stand or not stand, up to the intrinsic nature of thinking-mind contact does not stand or not stand. And why? Subhūti, it is because eye contact is empty of eye contact, up to thinking-mind contact is empty of thinking-mind contact.

18.22 “Subhūti, it is like this: the emptiness of the feeling that arises from eye contact does not stand or not stand, up to the emptiness of the feeling that arises from thinking-mind contact does not stand or not stand, and similarly, Subhūti, this Great Vehicle does not stand or not stand either. And why, Subhūti? Because, Subhūti, the intrinsic nature of the feeling that arises from eye contact does not stand or not stand, up to the intrinsic nature of the feeling that arises from thinking-mind contact does not stand or not stand. And why? Subhūti, it is because the feeling that arises from eye contact is empty of the feeling that arises from eye contact, up to the feeling that arises from thinking-mind contact is empty of the feeling that arises from thinking-mind contact.

18.23 “Subhūti, it is like this: a dream does not stand or not stand, and similarly, Subhūti, this Great Vehicle does not stand or not stand either. Subhūti, it is like this: an illusion, mirage, echo, apparition, or tathāgata’s magical creation does not stand or not stand, and similarly, Subhūti, this Great Vehicle does not stand or not stand either. And why? Because, Subhūti, the intrinsic nature of a dream does not stand or not stand. And why? Because the intrinsic nature of a dream is empty of the intrinsic nature of a dream. [F.186.a] It is also because the intrinsic nature of an illusion, mirage, echo, apparition, and tathāgata’s magical creation does not stand or not stand. And why? Because the intrinsic nature of an illusion is empty of the intrinsic nature of an illusion, the intrinsic nature of a mirage is empty of the intrinsic nature of a mirage, the intrinsic nature of an echo is empty of the intrinsic nature of an echo, the intrinsic nature of an apparition is empty of the intrinsic nature of an apparition, and the intrinsic nature of a tathāgata’s magical creation is empty of the intrinsic nature of a tathāgata’s magical creation.

- 18.24 “Subhūti, it is like this: the perfection of giving does not stand or not stand, and similarly, Subhūti, this Great Vehicle does not stand or not stand either. Subhūti, it is like this: the perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and perfection of wisdom do not stand or not stand, and similarly, Subhūti, this Great Vehicle does not stand or not stand either. And why? Because, Subhūti, the intrinsic nature of the perfection of giving does not stand or not stand, and the intrinsic nature of the perfection of morality, the perfection of patience, the perfection of perseverance, the perfection of concentration, and the perfection of wisdom does not stand or not stand. And why? Because the intrinsic nature of the perfection of giving is empty of the intrinsic nature of the perfection of giving, up to and because the intrinsic nature of the perfection of wisdom is empty of the intrinsic nature of the perfection of wisdom.
- 18.25 “Subhūti, it is like this: inner emptiness does not stand or not stand, [F.186.b] and similarly, Subhūti, this Great Vehicle does not stand or not stand either. Subhūti, it is like this: ... up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature does not stand or not stand, and similarly, Subhūti, this Great Vehicle does not stand or not stand either. And why? Because, Subhūti, the intrinsic nature of inner emptiness does not stand or not stand, up to the intrinsic nature of the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature does not stand or not stand. And why? Because the intrinsic nature of inner emptiness is empty of the intrinsic nature of inner emptiness, up to and because the intrinsic nature of the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature is empty of the intrinsic nature of the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature.
- 18.26 “Subhūti, it is like this: the applications of mindfulness do not stand or not stand, and similarly, Subhūti, this Great Vehicle does not stand or not stand either. And why? Because, Subhūti, the intrinsic nature of the applications of mindfulness does not stand or not stand. And why? Because the intrinsic nature of the applications of mindfulness is empty of the intrinsic nature of the applications of mindfulness.
- 18.27 “Subhūti, it is like this: ... up to the eightfold noble path does not stand or not stand, and similarly, Subhūti, this Great Vehicle does not stand or not stand either. And why? Because, Subhūti, the intrinsic nature of the eightfold noble path does not stand or not stand. And why? It is because the path is empty of the path.
- 18.28 “Subhūti, it is like this: the ten powers of a tathāgata do not stand or not stand, up to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha [F.187.a] do not stand or not stand, and similarly, Subhūti, this Great Vehicle does not stand or not stand either. And why? Because, Subhūti, the intrinsic nature of the ten powers of a tathāgata does not stand or not stand, up to the intrinsic nature of the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha does not stand or not stand. And why? Because the ten powers of a tathāgata are empty of the ten powers of a tathāgata, up to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha are empty of the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha.

18.29 “Subhūti, it is like this: the worthy one with outflows extinguished does not stand or not stand, the pratyekabuddha does not stand or not stand, and similarly, Subhūti, this Great Vehicle does not stand or not stand either. And why? Because, Subhūti, the intrinsic nature of the worthy one does not stand or not stand, and the intrinsic nature of the pratyekabuddha does not stand or not stand. And why? Because the intrinsic nature of the worthy one is empty of the intrinsic nature of the worthy one, and the intrinsic nature of the pratyekabuddha is empty of the intrinsic nature of the pratyekabuddha.

18.30 “Subhūti, it is like this: a bodhisattva great being does not stand or not stand, the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha does not stand or not stand, and similarly, Subhūti, this Great Vehicle does not stand or not stand either. And why? Because, Subhūti, the intrinsic nature of the bodhisattva does not stand or not stand, and the intrinsic nature of the Tathāgata does not stand or not stand. [F.187.b] And why? Because the intrinsic nature of the bodhisattva is empty of the intrinsic nature of the bodhisattva, and the intrinsic nature of the Tathāgata is empty of the intrinsic nature of the Tathāgata.

18.31 “Subhūti, it is like this, the result of stream enterer does not stand or not stand, up to the state of a worthy one does not stand or not stand, a pratyekabuddha’s awakening does not stand or not stand, and similarly, Subhūti, this Great Vehicle does not stand or not stand either. And why? Because, Subhūti, the intrinsic nature of the result of stream enterer does not stand or not stand, up to the intrinsic nature of the state of a worthy one does not stand or not stand, and the intrinsic nature of a pratyekabuddha’s awakening does not stand or not stand. And why? Because the intrinsic nature of the result of stream enterer is empty of the intrinsic nature of the result of stream enterer, up to the intrinsic nature of the state of a worthy one is empty of the intrinsic nature of the state of a worthy one, and the intrinsic nature of a pratyekabuddha’s awakening is empty of the intrinsic nature of a pratyekabuddha’s awakening.

18.32 “Subhūti, it is like this: the knowledge of path aspects does not stand or not stand, and the knowledge of all aspects does not stand or not stand, and similarly, Subhūti, this Great Vehicle does not stand or not stand either. And why? Because, Subhūti, the intrinsic nature of the knowledge of path aspects does not stand or not stand, and the intrinsic nature of the knowledge of all aspects does not stand or not stand. And why? Because the intrinsic nature of the knowledge of path aspects is empty of the intrinsic nature of the knowledge of path aspects, and the intrinsic nature [F.188.a] of the knowledge of all aspects is empty of the intrinsic nature of the knowledge of all aspects.

18.33 “Subhūti, it is like this: a name does not stand or not stand, and similarly, Subhūti, this Great Vehicle does not stand or not stand either. Subhūti, it is like this: a causal sign, a conventional term, a communication, and a designation do not stand or not stand, and similarly, Subhūti, this Great Vehicle does not stand or not stand either. And why? Because, Subhūti, the intrinsic nature of a name does not stand or not stand, and the intrinsic nature of a causal sign, the intrinsic nature of a conventional term, the intrinsic nature of a communication, and the intrinsic nature of a designation does not stand or not stand. And why? Because the intrinsic nature of a name is empty of the intrinsic nature of a name, the intrinsic nature of a causal sign is empty of the intrinsic nature of a causal sign, the intrinsic nature of a conventional term is empty of the intrinsic nature of a conventional term, the intrinsic nature of a communication is empty of the intrinsic nature of a communication, and the intrinsic nature of a designation is empty of the intrinsic nature of a designation.

18.34 “Subhūti, it is like this: nonproduction does not stand or not stand, and similarly, Subhūti, this Great Vehicle does not stand or not stand either. Subhūti, it is like this: nonstopping, nondefilement, nonpurification, and not occasioning anything do not stand or not stand, and similarly, Subhūti, this Great Vehicle does not stand or not stand either. And why? Because, Subhūti, the intrinsic nature of nonproduction does not stand or not stand, and the intrinsic nature of nonstopping, nondefilement, nonpurification, and not occasioning anything [F.188.b] does not stand or not stand. And why? Because the intrinsic nature of nonproduction is empty of the intrinsic nature of nonproduction, the intrinsic nature of nonstopping ... nondefilement ... nonpurification ... and the intrinsic nature of not occasioning anything is empty of the intrinsic nature of not occasioning anything.

18.35 “Thus, Subhūti, that vehicle, standing by way of not standing and by way of not moving, will not stand anywhere.

18.36 “Subhūti, in regard to what you have asked<sup>327</sup>—‘Who will go forth in the Great Vehicle?’—no one will go forth in that vehicle. And why? Because, Subhūti, that vehicle, one who goes forth, that by which one goes forth, and from where one goes forth—all those dharmas do not exist and are not apprehended; and given that all the dharmas do not exist and are not apprehended, what dharma will go forth by means of what dharma?

18.37 “And why? Subhūti, it is because you cannot apprehend a self because a self is extremely<sup>328</sup> pure, and you cannot apprehend a sentient being, a living being, a person, one who does, one who feels, one who knows, or one who sees because they are extremely pure; you cannot apprehend suchness and you cannot apprehend the very limit of reality because they are extremely pure, and you cannot apprehend the inconceivable element because it is extremely pure; you cannot apprehend the aggregates, constituents, or sense fields because they are extremely pure; you cannot apprehend the perfection of giving because it is extremely pure, and similarly you cannot apprehend the perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, or perfection of wisdom because they are extremely pure; you cannot apprehend [F.189.a] inner emptiness because it is extremely pure, up to you cannot apprehend the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature because it is extremely pure; you cannot apprehend the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening because they are extremely pure; and you cannot apprehend the ten powers, the four fearlessnesses, the four detailed and thorough knowledges, and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha because they are extremely pure. Similarly, you cannot apprehend the stream enterer, once-returner, non-returner, worthy one, pratyekabuddha, bodhisattva, or tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha because they are extremely pure; and similarly, you cannot apprehend the result of stream enterer, the result of once-returner, the result of non-returner, the state of a worthy one, a pratyekabuddha’s awakening, the knowledge of path aspects, or the knowledge of all aspects because they are extremely pure.<sup>329</sup> You cannot apprehend nonproduction because it is extremely pure, and similarly, you cannot apprehend nonstopping, nondefilement, nonpurification, and not occasioning anything because they are extremely pure. You cannot apprehend a prior limit because it is extremely pure, and similarly you cannot apprehend a later limit or the present because they are extremely pure; similarly, you cannot apprehend coming, going, remaining, death, or birth because they are extremely pure, and similarly you cannot apprehend decrease and increase because they are extremely pure.

18.38 “What do you not apprehend such that all is not apprehended?

“It is because of not apprehending the dharma-constituent that all dharmas are not apprehended.<sup>330</sup> And why? Subhūti, because of not apprehending the dharma-constituent, the dharma-constituent is not apprehended; because of not apprehending nonproduction ... nonstopping ... [F.189.b] nondefilement ... nonpurification ... and not occasioning anything, not occasioning anything is not apprehended; because of not apprehending suchness, suchness is not apprehended; because of not apprehending the very limit of reality, the very limit of reality is not apprehended; because of not apprehending the perfection of giving, the perfection of giving is not apprehended, and because of not apprehending the perfection of morality ... the perfection of patience ... the perfection of perseverance ... the perfection of concentration ... and the perfection of wisdom, the perfection of wisdom is not apprehended; because of not apprehending inner emptiness, inner emptiness is not apprehended, up to because of not apprehending the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature is not apprehended; and because of not apprehending the applications of mindfulness, the applications of mindfulness are not apprehended. Similarly, because of not apprehending the right efforts ... the legs of miraculous power ... the faculties ... the powers ... the limbs of awakening ... and the path, the path is not apprehended; and similarly, because of not apprehending the ten powers ... the four fearlessnesses ... the four detailed and thorough knowledges ... and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha are not apprehended. Because of not apprehending a stream enterer, a stream enterer is not apprehended; because of not apprehending a once-returner ... a non-returner ... and a worthy one, a worthy one is not apprehended; because of not apprehending a pratyekabuddha, a pratyekabuddha is not apprehended, up to because of not apprehending a tathāgata, a tathāgata is not apprehended; and because of not apprehending the result of stream enterer ... the result of once-returner ... the result of non-returner ... [F.190.a] the state of a worthy one ... a pratyekabuddha's awakening ... and the state of a buddha, the state of a buddha is not apprehended. Similarly, because of not apprehending a level, the Pramuditā level is not apprehended; and because of not apprehending a level, because it is extremely pure, the Vimalā, Prabhākārī, Arciṣmatī, Sudurjayā, Abhimukhī, Dūraṅgamā, Acalā, Sādhumatī, and Dharmameghā levels are not apprehended. And also, because of not apprehending a level, ten levels are not apprehended. What are the ten? They are the first Śuklavipaśyanā level, the Gotra level, the Aṣṭamaka level, the Darśana level, the Tanū level, the Vītarāga level, the Kṛtāvin level, the Pratyekabuddha level, the Bodhisattva level, and the Buddha level.

18.39 “Because of inner emptiness the first level is not apprehended, up to because of the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, the first level is not apprehended; because it is extremely pure, because of inner emptiness, up to because of the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, up to the tenth level is not apprehended. Because it is extremely pure, because of inner emptiness, up to because of the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, bringing beings to maturity is not apprehended. Because it is extremely pure, because of inner emptiness, up to because of the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, purification of a buddhafield is not apprehended. Because they are extremely pure, because of inner emptiness, up to because of the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, the five eyes are not apprehended.

18.40      “Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom like that will go forth<sup>331</sup> in the Great Vehicle to the knowledge of all aspects by way of not apprehending all dharmas.” [F.190.b]

CHAPTER 19: SURPASSING

19.1 Then venerable Subhūti said to the Lord, “Lord, you say this—‘Great Vehicle’—again and again. It surpasses the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and goes forth. Is that why it is called a Great Vehicle?<sup>332</sup>

19.2 “Lord, that vehicle is equal to space. To illustrate, Lord, just as space has room for infinite, countless beings beyond measure, the Great Vehicle also, Lord, has room<sup>333</sup> for infinite, countless beings beyond measure. Such, Lord, is the Great Vehicle of bodhisattva great beings. Lord, you cannot apprehend the Great Vehicle coming, going, or remaining, you cannot apprehend a prior limit, cannot apprehend a later limit, and cannot apprehend a middle either.

19.3 “To illustrate, Lord, just as you cannot apprehend space coming, cannot apprehend it going, and cannot apprehend it remaining, you cannot apprehend the Great Vehicle coming, cannot apprehend it going, and cannot apprehend it remaining either.

19.4 “To illustrate, Lord, just as, because of the equality of the three time periods, you cannot apprehend space’s prior limit, cannot apprehend its later limit, and cannot apprehend its middle, similarly, Lord, you cannot apprehend the Great Vehicle’s prior limit, cannot apprehend its later limit, and cannot apprehend its middle either. This, Lord—that is, the Great Vehicle—is a vehicle equally of the three time periods. [F.191.a] That is why ‘Great Vehicle’ is said again and again.”

19.5 “Exactly so, Subhūti, exactly so!” the Lord replied. “The bodhisattva great beings’ Great Vehicle is this, namely, the six perfections—the perfection of giving, perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and perfection of wisdom. That is called the bodhisattva great beings’ Great Vehicle.

19.6 “Furthermore, Subhūti, the bodhisattva great beings’ Great Vehicle is this: all the dhāraṇī gateways, all the meditative stabilization gateways from the sūraṅgama meditative stabilization up to the ākāśaṃgavimuktinirupalepa

- meditative stabilization. That is called the bodhisattva great beings' Great Vehicle.
- 19.7 “Furthermore, Subhūti, the bodhisattva great beings' Great Vehicle is this: inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature. That is called the bodhisattva great beings' Great Vehicle.
- 19.8 “Furthermore, Subhūti, the bodhisattva great beings' Great Vehicle is this: the four applications of mindfulness, the four right efforts, the four legs of miraculous power, the five faculties, the five powers, the seven limbs of awakening, and the eightfold noble path, as well as the ten powers of a tathāgata, the four fearlessnesses, the four detailed and thorough knowledges, up to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha. That is called the bodhisattva great beings' Great Vehicle.
- 19.9 “Furthermore, Subhūti, where you have said, ‘This Great Vehicle [F.191.b] surpasses the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and goes forth,’ what is ‘the world with its gods, humans, and asuras,’ namely, the desire realm, form realm, and formless realm?
- 19.10 “Here, Subhūti, if the desire realm were to be factual, unmistaken, unaltered, not an error, suchness, the real, true, as things are, permanent, stable, eternal, qualified by not changing, and not nonexistent—this Great Vehicle would not surpass the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and go forth. Subhūti, it is because the desire realm is all a construction, a creation, a narrative, impermanent, unstable, not eternal, qualified by change, not existent, and nonexistent that this Great Vehicle surpasses the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and goes forth.
- 19.11 “Subhūti, if the form realm were to be factual, unmistaken, unaltered, not an error, suchness, the real, true, as things are, permanent, stable, eternal, qualified by being unchangeable, and not nonexistent—this Great Vehicle would not surpass the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and go forth. Subhūti, it is because the form realm is all a construction, a creation, a narrative, impermanent, unstable, not eternal, qualified by change, not existent, and nonexistent that this Great Vehicle [F.192.a] surpasses the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and goes forth.
- 19.12 “Subhūti, if the formless realm were to be factual, unmistaken, unaltered, not an error, suchness, the real, true, as things are, permanent, stable, eternal, qualified by not changing, and not nonexistent—this Great Vehicle would not surpass the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and go forth. Subhūti, it is because the formless realm is all a construction, a creation, a narrative, impermanent, unstable, not eternal, qualified by change, not existent, and nonexistent that this Great Vehicle surpasses the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and goes forth.

- 19.13      “Subhūti, if form were to be factual, unmistaken, unaltered, not an error, suchness, the real, true, as things are, permanent, stable, eternal, qualified by not changing, and not nonexistent—this Great Vehicle would not surpass the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and go forth. Subhūti, it is because form is all a construction, a creation, a narrative, impermanent, unstable, not eternal, qualified by change, not existent, and nonexistent that this Great Vehicle surpasses the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and goes forth.
- 19.14      “Similarly, Subhūti, if feeling, perception, volitional factors, [F.192.b] and consciousness were to be factual, unmistaken, unaltered, not an error, suchness, the real, true, as things are, permanent, stable, eternal, qualified by not changing, and not nonexistent—this Great Vehicle would not surpass the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and go forth. Subhūti, it is because ... consciousness is all a construction, a creation, a narrative, impermanent, unstable, not eternal, qualified by change, not existent, and nonexistent that this Great Vehicle surpasses the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and goes forth.
- 19.15      “Subhūti, connect this in the same way with if the eyes, ears, nose, tongue, body, and thinking mind; a form, a sound, a smell, a taste, a feeling, and a dharma; the eye consciousness, and ear, nose, tongue, body, and thinking-mind consciousness; eye contact, and ear, nose, tongue, body, and thinking-mind contact; and the feeling that arises from eye contact, and the feeling that arises from ear, nose, tongue, body, and thinking-mind contact were to be factual, unmistaken, unaltered, not an error, suchness, the real, true, as things are, permanent, stable, eternal, qualified by not changing, and not nonexistent—this Great Vehicle would not surpass the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and go forth. Subhūti, it is because ... the feeling that arises from thinking-mind contact [F.193.a] is all a construction, a creation, a narrative, impermanent, unstable, not eternal, qualified by change, not existent, and nonexistent that this Great Vehicle surpasses the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and goes forth.
- 19.16      “Subhūti, if the earth, water, fire, wind, space, and consciousness elements, as well as ignorance, volitional factors, consciousness, name and form, six sense fields, contact, feeling, craving, appropriation, existence, birth, and old age and death were to be factual, unmistaken, unaltered, not an error, suchness, the real, true, as things are, permanent, stable, eternal, qualified by not changing, and not nonexistent—this Great Vehicle would not surpass the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and go forth. Subhūti, it is because ... old age and death is all a construction, a creation, a - narrative, impermanent, unstable, not eternal, qualified by change, not existent, and nonexistent that this Great Vehicle surpasses the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and goes forth.

- 19.17 “Subhūti, if suchness were to be existent, not nonexistent, this Great Vehicle would not surpass the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and go forth. Subhūti, it is because suchness is nonexistent, not existent, that this Great Vehicle surpasses the world with its gods, humans, and asuras [F.193.b] and goes forth.
- 19.18 “Subhūti, if unmistaken suchness, unaltered suchness, the true nature of dharmas, the dharma-constituent, the establishment of dharmas, the certification of dharmas, the very limit of reality, and the inconceivable element were to be existent, not nonexistent, this Great Vehicle would not surpass the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and go forth. Subhūti, it is because unmistaken suchness, unaltered suchness, the true nature of dharmas, the dharma-constituent, the establishment of dharmas, the certification of dharmas, the very limit of reality, and the inconceivable element are nonexistent, not existent, that this Great Vehicle surpasses the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and goes forth.
- 19.19 “Subhūti, if the perfection of giving were to be existent, not nonexistent, this Great Vehicle would not surpass the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and go forth. Subhūti, it is because the perfection of giving is nonexistent, not existent, that this Great Vehicle surpasses the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and goes forth.
- 19.20 “Similarly, Subhūti, if the perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and perfection of wisdom were to be existent, not nonexistent, this Great Vehicle would not surpass the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and go forth. Subhūti, it is because ... the perfection of wisdom is nonexistent, [F.194.a] not existent, that this Great Vehicle surpasses the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and goes forth.
- 19.21 “Subhūti, if inner emptiness were to be existent, not nonexistent, this Great Vehicle would not surpass the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and go forth. Subhūti, it is because inner emptiness is nonexistent, not existent, that this Great Vehicle surpasses the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and goes forth.
- 19.22 “Similarly, Subhūti, if ... up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature were to be existent, not nonexistent, this Great Vehicle would not surpass the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and go forth. Subhūti, it is because ... up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature is nonexistent, not existent, that this Great Vehicle surpasses the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and goes forth.

- 19.23 “Subhūti, if the four applications of mindfulness were to be existent, not nonexistent, this Great Vehicle would not surpass the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and go forth. Subhūti, it is because the four applications of mindfulness are nonexistent, not existent, that this Great Vehicle surpasses the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and goes forth.
- 19.24 “Subhūti, if the four right efforts, four legs of miraculous power, five faculties, five powers, seven limbs of awakening, and eightfold noble path were to be existent, not nonexistent, this Great Vehicle would not surpass [F.194.b] the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and go forth. Subhūti, it is because ... the path is nonexistent, not existent, that this Great Vehicle surpasses the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and goes forth.
- 19.25 “Subhūti, if the immeasurables, concentrations, and formless absorptions were to be existent, not nonexistent, this Great Vehicle would not surpass the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and go forth. Subhūti, it is because the immeasurables, concentrations, and formless absorptions are nonexistent, not existent, that this Great Vehicle surpasses the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and goes forth.
- 19.26 “Subhūti, if the ten powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, and eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha were to be existent, not nonexistent, this Great Vehicle would not surpass the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and go forth. Subhūti, it is because ... the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha are nonexistent, not existent, that this Great Vehicle surpasses the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and goes forth.
- 19.27 “Subhūti, if the dharmas of the Gotra level were to be existent, not nonexistent, this Great Vehicle would not surpass the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and go forth. Subhūti, it is because the dharmas of the Gotra level are nonexistent, not existent, that this Great Vehicle surpasses the world [F.195.a] with its gods, humans, and asuras and goes forth.
- 19.28 “Subhūti, if the dharmas of the Aṣṭamaka level were to be existent, not nonexistent, this Great Vehicle would not surpass the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and go forth. Subhūti, it is because the dharmas of the Aṣṭamaka level are nonexistent, not existent, that this Great Vehicle surpasses the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and goes forth.
- 19.29 “Similarly, if the dharmas of a stream enterer, the dharmas of a once-returner, the dharmas of a non-returner, the dharmas of a worthy one, the dharmas of a pratyekabuddha, the dharmas of a bodhisattva, and, Subhūti, if the dharmas of a buddha were to be existent, not nonexistent, this Great Vehicle would not surpass the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and

- go forth. Subhūti, it is because ... the dharmas of a buddha are nonexistent, not existent, that this Great Vehicle surpasses the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and goes forth.
- 19.30 “Subhūti, if the Gotra level were to be existent, not nonexistent, this Great Vehicle would not surpass the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and go forth. Subhūti, it is because the Gotra level is nonexistent, not existent, that this Great Vehicle surpasses the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and goes forth.
- 19.31 “Similarly, if the Aṣṭamaka level, the stream enterer, the once-returned, the non-returned, the worthy one, the pratyekabuddha, [F.195.b] the bodhisattva, and, Subhūti, the buddha were to be existent, not nonexistent, this Great Vehicle would not surpass the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and go forth. Subhūti, it is because ... the buddha is nonexistent, not existent, that this Great Vehicle surpasses the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and goes forth.
- 19.32 “Subhūti, if the world with its gods, humans, and asuras were to be existent, not nonexistent, this Great Vehicle would not surpass the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and go forth. Subhūti, it is because the world with its gods, humans, and asuras is nonexistent, not existent, that this Great Vehicle surpasses the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and goes forth.
- 19.33 “Subhūti, if the bodhisattva great beings’ productions of the thought of awakening, starting from the first production of the thought, up to the site of awakening were to be existent, not nonexistent, this Great Vehicle would not surpass the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and go forth. Subhūti, it is because the bodhisattva great beings’ productions of the thought, starting from the first production of the thought, up to the site of awakening are nonexistent, not existent, that this Great Vehicle surpasses the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and goes forth.
- 19.34 “Subhūti, if the bodhisattva great beings’ vajra-like knowledge [F.196.a] were to be existent, not nonexistent, this Great Vehicle would not surpass the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and go forth. Subhūti, it is because the bodhisattva great beings’ vajra-like knowledge is nonexistent, not existent, that this Great Vehicle surpasses the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and goes forth.
- 19.35 “Subhūti, if the bodhisattva great beings’ vajra-like knowledge were to be existent, not nonexistent, bodhisattva great beings in this Great Vehicle would not, having realized that all residual impressions, connections, and afflictions are nonexistent, gain the knowledge of a knower of all aspects furnished with the best of all aspects and surpass the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and go forth. Subhūti, it is because the bodhisattva great beings' vajra-like knowledge is nonexistent, not existent, that bodhisattva great beings, having realized that all residual impressions, connections, and afflictions are nonexistent, gain the knowledge of a knower of all aspects furnished with the best of all aspects and surpass the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and go forth.

19.36 "Subhūti, if a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha's thirty-two major marks of a great individual were to be existent, not nonexistent, a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha's light, beautiful skin color, splendor, and glory would not surpass the world with its gods, humans, and asuras, and would not beautify it, [F.196.b] illuminate it, light it up, and irradiate it. Subhūti, it is because a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha's thirty-two major marks of a great person are nonexistent, not existent, that a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha's light, beautiful skin color, splendor, and glory surpass the world with its gods, humans, and asuras, and beautify it, illuminate it, light it up, and irradiate it.

19.37 "Subhūti, if a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha's light were to be existent, not nonexistent, a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha's light would not illuminate and pervade as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River. Subhūti, it is because a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha's light is nonexistent, not existent, that a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha's light illuminates and pervades as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River.

19.38 "Subhūti, if a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha's voice with sixty special qualities were to be existent, not nonexistent, a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha's speech would not be heard in infinite, countless world systems in the ten directions. Subhūti, it is because a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha's voice with sixty special qualities is nonexistent, not existent, that a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha's speech is heard [F.197.a] in infinite, countless world systems in the ten directions.

19.39 "Subhūti, if a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha's wheel of the Dharma were to be existent, not nonexistent, a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha could not turn the wheel of the Dharma that no followers of a secluded religious life, brahmins, gods, Māras, or Brahmās can in truth turn in the world. Subhūti, it is because a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha's wheel of the Dharma is nonexistent, not existent, that a tathāgata, worthy one, perfect complete buddha turns the wheel of the Dharma that no followers of a secluded religious life, brahmins, gods, Māras, or Brahmās can in truth turn in the world.

- 19.40 “Subhūti, if beings were to be existent, not nonexistent, those beings for whose sake a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha turns the wheel of the Dharma would not enter complete nirvāṇa in the element of nirvāṇa without any aggregates left behind. Subhūti, it is because beings are nonexistent, not existent, that those beings for whose sake a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha turns the wheel of the Dharma enter, have entered, and will enter complete nirvāṇa in the element of nirvāṇa without any aggregates left behind. [B15]
- 19.41 “Subhūti, you said, ‘The Great Vehicle is equal to space.’<sup>334</sup> It is exactly so, Subhūti, it is exactly so! [F.197.b] Subhūti, that vehicle is equal to space. To illustrate, an eastern direction of space does not make itself known, nor does a southern, western, or northern, below or above, or intermediate direction make itself known, and similarly, Subhūti, an eastern direction of the Great Vehicle also does not make itself known, nor does a southern, western, or northern, below or above, or intermediate direction make itself known. Therefore, it is said ‘that vehicle is equal to space.’
- 19.42 “To illustrate, Subhūti, space is not tall, is not short, is not square, is not spherical, is not even, and is not uneven. Similarly, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle also is not tall, is not short, is not square, is not spherical, is not even, and is not uneven. Therefore, it is said ‘that vehicle is equal to space.’
- 19.43 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, space is not blue, is not yellow, is not red, is not white, is not reddish brown, is not crystalline, and is not silver colored. Similarly, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle also is not blue, is not yellow, is not red, is not white, is not reddish brown, is not crystalline, and is not silver colored. Therefore, it is said ‘that vehicle is equal to space.’
- 19.44 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, space is not past, is not future, and is not present. Similarly, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle also is not past, is not future, and is not present. Therefore, it is said ‘that vehicle is equal to space.’
- 19.45 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, space does not decrease, does not increase, and is not reduced. Similarly, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle also does not decrease, does not increase, and is not reduced. Therefore [F.198.a] it is said ‘that vehicle is equal to space.’
- 19.46 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, space has no defilement and has no purification. Similarly, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle also has no defilement and has no purification. Therefore, it is said ‘that vehicle is equal to space.’
- 19.47 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, space is not produced, does not stop, is not lasting, is not nonlasting, and does not last and then change into something else. Similarly, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle also is not produced, does not stop, is not lasting, is not nonlasting, and does not last and then change into something else. Therefore, it is said ‘that vehicle is equal to space.’

- 19.48 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, space is not wholesome, is not unwholesome, is not an object of moral inquiry, and is not not an object of moral inquiry. Similarly, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle also is not wholesome, is not unwholesome, is not an object of moral inquiry, and is not not an object of moral inquiry. Therefore, it is said ‘that vehicle is equal to space.’
- 19.49 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, space is not seen, not heard, not remembered, and not discerned. Similarly, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle also is not seen, not heard, not remembered, and not discerned. Therefore, it is said ‘that vehicle is equal to space.’
- 19.50 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, space is not something that should be understood, is not something that should not be understood, is not something that should be thoroughly understood, is not something that should be abandoned, is not something that should be actualized, and is not something that should be cultivated. Similarly, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle also is not something that should be understood, is not something that should not be understood, is not something that should be thoroughly understood, is not something that should be abandoned, is not something that should be actualized, and is not something that should be cultivated. Therefore, [F.198.b] it is said ‘that vehicle is equal to space.’
- 19.51 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, space is not a maturation and is not subject to maturation. Similarly, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle also is not a maturation and is not subject to maturation. Therefore, it is said ‘that vehicle is equal to space.’
- 19.52 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, space is not included in the desire realm, is not included in the form realm, and is not included in the formless realm. Similarly, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle also is not included in the desire realm, is not included in the form realm, and is not included in the formless realm. Therefore, it is said ‘that vehicle is equal to space.’
- 19.53 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, space is not greedy and is not free from greed, is not hateful and is not free from hate, and is not confused and is not free from confusion. Similarly, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle also is not greedy and is not free from greed, is not hateful and is not free from hate, and is not confused and is not free from confusion. Therefore, it is said ‘that vehicle is equal to space.’
- 19.54 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, there is no first production of the thought of awakening in space, and there is no second, no third, no fourth, no fifth, no sixth, no seventh, no eighth, no ninth, and no tenth production of the thought. Similarly, Subhūti, there is no first production of the thought in the Great Vehicle, and there is no second, no third, no fourth, no fifth, no sixth, no seventh, no eighth, no ninth, and no tenth production of the thought. [F.199.a] Therefore, it is said ‘that vehicle is equal to space.’

- 19.55 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, there is no Śuklavipaśyanā level in space, and there is no Gotra level, no Aṣṭamaka level, no Darśana level, no Tanū level, no Vītarāga level, and no Kṛtāvin level. Similarly, Subhūti, there is no Śuklavipaśyanā level in the Great Vehicle, and there is no Gotra level, no Aṣṭamaka level, no Darśana level, no Tanū level, no Vītarāga level, and no Kṛtāvin level. Therefore, it is said ‘that vehicle is equal to space.’
- 19.56 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, there is no result of stream enterer in space, and there is no result of once-returner, no result of non-returner, no state of a worthy one, and no pratyekabuddha’s awakening. Similarly, Subhūti, there is no result of stream enterer in the Great Vehicle, and there is no result of once-returner, no result of non-returner, no state of a worthy one, and no pratyekabuddha’s awakening. Therefore, it is said ‘that vehicle is equal to space.’
- 19.57 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, there is no Śrāvaka level, no Pratyekabuddha level, and no Bodhisattva level in space, and neither is there a perfectly complete Buddha level in space. Similarly, Subhūti, there is no Śrāvaka level, no Pratyekabuddha level, and no Bodhisattva level in space, and neither is there a perfectly complete Buddha level in the Great Vehicle. Therefore, it is said ‘that vehicle is equal to space.’
- 19.58 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, space does not have form, is not formless, does not show itself, does not not show itself, is not obstructed, is not not obstructed, is not united, and is not separated. Similarly, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle [F.199.b] also does not have form, is not formless, does not show itself, does not not show itself, is not obstructed, is not not obstructed, is not united, and is not separated. Therefore, it is said ‘that vehicle is equal to space.’
- 19.59 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, space is not permanent, is not impermanent, is not pleasure, is not suffering, does not have a self, is not selfless, is not calm, and is not not calm. Similarly, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle also is not permanent, is not impermanent, is not pleasure, is not suffering, does not have a self, is not selfless, is not calm, and is not not calm. Therefore, it is said ‘that vehicle is equal to space.’
- 19.60 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, space is not empty, is not not empty, does not have a sign, is not signless, is not wished for, and is not wishless. Similarly, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle also is not empty, is not not empty, does not have a sign, is not signless, is not wished for, and is not wishless. Therefore, it is said ‘that vehicle is equal to space.’
- 19.61 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, space is not isolated, is not not isolated, is not light, and is not dark. Similarly, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle also is not isolated, is not not isolated, is not light, and is not dark. Therefore, it is said ‘that vehicle is equal to space.’

- 19.62 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, space is not found and is not apprehended.<sup>335</sup> Similarly, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle also is not found and is not apprehended. Therefore, it is said ‘that vehicle is equal to space.’
- 19.63 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, space is not discourse and is not not discourse. [F.200.a] Similarly, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle also is not discourse and is not not discourse. Therefore, it is said ‘that vehicle is equal to space.’
- 19.64 “Subhūti, where you said, ‘For example, Lord, just as space has room for infinite, countless beings beyond measure, the Great Vehicle also, Lord, has room for infinite, countless beings beyond measure, and that is why it is called a “Great Vehicle,”’<sup>336</sup> it is exactly so, Subhūti, it is exactly so! Subhūti, just as space has room for infinite, countless beings beyond measure, the Great Vehicle also, Subhūti, has room for infinite, countless beings beyond measure. And why? You should know, Subhūti, that because a being is not existent, space is not existent,<sup>337</sup> and you should know that because space is not existent, the Great Vehicle is not existent. It is because of that, Subhūti, that the Great Vehicle, therefore, has room for infinite, countless beings beyond measure. And why? Subhūti, it is because beings, the infinite, space, and a Great Vehicle [F.200.b] all cannot be apprehended.
- 19.65 “Furthermore, Subhūti, you should know that space is infinite because beings are infinite, and you should know that the Great Vehicle is infinite because spaces is infinite. Therefore, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle has room for infinite, countless beings beyond measure. And why? Subhūti, it is because beings, the infinite, space, and a Great Vehicle all cannot be apprehended.
- 19.66 “Furthermore, Subhūti, you should know that space is not something that can be counted because beings are not something that can be counted, and you should know that the Great Vehicle is not something that can be counted because space is not something that can be counted. Therefore, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle has room for infinite, countless beings beyond measure. And why? Subhūti, it is because beings, the countless, space, and a Great Vehicle all cannot be apprehended.
- 19.67 “Furthermore, Subhūti, you should know that space is beyond measure because beings are beyond measure, and you should know that the Great Vehicle is beyond measure because space is beyond measure. Therefore, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle has room for infinite, countless beings beyond measure. And why? Subhūti, it is because beings, that which is beyond measure, space, and a Great Vehicle all cannot be apprehended.
- 19.68 “Furthermore, Subhūti, you should know that the dharma-constituent is nonexistent because beings are nonexistent.<sup>338</sup> You should know that space is nonexistent because the dharma-constituent is nonexistent. nonexistent. You should know that the countless is nonexistent because the infinite is nonexistent, and you should know that that which is beyond measure is nonexistent because the countless is nonexistent. Therefore, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle has room for infinite, countless beings beyond measure. And why? Subhūti, it is because beings, the dharma-constituent, spaces, the Great Vehicle, [F.201.a] the infinite, the countless, and that which is beyond measure all cannot be apprehended.

19.69 “Furthermore, Subhūti, you should know that suchness is nonexistent because beings are nonexistent. You should know that space is nonexistent because suchness is nonexistent. You should know that the Great Vehicle is nonexistent because space is nonexistent. You should know that the infinite is nonexistent because the Great Vehicle is nonexistent. You should know that the countless is nonexistent because the infinite is nonexistent. You should know that that which is beyond measure is nonexistent because the countless is nonexistent, and you should know that all dharmas are nonexistent because that which is beyond measure is nonexistent. Therefore, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle has room for infinite, countless beings beyond measure. And why? Subhūti, it is because beings, suchness, space, the Great Vehicle, the infinite, the countless, that which is beyond measure, and all dharmas all cannot be apprehended.

19.70 “Furthermore, Subhūti, you should know that a sentient being is nonexistent because a self is nonexistent. You should know that a living being, a creature, one who lives, an individual, a person, one born of Manu, a child of Manu, one who does, one who feels, one who knows, and one who sees is nonexistent because a sentient being is nonexistent. You should know that the very limit of reality is nonexistent because ... one who knows and one who sees is nonexistent. You should know that space is nonexistent because the very limit of reality is nonexistent. You should know that the Great Vehicle is nonexistent because space is nonexistent. You should know that the infinite, the countless, and that which is beyond measure [F.201.b] are nonexistent because the Great Vehicle is nonexistent, and you should know that all dharmas are nonexistent because that which is beyond measure is nonexistent. Therefore, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle has room for infinite, countless beings beyond measure. And why? Subhūti, it is because a self, up to one who knows and one who sees, the very limit of reality, space, the Great Vehicle, the infinite, the countless, that which is beyond measure, up to all dharmas all cannot be apprehended.

nonexistent. Therefore, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle has room for infinite, countless beings beyond measure. And why? Subhūti, it is because a self, up to all dharmas all cannot be apprehended.

19.79 “Furthermore, Subhūti, you should know that a sentient being is nonexistent, up to one who knows and one who sees is nonexistent because a self is nonexistent. You should know that a buddha<sup>340</sup> is nonexistent because ... one who knows and one who sees is nonexistent. You should know that a bodhisattva is nonexistent because a buddha is nonexistent. You [F.204.a] should know that space is nonexistent because a bodhisattva is nonexistent. You should know that the Great Vehicle is nonexistent because space is nonexistent. You should know that the infinite, the countless, and that which is beyond measure are nonexistent because the Great Vehicle is nonexistent, and you should know that all dharmas are nonexistent because that which is beyond measure is nonexistent. Therefore, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle has room for infinite, countless beings beyond measure. And why? Subhūti, it is because a self, up to all dharmas all cannot be apprehended.

19.80 “Furthermore, Subhūti, you should know that a sentient being is nonexistent, up to one who knows and one who sees is nonexistent because a self is nonexistent. You should know that a pratyekabuddha vehicle is nonexistent because a śrāvaka vehicle is nonexistent. You should know that a buddha vehicle is nonexistent because a pratyekabuddha vehicle is nonexistent. You should know that a knowledge of all aspects is nonexistent because a buddha vehicle is nonexistent. You should know that space is nonexistent because a knowledge of all aspects is nonexistent. You should know that the Great Vehicle is nonexistent because space is nonexistent. You should know that the infinite, the countless, and that which is beyond measure are nonexistent because the Great Vehicle is nonexistent, and you should know that all dharmas are nonexistent because that which is beyond measure is nonexistent. Therefore, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle has room for infinite, countless beings beyond measure. And why? Subhūti, it is because a self, up to all dharmas all cannot be apprehended.

19.81 “To illustrate, Subhūti, just as the element of nirvāṇa has room for infinite, countless beings beyond measure, so too, Subhūti, [F.204.b] the Great Vehicle has room for infinite, countless beings beyond measure. By the same token, Subhūti, just as space has room for infinite, countless beings beyond measure, so too, Subhūti, the Great Vehicle has room for infinite, countless beings beyond measure.

- 19.82        “Subhūti, where you said, ‘Lord, you cannot apprehend the Great Vehicle coming, cannot apprehend it going, and cannot apprehend it remaining either,’<sup>341</sup> it is exactly so, Subhūti, it is exactly so! Subhūti, you cannot apprehend the Great Vehicle coming or going, and you cannot apprehend it remaining. And why? Because all dharmas are unmoving. They do not go anywhere, they do not come from anywhere, and they do not remain anywhere.
- 19.83        “And why? Because the basic nature of form does not come from anywhere, does not go anywhere, and does not remain anywhere, and the basic nature of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness does not come from anywhere, does not go anywhere, and does not remain anywhere. The suchness of form does not come from anywhere, does not go anywhere, and does not remain anywhere, and the suchness of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness does not come from anywhere, does not go anywhere, and does not remain anywhere. The intrinsic nature of form does not come from anywhere, does not go anywhere, and does not remain anywhere, and the intrinsic nature of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness does not come from anywhere, does not go anywhere, and does not remain anywhere. The mark of form does not come from anywhere, does not go anywhere, and does not remain anywhere, and the mark of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness [F.205.a] does not come from anywhere, does not go anywhere, and does not remain anywhere.
- 19.84        “Similarly, Subhūti, it is because the basic nature of the eyes does not come from anywhere, does not go anywhere, and does not remain anywhere, and the basic nature of the ears, nose, tongue, body, and thinking mind does not come from anywhere, does not go anywhere, and does not remain anywhere. Similarly, Subhūti, the suchness, intrinsic nature, and mark of the eyes do not come from anywhere, do not go anywhere, and do not remain anywhere, and the suchness, intrinsic nature, and mark of the ears, nose, tongue, body, and thinking mind do not come from anywhere, do not go anywhere, and do not remain anywhere.
- 19.85        “Subhūti, the basic nature, suchness, intrinsic nature, and mark of the earth element do not come from anywhere, do not go anywhere, and do not remain anywhere, and the basic nature, suchness, intrinsic nature, and mark of the water element, fire element, wind element, space element, and consciousness element do not come from anywhere, do not go anywhere, and do not remain anywhere.
- 19.86        “Subhūti, the basic nature of the dharma-constituent does not come from anywhere, does not go anywhere, and does not remain anywhere, and the suchness, intrinsic nature, and mark of the dharma-constituent do not come - from anywhere, do not go anywhere, and do not remain anywhere.

- 19.87 “Subhūti, the basic nature of suchness does not come from anywhere, does not go anywhere, and does not remain anywhere, and the suchness of suchness, intrinsic nature of suchness, and mark of suchness do not come from anywhere, do not go anywhere, and do not remain anywhere.
- 19.88 “Subhūti, [F.205.b] the basic nature of the very limit of reality does not come from anywhere, does not go anywhere, and does not remain anywhere, and the suchness of the very limit of reality, intrinsic nature of the very limit of reality, and mark of the very limit of reality do not come from anywhere, do not go anywhere, and do not remain anywhere.
- 19.89 “Subhūti, the basic nature of the inconceivable element does not come from anywhere, does not go anywhere, and does not remain anywhere, and the suchness of the inconceivable element, intrinsic nature of the inconceivable element, and mark of the inconceivable element do not come from anywhere, do not go anywhere, and do not remain anywhere.
- 19.90 “Subhūti, the basic nature of the perfection of giving does not come from anywhere, does not go anywhere, and does not remain anywhere, and the suchness of the perfection of giving, intrinsic nature of the perfection of giving, and mark of the perfection of giving do not come from anywhere, do not go anywhere, and do not remain anywhere. The basic nature of the perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and perfection of wisdom does not come from anywhere, does not go anywhere, and does not remain anywhere, and ... the suchness of the perfection of wisdom, intrinsic nature of the perfection of wisdom, and mark of the perfection of wisdom do not come from anywhere, do not go anywhere, and do not remain anywhere.
- 19.91 “Subhūti, the basic nature of the applications of mindfulness does not come from anywhere, does not go anywhere, and does not remain anywhere. Subhūti, the suchness of the applications of mindfulness, intrinsic nature of [F.206.a] the applications of mindfulness, and mark of the applications of mindfulness do not come from anywhere, do not go anywhere, and do not remain anywhere, and the basic nature of the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, eightfold noble path, ten powers of a tathāgata, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, six clairvoyances, and eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha does not come from anywhere, does not go anywhere, and does not remain anywhere. Similarly, ... the suchness of the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, intrinsic nature of the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, and mark of the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha do not come from anywhere, do not go anywhere, and do not remain anywhere.

- 19.92 “Subhūti, the basic nature of awakening does not come from anywhere, does not go anywhere, and does not remain anywhere, and the suchness of awakening, intrinsic nature of awakening, and mark of awakening do not come from anywhere, do not go anywhere, and do not remain anywhere.
- 19.93 “Subhūti, the basic nature of a buddha does not come from anywhere, does not go anywhere, and does not remain anywhere, and the suchness of a buddha, intrinsic nature of a buddha, and mark of a buddha do not come from anywhere, do not go anywhere, and do not remain anywhere.
- 19.94 “Subhūti, the basic nature of the compounded does not come from anywhere, does not go anywhere, and does not remain anywhere, and the suchness of the compounded, intrinsic nature of the compounded, and mark of the compounded do not come from anywhere, do not go anywhere, [F.206.b] and do not remain anywhere.
- 19.95 “Subhūti, the basic nature of the un-compounded does not come from anywhere, does not go anywhere, and does not remain anywhere, and the suchness of the un-compounded, intrinsic nature of the un-compounded, and mark of the un-compounded do not come from anywhere, do not go anywhere, and do not remain anywhere.
- 19.96 “Therefore, Subhūti, you cannot apprehend the Great Vehicle coming, cannot apprehend it going, and cannot apprehend it remaining either.
- 19.97 “Subhūti, where you said, ‘Lord, you cannot apprehend the Great Vehicle’s prior limit, cannot apprehend its later limit, and cannot apprehend its middle either. This is a vehicle equally of the three time periods. That is why “Great Vehicle” is said again and again,<sup>342</sup> it is exactly so, Subhūti, it is exactly so! You cannot apprehend the Great Vehicle’s prior limit, cannot apprehend its later limit, and cannot apprehend its middle either. This is a vehicle equally of the three time periods. Therefore ‘Great Vehicle’ is said again and again.
- 19.98 “And why? Because, Subhūti, the past time period is empty of the past time period, the future time period is also empty of the future time period, the present time period is also empty of the present time period, the equality of the three time periods is also empty of the equality of the three time periods, the Great Vehicle is also empty of the Great Vehicle, the bodhisattva is also empty of the bodhisattva, and, Subhūti, in emptiness there is no one, or two, or three, or four, or five, or six, or seven, or eight, or nine, or ten, or differentiation. Therefore, this is the vehicle of the bodhisattva great beings equally of the three time periods.
- 19.99 “In this [F.207.a] Great Vehicle you cannot apprehend same or not the same, you cannot apprehend greed or free from greed, you cannot apprehend hate or free from hate, you cannot apprehend confusion or free from confusion, you cannot apprehend name or nameless, and similarly you cannot apprehend wholesome or unwholesome, you cannot apprehend with outflows or without outflows, you cannot apprehend basic immorality or not basic immorality, you cannot apprehend blemished or unblemished, you cannot apprehend the ordinary or the extraordinary, you cannot apprehend defilement or purification, and you cannot apprehend saṃsāra or nirvāṇa. In it you also cannot apprehend permanence or impermanence, you also cannot apprehend happiness or suffering, you also cannot apprehend self or no self, and you also cannot apprehend calm or not calm. You also cannot apprehend the desire realm or beyond the desire realm, you also cannot apprehend the form realm or beyond the form realm, and you cannot apprehend the formless realm or beyond the formless realm.

19.100 “And why? Subhūti, it is because you cannot apprehend its intrinsic nature. A past form, Subhūti, is empty of a past form, and similarly a past feeling ... a past perception ... past volitional factors ... and a past consciousness is empty of a past consciousness. A future form, Subhūti, is empty of a future form, and similarly a future feeling ... a future perception ... future volitional factors ... and a future consciousness is empty of a future consciousness. A present form, Subhūti, is empty of a present form, and similarly a present feeling ... a present perception ... present volitional factors ... [F.207.b] and a present consciousness is empty of a present consciousness.

19.101 “And why? Because, Subhūti, you cannot apprehend a past form in emptiness. Given that you cannot apprehend even emptiness because it is empty of emptiness, how could you ever apprehend a past form in emptiness? You cannot apprehend a past feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness in emptiness, either. Given that you cannot apprehend even emptiness because it is empty of emptiness, how could you ever apprehend a past feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness in emptiness?

19.102 “Similarly, you cannot apprehend a future form in emptiness. Given that you cannot apprehend even emptiness because it is empty of emptiness, how could you ever apprehend a future form in emptiness? You cannot apprehend a future feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness in emptiness, either. Given that you cannot apprehend even emptiness because it is empty of emptiness, how could you ever apprehend a future feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness in emptiness?

19.103 “Similarly, you cannot apprehend a present form in emptiness. Given that you cannot apprehend even emptiness because it is empty of emptiness, how could you ever apprehend a present form in emptiness? You cannot apprehend a present feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness in emptiness, either. Given that you cannot apprehend even emptiness because it is empty of emptiness, how could you ever apprehend a present feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness in emptiness?

19.104 “Subhūti, you cannot apprehend the perfection of giving at the prior limit; Subhūti, you cannot apprehend the perfection of giving [F.208.a] at the later limit, and, Subhūti, you cannot apprehend the perfection of giving in the present. Subhūti, you cannot apprehend the perfection of giving in the equality of the three periods of time, either. Subhūti, you cannot apprehend the past period of time in the equality, you cannot apprehend the future period of time in the equality, and you cannot apprehend the present period of time in the equality. Given that you cannot apprehend even equality in the equality, how could you ever apprehend the past, future, or present perfection of giving in the equality?

19.105 “Subhūti, you cannot apprehend the perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, or perfection of concentration at the prior limit, the later limit, or in the present; Subhūti, you cannot apprehend the perfection of wisdom at the prior limit, the later limit, or in the present, either... . You cannot apprehend the perfection of wisdom in the equality of the three periods of time, either. Subhūti, given that you cannot apprehend the past, future, and present periods of time in the equality, and you cannot apprehend even equality in the equality, how could you ever apprehend the past, future, or present perfection of wisdom in the equality?

19.106 “Furthermore, Subhūti, you cannot apprehend the applications of mindfulness at the prior limit, the later limit, or in the middle;<sup>343</sup> you cannot apprehend the applications of mindfulness in the equality of the three periods of time, either. Subhūti, given that you cannot apprehend the past, future, or present periods of time in the equality, and you cannot apprehend even equality in the equality, how could you ever apprehend the past, future, or present applications of mindfulness in the equality?

19.107 “Similarly, Subhūti, you cannot apprehend the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, [F.208.b] path, ten powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, or eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha at the prior limit, the later limit, or in the middle. You cannot apprehend ... up to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha in the equality of the three periods of time, either. Subhūti, given that you cannot apprehend the past time period, you cannot apprehend the future time period, and you cannot apprehend the present time period in the equality, and you cannot apprehend even equality in the equality, how could you ever apprehend ... up to the past, future, and present eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha in the equality?

- 19.108 “Furthermore, Subhūti, you cannot apprehend an ordinary person at the prior limit, you cannot apprehend an ordinary person at the later limit, and you cannot apprehend an ordinary person in the present. You cannot apprehend an ordinary person in the equality of the three periods of time, either. And why? Subhūti, it is because a being cannot be found.
- 19.109 “Furthermore, Subhūti, you cannot apprehend a śrāvaka at the prior limit, you cannot apprehend a pratyekabuddha or a bodhisattva at the prior limit, and you cannot apprehend a tathāgata at the prior limit... . You cannot apprehend a tathāgata at the later limit, and you cannot apprehend a tathāgata in the present. You cannot apprehend a tathāgata in the equality of the three periods of time, either. And why? Subhūti, it is because a tathāgata cannot be found.
- 19.110 “Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings standing in the perfection of wisdom like that, training in the equality of the three periods of time like that, should complete the knowledge of all aspects.
- 19.111 “This, Subhūti, is the Great Vehicle named equally of the three time periods of the bodhisattva great beings, standing in which bodhisattva great beings surpass [F.209.a] the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and go forth to the knowledge of all aspects.”<sup>344</sup>
- 19.112 Then venerable Subhūti said to the Lord, “Excellent, Lord, it is excellent, this eloquent statement you have made, Lord, that it is the Great Vehicle named equally of the three time periods of the bodhisattva great beings. Lord, past bodhisattva great beings, having trained in this Great Vehicle, gained the knowledge of all aspects. Lord, future bodhisattva great beings will also train in this Great Vehicle and gain the knowledge of all aspects. And, Lord, infinite, countless bodhisattva great beings beyond measure, presently in infinite, countless world systems beyond measure in the ten directions, are training in this Great Vehicle and are gaining the knowledge of all aspects. Therefore, Lord, it is the Great Vehicle of the bodhisattva great beings, because it is the vehicle called equally of the three time periods.”
- 19.113 Venerable Subhūti having spoken thus, the Lord said to him, “Exactly so, Subhūti, exactly so. It is just as you say. Past, future, and present tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas also train in this Great Vehicle and gained, will gain, and are gaining the knowledge of all aspects.”
- 19.114 This was the nineteenth chapter, “Surpassing,”<sup>345</sup> of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.” [F.209.b] [B16]

CHAPTER 20: NOT TWO

- 20.1 Then venerable Pūrṇa Maitrāyaṇīputra said to the Lord, “Lord, tasked<sup>346</sup> with the perfection of wisdom by the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete Buddha, this elder Subhūti thinks he has to give instruction in the Great Vehicle.”
- 20.2 Venerable Subhūti then said to the Lord, “Let it not be the case, Lord, that I am giving instruction in the Great Vehicle, having violated the perfection of wisdom.”
- 20.3 “No, you have not,” replied the Lord. “You are giving instruction in the Great Vehicle in harmony with the perfection of wisdom. And why? Because, Subhūti, śrāvaka dharmas, pratyekabuddha dharmas, bodhisattva dharmas, or buddha dharmas—or any wholesome dharmas, whatever they are—they all come together and stream into the perfection of wisdom.”
- 20.4 Subhūti then asked, “Lord, what are the wholesome dharmas on the side of awakening in the perfection of wisdom in which śrāvaka dharmas, pratyekabuddha dharmas, bodhisattva dharmas, and buddha dharmas all come together, and into which they stream?”<sup>347</sup>
- 20.5 The Lord replied, “The four applications of mindfulness, four right efforts, four legs of miraculous power, five faculties, five powers, seven limbs of awakening, and eightfold noble path; emptiness meditative stabilization, signless meditative stabilization, and wishless meditative stabilization; the four concentrations, four immeasurables, and four formless absorptions; [F.210.a] the perfection of giving, perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and perfection of wisdom; the ten tathāgata powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, great love, great compassion, and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha; and constant dwelling in the natural state not robbed of mindfulness and in equanimity—these, Subhūti, are the wholesome dharmas on the side of awakening in the perfection of wisdom in which śrāvaka dharmas, pratyekabuddha dharmas, bodhisattva dharmas, and buddha dharmas all come together, and into which they stream.

20.6 “Subhūti, whatever the dharma—the Great Vehicle, perfection of wisdom, perfection of concentration, perfection of perseverance, perfection of patience, perfection of morality, and perfection of giving; form, feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness; eyes, a form, eye consciousness, eye contact, feeling from the condition of eye contact; ears ... nose ... tongue ... body ... and thinking mind, a dharma, thinking-mind consciousness, thinking-mind contact, and the feeling from the condition of thinking-mind contact; the applications of mindfulness, right efforts, legs of miraculous power, [F.210.b] faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, path, tathāgata powers, fearlessnesses, and detailed and thorough knowledges; emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness; compounded dharmas and uncompounded dharmas; suffering, origination, cessation, and path; the desire realm, form realm, and formless realm; from inner emptiness up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature; the meditative stabilizations, dhāraṇī gateways, up to the distinct attributes of a buddha, the tathāgata, the Dharma and Vinaya spoken by the tathāgata, the dharma-constituent, suchness, very limit of reality, the inconceivable element, and nirvāṇa—all these dharmas are not conjoined, are not disjoined, are formless, cannot be pointed out, do not obstruct, and have only one mark—that is, no mark. In this way, Subhūti, you give instruction in the Great Vehicle in accord with the perfection of wisdom.

20.7 “And why? Because, Subhūti, it is not that the Great Vehicle is one thing and the perfection of wisdom another, or the perfection of concentration, perfection of perseverance, perfection of patience, perfection of morality, and perfection of giving one thing and the Great Vehicle another, or the applications of mindfulness one thing and the Great Vehicle another; so the Great Vehicle and those applications [F.211.a] of mindfulness are not two, nor are they divided, up to it is not that the Great Vehicle is one thing and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha another; so the Great Vehicle and those distinct attributes of a buddha are not two, nor are they divided. It is because of this, Subhūti, that by giving instruction in the Great Vehicle you have given instruction in the perfection of wisdom, and by giving instruction in the perfection of wisdom you have given instruction in the Great Vehicle.”

20.8 Then venerable Subhūti said to the Lord, “But still, Lord, one does not assert a bodhisattva at the prior limit, one does not assert a bodhisattva at the later limit, and one does not assert a bodhisattva in the middle. One has to know the limitlessness of a bodhisattva through the limitlessness of form, and one has to know the limitlessness of a bodhisattva through the limitlessness of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness. Lord, even such an idea as 'form is a bodhisattva' does not exist<sup>348</sup> and is not found; even such ideas as 'feeling...,' 'perception...,' 'volitional factors...,' and 'consciousness is a bodhisattva' do not exist and are not found. So, Lord, I, who thus do not see and do not find a bodhisattva great being as anyone at all in any way at all—to which bodhisattva great being will I give advice and instruction in which perfection of wisdom?

20.9 "You say this, Lord, that is, 'bodhisattva.' It is just a word. To illustrate, Lord, you say 'self' again and again, but it absolutely has not come into being. [F.211.b] Similarly, Lord, you say 'bodhisattva' again and again, but a bodhisattva absolutely has not come into being. Lord, given that all phenomena thus have no intrinsic nature, what is that form that has come into being? What is that feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness that has come into being? Lord, what has not come into being is not form, and what has not come into being is not feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness. Lord, you cannot apprehend those bodhisattva great beings who would practice for awakening other than those who have not come into being, so does what has not come into being give advice and instruction in a perfection of wisdom that has not come into being?

20.10 "Lord, one should know that when the mind of a bodhisattva given such instruction is not cowed, does not tense up, does not experience regret, and does not tremble, feel frightened, or become terrified, then that bodhisattva great being is practicing the perfection of wisdom."

20.11 Śāriputra then asked venerable Subhūti, "Why, Venerable Subhūti, does one not assert a bodhisattva at the prior limit, does one not assert a bodhisattva at the later limit, and does one not assert a bodhisattva in the middle? Why, Venerable Subhūti, should one know the limitlessness of a bodhisattva through the limitlessness of form, and why should one know the limitlessness of a bodhisattva through the limitlessness of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness? Why, Venerable Subhūti, does even such an idea as 'a bodhisattva is form' not exist and why is it not found, [F.212.a] and why do even such ideas as 'feeling...,' 'perception...,' 'volitional factors...,' and 'consciousness is a bodhisattva' not exist and why are they not found? Why, Venerable Subhūti, do you say, 'So Lord, I, who thus do not see and do not find a bodhisattva great being as anyone at all in any way at all—to which bodhisattva great being will I give advice and instruction in which perfection of wisdom?' Why, Venerable Subhūti, do you go so far as to say,<sup>349</sup> 'You say this, Lord, that is, "bodhisattva." It is just a word'? Why, Venerable Subhūti, do you say, 'For example, Lord, you say "self" again and again, but it absolutely has not come into being. Similarly,

Lord, you say “bodhisattva” again and again, but a bodhisattva absolutely has not come into being? Why, Venerable Subhūti, do you say, ‘Lord, given that all dharmas thus are the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, what is that form that has come into being?<sup>350</sup> What is that feeling..., perception..., volitional factors..., and consciousness that has come into being? Lord, what has not come into being is not form, and what has not come into being is not feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness?’ Why, Venerable Subhūti, do you say, ‘Lord, does what has not come into being give advice and instruction in a perfection of wisdom that has not come into being?’ Why, Venerable Subhūti, do you say, ‘Lord, you cannot apprehend bodhisattva great beings [F.212.b] who would practice for awakening other than those who have not come into being?’ And why, Venerable Subhūti, do you say, ‘Lord, one should know that when the mind of a bodhisattva given such instruction is not cowed, does not tense up, does not experience regret, and does not tremble, feel frightened, or become terrified, then that bodhisattva great being is practicing the perfection of wisdom?’”

20.13 “Venerable Śāriputra, because form is nonexistent one does not assert a bodhisattva at the prior limit. Venerable Śāriputra, because form is empty, form is isolated, and form has no intrinsic nature, one does not assert a bodhisattva at the prior limit. Similarly, because feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and because consciousness is nonexistent, one does not assert a bodhisattva at the prior limit. Because consciousness is empty, consciousness is isolated, and consciousness has no intrinsic nature, one does not assert a bodhisattva at the prior limit.

20.14 “Venerable Śāriputra, because the perfection of giving is nonexistent, one does not assert a bodhisattva at the prior limit. Venerable Śāriputra, because the perfection of giving is empty, the perfection of giving is isolated, and the perfection of giving has no intrinsic nature, one does not assert a bodhisattva at the prior limit. Similarly, because the perfection of morality ... [F.213.a] the perfection of patience ... the perfection of perseverance ... the perfection of concentration ... and because the perfection of wisdom is nonexistent, one does not assert a bodhisattva at the prior limit. Because the perfection of wisdom is empty, the perfection of wisdom is isolated, and the perfection of wisdom has no intrinsic nature, one does not assert a bodhisattva at the prior limit.

- 20.15 “And why? Venerable Śāriputra, it is because you cannot apprehend a prior limit, a later limit, or a middle in emptiness; emptiness is not one thing, a bodhisattva another, and a prior limit, a later limit, and a middle another, so, Venerable Śāriputra, therefore, all these—emptiness, a bodhisattva, a prior limit, a later limit, and a middle—are not two, nor are they divided.
- 20.16 “Venerable Śāriputra, because of this one of many explanations, one does not assert a bodhisattva at the prior limit, at the later limit, or in the middle.
- 20.17 “Venerable Śāriputra, nonexistence is not one thing, emptiness another, isolation another, having no intrinsic nature another, a bodhisattva another, the perfection of giving another, the perfection of morality another, the perfection of patience another, the perfection of perseverance another, the perfection of concentration another, the perfection of wisdom another, and a prior limit, a later limit, and a middle another, so, Venerable Śāriputra, therefore, all these—nonexistence, emptiness, isolation, having no intrinsic nature, the six perfections, a bodhisattva, [F.213.b] a prior limit, a later limit, and a middle—are not two, nor are they divided.
- 20.18 “Venerable Śāriputra, because of this one of many explanations, one does not assert a bodhisattva at the prior limit, at the later limit, or in the middle.
- 20.19 “And why? Venerable Śāriputra because inner emptiness is nonexistent, one does not assert a bodhisattva at the prior limit, up to because emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature is nonexistent, one does not assert a bodhisattva at the prior limit, at the later limit, or in the middle.
- 20.20 “And why? Venerable Śāriputra, it is because one does apprehend a prior limit, a later limit, or a middle in the nonexistence of inner emptiness, the emptiness of inner emptiness, or the isolation of inner emptiness, or any intrinsic nature of inner emptiness, up to it is because they cannot apprehend a prior limit, a later limit, or a middle in the nonexistence of emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, the emptiness of emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, or the isolation of emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, or any intrinsic nature of emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature. The nonexistence, emptiness, isolation, and no intrinsic nature of inner emptiness is not one thing, up to the nonexistence, emptiness, isolation, and no intrinsic nature of emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature is not another, a bodhisattva another, and a prior limit, a later limit, and a middle another, so, Venerable Śāriputra, therefore, all these—the nonexistence, emptiness, isolation, and no intrinsic nature of inner emptiness, up to the nonexistence, emptiness, isolation, and no intrinsic nature of emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, a bodhisattva, a prior limit, a later limit, and a middle—are not two, nor are they divided. [F.214.a]

- 20.21 “Venerable Śāriputra, because of this one of many explanations, one does not assert a bodhisattva at the prior limit, at the later limit, or in the middle.
- 20.22 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, because the applications of mindfulness are nonexistent, one does not assert a bodhisattva at the prior limit, at the later limit, or in the middle; because the applications of mindfulness are empty, the applications of mindfulness are isolated, and the applications of mindfulness have no intrinsic nature, one does not assert a bodhisattva at the prior limit, at the later limit, or in the middle either.
- 20.23 “Similarly, because the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and path, powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, and distinct attributes of a buddha are nonexistent one does not assert a bodhisattva at the prior limit, at the later limit, or in the middle. Similarly, connect this with because the distinct attributes of a buddha are empty, the distinct attributes of a buddha are isolated, and the distinct attributes of a buddha have no intrinsic nature, one does not assert a bodhisattva at the prior limit, at the later limit, or in the middle.
- 20.24 “And why? Venerable Śāriputra, it is because one cannot apprehend a prior limit, a later limit, or a middle in nonexistence, in emptiness, in isolation, or in no intrinsic nature. Nonexistence is not one thing, emptiness another, isolation another, not having an intrinsic nature another, the applications of mindfulness another, up to the distinct attributes of a buddha another, and a prior limit, a later limit, and a middle another, so, Venerable Śāriputra, therefore, all these—the nonexistence, [F.214.b] emptiness, isolation, and no intrinsic nature of the applications of mindfulness, up to the distinct attributes of a buddha, a prior limit, a later limit, and a middle—are not two, nor are they divided.
- 20.25 “Venerable Śāriputra, because of this one of many explanations, one does not assert a bodhisattva at the prior limit, at the later limit, or in the middle.
- 20.26 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, because all the meditative stabilizations are nonexistent ... because all the dhāraṇī gateways are nonexistent ... because the dharma-constituent is nonexistent ... because suchness is nonexistent ... and because the very limit of reality is nonexistent, the very limit of reality is empty, the very limit of reality is isolated, and the very limit of reality has no intrinsic nature, one does not assert a bodhisattva at the prior limit, at the later limit, or in the middle.
- 20.27 “And why? Venerable Śāriputra, it is because one does apprehend a prior limit, a later limit, or a middle in the nonexistence of the meditative stabilizations, in the nonexistence of the very limit of reality, up to in the nonexistence of the absence of an intrinsic nature of the very limit of reality. Venerable Śāriputra, nonexistence is not one thing, emptiness another, isolation another, not having an intrinsic nature another, a bodhisattva another, up to the very limit of reality another, and a prior limit, a later limit, and a middle another, so, Venerable Śāriputra, therefore, as anything at all in any way at all, these—nonexistence, emptiness, isolation, and no intrinsic nature, meditative stabilization, up to the very limit of reality, a bodhisattva, a prior limit, a later limit, and a middle—are not two, nor are they divided.

20.29 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, [F.215.a] because śrāvakas are nonexistent, one does not assert a bodhisattva at the prior limit, at the later limit, or in the middle; because śrāvakas are empty, isolated, and have no intrinsic nature, one does not assert a bodhisattva at the prior limit, at the later limit, or in the middle; and because pratyekabuddhas are nonexistent, bodhisattvas are nonexistent, the knowledge of all aspects is nonexistent, the knowledge of all aspects is empty, the knowledge of all aspects is isolated, and the knowledge of all aspects has no intrinsic nature, they do not assert a bodhisattva at the prior limit, at the later limit, or in the middle.

20.30 “And why? Venerable Śāriputra, it is because one cannot apprehend a prior limit, a later limit, or a middle in nonexistence, emptiness, isolation, and no intrinsic nature. Nonexistence, emptiness, isolation, and not having an intrinsic nature are not one thing, and bodhisattvas, śrāvakas, and pratyekabuddhas another, the knowledge of all aspects another, and a prior limit, a later limit, and a middle another, so, Venerable Śāriputra, therefore, all these—the nonexistence, emptiness, isolation, and no intrinsic nature, śrāvakas, pratyekabuddhas, bodhisattvas, and buddhas—they are not two, nor are they divided.

20.32 “Venerable Śāriputra, in regard to what you asked—‘Why, Venerable Subhūti, should one know the limitlessness of a bodhisattva through the limitlessness of form, and why should one know the limitlessness of a bodhisattva through the limitlessness of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness?’—Venerable Śāriputra, [F.215.b] form is equal to space, and feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are equal to space. And why? To illustrate, Venerable Śāriputra, one cannot apprehend a limit, a middle, or an end in space, but still space works as a conventional label. Similarly, Venerable Śāriputra, because form is empty, one cannot apprehend the prior limit, one cannot apprehend the later limit, and one cannot apprehend the middle of form, because one cannot apprehend the end or the middle of emptiness. Similarly, Venerable Śāriputra, because feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are empty one cannot apprehend the prior limit, one cannot apprehend the

- later limit, and one cannot apprehend the middle of feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness, because one cannot apprehend the end or the middle of emptiness.
- 20.33 “Venerable Śāriputra, because of this one of many explanations one should know the limitlessness of a bodhisattva through the limitlessness of form, and should know the limitlessness of a bodhisattva through the limitlessness of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness.
- 20.34 “Similarly, Venerable Śāriputra, the constituents, sense fields, applications of mindfulness, right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and path, and the ten powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, and distinct attributes of a buddha, are equal to space.
- 20.35 “And why? To illustrate, Venerable Śāriputra, because the limitless is boundless<sup>352</sup> one cannot apprehend an end or a middle of space, but still space works as a conventional label. Similarly, Venerable Śāriputra, because of the emptiness of ... up to the buddhadharmas, [F.216.a] one cannot apprehend the end or the middle of the buddhadharmas, because one cannot apprehend the end or the middle of emptiness.
- 20.36 “Venerable Śāriputra, because of this one of many explanations one should know the limitlessness of a bodhisattva through the limitlessness of the buddhadharmas.
- 20.37 “Venerable Śāriputra, in regard to what you asked—‘Why, Venerable Subhūti, does even such an idea as “a bodhisattva is form” not exist and why is it not found, and why does even such an idea as “feeling...,” “perception...,” “volitional factors...,” and “consciousness is a bodhisattva” not exist and why is it not found?’—Venerable Śāriputra, form is empty of form. Venerable Śāriputra, feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is empty of consciousness.
- 20.38 “And why? Because, Venerable Śāriputra, in emptiness form does not exist and is not found; in emptiness a bodhisattva does not exist and is not found. Similarly, in emptiness feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness do not exist and are not found. In emptiness a bodhisattva does not exist and is not found.
- 20.39 “Venerable Śāriputra, because of this one of many explanations, even such an idea as ‘a bodhisattva is form’ does not exist and is not found, and even such an idea as ‘a bodhisattva is feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness’ does not exist and is not found.
- 20.40 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, the perfection of giving is empty of the perfection of giving. Venerable Śāriputra, the perfection of morality ... the perfection of patience ... the perfection of perseverance ... the perfection of concentration ... and the perfection of wisdom is empty of the perfection of wisdom.

20.41 “And why? Because, Venerable Śāriputra, in emptiness the perfection of wisdom [F.216.b] does not exist and is not found; in emptiness a bodhisattva does not exist and is not found.

20.42 “Venerable Śāriputra, inner emptiness is empty of inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature is empty of the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature. The applications of mindfulness are empty of the applications of mindfulness. The right efforts ... the legs of miraculous power ... the faculties ... the powers ... the limbs of awakening ... and the path; ... and the ten powers ... the fearlessnesses ... the detailed and thorough knowledges ... and the distinct attributes of a buddha are empty of the distinct attributes of a buddha. The dharma-constituent is empty of the dharma-constituent, suchness is empty of suchness, the very limit of reality is empty of the very limit of reality, and the inconceivable element is empty of the inconceivable element. Meditative stabilization is empty of meditative stabilization, the dhāraṇī gateways are empty of the dhāraṇī gateways, all-knowledge is empty of all-knowledge, the knowledge of path aspects is empty of the knowledge of path aspects, and the knowledge of all aspects is empty of the knowledge of all aspects. The Śrāvaka Vehicle is empty of the Śrāvaka Vehicle, the Pratyekabuddha Vehicle is empty of the Pratyekabuddha Vehicle, and the Buddha Vehicle is empty of the Buddha Vehicle. Śrāvakas are empty of śrāvakas, pratyekabuddhas are empty of pratyekabuddhas, bodhisattvas are empty of bodhisattvas, and tathāgatas are empty of tathāgatas. Venerable Śāriputra, in the emptiness of the tathāgata, form does not exist and is not found, and in the emptiness of the tathāgata, feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness do not exist and are not found.

20.43 “Venerable [F.217.a] Śāriputra, because of this one of many explanations even such an idea as ‘a bodhisattva is form’ does not exist and is not found, and even such an idea as ‘a bodhisattva is feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness’ does not exist and is not found.

20.44 “Venerable Śāriputra, in regard to what you asked—‘Why, Venerable Subhūti, do you say, “So Lord, I, who thus do not see and do not find a bodhisattva great being as anyone at all in any way at all—to which bodhisattva great being will I give advice and instruction in which perfection of wisdom?” ’—Venerable Śāriputra, form is not found in form, form is not found in feeling; feeling is not found in feeling, feeling is not found in form. Form and feeling are not found in perception, perception is not found in perception, and perception is not found in form or feeling. Volitional factors do not exist and are not found in perception. Volitional factors do not exist and are not found in volitional factors. Perception does not exist and is not found in volitional factors. Consciousness does not exist and is not found in volitional factors; volitional factors do not exist and are not found in consciousness. Form, feeling, perception, and volitional factors do not exist and are not found in consciousness. Consciousness does not exist and is not found in form, feeling, perception, or volitional factors.

20.45 “Venerable Śāriputra, the eyes do not exist and are not found in the eyes; the eyes do not exist and are not found in the ears. The ears do not exist [F.217.b] and are not found in the eyes; the ears do not exist and are not found in the ears. The ears do not exist and are not found in the nose. The nose does not exist and is not found in the nose. The nose does not exist and is not found in the eyes or ears. The nose does not exist and is not found in the tongue. The tongue does not exist and is not found in the tongue. The tongue does not exist and is not found in the eyes, ears, or nose. The tongue does not exist and is not found in the body. The body does not exist and is not found in the body. The body does not exist and is not found in the eyes, ears, nose, or tongue. The body does not exist and is not found in the thinking mind. The thinking mind does not exist and is not found in the thinking mind. The thinking mind does not exist and is not found in the eyes, ears, nose, tongue, or body.

20.46 “A form does not exist and is not found in a form. A form does not exist and is not found in a sound, a smell, a taste, a feeling, or a dharma. A sound does not exist and is not found in a sound; a sound does not exist and is not found in the others. Similarly, a smell does not exist and is not found in a smell or in the others, a taste does not exist and is not found in a taste or in the others, a feeling does not exist and is not found in a feeling or in the others, and a dharma does not exist and is not found in a dharma or in the others.

20.47 “Eye consciousness does not exist and is not found in eye consciousness, the others also do not exist and are not found in it, and it also does not exist and is not found in the others. Ear consciousness, nose consciousness, tongue consciousness, body consciousness, and thinking-mind consciousness are similar: thinking-mind consciousness does not exist and is not found in thinking-mind consciousness, the others also do not exist and are not found in it, and it also does not exist and is not found in the others.

20.48 “Eye contact does not exist and is not found in eye contact, it [F.218.a] also does not exist and is not found in the others, and the others also do not exist and are not found in it. Ear contact, nose contact, tongue contact, body contact, and thinking-mind contact are similar: thinking-mind contact does not exist and is not found in thinking-mind contact, and the other contacts also do not exist and are not found in thinking-mind contact.

- 20.49 “Feeling from the condition of eye contact does not exist and is not found in feeling from the condition of eye contact, and the others also do not exist and are not found in it, nor the others in the others. Feeling from the condition of ear contact ... nose contact ... tongue contact ... body contact ... and feeling from the condition of thinking-mind contact does not exist and is not found in feeling from the condition of thinking-mind contact, and the others also do not exist and are not found in it, nor the others in the others.
- 20.50 “The applications of mindfulness do not exist and are not found in the applications of mindfulness, and similarly the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and eightfold noble path, and the ten powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, and eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha do not exist and are not found in the buddhadharmas. The four detailed and thorough knowledges do not exist and are not found in the four detailed and thorough knowledges. The buddhadharmas do not exist and are not found in the four detailed and thorough knowledges. The four detailed and thorough knowledges do not exist and are not found in the buddhadharmas. All dharmas do not exist and are not found in all dharmas. All dharmas do not exist and are not found in the buddhadharmas.
- 20.51 “Inner emptiness does not exist and is not found in inner emptiness. [F.218.b] Inner emptiness does not exist and is not found in ... up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature. The emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature does not exist and is not found in the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature. The emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature does not exist and is not found in ... up to inner emptiness.
- 20.52 “Meditative stabilization does not exist and is not found in meditative stabilization. Meditative stabilization does not exist and is not found in the dhāraṇīs. Dhāraṇī does not exist and is not found in dhāraṇī. Dhāraṇī does not exist and is not found in meditative stabilization.
- 20.53 “The level of an ordinary person does not exist and is not found in the level of an ordinary person, and the Gotra level ... the Aṣṭamaka level ... the Darśana level ... the Vītarāga level ... the Tanū level ... the Kṛtāvin level ... the Pratyekabuddha level ... the Bodhisattva level ... the Tathāgata level ... and the level of the knowledge of all aspects does not exist and is not found in the level of the knowledge of all aspects. Similarly, a stream enterer does not exist and is not found in a stream enterer; a once-returner ... a non-returner ... a worthy one ... and a pratyekabuddha does not exist and is not found in a pratyekabuddha; a bodhisattva ... ; and a perfectly complete buddha does not exist and is not found in a perfectly complete buddha.

- 20.54 “A bodhisattva does not exist and is not found in the perfection of wisdom. The perfection of wisdom also does not exist and is not found in the perfection of wisdom. Advice and instruction do not exist and are not found in the perfection of wisdom. Advice and instruction do not exist and are not found in advice and instruction. A bodhisattva does not exist and is not found in advice and instruction. Therefore, Venerable Śāriputra, given that all dharmas do not exist and are not found, a bodhisattva also [F.219.a] does not exist and is not found, that is, cannot be pointed out.
- 20.55 “Venerable Śāriputra, in regard to what you asked—‘Why, Venerable Subhūti, do you say, “You say this, Lord, that is, ‘bodhisattva.’ It is just a word”?’—Venerable Śāriputra, this—that is, ‘bodhisattva’—is designated by a name plucked out of thin air, so, Venerable Śāriputra, one says ‘this, that is, “bodhisattva,” is just a word.’ Because, Venerable Śāriputra, the words for all dharmas do not come from anywhere in the ten directions and do not go anywhere, so too the word for a bodhisattva does not come from anywhere and does not go anywhere, because these—that is, ‘form,’ ‘feeling,’ ‘perception,’ ‘volitional factors,’ and ‘consciousness’—are designated by names plucked out of thin air. That name is not form, nor is it feeling, or perception, or volitional factors, or consciousness. And why? Because a name is empty of the intrinsic nature of a name. That which is empty is not the name, so, Venerable Śāriputra, one says ‘this, that is, “bodhisattva,” is just a word.’
- 20.56 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, this ‘perfection of giving’ is just words, and in those words there is no perfection of giving, and in that perfection of giving also there are no words. And why? Because, Venerable Śāriputra, both those words and that perfection of giving do not exist and cannot be found. Therefore this ‘bodhisattva’ is simply just a word.
- 20.57 “Similarly, this ‘perfection of morality’ ... ‘perfection of patience’ ... ‘perfection of perseverance’ ... ‘perfection of concentration’ ... and ‘perfection of wisdom,’ is just [F.219.b] words, and in those words there is no perfection of wisdom and in that perfection of wisdom there is also no word. And why? Because, Venerable Śāriputra, both those words and that perfection of wisdom do not exist and cannot be found. Therefore, Venerable Śāriputra, this ‘bodhisattva’ is a name plucked out of thin air, so this ‘bodhisattva’ is simply just a word.
- 20.58 “Venerable Śāriputra, ‘inner emptiness’ up to ‘emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature’ is just words. Other than inner emptiness there are no words, and in those words there is no inner emptiness, up to other than the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature there are no words, and in those words there is no emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature. And why? Because, Venerable Śāriputra, both those words and that inner emptiness, up to that emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature do not exist and cannot be found. Therefore, Venerable Śāriputra, because of this one of many explanations, this 'bodhisattva' is simply just a word.

20.59 "Venerable Śāriputra, this 'applications of mindfulness' is a name plucked out of thin air. Other than applications of mindfulness there are no words, and in those words there are no applications of mindfulness. And why? Because, Venerable Śāriputra, both those words and those applications of mindfulness do not exist and cannot be found. Similarly, these 'right efforts,' 'legs of miraculous power,' 'faculties,' 'powers,' 'limbs of awakening,' 'eightfold noble path,' 'ten powers,' 'four fearlessnesses,' 'four detailed and thorough knowledges,' and 'eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha' [F.220.a] are names plucked out of thin air. Other than buddhadharmas there are no words, and in those words there are no buddhadharmas. And why? Because, Venerable Śāriputra, both those words and those buddhadharmas do not exist and cannot be found.

20.60 "Similarly, Venerable Śāriputra, these—'meditative stabilization,' 'dhāraṇī gateways,' up to 'knowledge of all aspects'—are names plucked out of thin air. Other than knowledge of all aspects there are no words, and in those words there is also no knowledge of all aspects. And why? Because, Venerable Śāriputra, both those words and up to that knowledge of all aspects do not exist and cannot be found.

20.61 "Venerable Śāriputra, in regard to what you asked—"Why, Venerable Subhūti, do you say, "For example, Lord, you say 'self' again and again, but it has absolutely not come into being?"—Venerable Śāriputra, given that a self absolutely does not exist and is not found, how could it have ever come into being? Venerable Śāriputra, given that a being, a living being, a creature, one who lives, an individual, a person, one born of Manu, a child of Manu, one who does, one who feels, one who knows, and one who sees absolutely does not exist and is not found, how could someone like that have ever come into being?

20.62 "Venerable Śāriputra, given that form absolutely does not exist and is not found, how could it have ever come into being? And given that feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness absolutely do not exist and are not found, how could they have ever come into being?

20.63 "Venerable Śāriputra, given that the eyes absolutely do not exist and are not found, how could they have ever come into being? Similarly, [F.220.b] given that the ears, nose, tongue, body, and thinking mind absolutely do not exist and are not found, how could they have ever come into being?

- 20.64 “Venerable Śāriputra, given that a form absolutely does not exist and is not found, how could it have ever come into being? Similarly, given that a sound, a smell, a taste, a feeling, and a dharma do not exist and are not found, how could they have ever come into being?
- 20.65 “Venerable Śāriputra, given that eye consciousness absolutely does not exist and is not found, how could it have ever come into being? And given that ear, nose, tongue, body, and thinking-mind consciousness do not exist and are not found, how could they have ever come into being?
- 20.66 “Venerable Śāriputra, given that eye contact absolutely does not exist and is not found, how could it have ever come into being? And given that ear, nose, tongue, body, and thinking-mind contact do not exist and are not found, how could they have ever come into being?
- 20.67 “Venerable Śāriputra, given that feeling from the condition of eye contact absolutely does not exist and is not found, how could it have ever come into being? And given that feelings from the condition of ear, nose, tongue, body, and thinking-mind contact do not exist and are not found, how could they have ever come into being?
- 20.68 “Venerable Śāriputra, given that the perfection of giving absolutely does not exist and is not found, how could it have ever come into being? And given that the perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and perfection of wisdom do not exist and are not found, how could they have ever come into being?
- 20.69 “Venerable Śāriputra, given that inner emptiness absolutely does not exist and is not found, how could it have ever come into being? And given that up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature do not exist [F.221.a] and are not found, how could they have ever come into being?
- 20.70 “Venerable Śāriputra, given that the applications of mindfulness absolutely do not exist and are not found, how could they have ever come into being? And given that the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, eightfold noble path, ten powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, and eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha do not exist and are not found, how could they have ever come into being?
- 20.71 “Venerable Śāriputra, given that the meditative stabilizations and dhāraṇī gateways absolutely do not exist and are not found, how could they have ever come into being? And given that a śrāvaka absolutely does not exist and is not found, how could someone like that have ever come into being? And given that a pratyekabuddha absolutely does not exist and is not found, how could someone like that have ever come into being? And given that a bodhisattva absolutely does not exist and is not found, how could someone - like that have ever come into being? And given that a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha absolutely does not exist and is not found, how could someone like that have ever come into being?

- 20.72 “Venerable Śāriputra, because of this one of many explanations, even though one says ‘self’ again and again, a self has absolutely not come into being.
- 20.73 “Venerable Śāriputra, in regard to what you asked—‘Why do you say, “Given that all dharmas thus are the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature”?’<sup>353</sup>—Venerable Śāriputra, exactly so! And why? Because, Venerable Śāriputra, an intrinsic nature arisen from a union<sup>354</sup> does not exist.”
- 20.74 Śāriputra then asked, “Venerable Subhūti, what does not have an intrinsic nature arisen from a union?”
- 20.75 “Venerable Śāriputra,” replied Subhūti, “form has no intrinsic nature arisen [F.221.b] from a union; feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness have no intrinsic nature arisen from a union. Venerable Śāriputra, the eyes have no intrinsic nature arisen from a union; similarly, the ears, nose, tongue, body, and thinking mind have no intrinsic nature arisen from a union. Similarly, Venerable Śāriputra, a form, a sound, a smell, a taste, a feeling, and a dharma; eye consciousness, and ear, nose, tongue, body, and thinking-mind consciousness; eye contact, and ear, nose, tongue, body, and thinking-mind contact; feeling from the condition of eye contact; and feeling from the condition of ear, nose, tongue, body, and thinking-mind contact have no intrinsic nature arisen from a union. Venerable Śāriputra, the perfection of giving has no intrinsic nature arisen from a union. The perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and perfection of wisdom have no intrinsic nature arisen from a union.
- 20.76 “Venerable Śāriputra, because of this one of many explanations, all dharmas are the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature.
- 20.77 “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, all dharmas are impermanent, but not because anything disappears.”<sup>355</sup>
- 20.78 “What are those dharmas that are impermanent even though nothing disappears?” asked Śāriputra.
- 20.79 Subhūti replied, “Venerable Śāriputra, form is impermanent, but not because anything disappears. Venerable Śāriputra, feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are impermanent, but not because anything disappears. And why? Venerable Śāriputra, it is because that which is impermanent has come to an end, is a nonexistent thing.<sup>356</sup> Similarly, all dharmas [F.222.a] are suffering, selfless, calm, empty, signless, and wishless, but not because anything disappears. And why? Venerable Śāriputra, it is because that which is wishless has come to an end, is a nonexistent thing.

Similarly, all dharmas are wholesome, not a basic immorality, without outflows, without afflictions, extraordinary, purified, and un compounded, but not because anything disappears. And why? Venerable Śāriputra, it is because that which is un compounded has come to an end, is a nonexistent thing.

20.80 “Venerable Śāriputra, because of this one of many explanations, all dharmas have no intrinsic nature, but not because anything disappears.

20.82 “Why are dharmas neither unmoved nor destroyed?” asked Śāriputra.

Subhūti replied, “Venerable Śāriputra, form is neither unmoved nor destroyed. And why? Because that is its basic nature. Venerable Śāriputra, feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are neither unmoved nor destroyed. And why? Because that is their basic nature. Similarly, wholesome and unwholesome, basic immorality and not basic immorality, with outflows and without outflows, with afflictions and without afflictions, ordinary and extraordinary, compounded and un compounded, defiled and purified, and saṃsāra and nirvāṇa are neither unmoved nor [F.222.b] destroyed. And why? Because that is their basic nature.

20.83 “Venerable Śāriputra, because of this one of many explanations, all dharmas are the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, even though nothing disappears.

20.84 “Venerable Śāriputra, in regard to what you asked—‘Why do you say, ‘What is that form that has come into being? What is that feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness that has come into being?’— Venerable Śāriputra, it is because form has not occasioned anything, because feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness have not occasioned anything. And why? Venerable Śāriputra, it is because there is nothing that occasions them. Venerable Śāriputra, the eyes do not occasion anything. And why? Venerable Śāriputra, it is because there is nothing that occasions them. Venerable Śāriputra, similarly, the ears, nose, tongue, body, and thinking mind have not occasioned anything. And why? Venerable Śāriputra, it is because there is nothing that occasions them. Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, a form, a sound, a smell, a taste, a feeling, and a dharma have not occasioned anything. And why? Venerable Śāriputra, it is because someone to enact them does not exist. Up to, all dharmas have not occasioned anything. And why? Venerable Śāriputra, it is because nothing that occasions them is apprehended.

20.85 “Venerable Śāriputra, because of this one of many explanations, ‘form, feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness have not come into being.’<sup>358</sup>

- 20.86 “Venerable Śāriputra, in regard to what you asked—‘Why do you say, “What has not come into being is not form, and what has not come into being is not feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness?” ’—Venerable [F.223.a] Śāriputra, exactly so, exactly so! Because, Venerable Śāriputra, form is empty of a basic nature, and what is empty of a basic nature does not arise and does not pass away, and in what does not arise and does not pass away there is no transformation. Similarly, feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are empty of a basic nature, and what is empty of a basic nature does not arise and does not pass away, and in what does not arise and does not pass away there is no transformation, up to all dharmas are empty of a basic nature, and what are empty of a basic nature do not arise and do not pass away, and in what do not arise and do not pass away there is no transformation.
- 20.87 “Venerable Śāriputra, because of this one of many explanations, what has not come into being is not form, and what has not come into being is not feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness.
- 20.88 “Venerable Śāriputra, in regard to what you asked—‘Why do you say, “Does what has not come into being give advice and instruction in a perfection of wisdom that has not come into being?” ’—Venerable Śāriputra, because what has not come into being is the perfection of wisdom, and the perfection of wisdom is what has not come into being, therefore, what has not come into being and the perfection of wisdom are not two, nor are they divided. Venerable Śāriputra, because of this one of many explanations, I said, ‘Does what has not come into being give advice and instruction in a perfection of wisdom that has not come into being?’
- 20.89 “Venerable Śāriputra, in regard to what you asked—‘Why do you say, “They cannot apprehend a bodhisattva great being who would practice for awakening other than one who has not come into being”?’—Venerable Śāriputra, [F.223.b] because bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom do not see ‘what has not come into being as one thing and a bodhisattva as another,<sup>359</sup> what has not come into being and the bodhisattva are not two, nor are they divided. They do not see form other than what has not come into being, and they do not see feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness other than what has not come into being; therefore, what has not come into being and form are not two, nor are they divided, and therefore, what has not come into being and feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are not two, nor are they divided. Similarly, up to they do not see all dharmas other than what has not come into being, and therefore, what has not come into being and all dharmas are not two, nor are they divided.

20.90 “Venerable Śāriputra, because of this one of many explanations, one cannot apprehend a bodhisattva great being who would practice for awakening other than one who has not come into being. [B17]

20.91 “Venerable Śāriputra, in regard to what you asked—‘And why do you say, “One should know that when the mind of a bodhisattva great being given such instruction is not cowed, does not tense up, does not experience regret, and does not tremble, feel frightened, or become terrified, then that bodhisattva great being is practicing the perfection of wisdom”?’—Venerable Śāriputra, it is because bodhisattva great beings see all dharmas not stirring, and they see them like a dream, [F.224.a] like an illusion, like a mirage, like an echo, like an apparition, like a reflection in the mirror, and like a magical creation. Because of this one of many explanations, Venerable Śāriputra, when bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom hear this they do not tremble, feel frightened, or become terrified.”

20.92 Then venerable Subhūti said to the Lord, “When bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom investigate those dharmas like that they do not then assert, do not accept, do not base themselves on, and do not settle down on form, and neither do they label anything ‘this is form’; they also do not assert, do not accept, do not base themselves on, and do not settle down on feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... or consciousness, and neither do they label anything ‘this is consciousness.’ Similarly, they do not then assert, do not accept, do not base themselves on, and do not settle down on the eyes, and neither do they label anything ‘these are the eyes’; and similarly, they do not then assert, do not accept, do not base themselves on, and do not settle down on the ears ... the nose ... the tongue ... the body ... or the thinking mind, and neither do they label anything ‘this is the thinking mind.’ Similarly, they do not then assert, do not accept, do not base themselves on, and do not settle down on the perfection of giving, and neither do they label anything ‘this is the perfection of giving’; and similarly, they do not then assert, do not accept, do not base themselves on, and do not settle down on the perfection of morality ... the perfection of patience ... the perfection of perseverance ... the perfection of concentration ... or the perfection of wisdom, [F.224.b] and neither do they label anything ‘this is the perfection of wisdom.’ They do not then assert, do not accept, do not base themselves on, and do not settle down on inner emptiness, and neither do they label anything ‘this is inner emptiness’; and similarly they do not then assert, do not accept, do not base themselves on, and do not settle down on ... up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, and neither do they label anything ‘this is the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature.’

- 20.93 “Furthermore, Lord, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom do not assert, do not accept, do not base themselves on, and do not settle down on the applications of mindfulness, and neither do they label anything ‘these are the applications of mindfulness.’ Similarly, bodhisattvas do not then assert, do not accept, do not base themselves on, and do not settle down on the right efforts..., the legs of miraculous power..., the faculties..., the powers..., the limbs of awakening..., the eightfold noble path..., the ten powers..., the fearlessnesses..., the detailed and thorough knowledges..., or eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, and neither do they label anything ‘these are the buddhadharmas.’
- 20.94 “Furthermore, Lord, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom do not assert, do not accept, do not base themselves on, and do not settle down on all the meditative stabilization gateways and all the dhāraṇī gateways, and neither do they label anything ‘these are the meditative stabilization and dhāraṇī gateways.’
- 20.95 “And why? Lord, it is because bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom do not see form; similarly, because they do not see the aggregates, constituents, or sense fields, [F.225.a] they do not see the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, they do not see the perfections, up to and they do not see the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha or the knowledge of all aspects.
- 20.96 “And why? Lord, it is because form is not produced, and the nonproduction of form is not form. Therefore, form and the nonproduction of form are not two, nor are they divided. And why? Lord, it is because that nonproduction is not one, nor is it many.
- 20.97 “The nonproduction of feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is not consciousness; the nonproduction of the eyes is not the eyes; the nonproduction of the ears ... the nose ... the tongue ... the body ... and the thinking mind is not the thinking mind; the nonproduction of the perfection of giving is not the perfection of giving; and the nonproduction of the perfection of morality ... the perfection of patience ... the perfection of perseverance ... the perfection of concentration ... and the perfection of wisdom is not the perfection of wisdom. Therefore, the perfection of wisdom and nonproduction are not two, nor are they divided.
- 20.98 “The nonproduction of inner emptiness is not inner emptiness, up to the nonproduction of the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature is not the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature. Therefore, [F.225.b] the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature and nonproduction are not two, nor are they divided.

- 20.99 “Lord, the nonproduction of the applications of mindfulness is not the applications of mindfulness. Therefore, the applications of mindfulness and nonproduction are not two, nor are they divided. Similarly, the nonproduction of the right efforts ... the legs of miraculous power ... the faculties ... the powers ... the limbs of awakening ... the path ... the fearlessnesses ... the clairvoyances ... the ten powers ... the detailed and thorough knowledges ... and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha is not the buddhadharmas. Therefore, the buddhadharmas and nonproduction are not two, nor are they divided. And why? Because those nonproductions of the buddhadharmas are not the buddhadharmas.
- 20.100 “Lord, it is because suchness is not produced, and the nonproduction of suchness is not suchness. Therefore, suchness and nonproduction are not two, nor are they divided. And why? Lord, it is because nonproduction is not one, nor is it many. For that reason, the nonproduction of suchness is not suchness. The nonproduction of unmistakable suchness ... unaltered suchness ... the true nature of dharmas ... the dharma-constituent ... the establishment of dharmas ... the certification of dharmas ... the very limit of reality ... and [F.226.a] the inconceivable element is not the inconceivable element. And why? Because the inconceivable element and nonproduction are not two, nor are they divided.
- 20.101 “Lord, the nonproduction of awakening ... and the knowledge of all aspects is not the knowledge of all aspects. Therefore, the knowledge of all aspects and nonproduction are not two, nor are they divided. And why? Lord, it is because nonproduction is not one, nor is it many. For that reason, the knowledge of all aspects and nonproduction are not two, nor are they divided.
- 20.102 “Lord, it is because form is impermanent, so a decrease in form is not form. A decrease in feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is not consciousness. Therefore, the aggregates and a decrease are not two, nor are they divided. And why? Lord, it is because a decrease is not one, nor is it many. A decrease in the constituents and sense fields is not the constituents and sense fields. Therefore, the constituents and sense fields and a decrease are not two, nor are they divided.
- 20.103 “Lord, a decrease in the perfection of giving is not the perfection of giving, so the perfection of giving and a decrease are not two, nor are they divided. [F.226.b] Similarly, a decrease in the perfection of morality ... the perfection of patience ... the perfection of perseverance ... the perfection of concentration ... and the perfection of wisdom is not the perfection of wisdom, so the perfection of wisdom and a decrease are not two, nor are they divided. And why? Because a decrease is not one, nor is it many. Therefore, a decrease in the perfection of wisdom is not the perfection of wisdom.

20.104 “Lord, a decrease in inner emptiness is not inner emptiness, so inner emptiness and a decrease are not two, nor are they divided. And why? Lord, it is because a decrease is not one, nor is it many. Therefore, a decrease in inner emptiness is not inner emptiness. Similarly, up to a decrease in the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature is not the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, so the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature and a decrease are not two, nor are they divided. And why? Lord, it is because a decrease is not one, nor is it many. Therefore, a decrease in the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature is not the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature.

20.105 “Lord, a decrease in the applications of mindfulness is not the applications of mindfulness, so the applications of mindfulness and a decrease are not two, nor are they divided. And why? Lord, it is because [F.227.a] a decrease is not one, nor is it many. Therefore, a decrease in the applications of mindfulness is not the applications of mindfulness. A decrease in the right efforts ... the legs of miraculous power ... the faculties ... the powers ... the limbs of awakening ... and the eightfold noble path is not the path, so the path and a decrease are not two, nor are they divided. And why? Lord, it is because a decrease is not one, nor is it many. Therefore, a decrease in the path is not the path. Similarly, up to a decrease in the clairvoyances ... the fearlessnesses ... the detailed and thorough knowledges ... the ten powers ... and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha is not the distinct attributes of a buddha, so the distinct attributes of a buddha and a decrease are not two, nor are they divided. And why? Lord, it is because a decrease is not one, nor is it many. Therefore, a decrease in the distinct attributes of a buddha is not the distinct attributes of a buddha.

20.106 “Lord, anything called form is counted as not two. Similarly, anything called feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness is counted as not two, up to anything called the knowledge of all aspects is counted as not two.”

20.107 This was the twentieth chapter, “Not Two,” [F.227.b] of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.”

CHAPTER 21: SUBHŪTI

- 21.1 Then venerable Śāriputra inquired of venerable Subhūti, “Venerable Subhūti, how do bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom investigate these dharmas? And, Venerable Subhūti, what is a bodhisattva? What is the perfection of wisdom? What is it to investigate?”
- 21.2 “Venerable Śāriputra,” replied Subhūti, “in regard to what you asked—‘What is a bodhisattva?’—they are called bodhisattoas because awakening is itself their state of being.<sup>360</sup> And with that awakening they know the aspects of dharmas but they do not settle down on those dharmas.
- 21.3 “Of which dharmas do they know the aspects? They know the aspects of form but they do not settle down on them, and they know the aspects of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness but they do not settle down on them. Similarly, they know the aspects of the constituents, sense fields, dependent originations, and thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening but they do not settle down on them. They know the powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, and eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha but they do not settle down on them.”
- 21.4 “Venerable Subhūti, what are the aspects of all dharmas?” asked Śāriputra.
“Venerable Śāriputra,” replied Subhūti, “whatever the attributes, tokens, and signs on account of which dharmas are formulated<sup>361</sup>—that is to say, the attributes, tokens, and signs on account of which they are formulated as compounded and uncompounded dharmas, or as forms, sounds, smells, tastes, [F.228.a] feelings, or dharmas, or as inner and outer dharmas—those are called the aspects of dharmas.
- 21.5 “Venerable Śāriputra, in regard to what you asked—‘What is the perfection of wisdom?’—Venerable Śāriputra, that which is called perfection of wisdom has gone far off, hence it is called wisdom gone to the other side.<sup>362</sup>
- 21.6 “From what has it gone far off? Venerable Śāriputra, it has gone far off from the aggregates, constituents, sense fields, and dependent origination; it has gone far off from all defilement and all that is riddled with views; and it has gone far off from the six forms of life—therefore it is said it has gone far off. It has gone far off from the perfection of giving, perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, and perfection of concentration—therefore it is said it has gone far off. It has gone far off from inner emptiness, up to emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature—therefore it is said it has gone far off. It has gone far off from the applications of mindfulness, right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and eightfold noble path—therefore it is said it has gone far off. It has gone far off from the powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha—therefore it is said it has gone far off, up to it has gone far off from the knowledge of all aspects, therefore it is said it has gone far off. Venerable Śāriputra, because of this one of many explanations, it is said that this perfection of wisdom [F.228.b] has gone far off.

21.7 “Venerable Śāriputra, in regard to what you asked—‘What is it to investigate?’—Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom do not investigate ‘form is permanent’ or ‘impermanent,’ do not investigate ‘form is happiness’ or ‘suffering,’ do not investigate ‘form is self’ or ‘no self,’ do not investigate ‘form is calm’ or ‘not calm,’ do not investigate ‘form is empty’ or ‘not empty,’ do not investigate ‘form has a sign’ or ‘is signless,’ do not investigate ‘form is wished for’ or ‘is wishless,’ and do not investigate ‘form is isolated’ or ‘not isolated.’ Similarly, they do not investigate ‘feeling...,’ ‘perception...,’ ‘volitional factors...,’ or ‘consciousness is permanent’ or ‘impermanent,’ they do not investigate ‘consciousness is happiness’ or ‘suffering,’ do not investigate ‘consciousness is self’ or ‘no self,’ do not investigate ‘consciousness is calm’ or ‘not calm,’ do not investigate ‘consciousness is empty’ or ‘not empty,’ do not investigate ‘consciousness has a sign,’ or ‘is signless,’ do not investigate ‘consciousness is wished for’ or ‘is wishless,’ and do not investigate ‘consciousness is isolated’ or ‘not isolated.’

21.8 “Similarly, they do not investigate ‘the perfection of giving’ ‘the perfection of morality,’ ‘the perfection of patience...,’ ‘the perfection of perseverance...,’ ‘the perfection of concentration...,’ and ‘the perfection of wisdom is permanent’ [F.229.a] or ‘impermanent.’ Similarly, connect this with they do not investigate ‘the perfection of wisdom is happiness’ or ‘suffering,’ ‘is self’ or ‘no self,’ ‘is calm’ or ‘not calm,’ ‘is empty’ or ‘not empty,’ ‘has a sign’ or ‘is signless,’ ‘is wished for’ or ‘is wishless,’ or ‘is isolated’ or ‘not isolated.’

21.9 “Similarly, they do not investigate ‘inner emptiness is permanent’ or ‘impermanent.’ Similarly, connect this with each, up to they do not investigate ‘emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature is permanent’ or

'impermanent,' up to they do not investigate 'emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature is empty' or 'not empty,' up to they do not investigate 'it is isolated' or 'not isolated.'

21.10 "Similarly, they do not investigate 'the applications of mindfulness are permanent' or 'impermanent.' Connect this in the same way with each, up to they do not investigate 'the right efforts...,' 'the legs of miraculous power...,' 'the faculties...,' 'the powers...,' 'the limbs of awakening...,' 'the eightfold noble path...,' 'the ten powers...,' 'the four fearlessnesses...,' 'the four detailed and thorough knowledges...,' 'the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha...,' 'all the meditative stabilizations...,' 'all the dhāraṇī gateways...,' or 'the knowledge of all aspects is permanent' or 'impermanent,' 'is happiness' or 'suffering,' 'is self' or 'no self,' 'is calm' or 'not calm,' 'is empty' or 'not empty,' 'has a sign' or 'is signless,' 'is wished for' or 'is wishless,' or 'is isolated' or 'not isolated.' [F.229.b]

21.11 "Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom investigate those dharmas like that."

21.12 Śāriputra then asked, "Venerable Subhūti, why do you say, 'Lord, it is because the nonproduction of form is not form; the nonproduction of feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is not consciousness; and similarly, the nonproduction of the constituents ... the sense fields ... the dependent originations ... the perfections ... all the emptinesses ... the dharmas on the side of awakening ... the powers ... the fearlessnesses ... the detailed and thorough knowledges ... the meditative stabilizations ... the dhāraṇī gateways ... the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha ... and the knowledge of all aspects is not the knowledge of all aspects?'"

21.13 "Venerable Śāriputra," replied Subhūti, "form is empty of form. Venerable Śāriputra, the emptiness of form is not form and is not production. Venerable Śāriputra, because of this one of many explanations, the nonproduction of form is not form.

21.14 "Venerable Śāriputra, feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is empty of consciousness. Venerable Śāriputra, the emptiness of consciousness is not consciousness and is not production. Venerable Śāriputra, because of this one of many explanations, the nonproduction of consciousness is not consciousness.

21.15 "Venerable Śāriputra, the perfection of giving is empty of the perfection of giving. Venerable Śāriputra, the emptiness of the perfection of giving is not the perfection of giving and is not production. Similarly, [F.230.a] Venerable Śāriputra, the perfection of morality ... the perfection of patience ... the perfection of perseverance ... the perfection of concentration ... and the perfection of wisdom is empty of the perfection of wisdom. The emptiness of the perfection of wisdom is not the perfection of wisdom and is not production. Venerable Śāriputra, because of this one of many explanations, the nonproduction of the perfection of wisdom is not the perfection of wisdom.

21.16 “Venerable Śāriputra, inner emptiness is empty of inner emptiness. Venerable Śāriputra, the emptiness of inner emptiness is not inner emptiness and is not production, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature is empty of the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature. The emptiness of the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature is not the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, and it is not production. Venerable Śāriputra, because of this one of many explanations, the nonproduction of the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature is not the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature.

21.17 “Venerable Śāriputra, the applications of mindfulness are empty of the applications of mindfulness. The emptiness of the applications of mindfulness is not the applications of mindfulness and is not production. Similarly, Venerable Śāriputra, the right efforts ... the legs of miraculous power ... the faculties ... the powers ... the limbs of awakening ... the path ... the ten powers ... the fearlessnesses ... the detailed and thorough knowledges ... the meditative stabilizations ... the dhāraṇī gateways ... the buddhadharmas ... and the knowledge of all aspects is empty of the knowledge of all aspects. The emptiness of the knowledge of all aspects is not the knowledge of all aspects and is not production. Venerable Śāriputra, because of this one of many explanations, [F.230.b] the nonproduction of the knowledge of all aspects is not the knowledge of all aspects.”

21.18 Śāriputra then asked, “Venerable Subhūti, why do you say, ‘It is because a decrease in form is not form; a decrease in feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is not consciousness; and similarly, a decrease in the constituents ... the sense fields ... the dependent originations ... the emptinesses ... the dharmas on the side of awakening ... the perfections ... the powers ... the fearlessnesses ... the detailed and thorough knowledges ... the buddhadharmas, up to and the knowledge of all aspects is not the knowledge of all aspects?’”

21.19 “Venerable Śāriputra,” replied Subhūti, “it is because decrease, form, and not being divided, as well as decrease, feeling, perception, volitional factors, consciousness, and not being divided—all those dharmas are not conjoined and not disjointed, are formless, cannot be pointed out, do not obstruct, and have only one mark—that is, no mark. The constituents, the sense fields, the dependent originations, the perfections, the dharmas on the side of awakening, all the emptinesses, the ten powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, and the knowledge of all aspects are similar, so decrease, the knowledge of all aspects, and not being divided—all those dharmas [F.231.a] are not conjoined and not disjoined, are formless, cannot be pointed out, do not obstruct, and have only one mark—that is, no mark.

21.20 “Venerable Śāriputra, because of this one of many explanations, a decrease in form is not form, and a decrease in feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is not consciousness. Connect this in the same way with each, up to a decrease in the knowledge of all aspects is not the knowledge of all aspects.”

21.21 Śāriputra then asked, “Venerable Subhūti, why do you say, ‘Anything called form is counted as not two. Similarly, anything called feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness is counted as not two, up to anything called the knowledge of all aspects is counted as not two?’”

21.22 “Venerable Śāriputra,” replied Subhūti, “it is because nonproduction is not one thing and form another; nonproduction itself is form, and form itself is nonproduction. It is because nonproduction is not one thing and feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness another; nonproduction itself is consciousness, and consciousness itself is nonproduction.

21.23 “Venerable Śāriputra, because of this one of many explanations, anything called form is counted as not two, and anything called feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness is counted as not two—similarly with the constituents, the sense fields, the dependent originations, the perfections, the dharmas on the side of awakening, [F.231.b] all the emptinesses, the ten powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha.

21.24 “Venerable Śāriputra, it is because nonproduction is not one thing and the knowledge of all aspects another; nonproduction itself is the knowledge of all aspects, and the knowledge of all aspects itself is nonproduction. Venerable Śāriputra, because of this one of many explanations, anything called the knowledge of all aspects is counted as not two.”

21.25 Then venerable Subhūti said to the Lord, “Lord, when bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom investigate those dharmas like that, because of absolute purity they then view the nonproduction of form; because of absolute purity they view the nonproduction of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness; because of absolute purity they view the nonproduction of a self; and because of absolute purity they view the nonproduction of a being, a living being, one who lives, an individual, a person, one born of Manu, a child of Manu, one who does, one who feels, one who knows, and one who sees. Similarly, because of absolute purity they view the nonproduction of the constituents, sense fields, and dependent origination; because of absolute purity they view the nonproduction of the perfection of giving; and similarly, because of absolute purity they view the nonproduction of the perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and perfection of wisdom; [F.232.a] because of absolute purity they view the nonproduction of inner emptiness, up to because of absolute purity they view the nonproduction of the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature; because of absolute purity they view the nonproduction of the applications of mindfulness; and because of absolute purity they view the nonproduction of the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, path, ten powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, dhāraṇīs, meditative stabilization gateways, eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, and the knowledge of all aspects. Because of absolute purity they view the nonproduction of an ordinary person; because of absolute purity they view the nonproduction of the dharmas of an ordinary person; because of absolute purity they view the nonproduction of a stream enterer and the dharmas of a stream enterer, a once-returner and the dharmas of a once-returner, a non-returner and the dharmas of a non-returner, a worthy one and the dharmas of a worthy one, a pratyekabuddha and the dharmas of a pratyekabuddha, a bodhisattva and the dharmas of a bodhisattva, and a buddha; and they view the nonproduction of the buddha dharmas.”

21.26 Śāriputra then said, “According to the way I understand the meaning of what venerable Subhūti has said, form is a nonproduction; feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are a nonproduction; the constituents are a nonproduction, the sense fields are a nonproduction, and dependent origination is a nonproduction; the perfections [F.232.b] are a nonproduction; all the emptinesses are a nonproduction; the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening are a nonproduction; the meditative stabilizations and dhāraṇī gateways are a nonproduction; the ten powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, and eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha are a nonproduction; the knowledge of all aspects is a nonproduction; an ordinary person is a nonproduction and the dharmas of an ordinary person are a nonproduction; a stream enterer and the dharmas of a stream enterer, a once-returner and the dharmas of a once-returner, a non-returner and the dharmas of a non-returner, a worthy one and the dharmas of a worthy one, a pratyekabuddha and the dharmas of a pratyekabuddha, a bodhisattva and the dharmas of a bodhisattva, and a buddha are a nonproduction; and the buddha dharmas are a nonproduction.

21.27 “Venerable Subhūti, if form is a nonproduction, up to the buddha dharmas are a nonproduction, then, Venerable Subhūti, will śrāvakas not have already gained śrāvaka awakening, and similarly, ordinary persons not have already gained ... up to pratyekabuddha awakening as well?<sup>363</sup> Similarly, will bodhisattvas not have already gained the knowledge of all aspects, will the five forms of life not also be undifferentiable, and will bodhisattva great beings not have already gained the five awakenings?<sup>364</sup> Venerable Subhūti, if all dharmas are a nonproduction, why would stream enterers cultivate the path in order to eliminate the three fetters; once-returners cultivate the path in order to weaken greed, hatred, and confusion; non-returners cultivate the path in order to eliminate the five fetters that are associated with the lower realms; [F.233.a] worthy ones cultivate the path in order to eliminate the five fetters that are associated with the upper realms; and those in the Pratyekabuddha Vehicle cultivate the path in order to reach their own awakening? Why do bodhisattva great beings undertake the difficult practices for the sake of beings and experience those sufferings, whatever they may be; why has a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening; and why has a tathāgata turned the wheel of the Dharma?”

21.28 Subhūti replied, “Venerable Śāriputra, I do not accept<sup>365</sup> that an unproduced dharma has an attainment, or a clear realization. I do not accept that which is unproduced becomes a stream enterer. I do not accept that which is unproduced has the result of stream enterer. I do not accept that which is unproduced becomes a once-returner and has the result of once-returner, a non-returner and result of non-returner, the state of a worthy one and the result of the state of a worthy one, or a pratyekabuddha’s awakening and a pratyekabuddha.

21.29 “Venerable Śāriputra, I do not accept that bodhisattvas are undertaking difficult practices, or that bodhisattva great beings practice with the idea of difficulty. And why? Because it is not possible, Venerable Śāriputra, for bodhisattva great beings who entertain the idea of difficulty to work for the welfare of infinite, countless beings. Rather, Venerable Śāriputra, by generating the perception they are a father, generating the perception they are a mother, generating the perception they are a son, generating the perception they are ‘me,’ they can work for the welfare of infinite, countless beings. Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings must produce this thought: [F.233.b] ‘Just as we say “self” again and again but it does not exist and cannot be apprehended as anyone at all in any way at all, we must produce that thought in just such a way about all inner and outer dharmas as well.' If they produce such an idea, then the idea of difficulty does not arise. And why? Because bodhisattva great beings do not appropriate<sup>366</sup> and do not apprehend any dharma as anything at all in any way at all.

21.30 “Venerable Śāriputra, in the absence of production I do not accept that there is the state of a tathāgata and unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, and I do not accept a turning of the wheel of the Dharma.

“I do not accept that an unproduced dharma attains an unproduced attainment.”

21.31 “Well then, Venerable Subhūti, does an unproduced dharma attain a produced attainment, or does a produced dharma attain an unproduced attainment?” asked Śāriputra.

21.32 Subhūti replied, “Venerable Śāriputra, I do not accept that a produced dharma attains an unproduced attainment, nor do I accept that an unproduced dharma attains a produced attainment.”

21.33 “Venerable Subhūti, is there then no attainment and is there no clear realization?” asked Śāriputra.

21.34 Subhūti replied, “Venerable Śāriputra, there is an attainment and there is a clear realization, but not in a dual way. Venerable Śāriputra, attainment and clear realization are labeled by ordinary convention. A stream enterer, or once-returned, or non-returned, or worthy one, or pratyekabuddha, or bodhisattva—even a buddha—is labeled by ordinary convention. Ultimately there is no attainment and there is no clear realization, there is no [F.234.a] stream enterer, there is no once-returned, there is no non-returned, there is no worthy one, there is no pratyekabuddha, there is no bodhisattva, and there is not even a buddha.”

21.35 “Venerable Subhūti, is the unproduced similar to an attainment and a clear realization that, as ordinary convention, is formless, cannot be pointed out, does not obstruct, and has only one mark—that is, no mark?” asked Śāriputra.

21.36 “Exactly so, Venerable Śāriputra, exactly so,” Subhūti replied. “Because of this one of many explanations, neither is production produced nor is nonproduction produced.”

21.37 “Venerable Subhūti, are you confident in your readiness to say again and again that ‘dharmas are unproduced’? Are you also confident in your readiness to say there is no production of unproduced dharmas?” asked Śāriputra.

21.38 Subhūti replied, “In regard to what you have said, Venerable Śāriputra—‘Are you confident in your readiness to say again and again that “dharmas are unproduced”?’—I have no confident readiness to say again and again that dharmas are unproduced. I have no confident readiness to say there is no production of unproduced dharmas. And why? Because,

Venerable Śāriputra, an unproduced dharma, nonproduction, confident readiness, saying something, and a state of production—all those dharmas are not conjoined and not disjoined, are formless, cannot be pointed out, do not obstruct, and have only one mark—that is, no mark.”

21.39 “Venerable Subhūti, is there no production of saying, is there also no production of confident readiness, and is there also no production of a dharma? Are those dharmas that are the point of departure for what has to be said [F.234.b] also not produced?” asked Śāriputra.

21.40 “Exactly so, Venerable Śāriputra,” replied Subhūti. “There is no production of saying, there is also no production of confident readiness, and there is also no production of a dharma. Those dharmas that are the point of departure for a confidence giving a readiness to speak are not produced. And why? Because there is no production of form, and there is no production of feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness. Similarly, there is no production of the constituents, the sense fields, or dependent originations; of the perfections, the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, all the emptinesses, all the meditative stabilizations, all the dhāraṇīs, the powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, or the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha; up to there is no production of the knowledge of all aspects.”

21.41 “Exactly so, Venerable Subhūti,” agreed Śāriputra. “There is no production of saying, there is also no production of confident readiness, and there is also no production of a dharma; those dharmas that are the point of departure for a confidence giving a readiness to speak are not produced. There is no production of the aggregates, the constituents, sense fields, dependent origination, the perfections, the dharmas on the side of awakening, all the emptinesses, all the meditative stabilizations, all the dhāraṇīs, the powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, up to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha. Connect this in the same way with there is no production of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects. Since this is the case the five forms of life are differentiable as ordinary conventions, but not ultimately.” [F.235.a]

21.42 “Exactly so, Venerable Śāriputra, exactly so,” agreed Subhūti. “Venerable Śāriputra, just as attainment and clear realization exist as ordinary conventions, similarly the five forms of life too are differentiable as ordinary conventions, but not ultimately. And why? Venerable Śāriputra, it is because ultimately there is no maturation of karma, there is no production, there is no cessation, there is no defilement, and there is no purification.”

21.43 “Venerable Subhūti, is an unproduced dharma produced, or is a produced dharma produced?” asked Śāriputra.

- 21.44 Subhūti replied, “Venerable Śāriputra, I do not accept that an unproduced dharma is produced, nor do I accept that a produced dharma is produced.”
- 21.45 “Venerable Subhūti, what unproduced dharma do you not accept is produced?” asked Śāriputra.
- 21.46 Subhūti replied, “Venerable Śāriputra, I do not accept that unproduced form is produced; I do not accept that unproduced feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are produced; and similarly with the constituents, the sense fields, dependent origination, the perfections, the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, all the emptinesses, the powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha. I do not accept that unproduced awakening is attained; I do not accept that it is clearly realized.”
- 21.47 “Venerable Subhūti, what produced dharma do you not accept is produced?” asked Śāriputra.
- 21.48 Subhūti replied, “Venerable Śāriputra, I do not accept that a produced form empty of an intrinsic nature is produced. Venerable Śāriputra, I do not accept [F.235.b] that a produced feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness empty of an intrinsic nature is produced. Venerable Śāriputra, connect this in the same way with I do not accept..., up to a produced awakening empty of an intrinsic nature is produced.”
- 21.49 “Venerable Subhūti, is an unproduced dharma produced, or is a produced dharma produced?”<sup>367</sup> asked Śāriputra.
- 21.50 Subhūti replied, “Venerable Śāriputra, the unproduced is not produced, and the produced is not produced either. And why? Venerable Śāriputra, it is because both produced and unproduced dharmas are neither conjoined nor disjoined because there is no production. And why? Venerable Śāriputra, it is because there is no production of form; there is no production of feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness; and similarly, there is no production of the constituents, the sense fields, dependent origination, the perfections, the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, all the emptinesses, all the meditative stabilizations, all the dhāraṇīs, the ten powers, the four fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, or the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha. Connect this in the same way with physical volitional factors, verbal volitional factors, or mental volitional factors, up to there is no production of the knowledge of all aspects.
- 21.51 “Venerable Śāriputra, because of this one of many explanations, there is no production of saying, there is also no production of confident readiness, and there is also no production of a dharma; those dharmas that are the point of departure for a confidence giving a readiness to speak are not produced.”

21.52 Śāriputra then declared, “Venerable Subhūti should be placed highest among Dharma teachers. And why? Because he escapes right from whatever it is he is asked about.” [F.236.a]

Subhūti replied, “It is because all dharmas have no fixed position.”<sup>368</sup>

21.53 “Venerable Subhūti, in what way do all dharmas have no fixed position?” asked Śāriputra.

Subhūti replied, “Venerable Śāriputra, form is empty of a basic nature. It has no fixed position inside, it has no fixed position outside, and it cannot be apprehended without<sup>369</sup> both. Venerable Śāriputra, feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is empty of a basic nature. It has no fixed position inside, it has no fixed position outside, and it cannot be apprehended without both.

21.54 “Venerable Śāriputra, the eyes are empty of a basic nature. They have no fixed position inside, they have no fixed position outside, and they cannot be apprehended without both. Venerable Śāriputra, the ears ... the nose ... the tongue ... the body ... and the thinking mind is empty of a basic nature. It has no fixed position inside, it has no fixed position outside, and it cannot be apprehended without both.

21.55 “Venerable Śāriputra, a form is empty of a basic nature. It has no fixed position inside, it has no fixed position outside, and it cannot be apprehended without both. Venerable Śāriputra, a sound ... a smell ... a taste ... a feeling ... and a dharma is empty of a basic nature. It has no fixed position inside, it has no fixed position outside, and it cannot be apprehended without both.

21.56 “Venerable Śāriputra, the perfection of giving is empty of a basic nature. It has no fixed position inside, it has no fixed position outside, and it cannot be apprehended without both. Venerable Śāriputra, similarly the perfection of morality ... the perfection of patience ... the perfection of perseverance ... the perfection of concentration ... and the perfection of wisdom [F.236.b] is empty of a basic nature. It has no fixed position inside, it has no fixed position outside, and it cannot be apprehended without both.

21.57 “Venerable Śāriputra, inner emptiness is empty of a basic nature. It has no fixed position inside, it has no fixed position outside, and it cannot be apprehended without both. Venerable Śāriputra, ... up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature is empty of a basic nature. It has no fixed position inside, it has no fixed position outside, and it cannot be apprehended without both.

21.58 “Venerable Śāriputra, the applications of mindfulness are empty of a basic nature. They have no fixed position inside, they have no fixed position outside, and they cannot be apprehended without both. Venerable Śāriputra, similarly the right efforts ... the legs of miraculous power ... the faculties ...

the powers ... the limbs of awakening ... and the path is empty of a basic nature. It has no fixed position inside, it has no fixed position outside, and it cannot be apprehended without both.

21.59 “Venerable Śāriputra, the powers ... the fearlessnesses ... the detailed and thorough knowledges ... and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha are empty of a basic nature. They have no fixed position inside, they have no fixed position outside, and they cannot be apprehended without both.

21.60 “Venerable Śāriputra, because of this one of many explanations, all dharmas have no fixed position because they are empty of a basic nature.

21.61 “It is thus, Venerable Śāriputra, that bodhisattva great beings practicing the six perfections should purify form; should purify feeling, perception, volitional factors, and [F.237.a] consciousness; should purify the constituents, the sense fields, dependent origination, the perfections, all the emptinesses, the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, the meditative stabilizations, the dhāraṇīs, the ten powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha; up to should purify the knowledge of all aspects.”

21.62 “Venerable Subhūti how do bodhisattva great beings practicing the six perfections purify the awakening path?” asked Śāriputra.

Subhūti replied, “Venerable Śāriputra, there is an ordinary perfection of giving and there is an extraordinary perfection of giving. Similarly, there is an ordinary perfection of morality ... perfection of patience ... perfection of perseverance ... perfection of concentration ... and perfection of wisdom and there is an extraordinary perfection of wisdom.”

21.63 “Venerable Subhūti, what is an ordinary perfection of giving and what is an extraordinary one?” asked Śāriputra.

21.64 “Venerable Śāriputra,” replied Subhūti, “here bodhisattva great beings become givers, great philanthropists, and give food to those leading a secluded religious life, to brahmins, to the pitiful, to the destitute, to travelers, and to those who are begging for food. They give drinks to those who want drink, transport to those who want transport, clothes to those who want clothes, flowers to those who want flowers, flower garlands to those who want flower garlands, incense to those [F.237.b] who want incense, creams to those who want creams, homes to those who want a home, seats and beds to those who want seats and beds, tools to those who want tools, medicine to those who want medicine, up to whatever human requirements are appropriate—a son to those who want a son; a daughter to those who want a daughter; a wife to those who want a wife; a kingdom to those who want a kingdom; their head to those who want a head; their eyes to those who want eyes; a major or minor part of their body to those who want a major or minor part of the body; and their flesh, blood, and marrow to those who want flesh, blood, and marrow. They give all that away with a fixed position, thinking, 'I am giving, they are receiving, this is charity, that is stinginess, I am a philanthropist, I am giving all my possessions away, I am doing what the buddhas said to do, I am practicing the perfection of giving.' Having given those gifts by way of apprehending something, they make them into something shared in common by all beings and dedicate them to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, thinking, 'Through the result of this charity of mine may those beings be happy in this life and may they, without appropriating anything, enter into complete nirvāṇa.'

21.65 "They give those gifts attached to the three attachments. To which three? To the idea of self, the idea of other, and the idea of giving. Attached to those three attachments they give those gifts.

21.66 "That is called the ordinary perfection of giving. And why is it called the ordinary perfection of giving? [F.238.a] Because it does not move from the ordinary, does not transcend the ordinary, and does not pass beyond the ordinary. Because of this it is called the ordinary perfection of giving.

21.67 "What is an extraordinary perfection of giving? It is the purity of the three spheres. And what is the purity of the three spheres? Venerable Śāriputra, here bodhisattva great beings giving gifts do not apprehend a self, do not apprehend a recipient, do not apprehend giving, and do not delight in its maturation. That, Venerable Śāriputra, is the bodhisattva great beings' purity of the three spheres.

21.68 "Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, here bodhisattva great beings giving gifts give away gifts to all beings but without apprehending all beings, without apprehending a self, and without apprehending a gift; they dedicate it to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening but without apprehending even awakening. That, Venerable Śāriputra, is called the extraordinary perfection of giving. And why is it called the extraordinary perfection of giving? Because it moves from the ordinary, transcends the ordinary, and passes beyond the ordinary. Because of this it is called the extraordinary perfection of giving.

21.69 "The perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, and perfection of concentration are similar to that. [B18]

21.70 "Venerable Śāriputra, there is also an ordinary perfection of wisdom and there is also an extraordinary one.

21.71 "What is the ordinary perfection of wisdom? [F.238.b] Venerable Śāriputra, here bodhisattva great beings with a fixed position apprehending 'I have curbed miserly thoughts' give gifts fixed on the ideas of self, beings, and giving, giving away all their possessions—inner and outer things, owned and unowned—whatever they may be.

- 21.72 “Firm in the good qualities of the ascetic, with a fixed position apprehending body, speech, and mind, and with a fixed view of self, a fixed view of beings, and a fixed view of the wholesome, they devote themselves to morality and the ten wholesome actions. Having made those moralities into something shared in common by all beings, with an apprehension of awakening they dedicate them to awakening by way of apprehending something.
- 21.73 “With a fixed view of praising self and disparaging others, self and beings, and patience, they put up with all the nasty things beings do, and, having made those wholesome roots into something shared in common by all beings, dedicate them, by way of apprehending something, to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.
- 21.74 “Apprehending a body, apprehending a collection of merit, apprehending a collection of knowledge, apprehending self, apprehending beings, and apprehending awakening, they make a vigorous attempt, and on account of that they falsely project that they are making a vigorous attempt.
- 21.75 “They meditate on love, compassion, joy, and equanimity; become absorbed in and emerge from the concentrations, clairvoyances, concentrations, and absorptions; and on account of relishing them [F.239.a] falsely project them. With a view that apprehends something, having made those wholesome roots into something shared in common by all beings, they dedicate them to awakening. Those are the ordinary ones.
- 21.76 “Apprehending ‘form is empty’; apprehending ‘feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are empty’; and similarly, apprehending up to ‘the awakening of a buddha is empty,’ they meditate on emptiness, which is to say, they practice while apprehending those, and having made those wholesome roots into something shared in common by all beings, they dedicate them, again by way of apprehending them, to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. Without skillful means (1) they confess, by way of apprehending them, all wrongdoings; (2) while apprehending, they rejoice in all the merits of self and others; and (3) they request all the buddhas to teach for the welfare of self and others, and having made the three aggregates of merit<sup>370</sup> into something shared in common by all beings, they dedicate them without skillful means to the knowledge of all aspects. That is called the ordinary perfection of wisdom.
- 21.77 “What is the extraordinary perfection of wisdom? With wisdom that does not apprehend self, beings, or what is to be given, they purify the perfection of giving for awakening through the purity of the three spheres; without apprehending self, beings, morality, or awakening, they purify the perfection of morality for awakening through the purity of the three spheres; without apprehending self, patience, or awakening, they purify the perfection of patience for awakening through the purity of the three spheres; without apprehending self, body, mind, [F.239.b] perseverance, merit, or knowledge, they purify the perfection of perseverance for awakening through the purity of the three spheres; without apprehending self, beings, concentrations, meditative stabilizations, or absorptions, they purify the perfection of concentration for awakening through the purity of the three spheres; without apprehending all beings, they purify the perfection of wisdom for awakening, and they dedicate all the wholesome roots to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening with a dedication free from poison,<sup>371</sup> an unsurpassed dedication, a dedication equal to the unequaled, an inconceivable dedication, an incomparable dedication, a dedication that is infinite.

“That is called the extraordinary perfection of wisdom.

21.78 “Why is it called ordinary, worldly<sup>372</sup> and why extraordinary, supramundane?

“There ordinary, worldly is used in seven different ways:<sup>373</sup> on account of them the world is established; the world is the same as them; on account of them there is something given to the world; on account of them [F.240.a] they do not escape the world; they are for the coming into being of the world; and they come into being in the world. Those are called ordinary, worldly.

21.79 “What is extraordinary, supramundane? It is used in seven different ways: on account of them the world goes free; they eliminate the world; on account of them a world causes an escape; those that are not the world; the world from which they will escape; those who free from the world; and those who free in the world. Those are called extraordinary, supramundane.<sup>374</sup>

21.80 “It is thus, Venerable Śāriputra, that bodhisattva great beings practicing the six perfections purify the awakening path.”

21.81 “Venerable Subhūti, what is the bodhisattva great beings’ awakening path?” asked Śāriputra.

21.82 Subhūti replied, “Venerable Śāriputra, the four applications of mindfulness are the bodhisattva great beings’ awakening path. The four right efforts, four legs of miraculous power, five faculties, five powers, seven limbs of awakening, and eightfold noble path; the emptiness, signless, and wishless gateways to liberation; inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature; and all the meditative stabilizations, all the dhāraṇī gateways, the ten tathāgata powers, the four fearlessnesses, the four detailed and thorough knowledges, the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, great love, and great compassion—those, Venerable Śāriputra, are called the bodhisattva great beings’ awakening path.”

21.83 “Venerable Subhūti, for the perfection of what is this the labor?” asked Śāriputra.

Subhūti replied, “This is the labor, Venerable Śāriputra, for the perfection of wisdom. And why? Because, Venerable Śāriputra, the perfection of wisdom is the one that gives birth to śrāvaka dharmas, [F.240.b] pratyekabuddha dharmas, bodhisattva dharmas, buddha dharmas, and all wholesome dharmas. Venerable Śāriputra, the perfection of wisdom incorporates and includes śrāvaka dharmas, pratyekabuddha dharmas, bodhisattva dharmas, buddha dharmas, and all wholesome dharmas. Venerable Śāriputra, having practiced this perfection of wisdom those earlier tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening; Venerable Śāriputra, having trained in this same perfection of wisdom, future tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening; and, Venerable Śāriputra, having trained in this same perfection of wisdom, tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas now dwelling and maintaining themselves in world systems in all ten directions fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

21.84 “Venerable Śāriputra, if, when this perfection of wisdom has been explained, bodhisattva great beings do not become unsure and do not become perplexed, you should know that those bodhisattva great beings stay in that state, without staying in that state, in order to protect beings, [F.241.a] in order not to abandon beings, and you should know that the bodhisattva great beings, furthermore, stay in that state, by way of not staying in that state, inseparable from attention to great compassion.”

21.85 Śāriputra replied, “Venerable Subhūti, if you accept that those who stay in that state, staying in a state inseparable from paying attention to great compassion, are bodhisattva great beings, in that case, Venerable Subhūti, all beings will be bodhisattvas. And why? Because all beings are inseparable from attention.”

21.86 “Excellent, excellent, Venerable Śāriputra,” said Subhūti. “I will object to venerable Śāriputra in that venerable Śāriputra has got at just what is meant by expressing the statement as an absolute.<sup>375</sup>

21.87 “And why? Venerable Śāriputra, you should know that the nonexistence of attention is because of the nonexistence of a being; you should know that the emptiness of attention is because of the emptiness of a being; you should know that the isolation of attention is because of the isolation of a being; you should know that the absence of an intrinsic nature in attention is because of the absence of an intrinsic nature in a being; and you should know that there is no full awakening of attention because there is no full awakening of a being.

- 21.88 “Venerable Śāriputra, you should know that the nonexistence of attention is because of the nonexistence of form; you should know that the emptiness of attention is because of the emptiness of form; you should know that the isolation of attention is because of the isolation of form; you should know that the absence of an intrinsic nature in attention is because of the absence of an intrinsic nature in form; and you should know that there is no full awakening of attention because there is no full awakening of form.
- 21.89 “Similarly, [F.241.b] you should know that the nonexistence of attention is because of the nonexistence of feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness; you should know that the emptiness of attention is because of the emptiness of consciousness; you should know that the isolation of attention is because of the isolation of consciousness; you should know that the absence of an intrinsic nature in attention is because of the absence of an intrinsic nature in consciousness; and you should know that there is no full awakening of attention because there is no full awakening of consciousness.
- 21.90 “Similarly, you should know that the nonexistence of attention is because of the nonexistence of the constituents ... the sense fields ... dependent origination ... the truths ... the dharmas on the side of awakening ... the perfections ... all the emptinesses ... all the meditative stabilizations ... all the dhāraṇī gateways, up to and the knowledge of all aspects. Similarly, you should know that because of the emptiness of the knowledge of all aspects, the isolation of the knowledge of all aspects, the absence of an intrinsic nature in the knowledge of all aspects, and because there is no full awakening of the knowledge of all aspects, there is no full awakening of attention.
- 21.91 “Venerable Śāriputra, because of this one of many explanations, I say bodhisattva great beings are not separated from staying in this state or from this attention.”
- 21.92 The Lord then complimented venerable Subhūti: “Excellent, excellent, Subhūti! You should give instruction in the perfection of wisdom to bodhisattva great beings just like this, just as you have explained through the Tathāgata’s power, and bodhisattva great beings should train in the perfection of wisdom just as you explain.”
- 21.93 As venerable Subhūti was expounding this perfection of wisdom chapter, the great billionfold world system [F.242.a] shook in six ways: it shook, shook greatly, and shook violently; quaked, quaked greatly, and quaked violently; stirred, stirred greatly, and stirred violently; became disturbed, greatly disturbed, and violently disturbed; roared, roared greatly, and roared violently; and resounded, resounded greatly, and resounded violently. The eastern direction sank down and the western direction rose up; the western direction sank down and the eastern direction rose up; the southern direction sank down and the northern direction rose up; the northern direction sank down and the southern direction rose up; the middle sank down and the edges rose up; and the edges sank down and the middle rose up.

21.94 Then at that moment the Lord smiled. Venerable Subhūti then inquired of the Lord, “Lord, why did you smile? What is the cause, what is the condition?”

21.95 The Lord replied, “Subhūti, just as inside this Sahā world system the perfection of wisdom is being taught, similarly in infinite, countless world systems in the eastern direction the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas are also teaching this very perfection of wisdom to bodhisattva great beings. Similarly, all around in infinite, countless world systems in the ten directions, tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas are teaching this very perfection of wisdom to bodhisattva great beings.”

21.96 As venerable Subhūti was expounding this perfection of wisdom chapter, two billion living beings of divine and human rank gained forbearance for dharmas that are not produced, and as the lord buddhas were teaching this very perfection of wisdom to bodhisattva great beings in all the ten directions, infinite, [F.242.b] countless numbers of beings produced the thought of unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

21.97 This was the twenty-first chapter, “Subhūti,” of the “Eighteen Thousand Mother of All Buddhas and Bodhisattvas Perfection of Wisdom.”

22.1

And indeed all the Four Mahārājas stationed in the great billionfold world system together with many hundreds of thousands of one hundred million billion gods were assembled in that very retinue, as were the Śatakratus,<sup>376</sup> heads of the gods, and the Suyāmas, Saṃtuṣitas, Nirmāṇaratis, Paranirmitavaśavartins, and Brahmapurohitas, up to the Brahmās together with many hundreds of thousands of one hundred million billion gods also assembled, and as many Brahmās, up to Śuddhāvāsa classes of gods stationed in the great billionfold world system together with hundreds of thousands of one hundred million billion gods, also were assembled. The light originating from the maturation of earlier karma coming from the bodies of those Cāturmahārājika gods, and the light originating from the maturation of earlier karma coming from the bodies of those Trāyastriṃśa, Yāma, Tuṣita, Nirmāṇarati, and Paranirmitavaśavartin classes of gods, and Brahmakāyika gods, up to the Śuddhāvāsa class of gods, does not approach the natural light of the Tathāgata even by a hundredth part, or by a thousandth part, or by a hundred thousandth part, or by a hundred-thousand hundred-millionth part; it would not stand up to any number, or fraction, or counting, or example, or comparison. In the presence of<sup>377</sup> the natural light of the Tathāgata all the lights originating from the maturation of earlier karma coming from the bodies of the gods do not gleam, do not radiate, and do not shine. [F.243.a] Among those the light of the Tathāgata reveals itself as the highest, reveals itself as special, and reveals itself as the best, superb, exemplary, unsurpassed, and unrivaled. As an analogy, just as a fired iron statue in the presence of the golden Jambū River does not gleam, does not radiate, and does not shine, similarly, in the presence of the natural light of the Tathāgata all the lights originating from the maturation of earlier karma coming from the bodies of the gods do not gleam, do not radiate, and do not shine.

Among those the light of the Tathāgata reveals itself as the highest, reveals itself as special, and reveals itself as the best, superb, exemplary, unsurpassed, and unrivaled.

22.2 Then Śatakratu, head of the gods, said to venerable Subhūti, “Venerable monk Subhūti, these Cāturmahārājika gods, these Trāyastriṃśa, Yāma, Tuṣita, Nirmāṇarati, and Paranirmitavaśavartin classes of gods, up to these Śuddhāvāsa class of gods stationed in the great billionfold world system are all assembled, venerable monk Subhūti, to listen to the Dharma. They want to hear instruction in the perfection of wisdom, so, venerable monk Subhūti, how should bodhisattva great beings stand in the perfection of wisdom? What is the bodhisattva great beings’ perfection of wisdom? And how should bodhisattva great beings train in the perfection of wisdom?”

22.3 Venerable Subhūti then replied to Śatakratu, head of the gods, “Well then, Kauśika,<sup>378</sup> listen well and hard and pay attention, and I will give instructions, [F.243.b] through the power of the Buddha, possessed by the Buddha, in what the bodhisattva great beings’ perfection of wisdom is, and in how bodhisattva great beings should stand in the perfection of wisdom, and how bodhisattva great beings should train in the perfection of wisdom.<sup>379</sup>

22.4 “Those gods who have not produced the thought of unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, they too must produce the thought of unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. Those who have entered into the flawlessness that is a perfect state<sup>380</sup> are incapable of producing the thought of unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. And why? Because the boundaries are fixed for them by the stream of saṃsāra. And yet if they also produce the thought of unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, I still rejoice in them also. I will not stand between them and their wholesome side, because they have to get hold of the dharmas that are the most special, that are higher than even the special dharmas.

22.5 “Kauśika, what is the bodhisattva great beings’ perfection of wisdom? Here bodhisattva great beings with a thought of awakening connected with the knowledge of all aspects should pay attention to form as impermanent, and they should pay attention to it as suffering, selfless, empty, a disease, a boil, a thorn, a misfortune, dependent, by its nature headed to destruction, shaky, brittle, a hazard, persecution, and a headache, and that without apprehending anything.

22.6 “Similarly, they should pay attention to feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness; similarly to the eyes, ears, nose, tongue, body, and thinking mind; and similarly to the earth element, water element, fire [F.244.a] element, wind element, space element, and consciousness element as impermanent. They should pay attention to them as suffering, selfless, empty, a disease, a boil, a thorn, a misfortune, dependent, by their nature headed to destruction, shaky, brittle, a hazard, persecution, and like a headache, and that without apprehending anything.

22.7 “With a thought of awakening connected with the knowledge of all aspects they should pay attention to ‘the volitional factors arising from ignorance as the condition.’ They should pay attention to them as impermanent, suffering, selfless, calm, isolated, and empty. They should pay attention to ‘consciousness arising from volitional factors as the condition, name and form from consciousness as the condition, the six sense fields from name and form as the condition, contact from the six sense fields as the condition, feeling from contact as the condition, craving from feeling as the condition, appropriation from craving as the condition, existence from appropriation as condition, birth from existence as the condition, and old age and death, pain, lamentation, suffering, mental anguish, and grief arising from birth as the condition—thus the arising of simply this great heap of suffering,’ and they should pay attention to all of that as impermanent, suffering, selfless, calm, isolated, and empty, and that without apprehending anything.

22.8 “With attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects they should pay attention to ‘the cessation of volitional factors from the cessation of ignorance,’ and to that as selfless,<sup>381</sup> calm, isolated, emptiness, signless, wishless, and not occasioning anything. They should pay attention to ‘the cessation of consciousness from the cessation of volitional factors, [F.244.b] the cessation of name and form from the cessation of consciousness, the cessation of the six sense fields from the cessation of name and form, the cessation of contact from the cessation of the six sense fields, the cessation of feeling from the cessation of contact, the cessation of craving from the cessation of feeling, the cessation of appropriation from the cessation of craving, the cessation of existence from the cessation of appropriation, the cessation of birth from the cessation of existence, and the cessation of old age and death, pain, lamentation, suffering, mental anguish, and grief from the cessation of birth—thus the cessation of simply this great heap of suffering,’ and to all of that as selfless, calm, isolated, emptiness, signless, wishless, and not occasioning anything, and that without apprehending anything.

22.9 “Furthermore, Kauśika, bodhisattva great beings with a thought of awakening connected with the knowledge of all aspects cultivate the four applications of mindfulness, and that without apprehending anything. Similarly, they cultivate the four right efforts, four legs of miraculous power, five faculties, five powers, seven limbs of awakening, and eightfold noble path, as well as the ten tathāgata powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, and eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, and they cultivate them without apprehending anything.

22.10 “Furthermore, Kauśika, bodhisattva great beings with a thought-production connected with the knowledge of all aspects practice the perfection of giving, and they practice it without apprehending anything. Similarly, bodhisattva great beings with the thought of awakening connected with the knowledge of all aspects practice the perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, [F.245.a] and perfection of wisdom, and practice them without apprehending anything.

22.11 “Furthermore, Kauśika, when bodhisattva great beings with a thought-production connected with the knowledge of all aspects are practicing the perfection of wisdom, they thus, putting one part of the picture together with the other parts,<sup>382</sup> while thinking, applying,<sup>383</sup> completing, and extending, make a detailed and thorough analysis of all these parts together,<sup>384</sup> thinking, ‘They are selfless, they are not me, and they are not mine.’ And why? Because the bodhisattva great beings’ thought of the wholesome roots is not touched by the thought of awakening, and neither is the thought of dedication touched by the thought of the wholesome roots. Kauśika, the thought of the wholesome roots does not exist and is not apprehended in the thought of awakening, and the thought of awakening also does not exist and is not apprehended in the thought of the wholesome roots; the thought of awakening does not exist and is not apprehended in the thought of dedication, and the thought of dedication also does not exist and is not apprehended in the thought of awakening. The thought of the wholesome roots does not exist in the thought of the wholesome roots, the thought of awakening does not exist in the thought of awakening, and the thought of dedication does not exist in the thought of dedication. Kauśika, this not settling down on and not apprehending any one part, even while thus making an examination of all the parts of the picture, is the bodhisattva great beings’ perfection of wisdom.”

22.12 Then Śatakratu, head of the gods, inquired of venerable Subhūti, “Venerable monk Subhūti, how is it that the thought of dedication is not touched by the thought of awakening? How is it that the thought of awakening [F.245.b] is not touched by the thought of dedication? How is it that the thought of dedication does not exist and is not apprehended in the thought of awakening, and how is it that the thought of awakening does not exist and is not apprehended in the thought of dedication?”

- 22.13      “Kauśika,” replied Subhūti, “the thought of dedication is no thought, and the thought of awakening is no thought. Therefore, because what is no thought is inconceivable, and what is inconceivable is no thought, a state of no thought does not dedicate a state of no thought, and the inconceivable does not dedicate the inconceivable. So, the state of no thought is inconceivable, and the inconceivable is the state of no thought. That, Kauśika, is the bodhisattva great beings’ perfection of wisdom.”
- 22.14      Then the Lord said to venerable Subhūti, “Excellent, Subhūti, excellent! The instruction in the perfection of wisdom you give bodhisattva great beings, Subhūti—the enthusiasm you convey to them—is excellent indeed!”
- 22.15      Subhūti replied, “I have to feel a sense of appreciation, Lord, and not feel no sense of appreciation, because earlier when you, Lord, were practicing the bodhisattva way of life in the presence of earlier tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas, their śrāvakas advised and instructed you in the six perfections—they taught them to you, made you take them up, made you excited about them and motivated, and caused you to enter into them and established you in them. Having done so, Lord, in the form of a bodhisattva [F.246.a] you trained in the six perfections and awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. Like that we too, Lord, have to advise, instruct, teach, inspire to take up, excite, motivate, cause to enter into, and establish the bodhisattva great beings in the six perfections—bodhisattva great beings who, advised, instructed, taught, inspired to take up, excited, motivated, caused to enter into, and established by us, will also awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.”
- 22.16      Then venerable Subhūti said to Śatakratu, head of the gods, “So then, Kauśika, listen well and hard and pay attention, and I will explain how bodhisattva great beings should stand in the perfection of wisdom, and how they should not stand.
- 22.17      “Kauśika, form is empty of form; feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is empty of consciousness; and a bodhisattva is empty of a bodhisattva. Thus, Kauśika, the emptiness of form; the emptiness of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness; and the emptiness of a bodhisattva are not two and are not divided. Kauśika, bodhisattva great beings should stand in the perfection of wisdom like that.
- 22.18      “Furthermore, Kauśika, the eyes are empty of the eyes; the ears ... the nose ... [F.246.b] the tongue ... the body ... and the thinking mind is empty of the thinking mind; and a bodhisattva is empty of a bodhisattva. Thus, the emptiness of the eyes; the emptiness of the ears, nose, tongue, body, and thinking mind; and the emptiness of a bodhisattva are not two and are not divided. Kauśika, bodhisattva great beings should stand in the perfection of wisdom like that.

- 22.19 “Furthermore, Kauśika, the earth element is empty of the earth element; the water element ... fire element ... wind element ... space element ... and consciousness element is empty of the consciousness element; and a bodhisattva is empty of a bodhisattva. Thus, the emptiness of the earth element; the emptiness of the water element, fire element, wind element, space element, and consciousness element; and the emptiness of a bodhisattva are not two and are not divided. Kauśika, bodhisattva great beings should stand in the perfection of wisdom like that.
- 22.20 “Furthermore, Kauśika, ignorance is empty of ignorance; similarly, volitional factors ... consciousness ... name and form ... the six sense fields ... contact ... feeling ... craving ... appropriation ... existence ... birth ... and old age and death is empty of old age and death; the cessation of ignorance is empty of the cessation of ignorance; similarly, the cessation of volitional factors ... consciousness ... name and form ... the six sense fields ... contact ... feeling ... craving ... appropriation ... existence ... birth ... and old age and death is empty of the cessation of old age and death; and a bodhisattva is empty of a bodhisattva. Thus, the emptiness of ignorance and the emptiness of the cessation of ignorance, up to [F.247.a] the emptiness of old age and death and the emptiness of the cessation of old age and death, and the emptiness of a bodhisattva are not two and are not divided. Kauśika, bodhisattva great beings should stand in the perfection of wisdom like that.
- 22.21 “Furthermore, Kauśika, the perfection of giving is empty of the perfection of giving; similarly, the perfection of morality ... the perfection of patience ... the perfection of perseverance ... the perfection of concentration ... and the perfection of wisdom is empty of the perfection of wisdom; and a bodhisattva is empty of a bodhisattva. Thus, the emptiness of the perfection of giving; the emptiness of the perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and the perfection of wisdom, and the emptiness of a bodhisattva, are not two and are not divided.
- 22.22 “Furthermore, Kauśika, inner emptiness is empty of inner emptiness; up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature is empty of the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature; and a bodhisattva is empty of a bodhisattva. Thus, the emptiness of inner emptiness; up to the emptiness of the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature; and the emptiness of a bodhisattva are not two and are not divided.
- 22.23 “Furthermore, Kauśika, the applications of mindfulness are empty of the applications of mindfulness. The right efforts ... the legs of miraculous power ... the faculties ... the powers ... the limbs of awakening ... the eightfold noble path ... the ten powers ... [F.247.b] the fearlessnesses ... the detailed and thorough knowledges ... up to the distinct attributes of a buddha are empty of the distinct attributes of a buddha. A bodhisattva is - empty of a bodhisattva. Thus, the emptiness of the applications of mindfulness ... ; up to the emptiness of the distinct attributes of a buddha; and the emptiness of a bodhisattva are not two and are not divided.

- 22.24 “Furthermore, Kauśika, the meditative stabilizations are empty of the meditative stabilizations, the dhāraṇī gateways are empty of the dhāraṇī gateways, and a bodhisattva is empty of a bodhisattva. Thus, the emptiness of the meditative stabilizations, the emptiness of the dhāraṇī gateways, and the emptiness of a bodhisattva are not two and are not divided.
- 22.25 “Furthermore, Kauśika, the Śrāvaka Vehicle is empty of the Śrāvaka Vehicle, the Pratyekabuddha Vehicle is empty of the Pratyekabuddha Vehicle, and the Great Vehicle is empty of the Great Vehicle. A śrāvaka is empty of the state of a śrāvaka, a pratyekabuddha is empty of the state of a pratyekabuddha, and a buddha is empty of buddhahood. And a bodhisattva is empty of a bodhisattva. Thus, the emptiness of the Śrāvaka Vehicle, the emptiness of the state of a śrāvaka, up to the emptiness of the Great Vehicle, the emptiness of buddhahood, and the emptiness of a bodhisattva are not two and are not divided.
- 22.26 “Furthermore, Kauśika, up to the knowledge of all aspects is empty of the knowledge of all aspects, and a bodhisattva is empty of a bodhisattva. Thus, up to the emptiness of the knowledge of all aspects and the emptiness of a bodhisattva [F.248.a] are not two and are not divided. Kauśika, bodhisattva great beings should stand in the perfection of wisdom like that.”
- 22.27 Then Śatakratu, head of the gods, asked venerable Subhūti, “Venerable monk Subhūti, how should bodhisattva great beings not stand in the perfection of wisdom?”
- 22.28 “Kauśika,” replied Subhūti, “here bodhisattva great beings should not stand in form by way of apprehending something, and they should not stand in feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness by way of apprehending something. They should not stand in the eyes, they should not stand in a form, they should not stand in eye consciousness, they should not stand in eye contact, and they should not stand in feeling that arises from the condition of eye contact. Similarly, they should not stand in the ears ... the nose ... the tongue ... the body ... and they should not stand in the thinking mind, dharmas, thinking-mind consciousness, thinking-mind contact, or feeling that arises from the condition of thinking-mind contact by way of apprehending something.
- 22.29 “They should not stand in the earth element by way of apprehending something, and they should not stand in the water element, fire element, wind element, space element, or consciousness element by way of apprehending something.

- 22.30 “They should not stand in the applications of mindfulness by way of apprehending something, and they should not stand in the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, or path, or the ten powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, distinct attributes of a buddha, or knowledge of all aspects [F.248.b] by way of apprehending something.
- 22.31 “They should not stand in the result of stream enterer by way of apprehending something. They should not stand in the result of once-returned, the result of non-returned, the state of a worthy one, or the state of a pratyekabuddha by way of apprehending something. They should not stand in buddhahood by way of apprehending something.
- 22.32 “Kauśika, they thus should not dwell on the idea of form<sup>385</sup> by way of apprehending something, up to they should not dwell on the idea of the knowledge of all aspects by way of apprehending something. They thus should not dwell on the idea of the result of once-returned by way of apprehending something, up to they should not dwell on the idea of buddhahood by way of apprehending something.
- 22.33 “They should not dwell on the idea that form is permanent by way of apprehending something. Similarly, they should not dwell on the idea that form is impermanent, is happiness, is suffering, has a self, is selfless, is calm, is not calm, is isolated, is not isolated, is empty, is not empty, has a sign, is signless, is wished for, or is wishless by way of apprehending something.
- 22.34 “Similarly, they should not dwell on the ideas that feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness are permanent, are impermanent, are happiness, are suffering, have a self, are selfless, are calm, are not calm, are isolated, are not isolated, are empty, are not empty, have a sign, are signless, are a wish for, or are wishless by way of apprehending something.
- 22.35 “Similarly, they should not dwell on the idea that the constituents, the sense fields, dependent origination, [F.249.a] the perfections, all the emptinesses, the dharmas on the side of awakening, the ten powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, or the distinct attributes of a buddha are permanent, are impermanent, are happiness, are suffering, have a self, are selfless, are calm, are not calm, are isolated, are not isolated, are empty, are not empty, have a sign, are signless, are wished for, or are wishless by way of apprehending something.
- 22.36 “Furthermore, Kauśika, they should not dwell on the idea that the result of stream enterer is a category of the uncompounded by way of apprehending something. Similarly, they should not dwell on the idea the result of once-returned, the result of non-returned, the state of a worthy one, or the result of a pratyekabuddha is a category of the uncompounded by way of - apprehending something, up to they should not dwell on the idea that the knowledge of all aspects is a category of the uncompounded by way of apprehending something.

- 22.37 “They should not dwell on the idea that the result of stream enterer is worthy of gifts by way of apprehending something. Similarly, they should not dwell on the idea that the result of once-returner, or the result of non-returner, the state of a worthy one, a pratyekabuddha, or a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha is worthy of gifts by way of apprehending something.
- 22.38 “Furthermore, Kauśika, bodhisattva great beings should not stand on the first level by way of apprehending something; similarly, they should not stand on ... up to the tenth level by way of apprehending something. And why? Because where there is a place to stand there is movement.
- 22.39 “Furthermore, Kauśika, bodhisattva great beings should not, by way of apprehending something, having stood in the first production of the thought—that is, having become a bodhisattva—dwell on the idea ‘I will complete the perfection of giving,’ and similarly, they should not dwell on the idea ‘I will complete the perfection of morality, the perfection of patience, the perfection of perseverance, [F.249.b] the perfection of concentration, and the perfection of wisdom’ by way of apprehending something.
- 22.40 “They should not dwell on the idea ‘I will complete the applications of mindfulness’ by way of apprehending something, and they should not dwell on the idea ‘I will complete the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and the path’ by way of apprehending something.
- 22.41 “Bodhisattva great beings should not, by way of apprehending something, dwell on the idea ‘I will, having entered into a bodhisattva great being’s flawlessness, stand on the irreversible level.’ Bodhisattva great beings should not dwell on the idea ‘I will complete the five clairvoyances’ by way of apprehending something. Bodhisattva great beings should not, by way of apprehending something, dwell on the idea ‘I will, standing in the bodhisattva great beings’ five clairvoyances, approach infinite, countless buddhafiels to bow down to and attend on the lord buddhas and listen to the Dharma, and having listened I will practice it for suchness and teach others.’ Bodhisattva great beings should not, by way of apprehending something, dwell on the idea ‘I will bring buddhafiels into being that are just like those of those lord buddhas.’ Bodhisattva great being should not, by way of apprehending something, dwell on the idea ‘I will, having practiced the perfection of wisdom, bring beings to maturity in unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.’ [F.250.a]

- 22.42 “Bodhisattva great beings should not, by way of apprehending something, dwell on the idea ‘I will, having gone to infinite, countless world systems, show respect to, demonstrate reverence for, show honor to, and worship the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas with flowers, incense, perfumes, garlands, creams,<sup>386</sup> robes, parasols, flags, and banners, and I will offer to the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas many hundreds of thousands of one hundred million billion pieces of the finest clothing.
- 22.43 “Bodhisattva great beings should not dwell on the idea ‘I will establish infinite, countless beings beyond measure in unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening’ by way of apprehending something.
- 22.44 “Bodhisattva great beings should not, by way of apprehending something, dwell on the idea ‘I will make the five eyes perfect:<sup>387</sup> the flesh eye, divine eye, wisdom eye, dharma eye, and buddha eye.’ They should not, by way of apprehending something, dwell on the idea ‘I will make the meditative stabilizations perfect.’ They should not, by way of apprehending something, dwell on the idea ‘I will play in whichever meditative stabilization I want to play in.’ They should not dwell on the idea ‘I will make the dhāraṇī gateways perfect’ by way of apprehending something.
- 22.45 “Bodhisattva great beings should not dwell on the idea ‘I will make the ten tathāgata powers perfect’ by way of apprehending something; they should not dwell on the idea ‘I will make the four fearlessnesses, the four detailed and thorough knowledges, and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha perfect’ by way of apprehending something; and they should not dwell on the idea [F.250.b] ‘I will make great love and great compassion perfect’ by way of apprehending something.
- 22.46 “They should not dwell on the idea ‘I will make the major marks of a great person perfect on the body’ by way of apprehending something, and they should not dwell on the idea ‘I will make the eighty minor signs perfect on the body’ by way of apprehending something.
- 22.47 “They should not, by way of apprehending something, dwell on the idea that a faith follower and Dharma follower are the eighth,<sup>388</sup> the one stopped at most seven times is a stream enterer.<sup>389</sup> They should not, by way of apprehending something, dwell on the ideas of those born in family after family, and those who have one interruption. They should not, by way of apprehending something, dwell on the idea that one whose life has come to an end and whose afflictions have come to an end is the person equal in stature.<sup>390</sup> They should not dwell on the idea that a stream enterer enters nirvāṇa in the intermediate state by way of apprehending something. They should not, by way of apprehending something, dwell on the idea that a once-returner, having come once to this world, makes an end to suffering.

They should not, by way of apprehending something, dwell on the idea of a candidate for actualizing the result of non-returner. They should not, by way of apprehending something, dwell on the idea that a non-returner will enter nirvāṇa right there. They should not, by way of apprehending something, dwell on the idea of a candidate for actualizing the result of a worthy one. They should not, by way of apprehending something, dwell on the idea that right here a worthy one will pass into complete nirvāṇa in the element of nirvāṇa without any aggregates left behind.

22.48 “They should not dwell on the idea of a pratyekabuddha by way of apprehending something. They should not, by way of apprehending something, dwell on the idea that a bodhisattva passes beyond the śrāvaka level and the pratyekabuddha level and will stand on the bodhisattva level. They should not dwell on the idea that there is the knowledge of a knower of path aspects<sup>391</sup> by way of apprehending something. [F.251.a] They should not, by way of apprehending something, dwell on the idea that, having completely awakened fully to all dharmas, all residual impressions, connections, and afflictions have come to an end.

22.49 “They should not, by way of apprehending something, dwell on the idea ‘I will, as a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha, completely awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening and turn the wheel of Dharma.’ They should even not dwell on such an idea as ‘having done the work of a buddha, I will lead infinite, countless beings to nirvāṇa’ by way of apprehending something.

22.50 “They should not, by way of apprehending something, dwell on the idea ‘I will, standing on the four legs of miraculous power, become completely absorbed in meditative stabilization, and through having become completely absorbed in that sort of meditative stabilization I will remain for as many eons as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River.’

22.51 “They should not, by way of apprehending something, dwell on the idea that the length of their lives will become infinite. They should not, by way of apprehending something, dwell on the idea that each of their major marks will become perfected through a hundred merits. They should not, by way of apprehending something, dwell on the idea that the size of their buddhafield will be the combined size of as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River to the east, and similarly, of as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River to the south, west, and north. They should not, by way of apprehending something, dwell on the idea that their great billionfold world system will be made of diamonds.

22.52 “They should not, by way of apprehending something, dwell on the idea that from their Bodhi tree such fragrances must emanate that for those beings who smell those fragrances greed will not harm them; hatred and confusion will not harm them; śrāvaka thoughts and pratyekabuddha thoughts will not arise [F.251.b] in them; they will become fixed on unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening; and they will not have any physical or mental disease.

22.53 “They should not, by way of apprehending something, dwell on the idea that in their buddhafield there will not be the word form, and there will not be the words feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness. They should not, by way of apprehending something, dwell on the idea that there will not be the words perfection of giving, and there will not be the words perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, or perfection of wisdom. They should not, by way of apprehending something, dwell on the idea that there will not be the words applications of mindfulness, and they should not dwell on the idea there will not be the words right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, eightfold noble path, ten powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, or distinct attributes of a buddha. They should not, by way of apprehending something, dwell on the idea that there will not be the words stream enterer, once-returner, non-returner, state of a worthy one, pratyekabuddha, bodhisattva, or buddha.

22.54 “And why? Because tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas do not, having awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, apprehend any dharmas.

22.55 “Kauśika, bodhisattva great beings [F.252.a] should not stand in the perfection of wisdom like that, by way of apprehending anything.”

22.56 Then it occurred to venerable Śāriputra to think, “Well then, however could bodhisattva great beings stand in the perfection of wisdom?”

22.57 Then venerable Subhūti, understanding in his mind the thoughts occurring to venerable Śāriputra, asked venerable Śāriputra, “What do you think, Venerable Śāriputra, could<sup>392</sup> the tathāgatas ever have stood anywhere?”

22.58 Śāriputra replied, “Venerable Subhūti, the tathāgatas could never have stood anywhere. Indeed, the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas have totally nonabiding minds. They have not stood in form; they have not stood in feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness; they have not stood in the compounded element and have not stood in the un compounded element; and similarly, up to they have not stood in the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, up to they have not stood in the knowledge of all aspects.”

22.59 Then venerable Subhūti said to venerable Śāriputra, “Thus it is, Venerable Śāriputra, that just as the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfect complete buddhas have not stood in form, and have not not stood in form; have not stood in feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness, and have not not stood in consciousness, up to have not stood in the knowledge of all aspects, and have not not stood in the knowledge of all aspects, so too bodhisattva great beings should stand in the perfection of wisdom. Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings should stand in the perfection of wisdom like that, [F.252.b] by way of not taking a stand.” [B19]

22.60 Then it occurred to certain gods in that retinue to think, “Whatever yakṣas sounds the yakṣas make, talk the yakṣas talk—whatever the yakṣas say, the statements of the yakṣas—all of those, if they are said, are comprehensible to us, but this, namely, what the elder Subhūti says about the perfection of wisdom, what he discourses on, explains, and teaches, is incomprehensible to us.”

22.61 Then venerable Subhūti, understanding in his mind the thoughts occurring to those gods, asked the gods, “O gods, is what is said incomprehensible?”

“Incomprehensible, Ārya Subhūti!” affirmed the gods.

22.62 Subhūti then explained, “It is because not even one syllable is said here, and what is not said is not heard. And why? Because in the perfection of wisdom there are no syllables, and in it there is neither hearing, nor teaching, nor comprehension, because in the perfect, complete awakening of the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas there are also no syllables. As an analogy, gods, a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha might magically produce a magically created buddha, and he might magically produce the four magically created retinues of monks, nuns, laymen, and laywomen. When that magical creation teaches the four magically created retinues, what do you think, gods, has anything at all been taught or heard by anyone?”

“No indeed, venerable monk Subhūti, nothing,” replied the gods.

22.63 “Similarly, gods,” continued Subhūti, “all dharmas are like a magical creation. There nobody has explained, nobody has heard, and nobody has comprehended. [F.253.a]

22.64 “To illustrate, gods, when a man falls asleep and in a dream beholds a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha teaching the Dharma, what do you think, gods, has anyone explained, heard, or comprehended?”

“No indeed, venerable monk Subhūti, no one,” replied the gods.

22.65 “Similarly, gods,” continued Subhūti, “all dharmas are like a dream. There nobody has explained, nobody has heard, and nobody has comprehended.

22.66 “To illustrate, gods, were two people standing in a canyon to shout out a praise of the Buddha, shout out a praise of the Dharma, and shout out a praise of the Saṅgha, the echoes of both of them would ring out. What do you think, gods, because of that first echo would the sound of the other echo be made known?”

- “No indeed, venerable monk Subhūti, it would not,” replied the gods.
- 22.67 “Similarly, gods,” continued Subhūti, “all dharmas are like an echo. There nobody has explained, nobody has heard, and nobody has comprehended.
- 22.68 “To illustrate, gods, when a clever magician or magician’s apprentice at the junction of two main roads conjures up a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha, who then teaches the Dharma to the four magically created retinues, what do you think, gods, has anyone explained, heard, or comprehended?”
- “No indeed, venerable monk Subhūti, no one,” replied the gods.
- 22.69 “Similarly, gods,” continued Subhūti, “all dharmas are like a magical illusion. There nobody has explained, nobody has heard, and nobody has comprehended.”
- 22.70 Then it occurred to those gods to think, “Yes! [F.253.b] This Ārya Subhūti demonstrates what is deeper than the deep, introduces what is more subtle than the subtle. Yes! This Ārya Subhūti is going to expand on the perfection of wisdom. Yes! This Ārya Subhūti is going to make the perfection of wisdom clear.”
- 22.71 Then venerable Subhūti, understanding in his mind the thoughts occurring to those gods, said to those gods, “O gods, form is not deep and is not subtle, and feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are not deep and are not subtle. And why? O gods, it is because the intrinsic nature of form is not deep and is not subtle, and the intrinsic nature of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness is not deep and is not subtle.
- 22.72 “The eyes are not deep and are not subtle, and the ears, nose, tongue, body, and thinking mind are not deep and are not subtle. A form is not deep and is not subtle, and a sound, a smell, a taste, a feeling, and dharmas are not deep and are not subtle. The earth element is not deep and is not subtle, and the water element, fire element, wind element, space element, and consciousness element are not deep and are not subtle. The perfection of giving is not deep and is not subtle, and the perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and perfection of wisdom are not deep and are not subtle. Inner emptiness is not deep and is not subtle, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature is not deep and is not subtle. The applications of mindfulness are not deep and are not subtle, and similarly, the right efforts, [F.254.a] legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, eightfold noble path, ten powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, up to the distinct attributes of a buddha are not deep and are not subtle. All the meditative stabilizations and all the

- dhāraṇī gateways are not deep and are not subtle, up to the knowledge of all aspects is not deep and is not subtle. And why? Because the intrinsic nature of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects is not deep and is not subtle.”
- 22.73 Then it occurred to those gods to think, “Well then, in this Dharma teaching has nothing been designated form; has nothing been designated feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness; has nothing been designated the constituents, sense fields, or dependent originations; has nothing been designated the perfections or the dharmas on the side of awakening; and has nothing been designated all the emptinesses, all the meditative stabilizations, all the dhāraṇī gateways, the ten powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, up to the distinct attributes of a buddha? In this Dharma teaching has nothing even been designated the result of stream enterer, and has nothing been designated the result of once-returner, the result of non-returner, the state of a worthy one, the state of a pratyekabuddha, or a bodhisattva? Has nothing been designated buddhahood? Has nothing even been designated the letters?”
- 22.74 Then venerable Subhūti, understanding in his mind the thoughts occurring to those gods, said to those gods, [F.254.b] “Exactly so, gods, exactly so. Unteachable is the awakening of the tathāgatas; there is no discourse on it, nobody has heard it, and nobody has comprehended it.
- 22.75 “Therefore, gods, those who want to be candidates for the result of stream enterer and those who want to realize the result of stream enterer cannot do so without having resorted to this forbearance; those who want to realize the results of once-returner, non-returner, the state of a worthy one, the state of a pratyekabuddha, and the state of a buddha cannot do so without having resorted to this forbearance.
- 22.76 “O gods, bodhisattva great beings, from the first production of the thought of awakening onward, should stand in the perfection of wisdom like this, based on there being no discourse and no listening.”
- 22.77 This was the twenty-second chapter, “Śatakratu,” of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.”

CHAPTER 23: HARD TO UNDERSTAND

23.1 Then it occurred to those gods to think, “What would the elder Subhūti accept those listening to the Dharma to be like?”

23.2 Then venerable Subhūti, understanding in his mind the thoughts occurring to those gods, said to those gods, “Gods, I would accept those listening to the doctrine to be like illusory beings. I would accept those listening to the doctrine to be like magically created beings. They will not listen to, master, or directly realize anything at all.”

23.3 Then those gods asked venerable Subhūti, “Venerable monk Subhūti, are beings like an illusion, and are those listening to the doctrine like an illusion? Are beings like a magical creation, and are those listening to the doctrine like a magical creation?”

23.4 “Exactly so, gods, exactly so,” replied Subhūti. “Beings are like an illusion, and those listening to the doctrine are like an illusion. Beings are like a magical creation, and those listening to the doctrine are like a magical creation.

23.5 “Beings, gods, are like a dream and are like an illusion. Form, too, gods, is like a dream [F.255.a] and is like an illusion. Feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness, gods, are like a dream and are like an illusion. The eyes, gods, are like a dream and are like an illusion, and similarly the ears, nose, tongue, body, and thinking mind are like a dream and are like an illusion. A form, gods, is like a dream and is like an illusion, and a sound, a smell, a taste, a feeling, and dharmas are like a dream and are like an illusion. Eye consciousness, eye contact, and the feeling that arises from the condition of eye contact are like a dream and are like an illusion. Similarly, ear ... nose ... tongue ... body ... and thinking-mind consciousness, thinking-mind contact, and the feeling that arises from the condition of thinking-mind contact are like a dream and are like an illusion.

- 23.6 “The perfection of giving is like a dream and is like an illusion, and the perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and perfection of wisdom are like a dream and are like an illusion.
- 23.7 “Inner emptiness is like a dream and is like an illusion, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature is like a dream and is like an illusion.
- 23.8 “The applications of mindfulness too are like a dream and are like an illusion, and the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, eightfold noble path, ten powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, and distinct attributes of a buddha are like a dream and are like an illusion.
- 23.9 “The result of stream enterer [F.255.b] is also like a dream and is like an illusion, and a stream enterer is also like a dream and is like an illusion. The result of once-returner and a once-returner, the result of non-returner and a non-returner, and the state of a worthy one and a worthy one are also like a dream and are like an illusion. A pratyekabuddha’s awakening is also like a dream and is like an illusion, and a pratyekabuddha is also like a dream and is like an illusion. Unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening is also like a dream and is like an illusion, and buddhahood is also like a dream and is like an illusion.”
- 23.10 Then those gods asked venerable Subhūti, “Venerable monk Subhūti, is even buddhahood like a dream, like an illusion? Is nirvāṇa like a dream and like an illusion too?”
- 23.11 “Gods,” replied Subhūti, “I declare that even nirvāṇa is like a dream and is like an illusion, and if there is any dharma superior even to nirvāṇa, I declare that it too is like a dream and is like an illusion. And why? Gods, it is because a dream, an illusion, and nirvāṇa are not two and are not divided.”
- 23.12 Then venerable Śāripūtra, venerable Mahāmaudgalyāyana, venerable Mahākauṣṭhilya, venerable Mahākātyāyana, venerable Pūrṇa Maitrāyaṇīputra, venerable Mahākāśyapa, and many thousands of bodhisattvas inquired of the venerable monk Subhūti, “Who will be the recipients of this perfection of wisdom so deep, so hard to behold, so hard to understand, so peaceful, so sublime, so subtle, so private,<sup>393</sup> [F.256.a] so not an object of speculative thought, so brilliant, so absolutely noble, and so much an object to be known by the learned and wise?”
- 23.13 Those great śrāvakas and great bodhisattvas having thus inquired, venerable Subhūti said to them, “Venerable Ones, bodhisattva great beings irreversible from awakening will be the recipients of this perfection of wisdom so deep, so hard to behold, so hard to understand, so peaceful, so sublime, so subtle, so private, so not an object of speculative thought, so brilliant, so absolutely noble, and so much an object to be known by the learned and wise. Persons<sup>394</sup> who have seen the truths, or worthy ones with outflows dried up, or those who have completed their plan, or those who have served well the victors, or those whose wholesome roots have grown under many hundred millions of buddhas, or sons and daughters of good families who have been mentored by spiritual friends also will be the recipients of this perfection of wisdom so deep, so hard to behold, so hard to understand, so peaceful, so sublime, so subtle, so private, so not an object of speculative thought, so brilliant, so absolutely noble, so much an object to be known by the learned and wise.

23.14 “They will not construct the idea that form is empty, and they will not construct the idea that emptiness is form. They will not construct the idea that feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is empty, and they will not construct the idea that emptiness is consciousness. [F.256.b]

23.15 “They will not construct the idea that form is signless, and they will not construct the idea that signlessness is form. They will not construct the idea that feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is signless, they will not construct the idea that signlessness is consciousness.

23.16 “They will not construct the idea that form is wishless, and they will not construct the idea that wishlessness is form. They will not construct the idea that form does not arise, and they will not construct the idea that nonarising is form. They will not construct the idea that form does not stop, and they will not construct the idea that nonstopping is form. Similarly, they will not construct the idea that form is calm, is not calm, is isolated, and is not isolated.

23.17 “They will not construct the idea that feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is wishless, and they will not construct the idea that wishlessness is consciousness. Similarly, they will not construct the idea that it does not arise, does not stop, is calm, or is isolated. Similarly, they will not construct the idea that the constituents, sense fields, dependent origination, perfections, dharmas on the side of awakening, inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, applications of mindfulness, right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, eightfold noble path, ten powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, [F.257.a] meditative stabilizations, dhāraṇī gateways, and similarly, the result of stream enterer, result of once-returner, result of non-returner, state of a worthy one, or state of a pratyekabuddha are like that either.

- 23.18 “They will not construct the idea that the knowledge of all aspects is empty, and they will not construct the idea that emptiness is the knowledge of all aspects. They will not construct the idea that the knowledge of all aspects is signless, and they will not construct the idea that signlessness is the knowledge of all aspects. They will not construct the idea that the knowledge of all aspects is wishless, and they will not construct the idea that wishlessness is the knowledge of all aspects. They will not construct the idea that the knowledge of all aspects does not arise, does not stop, is calm, or is isolated.
- 23.19 “They will not construct the idea that the compounded element is empty, and they will not construct the idea that emptiness is the compounded element. They will not construct the idea that the compounded element is signless, [F.257.b] and they will not construct the idea that signlessness is the compounded element. They will not construct the idea that the compounded element is wishless, and they will not construct the idea that wishlessness is the compounded element. Similarly, they will not construct the idea the compounded element does not arise, does not stop, is calm, or is isolated.
- 23.20 “They will not construct the idea that the un-compounded element is empty, and they will not construct the idea that emptiness is the un-compounded element. They will not construct the idea that the un-compounded element is signless, and they will not construct the idea that signlessness is the un-compounded element. They will not construct the idea that the un-compounded element is wishless, and they will not construct the idea that wishlessness is the un-compounded element. Similarly, they will not construct the idea the un-compounded element does not arise, does not stop, is calm, or is isolated.
- 23.21 “Gods, in this way nobody will be a recipient of this perfection of wisdom that is so deep, so absolutely noble, so brilliant, and so much an object to be known by the learned and wise. And why? Because here no Dharma at all is pointed out, explained, or taught, and just as no Dharma at all is pointed out, explained, or taught, so too no being at all will be the recipient of it.”
- 23.22 Then venerable Śāriputra inquired of venerable Subhūti,<sup>395</sup> “Is it not the case that in this perfection of wisdom the three vehicles—that is, the Śrāvaka Vehicle, the Pratyekabuddha Vehicle, and the perfect, complete Buddha Vehicle—are taught in detail? Is it not the case that the first production of the thought up until the tenth production of the thought are taught for the assistance of bodhisattva great beings? Is it not the case that the bodhisattva’s path is taught—that is, the perfection of giving, perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and perfection of wisdom; the applications of mindfulness, right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, eightfold noble path, ten powers, [F.258.a] fearlessnesses, and detailed and thorough knowledges; up to the distinct attributes of a buddha? So, is it also not the case that bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom will miraculously take birth and appear? So, is it also not the case that they will become those whose clairvoyances naturally do not decline? Is it also not the case that those kinds of wholesome roots on account of which they pass, if they want to, from buddhahood to buddhahood and respect, revere, honor, and worship those lord buddhas—that such wholesome roots that bring that about will flourish? Is it not the case that they will not forget the stream of the Dharma they will listen to, right up until they fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening? Is it not the case that by way of meditative absorption without distraction they will always be in meditative absorption? And is it not the case that they will become those with an unimpeded confident readiness, an unbroken confident readiness, a meditatively absorbed confident readiness, an appropriate confident readiness, a connected confident readiness, a meaningful confident readiness, and a superior confident readiness that rises above all the world?”

23.23 “Exactly so, Venerable Śāriputra, exactly so,” replied Subhūti. “It is just as you say. In this perfection of wisdom the three vehicles—that is, the Śrāvaka Vehicle, the Pratyekabuddha Vehicle, and the perfect, complete Buddha Vehicle—are taught in detail. Connect this in the same way, up to it is taught for the assistance of bodhisattva great beings that they will become those with a superior [F.258.b] confident readiness that rises above all the world. And it is taught, furthermore, by way of not apprehending anything. It is taught by way of not apprehending what? It is taught by way of not apprehending a self, up to by way of not apprehending one who knows and one who sees; by way of not apprehending form; by way of not apprehending feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness; by way of not apprehending the eyes; by way of not apprehending the ears, nose, tongue, body, or thinking mind; by way of not apprehending the earth element, water element, fire element, wind element, space element, or consciousness element; by way of not apprehending the perfection of giving, perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, or perfection of wisdom; by way of not apprehending inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature; by way of not apprehending the applications of mindfulness, right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, or eightfold noble path; and by way of not apprehending the ten powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, or distinct attributes of a buddha, up to by way of not apprehending the knowledge of all aspects.”

23.24 Venerable Śāriputra then asked venerable Subhūti, “In this perfection of wisdom, why are the three vehicles taught in detail by way of not apprehending anything, up to why [F.259.a] is it taught for the assistance of bodhisattva great beings that they will become those with a superior confident readiness that rises above all the world by way of not apprehending anything?”

23.25 Subhūti replied, “Venerable Śāriputra, it is because of inner emptiness that the three vehicles are taught in detail by way of not apprehending anything. It is because of outer emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature that the three vehicles are taught in detail by way of not apprehending anything. Up to it is because of inner emptiness that it is taught for the assistance of bodhisattva great beings that they will become those with a superior confident readiness that rises above all the world. It is because of outer emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature that it is taught for the assistance of bodhisattva great beings that they will become those with a superior confident readiness that rises above all the world.”

CHAPTER 24: UNLIMITED

- 24.1 Then it occurred to Śatakratu, head of the gods, to think, “I will magically create flowers in order to worship this rain of Dharma being expounded by the elder Subhūti, and we will strew those flowers near, strew them in front, and strew them around the lord buddhas, the community of bodhisattva great beings, the monks, the elder Subhūti, and the perfection of wisdom.” And it occurred to all the Cāturmahārājika gods, up to the Akaniṣṭha class, as many as are stationed in the great billionfold world system, to think, “We will magically create flowers in [F.259.b] order to worship this rain of Dharma being expounded by the elder Subhūti, and will strew those flowers near, strew them in front, and strew them around the lord buddhas, the community of bodhisattva great beings, the monks, the elder Subhūti, and the perfection of wisdom.” Then Śatakratu, head of the gods, and all the Cāturmahārājika gods, up to the Akaniṣṭha class, as many as are stationed in the great billionfold world system, did magically create coral tree flowers and strewed them near, strewed them in front, and strewed them around the lord buddhas, the community of bodhisattva great beings, the monks, the elder Subhūti, and the perfection of wisdom. Immediately after Śatakratu, head of the gods, and the gods up to the Akaniṣṭha class had strewed those flowers, they matted together and spread out over the great billionfold world system and stayed there suspended in the sky, a second story of flowers delightful and pleasing to the mind.
- 24.2 Then it occurred to the elder Subhūti to think, “I have never before in all the abodes of the gods seen flowers issue forth like these the gods have strewed. These flowers the gods have strewed have not grown on branches, have not grown in water, and have not grown in meadows. These flowers have been magically created. These flowers the gods have strewed are mind made; they have not grown on branches.”

- 24.3 Śatakratu, head of the gods, said to venerable Subhūti, “Venerable monk Subhūti, these flowers are not mind made, [F.260.a] and they have not grown on branches; these flowers have not come about.”
- 24.4 Subhūti said, “Kauśika, you say, ‘These flowers are not mind made, have not grown on branches; these flowers have not come about.’ What have not come about, Kauśika, are not flowers.”
- 24.5 Śatakratu then asked, “Venerable monk Subhūti, is it just these passing flowers that have not come about, or has form also not come about, and have feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness also not come about?”
- 24.6 “Kauśika,” replied Subhūti, “it is not just these passing flowers that have not come about. Kauśika, form also has not come about, and what has not come about is not form. Kauśika, feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness has not come about, and what has not come about is not consciousness.
- 24.7 “Kauśika, the eyes have not come about, and what have not come about are not the eyes. Kauśika, the ears ... the nose ... the tongue ... the body ... and the thinking mind has not come about, and what has not come about is not thinking mind.
- 24.8 “Kauśika, the earth element has not come about, and what has not come about is not the earth element. Kauśika, the water element ... the fire element ... the wind element ... the space element ... and the consciousness element has not come about, and what has not come about is not the consciousness element. [F.260.b]
- 24.9 “Kauśika, the perfection of giving has not come about, and what has not come about is not the perfection of giving. Kauśika, the perfection of morality ... the perfection of patience ... the perfection of perseverance ... the perfection of concentration ... and the perfection of wisdom has not come about, and what has not come about is not the perfection of wisdom.
- 24.10 “Kauśika, inner emptiness has not come about, and what has not come about is not inner emptiness. Kauśika, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature has not come about, and what has not come about is not the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature.
- 24.11 “Kauśika, the applications of mindfulness have not come about, and what have not come about are not the applications of mindfulness. Similarly, Kauśika, the right efforts ... the legs of miraculous power ... the faculties ... the powers ... the limbs of awakening ... and the eightfold noble path has not come about, and what has not come about is not the eightfold noble path. Similarly, Kauśika, the ten powers ... the four fearlessnesses ... the four - detailed and thorough knowledges ... and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha have not come about, and what have not come about are not the buddhadharmas.

- 24.12 “Kauśika, the result of stream enterer has not come about, and what has not come about is not the result of stream enterer. Kauśika, the result of once-returner ... the result of non-returner ... the state of a worthy one ... and the state of a pratyekabuddha has not come about, and what has not come about is not the state of a pratyekabuddha.
- 24.13 “Kauśika, all-knowledge ... the knowledge of path aspects ... [F.261.a] up to the knowledge of all aspects has not come about, and what has not come about is not the knowledge of all aspects.
- 24.14 “Kauśika, a stream enterer ... a once-returner ... a non-returner ... a worthy one ... a pratyekabuddha ... and a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha has not come about, and what has not come about is not a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha.”
- 24.15 Then it occurred to Śatakratu, head of the gods, to think, “Yes! The elder Subhūti is profoundly wise in that he does not contradict designation and gives instruction in the true nature of dharmas.”
- 24.16 Then the Lord said to Śatakratu, head of the gods, “Exactly so, Kauśika, exactly so! Subhūti is profoundly wise in that he does not contradict designation and gives instruction in the true nature of dharmas.”
- 24.17 Śatakratu, head of the gods, then asked the Lord, “How does the elder Subhūti not contradict designation and give instruction in the true nature of dharmas?”
- 24.18 “Kauśika,” the Lord replied, “form is a mere designation, and that mere designation is the true nature of dharmas, so Subhūti gives instruction in it without contradicting it. Kauśika, feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is a mere designation, and that mere designation is the true nature of dharmas, so Subhūti does not contradict it and gives instruction in the true nature of dharmas. And why? Because the true nature of dharmas is not contradicted, and what is not contradicted, that the elder Subhūti gives instruction in and that he does not contradict.
- 24.19 “Similarly, Kauśika, the constituents and sense fields; and similarly, the perfection of giving ... [F.261.b] the perfection of morality ... the perfection of patience ... the perfection of perseverance ... the perfection of concentration ... and the perfection of wisdom ... ; and similarly, inner emptiness ... up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature ... ; and similarly, the applications of mindfulness ... the right efforts ... the legs of miraculous power ... the faculties ... the powers ... the limbs of awakening ... the eightfold noble path ... the ten powers ... the fearlessnesses ... the detailed and thorough knowledges ... and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha ... ; and similarly, the result of stream enterer ... the result of once-returner ... the result of non-returner ... the state of a worthy one ... and the state of a pratyekabuddha ... ; and similarly, a stream enterer is a mere designation. Kauśika a once-returner ... a non-returner ... a worthy one ... a pratyekabuddha ... and a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha is a mere designation, and that mere designation is the true nature of dharmas, so Subhūti, while giving instruction, does not contradict it. And why? Because the true nature of dharmas is not contradicted, and what is not contradicted, that the elder Subhūti gives instruction in and that he does not contradict. Therefore, Kauśika, Subhūti does not contradict designation and he gives instruction in the true nature of dharmas.”

24.20 Subhūti then said, “Exactly so, Kauśika, it is exactly as the Lord has taught—all dharmas are mere designations. Kauśika, bodhisattva great beings, having thus understood how all dharmas are mere designations, should train in the perfection of wisdom.

24.21 “Kauśika, bodhisattva great beings training like that [F.262.a] do not train in form, and they do not train in feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness. And why? Because they do not see the form in which they train, and they do not see the feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness in which they train.

24.22 “Kauśika, bodhisattva great beings training like that do not train in the perfection of giving. And why? Because they do not see the perfection of giving in which they train. Similarly, they do not train in the perfection of morality ... the perfection of patience ... the perfection of perseverance ... the perfection of concentration ... or the perfection of wisdom. And why? Because they do not see the perfection of wisdom in which they train.

24.23 “They also do not train in inner emptiness, up to they do not train in the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature. And why? Because they do not see the inner emptiness in which they train, up to they do not see the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature.

24.24 “They also do not train in the applications of mindfulness. They also do not train in the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, eightfold noble path, ten powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, up to or eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha. They do not train in the result of stream enterer, result of once-returner, result of non-returner, state of a worthy one, or state of a pratyekabuddha. They do not train [F.262.b] in the knowledge of all aspects. And why? Because they do not see, up to the knowledge of all aspects in which they train.”

- 24.25 Then Śatakratu, head of the gods, inquired of venerable Subhūti, “Venerable monk Subhūti, why do bodhisattva great beings not see form, and why do bodhisattva great beings not see feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness? Similarly, why do they not see the constituents, sense fields, dependent originations, perfections, emptinesses, or the dharmas on the side of awakening? Why do they not see the ten powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, or eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha? Why do they not see ... up to the knowledge of all aspects?”
- 24.26 “Kauśika,” replied Subhūti, “it is because form is empty of form, and feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is empty of consciousness. Similarly, the constituents ... the sense fields ... the dependent originations ... the perfections ... the emptinesses ... and the dharmas on the side of awakening are empty of the dharmas on the side of awakening. The ten powers ... the fearlessnesses ... the detailed and thorough knowledges ... and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha are empty of the distinct attributes of a buddha. Up to the knowledge of all aspects is empty of the knowledge of all aspects.
- 24.27 “And why? Kauśika, it is because the emptiness of form does not train in the emptiness of form, up to the emptiness of the knowledge of all aspects does not train in the emptiness of the knowledge of all aspects.
- 24.28 “Kauśika, [F.263.a] those who do not train in emptiness train in emptiness without making a division into two. They train in the emptiness of form without making a division into two. Similarly, they train in ... up to the knowledge of all aspects without making a division into two.
- 24.29 “Kauśika, those who train in the emptiness of form without making a division into two, and those who train in ... up to in the knowledge of all aspects<sup>396</sup> without making a division into two, train in the perfection of giving without making a division into two. Similarly, they train in the perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and perfection of wisdom without making a division into two.
- 24.30 “They train in inner emptiness without making a division into two. They train in the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature without making a division into two.
- 24.31 “They train in the applications of mindfulness without making a division into two. They train in the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and path without making a division into two. They train in the ten powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, and distinct attributes of a buddha without making a division into two. They train in the result of stream enterer without making a division into two. They train in the result of once-returner, result of non-returner, state of a worthy one, state of a pratyekabuddha, buddhahood, and the knowledge of all aspects without making a division into two.

24.32 “Those who train in buddhahood and the knowledge of all aspects without making a division into two train in countless, infinite buddhadharmas.

24.33 “Those who train in countless, infinite buddhadharmas do not train in order to increase [F.263.b] or decrease form, and they do not train in order to increase or decrease feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness. Similarly, they do not train in order to increase or decrease the constituents and sense fields, do not train in order to increase or decrease the dependent originations, do not train in order to increase or decrease the perfection of giving, and do not train in order to increase or decrease the perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, or perfection of wisdom. They do not train in order to increase or decrease the applications of mindfulness. Similarly, they do not train in order to increase or decrease the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, or path. They do not train in order to increase or decrease inner emptiness, do not train in order to increase or decrease ... up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature. They do not train in order to increase or decrease the ten powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, or knowledge of all aspects.

24.34 “Those who do not train in order to increase or decrease form, up to do not train in order to increase or decrease the knowledge of all aspects are those who do not train in order to get hold of or get rid of form; who do not train in order to get hold of or get rid of feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness; and, similarly, who do not train in order to get hold of and get rid of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects.” [F.264.a] [B20]

24.35 Śāriputra then asked, “Venerable Subhūti, why do bodhisattva great beings not train in order to get hold of or get rid of form; not train in order to get hold of or get rid of feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness; and similarly, not train in order to get hold of or get rid of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects?”

24.36 “Venerable Śāriputra,” replied Subhūti, “it is because there is no getting hold of form. And why? Because, based on inner emptiness,<sup>397</sup> form does not get hold of form. Venerable Śāriputra, there is no getting hold of feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... or consciousness, either. And why? Because, based on inner emptiness, consciousness does not get hold of consciousness. Venerable Śāriputra, similarly, there is no getting hold of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects. And why? Because, based on inner

- emptiness and outer emptiness, the knowledge of all aspects does not get hold of the knowledge of all aspects. Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings thus training in the perfection of wisdom [F.264.b] by way of not getting hold of all dharmas will go forth to the knowledge of all aspects.”
- 24.37 “Venerable Subhūti, will bodhisattva great beings training thus, having trained in the perfection of wisdom, go forth to the knowledge of all aspects?” asked Śāriputra.
- 24.38 “Venerable Śāriputra,” replied Subhūti, “bodhisattva great beings training thus will, having trained in the perfection of wisdom by way of not getting hold of all dharmas, go forth to the knowledge of all aspects.”
- 24.39 “Venerable Subhūti, how will bodhisattva great beings thus training, having trained not in order to get hold of, and not in order to get rid of, all dharmas, go forth to the knowledge of all aspects?” asked Śāriputra.
- 24.40 “Venerable Śāriputra,” replied Subhūti, “bodhisattva great beings training in the perfection of wisdom do not see the production and stopping, acceptance and rejection, defilement and purification, or decrease and increase of form. And why? Because, Venerable Śāriputra, form does not exist through an intrinsic nature of form. Similarly, Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings do not see the production and stopping, acceptance and rejection, defilement and purification, or decrease and increase of feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... or consciousness. And why? Because, Venerable Śāriputra, consciousness does not exist through an intrinsic nature of consciousness.
- 24.41 “Similarly, Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings do not see the production and stopping, acceptance and rejection, defilement and purification, or decrease and increase of the constituents ... the sense fields ... the dependent originations ... the perfections ... the dharmas on the side of awakening ... all the emptinesses ... the powers ... the fearlessnesses ... the detailed and thorough knowledges ... the meditative stabilizations ... the dhāraṇī gateways ... the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha ... or the knowledge of all aspects. And why? [F.265.a] Because, Venerable Śāriputra, the knowledge of all aspects does not exist through an intrinsic nature of the knowledge of all aspects.
- 24.42 “Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings thus training in the nonproduction and nonstopping, nonacceptance and nonrejection, nondefilement and nonpurification, and nondecrease and nonincrease of all dharmas will, training in the perfection of wisdom by way of not training and not going forth, go forth to the knowledge of all aspects.”
- 24.43 Then Śatakratu, head of the gods, asked venerable Śāriputra, “Venerable monk Śāriputra, where should you look for the perfection of wisdom?”

- 24.44 “Kauśika,” replied Śāriputra, “you should look for the perfection of wisdom in Subhūti’s chapter.”
- 24.45 Śatakratu, head of the gods, then asked venerable Subhūti, “Venerable monk Subhūti, is it through your noble might, is it through your sustaining power that the noble Śāriputra has said, ‘Kauśika, you should look for the perfection of wisdom in Subhūti’s chapter?’”
- “Kauśika, this is not my sustaining power, it is not my might,” replied Subhūti.
- 24.46 “Well then, venerable monk Subhūti, whose sustaining power, whose might is it?” asked Śatakratu.
- 24.47 “Kauśika, this is the Tathāgata’s sustaining power, it is the Tathāgata’s might,” replied Subhūti.
- 24.48 Śatakratu then asked, “Venerable monk Subhūti, given that all dharmas are without anything that sustains them, why do you say ‘this is the Tathāgata’s sustaining power, it is the Tathāgata’s might?’”
- 24.49 “Exactly so, Kauśika, exactly so!” replied Subhūti. “The Tathāgata cannot be apprehended in the true nature of dharmas that is without anything that sustains it, [F.265.b] nor can the Tathāgata be apprehended elsewhere than the true nature of dharmas that is without anything that sustains it. The true nature of dharmas that is without anything that sustains it cannot be apprehended in the Tathāgata, nor can the true nature of dharmas that is without anything that sustains it be apprehended elsewhere than the Tathāgata.
- 24.50 “Also, the Tathāgata cannot be apprehended in suchness, and suchness cannot be apprehended in the Tathāgata.<sup>398</sup> The Tathāgata cannot be apprehended in the suchness of form, and the suchness of form cannot be apprehended in the Tathāgata. The Tathāgata cannot be apprehended in the true dharmic nature of form, and the true dharmic nature of form cannot be apprehended in the Tathāgata. The Tathāgata cannot be apprehended in the suchness of feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... or consciousness, and the suchness of consciousness cannot be apprehended in the Tathāgata. The Tathāgata cannot be apprehended in the true dharmic nature of consciousness, and the true dharmic nature of consciousness cannot be apprehended in the Tathāgata.
- 24.51 “Similarly, the Tathāgata cannot be apprehended in the suchness of the constituents, the sense fields, the dependent originations, the perfections, all the emptinesses, the dharmas on the side of awakening, the gateways to liberation, the powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, up to or the knowledge of all aspects, and the suchness of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects cannot be apprehended in the Tathāgata. The Tathāgata cannot be - apprehended in the true dharmic nature of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects, and the true dharmic nature of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects cannot be apprehended in the Tathāgata.

- 24.52 “And why? Kauśika, it is because the true dharmic nature of the Tathāgata [F.266.a] is not conjoined with or disjoined from the true dharmic nature of form. Kauśika, the true dharmic nature of the Tathāgata is not conjoined with or disjoined from the true dharmic nature of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness. It is not conjoined with or disjoined from something other than the true dharmic nature of form. It is not conjoined with or disjoined from something other than the true dharmic nature of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness. It is not conjoined with or disjoined from the suchness of form. It is not conjoined with or disjoined from the suchness of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness. It is not conjoined with or disjoined from something other than the suchness of form. It is not conjoined with or disjoined from something other than the suchness of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness.
- 24.53 “Similarly, the true dharmic nature of the Tathāgata is not conjoined with or disjoined from the true dharmic nature of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects; it is not conjoined with or disjoined from the suchness of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects; it is not conjoined with or disjoined from something other than the true dharmic nature of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects; and it is not conjoined with or disjoined from something other than the suchness of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects.
- 24.54 “Thus, Kauśika, not conjoined with and not disjoined from all dharmas<sup>399</sup>—this is its might, this is its sustaining power, by way of no sustaining power.
- 24.55 “Kauśika, you asked, ‘Where should bodhisattva great beings look for the perfection of wisdom?’ Kauśika, they should not look for it in form, and they should not look for it [F.266.b] elsewhere than form. They should not look for it in feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... or consciousness, and they should not look for it elsewhere than consciousness. And why? Kauśika, it is because all dharmas—the perfection of wisdom, form, and feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness—are not conjoined, are not disjoined, are formless, cannot be pointed out, do not obstruct, and have only one mark—that is, no mark.
- 24.56 “Furthermore, Kauśika, bodhisattva great beings should not look for the perfection of wisdom in the constituents ... the sense fields ... or the dependent originations. They should not look for it elsewhere than dependent originations. They should not look for it in the perfections ... all the emptinesses ... the dharmas on the side of awakening ... the ten tathāgata powers ... the fearlessnesses ... the detailed and thorough knowledges ... the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha ... up to the knowledge of all aspects. They should not look for it elsewhere than the knowledge of all aspects.

24.57 “And why? Kauśika, it is because the perfection of wisdom, the knowledge of all aspects, and the looking—all these dharmas are not conjoined, are not disjoined, are formless, cannot be pointed out, do not obstruct, and have only one mark—that is, no mark.

24.58 “And why? Kauśika, it is because form is not the perfection of wisdom, and there is no perfection of wisdom other than form. Similarly, feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness [F.267.a] is not the perfection of wisdom, and there is no perfection of wisdom other than consciousness. Similarly, up to the knowledge of all aspects is not the perfection of wisdom, and there is no perfection of wisdom other than the knowledge of all aspects.

24.59 “Similarly, the suchness of form is not the perfection of wisdom, and there is no perfection of wisdom other than the suchness of form. The suchness of feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is not the perfection of wisdom, and there is no perfection of wisdom other than the suchness of consciousness. The suchness of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects is not the perfection of wisdom, and there is no perfection of wisdom other than the suchness of the knowledge of all aspects.

24.60 “The true dharmic nature of form is not the perfection of wisdom, and there is no perfection of wisdom other than the true dharmic nature of form. The true dharmic nature of feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is not the perfection of wisdom, and there is no perfection of wisdom other than the true dharmic nature of consciousness. The true dharmic nature of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects is not the perfection of wisdom, and there is no perfection of wisdom other than the true dharmic nature of the knowledge of all aspects.

24.61 “And why? Kauśika, it is because all these dharmas do not exist and cannot be apprehended. And given that all dharmas thus do not exist and cannot be apprehended, form is therefore not the perfection of wisdom, and there is no perfection of wisdom other than form. The suchness of form is not the perfection of wisdom, and there is no perfection of wisdom other than the suchness of form. The true dharmic nature of form [F.267.b] is not the perfection of wisdom, and there is no perfection of wisdom other than the true dharmic nature of form.

24.62 Connect this in the same way with the knowledge of all aspects is therefore not the perfection of wisdom, and there is no perfection of wisdom other than the knowledge of all aspects. The suchness of the knowledge of all aspects is not the perfection of wisdom, and there is no perfection of wisdom other than the suchness of the knowledge of all aspects. The true dharmic nature of the knowledge of all aspects is not the perfection of wisdom, and there is no perfection of wisdom other than the true dharmic nature of the knowledge of all aspects.”

24.63 Then Śatakratu, head of the gods, said to venerable Subhūti, “Venerable monk Subhūti, this perfection—that is, the perfection of wisdom of bodhisattva great beings—is great. Venerable monk Subhūti, this perfection—that is, the perfection of wisdom of bodhisattva great beings—is immeasurable. Venerable monk Subhūti, this perfection—that is, the perfection of wisdom of bodhisattva great beings—is infinite. Venerable monk Subhūti, this perfection—that is, the perfection of wisdom of bodhisattva great beings—is limitless. Having trained in it, stream enterers reached, are reaching, and will reach the result of stream enterer; once-returners ... non-returners ... and worthy ones reached, are reaching, and will reach the result of a worthy one; pratyekabuddhas have completely awakened, are completely awakening, and will completely awaken to their awakening; and bodhisattva great beings, having brought beings [F.268.a] to maturity and purified a buddhafiield, have completely awakened, are completely awakening, and will completely awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.”

24.64 “Exactly so, Kauśika, exactly so!” agreed Subhūti. “This perfection—that is, the perfection of wisdom of bodhisattva great beings—is great. This perfection—that is, the perfection of wisdom of bodhisattva great beings—is immeasurable. This perfection—that is, the perfection of wisdom of bodhisattva great beings—is infinite. This perfection—that is, the perfection of wisdom of bodhisattva great beings—is limitless. Having trained in it, stream enterers reached, are reaching, and will reach the result of stream enterer; once-returners ... non-returners ... and worthy ones reached, are reaching, and will reach the result of a worthy one; pratyekabuddhas have completely awakened, are completely awakening, and will completely awaken to their awakening; and bodhisattva great beings, having brought beings to maturity and purified a buddhafiield, have completely awakened, are completely awakening, and will completely awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

24.65 “And why? Because, Kauśika, this perfection of bodhisattva great beings is great because of the greatness of form. And why? Because, Kauśika, you cannot apprehend a prior limit of form, you cannot apprehend a later limit, and you cannot apprehend a middle. Kauśika, [F.268.b] this perfection of bodhisattva great beings is great because of the greatness of feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness. And why? Because, Kauśika, you cannot apprehend a prior limit of consciousness, you cannot apprehend a later limit, and you cannot apprehend a middle. Kauśika, connect this in the same way with each, up to this perfection of bodhisattva great beings is great because of the greatness of the knowledge of all aspects. And why? Because, Kauśika, you cannot apprehend a prior limit of the knowledge of all aspects, you cannot apprehend a later limit, and you cannot apprehend a middle.

24.66 “Kauśika, because of this one of many explanations, this perfection—that is, the perfection of wisdom of bodhisattva great beings—is great.

24.67 “Kauśika, this perfection of bodhisattva great beings is immeasurable because form is immeasurable. And why? Because, Kauśika, you cannot apprehend a measure of form. For example, Kauśika, you cannot apprehend the measure of space either, and similarly you cannot apprehend the measure of form. Form is immeasurable because space is immeasurable. This perfection of bodhisattva great beings is immeasurable because form is immeasurable. Connect this in the same way with each, up to this perfection of bodhisattva great beings is immeasurable because the knowledge of all aspects is immeasurable. And why? Because, Kauśika, you cannot apprehend a measure of the knowledge of all aspects. For example, Kauśika, you cannot apprehend the measure of space either, and similarly you cannot apprehend the measure of the knowledge of all aspects. The knowledge of all aspects is immeasurable because space is immeasurable. This perfection of wisdom of bodhisattva great beings [F.269.a] is immeasurable because the knowledge of all aspects is immeasurable.

24.68 “Kauśika, because of this one of many explanations this perfection of bodhisattva great beings is immeasurable.

24.69 “Kauśika, this perfection of bodhisattva great beings is infinite because form is infinite. And why? Because, Kauśika, form cannot be given a size. For example, Kauśika, space cannot be given a size either, and similarly form cannot be given a size. Form cannot be given a size because space cannot be given a size. This perfection of bodhisattva great beings cannot be given a size because form cannot be given a size. And similarly, up to this perfection of bodhisattva great beings is infinite because the knowledge of all aspects is infinite. For example, Kauśika, space cannot be given a size either, and similarly the knowledge of all aspects cannot be given a size. The knowledge of all aspects cannot be given a size because space cannot be given a size. This perfection of wisdom of bodhisattva great beings cannot be given a size because the knowledge of all aspects cannot be given a size.

24.70 “Kauśika, because of this one of many explanations, this perfection of bodhisattva great beings is infinite.

- 24.71 “Kauśika, this perfection of bodhisattva great beings is unlimited because form is unlimited. And why? Because, Kauśika, you cannot apprehend limits or a middle of form. Kauśika, this perfection of bodhisattva great beings is unlimited because feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... [F.269.b] and consciousness is unlimited. And why? Because, Kauśika, you cannot apprehend limits or a middle of consciousness. Kauśika, connect this in the same way for each, up to this perfection of bodhisattva great beings is unlimited because the knowledge of all aspects is unlimited. And why? Because, Kauśika, you cannot apprehend limits or a middle of the knowledge of all aspects.
- 24.72 “Kauśika, because of this one of many explanations, this perfection of bodhisattva great beings is infinite because form is unlimited, up to because the knowledge of all aspects is unlimited.
- 24.73 “Furthermore, Kauśika, this perfection of bodhisattva great beings is unlimited because the objective support is unlimited.”
- 24.74 The head of the gods then asked, “Venerable monk Subhūti, how is it so that this perfection of bodhisattva great beings is unlimited because the objective support is unlimited?”
- 24.75 “Kauśika,” replied Subhūti, “this perfection of bodhisattva great beings is unlimited because the knowledge of all aspects is unlimited.
- 24.76 “Furthermore, Kauśika, this perfection of bodhisattva great beings is unlimited because the dharmas that are objective support are unlimited.”
- 24.77 The head of the gods then asked, “Venerable monk Subhūti, why is this perfection of bodhisattva great beings unlimited because the dharmas that are objective support are unlimited?”
- 24.78 “Kauśika,” replied Subhūti, “this perfection of bodhisattva great beings is unlimited because the dharma-constituent is unlimited.
- 24.79 “Furthermore, Kauśika, this perfection of bodhisattva great beings is unlimited because suchness as objective support is unlimited.”
- 24.80 The head of the gods then asked, [F.270.a] “Venerable monk Subhūti, why is this perfection of bodhisattva great beings unlimited because suchness as objective support is unlimited?”
- 24.81 “Kauśika, it is like this,” replied Subhūti. “The objective support is unlimited because suchness is unlimited. Suchness is unlimited because the objective support is unlimited. So, Kauśika, this—namely, the perfection of bodhisattva great beings—is unlimited because the objective support that is suchness is unlimited.
- 24.82 “Furthermore, Kauśika, this perfection of bodhisattva great beings is unlimited because beings are unlimited.”

- 24.83 The head of the gods then asked, “Venerable monk Subhūti, why is this perfection of bodhisattva great beings unlimited because beings are unlimited?”
- 24.84 “What do you think, Kauśika, about this word—that is, being—that is said again and again: what dharma is it for?” asked Subhūti in return.
- 24.85 The head of the gods replied, “Venerable monk Subhūti, this—that is, the word being—that is said again and again is not a word for a dharma, and it is not a word for a nondharma. It is a name plucked out of thin air; it is given as a designation without any real basis, and it is given as a designation without any objective support.”
- 24.86 “What do you think, Kauśika,” asked Subhūti, “has there been any elucidation of a being in this perfection of wisdom?”
- “No there has not, venerable monk Subhūti,” answered the head of the gods.
- 24.87 Subhūti then asked, “Kauśika, where there has been no elucidation of a being, where will there be the limitlessness of a being? Kauśika, if a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha remaining for as many eons as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River were to say the word being again and again, what do you think, Kauśika, [F.270.b] would any being at all have been born or ceased there?”
- 24.88 “No, venerable monk Subhūti,” answered the head of the gods. “And why? Because beings are pure from the beginning.”
- 24.89 “Kauśika,” said Subhūti, “from this one of many explanations you should know this perfection of bodhisattva great beings is unlimited because beings are unlimited.”
- 24.90 This was the twenty-fourth chapter, “Unlimited,” of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.”

CHAPTER 25: SECOND ŚATAKRATU

- 25.1 The women and men and masses of seers, together with the gods—those with the Indras,<sup>400</sup> those with the Brahmās, and those with the Prajāpatis as their leaders—cried out three times cries of delight in the Dharma that the elder Subhūti, through the might of the Tathāgata, through the sustaining power of the Tathāgata, had pointed out, taught, thrown light on, and illuminated: “Ah! How well it has been explained. Ah! How well this Dharma has been explained. Ah! How well the true dharmic nature of this Dharma has been explained.” And they said, “Lord, we shall treat those bodhisattva great beings who do not become separated from the perfection of wisdom, who do not apprehend any dharma, be it form, or feeling, or perception, or volitional factors, or consciousness, up to or the knowledge of all aspects, but still make known the presentation of the three vehicles—the vehicle of the śrāvakas, the vehicle of the pratyekabuddhas, and the vehicle of the perfectly complete buddhas—exactly like tathāgatas.”
- 25.2 Then the Lord said to those gods, “Exactly so, gods, exactly so. It is exactly as you say. Without apprehending any dharma, be it form, or feeling, or perception, or volitional factors, or consciousness, up to or the knowledge of all aspects, [F.271.a] still they make known a presentation of the three vehicles—the vehicle of the śrāvakas, the vehicle of the pratyekabuddhas, and the vehicle of the perfectly complete buddhas. Gods, you should treat those bodhisattva great beings who do not become separated from the perfection of wisdom, by way of not apprehending anything, exactly like tathāgatas.
- 25.3 “And why? It is because all three vehicles—the vehicle of the śrāvakas, the vehicle of the pratyekabuddhas, and the Great Vehicle—are expounded in detail in this perfection of wisdom, but without apprehending the Tathāgata as other than the perfection of giving; without apprehending the Tathāgata as other than the perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and perfection of wisdom; without apprehending the Tathāgata as other than inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature; without apprehending the Tathāgata as other than the applications of mindfulness, right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and path; without apprehending the Tathāgata as other than the ten powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, and eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha; and without apprehending the Tathāgata as other than ... up to the knowledge of all aspects.

25.4 “Gods, it is because bodhisattva great beings train in all those dharmas, the perfection of giving and so on, and because they train in ... up to the knowledge of all aspects, that you, gods, should therefore call those bodhisattva great beings, [F.271.b] practicing without becoming separated from the perfection of wisdom, just tathāgatas.

25.5 “When I was staying in the center of commerce in the center of an empire called Padmāvati, in the presence of the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha Dīpaṃkara, and I was, by way of not apprehending anything, inseparable from the perfection of giving; inseparable from the perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and perfection of wisdom; inseparable from inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature; inseparable from the applications of mindfulness; inseparable from the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and path; and inseparable from the four concentrations, the four immeasurables, the four formless absorptions, all the meditative stabilizations, all the dhāraṇī gateways, the ten tathāgata powers, the four fearlessnesses, the four detailed and thorough knowledges, the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, great love, great compassion, and infinite other buddhadharmas, at that time, gods, that tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha Dīpaṃkara prophesied my unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening: ‘You, brahmin student, in the future after incalculable eons have passed, in the Fortunate Age, right in this world system, will become the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha called Śākyamuni, perfect in knowledge and conduct, a sugata, a knower of worlds, a driver of persons to be tamed, unsurpassed, a teacher of gods and humans, [F.272.a] a buddha, a lord.’ ”

25.6 Then those gods said to the Lord, “It is amazing, Lord, the extent to which this perfection of wisdom of the bodhisattva great beings is favorable to the knowledge of all aspects through not getting hold of or rejecting form; through not getting hold of or rejecting feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness; up to through not getting hold of or rejecting the knowledge of all aspects.”

- 25.7 Then the Lord, knowing the four retinues of monks, nuns, laymen, and laywomen, the bodhisattva great beings, the Four Mahārājas and the Cāturmahārājika gods, up to the Akaniṣṭha class of gods were assembled and seated, taking them all as witnesses, said to Śatakratu, head of the gods, “Kauśika, the Māras or the Māra class of gods will find no way to infiltrate any bodhisattva great being, or any monk, nun, layman, or laywoman, or any son of a good family or daughter of a good family, or any god or goddess who takes up, bears in mind, reads out loud, masters, cultivates, illuminates for others, or properly pays attention to this perfection of wisdom without becoming separated from the thought of the knowledge of all aspects. And why? Because those sons of a good family and those daughters of a good family will have made just the emptiness of form into a good sustainable position,<sup>401</sup> [F.272.b] and they will have made just the emptiness of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness into a good sustainable position. And why? Because emptiness finds no way to infiltrate emptiness, signlessness finds no way to infiltrate signlessness, and the wishlessness finds no way to infiltrate wishlessness. Similarly, it is because those sons of a good family and those daughters of a good family will have made just the emptiness of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects into a good sustainable position. And why? Because emptiness finds no way to infiltrate emptiness, signlessness finds no way to infiltrate signlessness, and wishlessness finds no way to infiltrate wishlessness. And why? Because they have no intrinsic nature with which they might infiltrate, where infiltration might take place, and into which infiltration might take place.
- 25.8 “Kauśika, humans and nonhumans too find no way to infiltrate those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family. And why? Because those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family have become very habituated to love, compassion, joy, and equanimity.
- 25.9 “Kauśika, those sons of a good family or those daughters of a good family will not die in a distressed state. And why? Because those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family practicing the perfection of giving have attended on all beings, serving them perfectly.
- 25.10 “Kauśika, those Cāturmahārājika gods included in the great billionfold world system, and those Trāyastriṃśa, Yāma, Tuṣita, Nirmāṇarati, Paranirmitavaśavartin, Brahmakāyika, Ābhāsvara, [F.273.a] Śubhakṛtsna, and Bṛhaṭphala gods who have produced the thought of unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening—those gods who have not heard, not taken up, not borne in mind, not mastered, and not properly paid attention to the perfection of wisdom—are gods who should, without being separated from the thought of the knowledge of all aspects, listen, take up, bear in mind, read aloud, master, and properly pay attention to it.

25.11 “Furthermore, Kauśika, those sons of a good family or those daughters of a good family who take up, bear in mind, read aloud, master, and properly pay attention to this perfection of wisdom without being separated from the thought of the knowledge of all aspects—they, Kauśika, whether they stay in an abandoned house, whether they stay in the open air, or whether they have gone the wrong way, do not get scared or petrified. And why? Because those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family have become very habituated to inner emptiness by way of not apprehending anything, have become very habituated to outer emptiness by way of not apprehending anything, up to have become very habituated to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature by way of not apprehending anything.”

25.12 Then the Cāturmahārājika gods, the Trāyastriṃśa, Yāma, Tuṣita, Nirmāṇarati, and Paranirmitavaśavartin, up to the Śuddhāvāsa class of gods, as many as are stationed in the great billionfold world system, said to the Lord, “We too will constantly and always arrange for the guarding, protection, and safekeeping of those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family who, without being separated from the thought of the knowledge of all aspects, believe in, take up, bear in mind, [F.273.b] read aloud, master, and properly pay attention to just this deep perfection of wisdom. And why? Because, Lord, it is thanks to bodhisattva great beings that the hells, the animal world, and the world of Yama are brought to an end, and that all poor gods, all poor humans, all the plagues of famines, all the plagues of headaches, and all hardships and troubles are brought to an end; it is thanks to bodhisattva great beings that the ten wholesome actions appear in the world, and the four concentrations, four immeasurables, four formless absorptions, perfection of giving, perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, perfection of wisdom, inner emptiness and ... up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature appear in the world; and it is thanks to bodhisattva great beings that the four applications of mindfulness, four right efforts, four legs of miraculous power, five faculties, five powers, seven limbs of awakening, eightfold noble path, ten tathāgata powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, up to the knowledge of all aspects appear in the world.

25.13 “Furthermore, Lord, it is thanks to bodhisattva great beings that great sāla tree-like royal families [F.274.a] appear in the world, great sāla tree-like brahmin families appear in the world, great sāla tree-like business families appear in the world, wheel-turning emperor families appear in the world, Cāturmahārājika gods appear in the world, up to and the Akaniṣṭha class of gods appears in the world.

- 25.14 “Furthermore, Lord, it is thanks to bodhisattva great beings that the result of stream enterer appears in the world; that stream enterers appear in the world; that the result of once-returner and once-returners, the result of non-returner and non-returners, and the state of a worthy one and worthy ones appear in the world; and that their own awakening and pratyekabuddhas appear in the world.
- 25.15 “It is thanks to bodhisattva great beings that bringing beings to maturity appears in the world; that the purification of a buddhafield appears in the world; that tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas appear in the world; that turning the wheel of Dharma appears in the world; and that the Buddha Jewel appears in the world, the Dharma Jewel appears in the world, and the Saṅgha Jewel appears in the world.
- 25.16 “Lord, because of this one of many explanations, the world with its gods, humans, and asuras will arrange for the guarding, protection, and safekeeping of bodhisattva great beings.”
- 25.17 Then the Lord said to Śatakratu, head of the gods, “It is exactly so, Kauśika, exactly so. It is thanks to bodhisattva great beings that the hells, the animal world, [F.274.b] and the world of Yama are brought to an end, and similarly, up to that the Buddha Jewel, the Dharma Jewel, and the Saṅgha Jewel appear in the world. Therefore, Kauśika, the world with its gods, humans, and asuras should constantly and always show respect for, demonstrate reverence for, show honor to, worship, and arrange for the guarding, protection, and safekeeping of bodhisattva great beings. Kauśika, those who have it in mind to show respect for, demonstrate reverence for, show honor to, and worship me should have it in mind to show respect for, demonstrate reverence for, show honor to, and worship bodhisattva great beings. Therefore, Kauśika, the world with its gods, humans, and asuras should constantly and always show respect for, demonstrate reverence for, show honor to, worship, and arrange for the guarding, protection, and safekeeping of bodhisattva great beings.
- 25.18 “To illustrate, Kauśika, if this great billionfold world system were filled with śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas like a thicket of sugarcane, or a thicket of naḍa reeds, or a thicket of bamboo, or a thicket of rushes, or a thicket of rice, or a thicket of sesame, and were a certain son of a good family or daughter of a good family to show respect for, demonstrate reverence for, show honor to, and worship them for as long as they lived with all they required, still, were someone to show respect for, demonstrate reverence for, show honor to, and worship just a single bodhisattva who had produced the first thought of awakening and was not separated from the six perfections, then just that would produce much greater merit than the former. And why? Kauśika, it is because it is not thanks to śrāvakas or pratyekabuddhas that bodhisattva great beings [F.275.a] and tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas appear in the world; rather, it is thanks to the bodhisattva great beings that śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas and tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas appear in the world. Therefore, Kauśika, the world with its gods, humans, and asuras should constantly and always show respect for, demonstrate reverence for, show honor to, worship, and arrange for the guarding, protection, and safekeeping of bodhisattva great beings.”

CHAPTER 26: GETTING HOLD

26.1 Then Śatakratu, head of the gods, said to the Lord, “It is amazing, Lord, how these bodhisattva great beings who have taken up or borne in mind or read aloud or mastered or properly paid attention to this perfection of wisdom in this very life get hold of good qualities; how they bring beings to maturity, purify a buddhafiield, and pass on from buddhafiield to buddhafiield in order to attend on the lord buddhas; how, if they still want to revere, demonstrate reverence for, show honor to, and worship those lord buddhas on account of wholesome roots, those wholesome roots establish it accordingly; how they go into the presence of those lord buddhas and listen to the Dharma; how they never forget their Dharma right up until they fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening; [F.275.b] how they take possession of a perfect family, perfect celebrity,<sup>402</sup> a perfect life, a perfect retinue, perfect major marks, perfect radiance, perfect eyes, a perfect voice, perfect concentration, and perfect dhāraṇī; how they go from world system to world system where the lord buddhas have not appeared and with skillful means magically produce themselves in the shape a buddha assumes; how they speak in praise of the perfection of giving and speak in praise of the perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and perfection of wisdom; how they speak in praise of inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature; how they speak in praise of the concentrations, speak in praise of the immeasurables and formless absorptions, speak in praise of the applications of mindfulness, and speak in praise of the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and eightfold noble path; how they speak in praise of the ten powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, up to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha; and how with skillful means they tame beings in the three vehicles—the Śrāvaka Vehicle, Pratyekabuddha Vehicle, and Great Vehicle—teaching them the Dharma.”

26.2 Then Śatakratu, head of the gods, also said to the Lord, [F.276.a] “It is amazing, Lord, how these bodhisattva great beings who have taken possession of this perfection of wisdom have also taken possession of all the five other perfections as well and, similarly, how they have taken possession of all the dharmas on the side of awakening, all the meditative stabilizations, all the dhāraṇī gateways, all the emptinesses, the ten powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, up to and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha; how they have taken possession of the result of stream enterer and how they have taken possession of the result of once-returner, result of non-returner, state of a worthy one, a pratyekabuddha’s awakening, up to and the knowledge of all aspects; and how, Lord, those who have taken possession of this perfection of wisdom have taken possession of all the buddhadharmas.”

26.3 Then the Lord said to Śatakratu, head of the gods, “It is exactly so, Kauśika, exactly so. By taking possession of this perfection of wisdom they have also taken possession of all the other five perfections as well, and similarly have taken possession of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects.

26.4 “Furthermore, Kauśika, listen well and hard and pay attention, and I will explain to you the good qualities that sons of a good family and daughters of a good family will obtain in this very life if they have taken up, borne in mind, read aloud, mastered, and properly paid attention to this perfection of wisdom.”

“I will do so, Lord,” said Śatakratu, head of the gods, and he listened to the Lord.

26.5 The Lord said, [F.276.b] “Even if certain tīrthika religious mendicants, Māras, gods of the Māra class, or persons with unfounded conceit want to fight, want to dissuade, want to argue with, or want to contradict bodhisattva great beings, or sons of a good family or daughters of a good family, their wish to fight, wish to dissuade, wish to argue, and wish to contradict die down extremely quickly, and the intentions of those who want to fight, want to dissuade, want to argue, and want to contradict are not fulfilled. And why? Kauśika, it is because bodhisattva great beings practicing for a long time the perfection of giving, practicing the perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and perfection of wisdom always forsake those inner and outer dharmas on account of which beings for a long time have been fighting, dissuading, arguing, and contradicting, and they have established them in the perfection of giving. It is because bodhisattva great beings always forsake those inner and outer dharmas on account of which beings for a long time have been immoral, and have established beings in the perfection of morality; it is because bodhisattva great beings always forsake those inner and outer dharmas on account of which beings for a long time have been battling, fighting, and arguing, and they have established beings in the perfection of patience; it is because bodhisattva great beings always forsake those inner and outer dharmas [F.277.a] on account of which beings for a long time have become lazy, and they have established beings in the perfection of perseverance; it is because bodhisattva great beings always forsake those inner and outer dharmas on account of which beings for a long time have become distracted, and they have established beings in the perfection of concentration; and it is because bodhisattva great beings always forsake those inner and outer dharmas on account of which beings for a long time have become intellectually confused, and they have established beings in and inspired them to take up the perfection of wisdom.

26.6 “Bodhisattva great beings, after having removed with skillful means attachment, rage, and obsession—the attachment, rage, and obsession on account of which beings have streamed through cyclic existences for a long time—have established them in and inspired them to take up the four concentrations; have inspired them to take up the four immeasurables and formless absorptions; have established them in and inspired them to take up the four applications of mindfulness, the right efforts, the legs of miraculous power, the faculties, the powers, the limbs of awakening, the eightfold noble path, the three emptiness, signless, and wishless gateways to liberation, the meditative stabilizations, and the dhāraṇī gateways; have established them in and inspired them to take up the ten tathāgata powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha; and have established them in and inspired them to take up the result of stream enterer, the result [F.277.b] of once-returner, the result of non-returner, the state of a worthy one, and a pratyekabuddha’s awakening. Because of this, Kauśika, when bodhisattva great beings practice a bodhisattva’s practice, all of these good qualities and benefits will come about in this very life, and in a future life they will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, turn the wheel of the Dharma, and, having established beings as they vowed to do, enter into complete nirvāṇa, into the element of nirvāṇa without any aggregates left behind. These, Kauśika, are the good qualities and benefits that will come about in a future life.

26.7 “Furthermore, Kauśika, on that place on the earth where a son of a good family or a daughter of a good family will take up, bear in mind, read aloud, master, and properly pay attention to this perfection of wisdom, there on that place on the earth different tīrthika religious mendicants, Māras, gods of the Māra class, or persons with unfounded conceit cannot cause any disturbance in order to fight, argue against it, contradict it, or make it die out.

- 26.8        “On top of that, such good qualities and benefits as these will come about for them as well: by listening to this perfection of wisdom they will gradually go forth by way of the three vehicles and bring an end to suffering.
- 26.9        “To illustrate, Kauśika, there is a medicinal herb called maghī that gives relief from all poisons. In regard to this, a poisonous snake, a living thing seized with hunger, seeking food, sees some living creature. It wants to eat that creature and pursues that creature, following after it. Then that creature, scared out of its wits, terrified of dying, [F.278.a] runs to where there is the medicinal herb called maghī, and that poisonous snake, having sensed the smell of that medicinal herb, turns back. And why? Because such are the medicinal properties of that maghī herb that it suppresses all the venom of the poisonous snake. Kauśika, such is the power of the medicinal herb called maghī. Similarly, Kauśika, if any son of a good family or daughter of a good family takes up or bears in mind or reads out loud or masters or properly pays attention to this perfection of wisdom, even though fighting, dissuading, arguing, or contradicting it might happen, still, because of the grandeur of the perfection of wisdom and the power of the perfection of wisdom, it is calmed and dies down extremely quickly. Wherever they arise they die down right there, and they do not increase.
- 26.10      “And why? Kauśika, it is because this perfection of wisdom is something that calms down all wrong unwholesome dharmas; it is not something that increases them. Which wrong unwholesome dharmas does it calm down and not increase? It calms down and does not increase these: greed, hatred, confusion, ignorance, volitional factors, consciousness, name and form, the six sense fields, contact, feeling, craving, appropriation, existence, birth, and old age and death, pain, lamentation, suffering, mental anguish, and grief—simply this great heap of suffering. It calms down and does not increase obscurations, hindrances, attachments, proclivities, snares, the view of a self, and the view of a being, of a living being, of a person, up to the view of one who knows and of one who sees, the view of permanence, the view of annihilation, the view of existence, and the view of nonexistence, up to every instance of a view, [F.278.b] as well as envy, immorality, malice, laziness, distraction, and intellectual confusion; the perception of permanence, perception of happiness, perception of self, and perception of beauty; the operations of craving; grasping at form; grasping at feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness; grasping at the perfection of giving, and grasping at the perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and perfection of wisdom; grasping at inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature; grasping at the applications of mindfulness, and grasping at the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and eightfold noble path; grasping at the ten powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, and eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha; grasping at all-knowledge and the knowledge of path aspects; grasping at the knowledge of all aspects; and grasping at nirvāṇa.

26.11 “Kauśika, the Mahārājas, the Lokapālas,<sup>403</sup> the Devas, the Śatakratus, heads of the gods, the Brahmās, the Sahāmpati Brahmās, up to the Akaniṣṭha class of gods stationed in this great billionfold world system will constantly and always arrange for the guarding, protection, and safekeeping of those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family who take up or bear in mind or read aloud or master or properly pay attention to this perfection of wisdom.

26.12 “Kauśika, [F.279.a] the lord buddhas who dwell and maintain themselves in world systems in the ten directions will constantly and always arrange for the guarding, protection, and safekeeping of those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family who take up or bear in mind or read aloud or master or properly pay attention to this perfection of wisdom. Thus their unwholesome dharmas will be reduced, and their wholesome dharmas will increase—that is, by way of not apprehending anything the perfection of giving, perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and perfection of wisdom increase and do not decrease; by way of not apprehending anything inner emptiness increases and does not decrease, up to by way of not apprehending anything the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature increases and does not decrease; by way of not apprehending anything the applications of mindfulness, right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and path increase and do not decrease; by way of not apprehending anything the ten powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, and eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha increase and do not decrease; by way of not apprehending anything all the meditative stabilizations and all the dhāraṇī gateways increase and do not decrease; up to and by way of not apprehending anything the knowledge of all aspects increases and does not decrease.

26.13 “Theirs is polite speech and measured speech, [F.279.b] not unbridled speech. They are not overcome with rage, not overcome by conceit, and not overcome by miserliness,<sup>404</sup> and they do not become envious.

26.14 “They personally stop killing, they inspire others to stop killing, they speak in praise of stopping killing, and they speak in praise of others stopping killing as well, welcoming it.

- 26.15 “They personally stop stealing, they inspire others to stop stealing, they speak in praise of stopping stealing, and they speak in praise of others stopping stealing as well, welcoming it.
- 26.16 “They personally stop illicit sex because of lust, they inspire others to stop illicit sex because of lust, they speak in praise of stopping illicit sex because of lust, and they speak in praise of others stopping illicit sex because of lust as well, welcoming it.
- 26.17 “They personally stop lying, they inspire others to stop lying, they speak in praise of stopping lying, and they speak in praise of others stopping lying as well, welcoming it. Similarly, they personally stop backbiting, insulting, and babbling nonsense; they inspire others to stop backbiting, insulting, and babbling nonsense; they speak in praise of stopping backbiting, insulting, and babbling nonsense; and they speak in praise of others stopping backbiting, insulting, and babbling nonsense as well, welcoming it.
- 26.18 “They personally stop coveting, malice, and wrong view; they inspire others to stop coveting, malice, and wrong view; they speak in praise of stopping coveting, malice, and wrong view; and they speak in praise of others stopping coveting, malice, and wrong view as well, [F.280.a] welcoming it.
- 26.19 “They personally stand in the perfection of giving, they inspire others to engage in the perfection of giving, they speak in praise of the perfection of giving, and they speak in praise of others practicing the perfection of giving as well, welcoming it. Similarly, they personally stand in the perfection of morality ... the perfection of patience ... the perfection of perseverance ... the perfection of concentration ... and the perfection of wisdom, they inspire others to engage in the perfection of wisdom, they speak in praise of the perfection of wisdom, and they speak in praise of others practicing the perfection of wisdom as well, welcoming it.
- 26.20 “They personally meditate on inner emptiness, they inspire others to engage with inner emptiness, they speak in praise of inner emptiness, and they speak in praise of others meditating on inner emptiness as well, welcoming it. Similarly, they personally meditate on ... up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, they inspire others to engage with ... up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, they speak in praise of ... up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, and they speak in praise of others meditating on ... up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature as well, welcoming it.
- 26.21 “They personally become absorbed in all the meditative stabilizations, they inspire others to become absorbed in all the meditative stabilizations, they speak in praise of becoming absorbed in all the meditative

- 26.22 “They personally obtain the dhāraṇīs, they inspire others [F.280.b] to obtain dhāraṇīs, they speak in praise of obtaining dhāraṇīs, and they speak in praise of others obtaining dhāraṇīs as well, welcoming it.
- 26.23 “They personally become absorbed in the first concentration, they inspire others to become absorbed in the first concentration, they speak in praise of abiding having become absorbed in the first concentration, and they speak in praise of others abiding having become absorbed in the first concentration as well, welcoming it.
- 26.24 “They personally become absorbed in the second concentration ... the third concentration ... and the fourth concentration, they inspire others to become absorbed in the fourth concentration, they speak in praise of becoming absorbed in the fourth concentration, and they speak in praise of others becoming absorbed in the fourth concentration as well, welcoming it.
- 26.25 “They personally become absorbed in loving-kindness, they inspire others to become absorbed in loving-kindness, they speak in praise of becoming absorbed in loving-kindness, and they speak in praise of others becoming absorbed in loving-kindness as well, welcoming it.
- 26.26 “They personally become absorbed in compassion, joy, and equanimity, they inspire others to become absorbed in compassion, joy, and equanimity ... they speak in praise of becoming absorbed in equanimity, and they speak in praise of others becoming absorbed in equanimity as well, welcoming it.
- 26.27 “They personally become absorbed in the station of endless space ... the station of endless consciousness ... the station of nothing-at-all ... and the station of neither perception nor nonperception, they inspire others to become absorbed [F.281.a] in the station of neither perception nor nonperception, they speak in praise of becoming absorbed in the station of neither perception nor nonperception, and they speak in praise of others becoming absorbed in the station of neither perception nor nonperception as well, welcoming it.
- 26.28 “They personally cultivate the four applications of mindfulness, they inspire others to cultivate the applications of mindfulness, they speak in praise of cultivating the applications of mindfulness, and they speak in praise of others cultivating the applications of mindfulness as well, welcoming it.
- 26.29 “Similarly, they personally cultivate the four right efforts ... the four legs of miraculous power ... the five faculties ... the five powers ... the seven limbs of awakening ... and the eightfold noble path, they inspire others to cultivate the eightfold noble path, they speak in praise of cultivating the eightfold noble path, and they speak in praise of others cultivating the eightfold noble path as well, welcoming it.

26.30 “They personally cultivate the emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness meditative stabilizations, they inspire others to cultivate the emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness meditative stabilizations, they speak in praise of cultivating the emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness meditative stabilizations, and they speak in praise of others cultivating the emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness meditative stabilizations as well, welcoming it.

26.31 “They personally cultivate the eight deliverances, they inspire others to cultivate the eight deliverances, they speak in praise of cultivating the eight deliverances, and they speak in praise of others cultivating the eight deliverances as well, welcoming it.

26.32 “They personally cultivate the nine serial absorptions, [F.281.b] they inspire others to cultivate the nine serial absorptions, they speak in praise of cultivating the nine serial absorptions, and they speak in praise of others cultivating the nine serial absorptions as well, welcoming it.

26.33 “They personally cultivate the ten tathāgata powers ... the four fearlessnesses ... the four detailed and thorough knowledges ... the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha ... and the natural state not robbed of mindfulness ... and they personally gain the knowledge of all aspects, inspire others to gain the knowledge of all aspects, speak in praise of gaining the knowledge of all aspects, and speak in praise of others gaining the knowledge of all aspects as well, welcoming it.

26.34 “Furthermore, Kauśika, all the gifts that bodhisattva great beings practicing the six perfections give they make into something shared in common by all beings and dedicate, by way of not apprehending anything, to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

26.35 “Similarly, all the morality they protect, the patience they cultivate, the perseverance at which they exert themselves, the concentration they generate, and the wisdom they cultivate they make into something shared in common by all beings and dedicate, by way of not apprehending anything, to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

26.36 “Those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family practicing the six perfections have these sorts of mindfulness: ‘If I do not give gifts I will be born in poor families, I will not bring beings to maturity, I will not purify a buddhafield, and I will not gain the knowledge of all aspects.’ They think, ‘If I do not protect morality I will open the gates to the three terrible forms of life, I will not be born as a god or a human being and I will not bring beings to maturity or purify a buddhafield, so then how could I ever gain [F.282.a] the knowledge of all aspects?’ They think, ‘If I do not cultivate patience my sense faculties will be deficient, my countenance will have a shadow, and I will not obtain the perfect form—the perfect form with which, the moment they see me practicing the bodhisattva way of life, beings become assured of unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. If I do not obtain that perfect form, I will not bring beings to maturity or purify a buddhafield, so how could I ever gain the knowledge of all aspects?’ They think, ‘If I become lazy and do not make a vigorous attempt at this path of a bodhisattva, if I do not cultivate it, how could I ever complete the buddhadharmas and how could I ever gain the knowledge of all aspects?’ They think, ‘If I become mentally distracted and I do not train in order to perfect all the meditative stabilizations, I will not bring beings to maturity and will not purify a buddhafield, so how could I ever gain the knowledge of all aspects?’ And they think, ‘If I become intellectually confused I will not train with wisdom and skillful means, I will not transcend the śrāvaka and the pratyekabuddha levels, I will not bring beings to maturity, and I will not purify a buddhafield. How then could I ever fully awaken to the knowledge of all aspects?’

26.37 “And they think, ‘Thus I will train perfectly. It would not be right for me not to complete the perfection of giving [F.282.b] because of the force of miserliness, not to complete the perfection of morality because of the force of immorality, not to complete the perfection of patience because of the force of malice, not to complete the perfection of perseverance because of the force of laziness, not to complete the perfection of concentration because of the force of distraction, and not to complete the perfection of wisdom because of the force of intellectual confusion, because, unless I complete the perfection of giving, perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and perfection of wisdom, I will not go forth to the knowledge of all aspects.’

26.38 “Kauśika, those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who take up or bear in mind or read aloud or master or properly pay attention to this perfection of wisdom, not separated from the knowledge of all aspects, will obtain good qualities and benefits like these in this life and in future lives.”

26.39 Then Śatakratu, head of the gods, said to the Lord, “It is amazing, Lord, how this perfection of wisdom has been made available in order to tame the bodhisattva great beings and in order to lessen their conceit.”

26.40 “Why has this perfection of wisdom been made available in order to tame the bodhisattva great beings and in order to lessen their conceit?” asked the Lord.

- 26.41 Śatakratu, head of the gods, replied to the Lord, “Lord, when bodhisattva great beings practicing the ordinary perfection of giving without skillful means give a gift to the lord buddhas, the bodhisattvas, the pratyekabuddhas, [F.283.a] or the śrāvakas it occurs to them to think, ‘I am giving a gift to the lord buddhas, the bodhisattvas, the pratyekabuddhas, the śrāvakas, or to those who are pitiful, destitute, begging, and seeking shelter.’<sup>405</sup> Because of that giving they come to feel conceited.
- 26.42 “When those bodhisattvas protect ordinary morality without skillful means, they think, ‘I am practicing the perfection of morality; I will complete the perfection of morality.’ Because of that morality they come to feel conceited.
- 26.43 “Similarly, they think, ‘I am practicing the perfection of patience..., I am practicing the perfection of perseverance..., I am practicing the perfection of concentration..., I am practicing the perfection of wisdom.’ Because of that ordinary perfection of wisdom they come to feel conceited.
- 26.44 “When they cultivate the ordinary applications of mindfulness ... without skillful means they think, ‘I am cultivating the applications of mindfulness; I am cultivating the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and eightfold noble path; I am cultivating the emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness meditative stabilizations; I am cultivating all the meditative stabilizations and all the dhāraṇī gateways; I am cultivating the ten powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, and eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha; and I am bringing beings to maturity, I am purifying a buddhafield, and I am going to gain [F.283.b] the knowledge of all aspects.’
- 26.45 “They come to feel conceited because of settling down on grasping at ‘I’ and grasping at ‘mine.’ In this case, Lord, because bodhisattva great beings practicing all ordinary dharmas settle down on grasping at ‘I’ and grasping at ‘mine,’ this perfection of wisdom has not been made available to them in order to tame and in order to lessen their conceit .
- 26.46 “Lord, here, when bodhisattva great beings practicing the extraordinary dharmas give a gift, they do not apprehend a giver, they do not apprehend something being given, and they do not apprehend a recipient. In this case the perfection of wisdom has been made available in order to tame bodhisattva great beings and in order to lessen their conceit .
- 26.47 “Similarly, when they protect morality ... cultivate patience ... make an attempt at perseverance ... cultivate concentration ... and cultivate wisdom, they do not apprehend wisdom, they do not apprehend somebody with wisdom, and they do not apprehend the dharmas.

26.48      “Similarly, they do not apprehend the applications of mindfulness, right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, or eightfold noble path; they do not apprehend the cultivation of the ten powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, or eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha; and similarly, they do not apprehend the cultivation of great love and great compassion, and they do not apprehend the cultivation of the knowledge of all aspects. So, in this case, Lord, the perfection of wisdom has been made available in order to bring discipline to bodhisattva great beings and in order to lessen their conceit.”

26.49      This was the twenty-sixth chapter, [F.284.a] “Getting Hold,”<sup>406</sup> of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.”

CHAPTER 27: RELIQUARY

- 27.1 Then the Lord said to Śatakratu, head of the gods, “Kauśika, if some son of a good family or daughter of a good family takes up or bears in mind or reads out loud or recites or teaches or intones or harmonizes with or properly pays attention to this deep perfection of wisdom, and if they go up to the front line of battle and have engaged in or are engaging in, or are traversing, or are sitting down or standing up in a battle that is underway, Kauśika, even if an arrow or a club or a stick or a stone or a sword is flung at that son of a good family or daughter of a good family who takes up or bears in mind or reads out loud or recites or teaches or intones or harmonizes with or properly pays attention to this deep perfection of wisdom, it is impossible that those projectiles would land on their body; it is impossible that the attacks of others would interfere with their life. And why? Kauśika, it is because that son of a good family or daughter of a good family who has practiced the perfection of wisdom for a long time has vanquished their own greed arrows and greed swords; they have vanquished others’ greed arrows and greed swords; they have vanquished their own hatred arrows and confusion arrows and their hatred swords and confusion swords; they have vanquished others’ hatred arrows and confusion arrows and hatred swords and confusion swords; they have vanquished their own arrows of instances of views and swords of instances of views, and they have vanquished others’ arrows of instances of views and swords of instances of views; they have vanquished their own obsession [F.284.b] arrows and obsession swords, and they have vanquished others’ obsession arrows and obsession swords; and they have vanquished their own proclivity arrows and proclivity swords, and they have vanquished others’ proclivity arrows and proclivity swords. Kauśika, because of this one of many explanations, even if an arrow or a sword is flung at a son of a good family or daughter of a good family, it does not land on their body.

27.3       “And why? Because they do not apprehend self, do not apprehend other, and do not apprehend both; they do not apprehend form, and they do not apprehend feelings, perceptions, volitional factors, or consciousness; they do not apprehend the constituents, the sense fields, the dependent originations, the perfections, the emptinesses, the dharmas on the side [F.285.a] of awakening, the powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, the buddhadharmas, up to or even the knowledge of all aspects. And because they are not apprehending anything, they are not thinking about harm to themselves, they are not thinking about harm to others, and they are not thinking about harm to both. They reach unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening and gaze down upon all beings.

27.4       “And why? Because past tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas trained in this knowledge-mantra and fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening; tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas will, having trained in this perfection of wisdom, fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening in the future; and tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas presently in world systems in the ten directions are fully awakening to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, having trained in this perfection of wisdom.

27.5       “Furthermore, Kauśika, a human or nonhuman looking for a way to infiltrate does not find a way to infiltrate where this perfection of wisdom is written out or borne in mind, even if it is not taken up, not read aloud, not recited from memory, not mastered, and not properly paid attention to. And why? Because in order to worship this perfection of wisdom all the Cāturmahārājika gods, the Trāyastriṃśa, up to the Akaniṣṭha class of gods stationed in this great billionfold world system, and all the Cāturmahārājika gods, [F.285.b] the Trāyastriṃśa, up to the Akaniṣṭha class of gods stationed in infinite countless world systems constantly and always guard, protect, and keep safe those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family; and wherever this perfection of wisdom has been written out and borne in mind those gods come and show respect to this perfection of wisdom, and they honor, revere, and worship it there and, having worshiped it, take their leave. Kauśika, given that even someone who writes out or bears in mind this perfection of wisdom gets such good qualities and benefits as this in this life, what need is there to say that those who, having written out this perfection of wisdom, take it up, bear it in mind, read it aloud, recite it from memory, master it, and properly pay attention to it do so?

27.6 “To illustrate, Kauśika, humans or nonhumans cannot inflict violence or injury on any creature born in the birthplace of a human being or an animal that has gone to the site of awakening, or into the vicinity of the site of awakening, or inside the site of awakening. And why? Because seated there, earlier tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening; and present and future tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas are fully awakening and will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening there too. Having fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening they establish all beings in fearlessness, freedom from enmity, freedom from harming, and freedom from hostility. Having established all beings in fearlessness, freedom from enmity, freedom from harming, and freedom from hostility, they establish infinite, countless beings in the perfect state of gods and humans; in the result [F.286.a] of stream enterer, the result of once-returned, and the result of non-returned; in the state of a worthy one; in a pratyekabuddha’s awakening; and in unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. And why? Kauśika, it is because this very perfection of wisdom makes that place serve as a reliquary for all beings, suitable to be worshiped, honored, revered, and venerated with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners.”

27.7 Having said this, Śatakratu, head of the gods, said to the Lord, “A certain son of a good family or daughter of a good family, having borne in mind the perfection of wisdom written out in book form, respects, reveres, honors, and worships it with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, clothes, parasols, flags, and banners. Someone else deposits the physical remains<sup>412</sup> of a tathāgata, worthy one, perfect, complete buddha who has passed into nirvāṇa in a reliquary and, having deposited them there, looks after and bears them in mind and respects, reveres, honors, and worships them with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, clothes, parasols, flags, and banners. Which of them makes the greater merit?”

- 27.8        Śatakratu, head of the gods having thus inquired, the Lord said to him, “So, Kauśika, here I will pose a counterquestion right to you. You should answer to the extent you can. What path do you think [F.286.b] a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha, who has acquired the knowledge of all aspects and for whom such a tathāgata’s body has come into being, has trained in, in order to awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, in order to acquire the knowledge of all aspects, and for such a tathāgata’s body to come into being?”
- 27.9        The Lord having asked this, Śatakratu, head of the gods, answered him, “Lord, a body like this has come into being for a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha, who, having trained in just this perfection of wisdom, has awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening and acquired the knowledge of all aspects.”
- 27.10       “Exactly so, Kauśika, exactly so,” said the Lord. “A body like this has come into being for a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha, who, having trained in just this perfection of wisdom, has awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening and acquired the knowledge of all aspects. Therefore, Kauśika, a tathāgata is not counted a ‘tathāgata’ because of acquiring such a body as this; a tathāgata is counted a ‘tathāgata’ because of acquiring the knowledge of all aspects. The knowledge of all aspects has come forth, Kauśika, from the perfection of wisdom. Similarly, acquiring such a tathāgata’s physical body has come forth from the perfection of wisdom as well, so it serves as a support for the knowledge of a knower of all aspects. Based on that support the existence of the knowledge of a knower of all aspects is established, and from the existence of the knowledge of a knower of all aspects, [F.287.a] the existence of the Buddha is established, the existence of the Dharma is established, and the existence of the Saṅgha is established. Thus, acquiring this body serves as a support for the knowledge of a knower of all aspects, and it is because it serves as such a support that it serves as a reliquary for all beings, suitable to be venerated, honored, worshiped, respected, revered, and attended to. So too will those physical remains of mine be worshiped when I have passed into nirvāṇa.
- 27.11       “Therefore, Kauśika, any son of a good family or daughter of a good family who, having borne respectfully in mind this perfection of wisdom written out in book form just by respecting, revering, honoring, worshiping, venerating, and attending to it with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners and with manifold other kinds of worship produces far greater merit than that. And why? Because, Kauśika, that son of a good family or daughter of a good family would have made an offering to the knowledge of a knower of all aspects. When any son of a good family or daughter of a good family has written out in book form this perfection of wisdom and respects, reveres, honors, worships, venerates, and attends to it, just that produces far greater merit than that. And why? Because they would have made an offering to the knowledge of a knower of all aspects, and because the five other perfections issue forth from it; because inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, the applications of mindfulness, the right efforts, the legs of miraculous power, the faculties, the powers, the limbs of awakening, and the path, the ten powers, [F.287.b] the four fearlessnesses, the four detailed and thorough knowledges, and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha issue forth from it; because all the meditative stabilizations and all the dhāraṇī gateways issue forth from it; because bringing beings to maturity issues forth from it; because the purification of a buddhafield also issues forth from it; because the perfect family, perfect enjoyments, and perfect retinue of bodhisattva great beings also issue forth from it; because great love and great compassion issue forth from it; because great sāla tree-like royal families, great sāla tree-like brahmin families, and great sāla tree-like business families also issue forth from it; because the Cāturmahārājika gods, up to Akaniṣṭha class of gods also issue forth from it; because stream enterers, once-returners, non-returners, worthy ones, and pratyekabuddhas issue forth from it; because bodhisattva great beings also issue forth from it; because tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas also issue forth from it; and because the knowledge of all aspects issues forth from it too." [B22]

27.12 Then Śatakratu, head of the gods, inquired of the Lord, "Lord, is it that those human beings<sup>413</sup> of Jambudvīpa who do not respect, do not revere, do not honor, do not worship, do not venerate, and do not attend to this perfection of wisdom with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners do not realize there is such a great benefit when the perfection of wisdom [F.288.a] is worshiped, such a great power when the perfection of wisdom is worshiped?"

27.13 Śatakratu, head of the gods, having thus inquired, the Lord asked him in return, "What do you think, Kauśika, from among the human beings of Jambudvīpa, how many are endowed with an unbreakable faith in the Buddha, are endowed with an unbreakable faith in the Dharma and Saṅgha, are not unsure about the Buddha, and are not unsure about the Dharma and Saṅgha, with an unquestioned certainty about the Buddha and with an unquestioned certainty about the Dharma and Saṅgha?"

27.14 The Lord having asked this, Śatakratu, head of the gods, said to him, "From among the human beings of Jambudvīpa, few are endowed with an unbreakable faith in the Buddha, are endowed with an unbreakable faith in the Dharma and Saṅgha, are not unsure about the Buddha, and are not unsure about the Dharma and Saṅgha, with an unquestioned certainty about the Buddha, and with an unquestioned certainty about the Dharma and Saṅgha.”

27.15 “Exactly so, Kauśika, exactly so,” said the Lord. “From among the human beings of Jambudvīpa, few are endowed with an unbreakable faith in the Buddha, Dharma, and Saṅgha. Even fewer than them are those who resort to the ten wholesome actions; even fewer than them are those who apply themselves to cultivating giving and morality; even fewer than them are those who cultivate the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening; even fewer than them are those who cultivate the three gateways to liberation; even fewer than them are those who cultivate the eight deliverances; and even fewer than them are those who cultivate the nine serial absorptions. Similarly, there are even fewer who cultivate the four detailed and thorough knowledges [F.288.b] and six clairvoyances.

27.16 “Kauśika, from among the human beings of Jambudvīpa, how many have reached stream enterer because of eliminating the three fetters; once-returner because of weakening greed, hatred, and confusion; non-returner because of eliminating the five fetters that are associated with the lower realms; or worthy one because of eliminating the five fetters that are associated with the upper realms? From among the human beings of Jambudvīpa, how many have set out in the Pratyekabuddha Vehicle, and from among the human beings of Jambudvīpa, how many have set out for unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening?”

27.17 “Lord,” replied Śatakratu, “from among the human beings of Jambudvīpa, few are those who resort to the ten wholesome actions. Connect this in the same way with each, up to extremely few are those who have set out for unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.”

27.18 “Exactly so, Kauśika,” said the Lord. “It is just as you say. Fewer than them are those who practice for awakening. And why? Because those streaming through cyclic existence have not seen the Buddha, have not listened to the Dharma, and have not attended on the Saṅgha. They have not given gifts, have not been devoted to morality, have not cultivated wisdom, have not heard about the perfection of giving, have not heard about the perfections of morality, patience, perseverance, concentration, and wisdom, and have not heard about inner emptiness, up to not heard about the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature. They have not heard about the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening; they have not heard about and have not cultivated the meditative stabilizations, dhāraṇī gateways, ten powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, and eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha; up to and they have not heard about and have not cultivated the knowledge of all aspects.

For that reason, Kauśika, from among the human beings of Jambudvīpa, few are endowed with an unbreakable faith in the Buddha. [F.289.a] Connect this in the same way with each, up to few are those who have set out for unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. Even fewer than them are those who practice for awakening; fewer than them are those who produce the thought of awakening;<sup>414</sup> fewer than them are those who do the yogic practice of the perfection of wisdom; fewer than them are those who do the practice of the perfection of wisdom; fewer than them are those who stand on the irreversible level; and fewer even than them are those who will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

27.19 “Kauśika, here with my unobscured buddha eye I see in the eastern direction infinite, countless beings who have produced the thought of unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening and are practicing the perfection of wisdom, but among them I see only one or two bodhisattvas standing on the irreversible level. Most, without skillful means, are standing at the śrāvaka level and at the pratyekabuddha level. And why? Kauśika, it is because it is hard for those who are lazy, deficient in perseverance, deficient in fortitude, with an admiration for the deficient, and intellectually confused to accomplish unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. Similarly, with my unobscured buddha eye I see in the southern, western, northern, northeastern, southeastern, southwestern, northwestern directions, below and above, infinite, countless beings who have produced the thought of unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening and are practicing the perfection of wisdom, but among them only one or two bodhisattvas standing on the irreversible level. Most, without skillful means, are standing at the śrāvaka level and at the pratyekabuddha level. And why? Kauśika, it is because it is hard for those who are lazy, deficient in perseverance, deficient in fortitude, with an admiration for the deficient, and intellectually confused [F.289.b] to accomplish unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

27.20 “Therefore, Kauśika, a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who wants to quickly and easily awaken fully to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening should constantly listen to, take up, bear in mind, recite, master, set in motion, inquire about, and pay proper attention to just this perfection of wisdom, and they should respect, revere, honor, and worship it with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners. They should also take up, bear in mind, recite, master, and pay proper attention to all the other wholesome dharmas included in the perfection of wisdom—that is, the perfection of giving, perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, and perfection of concentration; inner emptiness, outer emptiness, inner and outer emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature; all the meditative stabilizations, all the dhāraṇī gateways, the applications of mindfulness, the right efforts, the legs of miraculous power, the faculties, the powers, the limbs of awakening, and the eightfold noble path; the ten powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, and eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha; and great love and great compassion. They should also take up, bear in mind, recite, master, and pay proper attention to all the other infinite buddhadharmas included in the perfection of wisdom.

27.21 “And why? Kauśika, it is because those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family will understand, [F.290.a] ‘Tathāgatas training in this perfection of wisdom also trained in the perfection of wisdom,<sup>415</sup> perfection of concentration, perfection of perseverance, perfection of patience, perfection of morality, and perfection of giving; in inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature; in all the meditative stabilizations, all the dhāraṇī gateways, the ten powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha; in great love and great compassion; and in all the other infinite buddhadharmas, so we too should follow them in training in this perfection of wisdom. This perfection of wisdom is our teacher.’ Therefore, Kauśika, whether the Tathāgata remains or passes into nirvāṇa, bodhisattva great beings fall back on just this perfection of wisdom.”

27.22 Then Śatakratu, head of the gods, asked the Lord, “How much merit does a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who worships this perfection of wisdom create?”

27.23 “Kauśika,” said the Lord, “were a son of a good family or daughter of a good family to direct that a stūpa be made of the seven precious stones<sup>416</sup> for the worship of a tathāgata who had passed into nirvāṇa, and, having done so, were they to respect, revere, honor, and worship it with divine flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners for as long as they lived, what do you think, Kauśika, would that son of a good family or daughter of a good family create a lot of merit based on that?”

“A lot, Lord; a lot, Sugata,” [F.290.b] replied Śatakratu.

27.24 “Kauśika,” said the Lord, “were a son of a good family or daughter of a good family, inseparable from the thought of the knowledge of all aspects, to take up, bear in mind, read aloud, master, illuminate for others, and pay proper attention to just this perfection of wisdom, and, having written it out, were they to respect, revere, honor, and worship it with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners, they would create even more merit than that.

27.25 “Kauśika, let alone a stūpa made of the seven precious stones, were some son of a good family or daughter of a good family, Kauśika, to fill up this Jambudvīpa with stūpas, all of them a yojana in height, for the worship of a tathāgata who had passed into nirvāṇa, and, having done so, were they to respect, revere, honor, worship, venerate, and attend to them with divine flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners, what do you think, Kauśika, based on that would that son of a good family or daughter of a good family create even more merit than that?”

27.26 “Kauśika,” said the Lord, “were a son of a good family or daughter of a good family, inseparable from the thought of the knowledge of all aspects, to take up, bear in mind, read aloud, master, illuminate for others, and pay proper attention to just this perfection of wisdom, and, having written it out, were they to respect, revere, honor, and worship it with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, robes, [F.291.a] parasols, flags, and banners, and with manifold other kinds of worship, they would create even more merit than that.

27.27 “Kauśika, let alone this Jambudvīpa filled with stūpas of a tathāgata, were some son of a good family or daughter of a good family, Kauśika, to fill up this four-continent world system with stūpas made of the seven precious stones, all of them a yojana in height, for the worship of a tathāgata who had passed into nirvāṇa, and were they to respect, revere, honor, worship, venerate, and attend to them with divine flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners, what do you think, Kauśika, based on that, would that son of a good family or daughter of a good family create a lot of merit?”

27.28 “Kauśika,” said the Lord, “were a son of a good family or daughter of a good family, inseparable from the thought of the knowledge of all aspects, to take up, bear in mind, read aloud, master, illuminate for others, and pay proper attention to just this perfection of wisdom, and were they, having done nothing but make it into a book,<sup>417</sup> to respect, revere, honor, and worship it with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners, they would create even more merit than that.

27.29 “Kauśika, let alone this four-continent world system filled with stūpas of a tathāgata, were some son of a good family or daughter of a good family, Kauśika, [F.291.b] to fill up this thousandfold world system with stūpas made of the seven precious stones, all of them a yojana in height, for the worship of a tathāgata who had passed into nirvāṇa, and, having filled them, were they to respect, revere, honor, worship, venerate, and attend to them with divine flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners, what do you think, Kauśika, based on that would that son of a good family or daughter of a good family create a lot of merit?"

27.30 "Kauśika," said the Lord, "were a son of a good family or daughter of a good family, inseparable from the thought of the knowledge of all aspects, having done nothing but write out and make this perfection of wisdom into a book, to take up, bear in mind, read aloud, master, illuminate for others, and pay proper attention to it, and were they to respect, revere, honor, and worship it with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners, they would create even more merit than that.

27.31 "Kauśika, let alone this thousandfold world system filled with stūpas made of the seven precious stones, were some person, Kauśika, to cause this millionfold world system to be filled up with stūpas made of the seven precious stones, all of them a yojana in height, for the worship of a tathāgata who had passed into nirvāṇa, and, having done so, were they to respect, revere, honor, and worship them with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners, [F.292.a] what do you think, Kauśika, based on that, would that son of a good family or daughter of a good family create a lot of merit?"

27.32 "Kauśika," said the Lord, "were a son of a good family or daughter of a good family, inseparable from the thought of the knowledge of all aspects, to do nothing but make this perfection of wisdom into a book and respect, revere, honor, and worship it with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners, they would create even more merit than that.

27.33 "Kauśika, let alone even this millionfold world system filled with stūpas made of the seven precious stones, were some son of a good family or daughter of a good family, Kauśika, to fill this great billionfold world system with stūpas made of the seven precious stones, all of them a yojana in height, for the worship of a tathāgata who had passed into nirvāṇa, and, having filled it, were that son of a good family or daughter of a good family to respect, revere, honor, and worship them with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners, what do you think, Kauśika, based on that would that son of a good family or daughter of a good family create a lot of merit?"

"A lot, Lord; a lot, Sugata," replied Śatakratu.

- 27.34 “Kauśika,” said the Lord, “were a son of a good family or daughter of a good family, inseparable from the thought of the knowledge of all aspects, having done nothing but write out and make this perfection of wisdom into a book, to take up, bear in mind, read aloud, and master it, and to respect, revere, honor, and worship it with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, [F.292.b] powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners, they would create even more merit than that.
- 27.35 “Kauśika, let alone worship when this great billionfold world system has been filled with stūpas made of the seven precious stones, even were each single being included in the collection of beings standing in this great billionfold world system, Kauśika, to cause stūpas made of the seven precious stones to be made for the worship of a tathāgata who had passed into nirvāṇa and were to respect, revere, honor, and worship them with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners, still, a son of a good family or daughter of a good family, inseparable from the thought of the knowledge of all aspects, who makes this perfection of wisdom into a book, takes up, bears in mind, reads aloud, masters, and properly pays attention to it, and worships it with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners would, just by that, create even more merit than that.”
- 27.36 The Lord having said this, Śatakratu, head of the gods, said to him, “So it is, Lord, so it is. Lord, through having respected, revered, honored, and worshiped the perfection of wisdom, they have respected, revered, honored, and worshiped past, future, and present lord buddhas.
- 27.37 “Lord, were each single being of the beings in as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River to the east [F.293.a] to cause stūpas made of the seven precious stones, all of them a yojana in height, to be made for the worship of a tathāgata who had passed into nirvāṇa, and for an eon or for even more than an eon were to respect, revere, honor, and worship them with divine flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, clothes, parasols, flags, and banners, based on that would those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family make a lot of merit? Similarly, Lord, were each single being of the beings in as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River in each of the ten directions to cause stūpas made of the seven precious stones, all of them a yojana in height, to be made for the worship of a tathāgata who had passed into nirvāṇa, and for an eon or for even more than an eon were to respect, revere, honor, and worship them with divine flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, clothes, parasols, flags, and banners, based on that would those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family create a lot of merit?”

“Exactly so. Kauśika, exactly so. A lot, Kauśika,” replied the Lord.

27.38 “Lord,” said Śatakratu, “a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who writes out and makes this perfection of wisdom into a book; takes it up, bears it in mind, reads it aloud, masters it, and properly pays attention to it; and respects, reveres, honors, and worships it with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, clothes, parasols, flags, and banners [F.293.b] would create even more merit than that. And why? Lord, it is because all wholesome dharmas are included in the perfection of wisdom, that is, the ten wholesome actions, the four concentrations, the four immeasurables, the four formless absorptions, the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, the three gateways to liberation, the four noble truths, the six clairvoyances, the eight deliverances, and the nine serial absorptions; the perfection of giving, perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, and perfection of concentration; inner emptiness, outer emptiness, inner and outer emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature; all the meditative stabilizations, all the dhāraṇī gateways, the applications of mindfulness, the ten tathāgata powers, the four fearlessnesses, the four detailed and thorough knowledges, and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha; great love and great compassion; all-knowledge, knowledge of path aspects, and knowledge of all aspects; and all wholesome dharmas are included in the perfection of wisdom. So this, Lord, is that doctrine of the lord buddhas, having trained in which past, future, and present bodhisattvas, pratyekabuddhas, and śrāvakas have gone forth, will go forth, and are going forth.”

27.39 This was the twenty-seventh chapter, “Reliquary,” of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.”<sup>418</sup>

28.           CHAPTER 28: DECLARATION OF THE GOOD QUALITIES OF THE THOUGHT OF AWAKENING

28.1       Śatakratu, head of the gods, having said this, the Lord then said to him, “Exactly so. Kauśika, exactly so. Those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family [F.294.a] who write out and make this perfection of wisdom into a book; take it up, bear it in mind, read it aloud, master it, and properly pay attention to it and on top of that respect, revere, honor, and worship it with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners would, based on that, make a lot of merit, an immeasurable, countless, inconceivable, infinite, incomparable amount. And why? Kauśika, it is because the knowledge of all aspects of tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas issues forth from the perfection of wisdom. Kauśika, the five perfections, all the emptinesses, the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, the ten powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, the distinct attributes of a buddha, the five eyes, the six clairvoyances, bringing beings to maturity, and the perfect purification of a buddhafield issue forth from the perfection of wisdom. Kauśika, all-knowledge, knowledge of path aspects, and knowledge of all aspects issue forth from the perfection of wisdom. Kauśika, the Śrāvaka Vehicle, the Pratyekabuddha Vehicle, and the Great Vehicle issue forth from the perfection of wisdom, and unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening issues forth from the perfection of wisdom too.

28.2       “Therefore, Kauśika, the merit created earlier would not approach the creation of merit by a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who writes out and makes this perfection of wisdom into a book; takes it up, bears it in mind, reads it aloud, masters it, and properly pays attention to it and respects, reveres, honors, and worships it with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, clothes, parasols, flags, and banners [F.294.b] by a hundredth part, or by a thousandth part, or by a hundred thousandth part, up to or by a one hundred million billionth part; it would not stand up to any number, or fraction, or comparison,<sup>419</sup> up to or example. And why? Because, Kauśika, for as long as the perfection of wisdom remains in Jambudvīpa, the Buddha Jewel will not disappear, the Dharma Jewel and the Saṅgha Jewel will not disappear, and for that long the perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and perfection of wisdom; the applications of mindfulness, right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, seven limbs of awakening, and path; the ten powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, and eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha; all-knowledge, knowledge of path aspects, and knowledge of all aspects; great sāla tree-like royal families, great sāla tree-like brahmin families, and great sāla tree-like business families; and Cāturmahārājika gods, Trāyastriṃśa, Yāma, Tuṣita, Nirmāṇarati, and Paranirmitavaśavartin classes of gods, up to Akaniṣṭha gods will appear in the world; the result of stream enterer, the result of once-returner, the result of non-returner, and the state of a worthy one, a pratyekabuddha's awakening, and the result of bodhisattvas will be perfectly accomplished; and there will be the unsurpassed knowledge of a buddha, the wheel of Dharma will be turned, beings will be brought to maturity, and a buddhafiield will be purified." [F.295.a] 28.3 Then Śatakratu, head of the gods, said to the Cāturmahārājika gods, up to the Akaniṣṭha gods, "Friends, you should take up, bear in mind, read aloud, and master the perfection of wisdom. Friends, you should read the perfection of wisdom aloud; you should properly pay attention to the perfection of wisdom. And why? Friends, when you have taken up, or borne in mind, or read aloud, or mastered, or properly paid attention to the perfection of wisdom, all unwholesome dharmas decrease and all wholesome dharmas increase; the classes of asuras decrease and the classes of gods increase.

28.4 "Friends, when you have taken up, or borne in mind, or read aloud, or mastered, or properly paid attention to the perfection of wisdom, the way of the Buddha is not brought to an end, the way of the Dharma and the way of Saṅgha are not brought to an end, and the lineage of the Three Jewels is not ended. Friends, all the perfections appear in the world; the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, the ten powers, the four fearlessnesses, the four detailed and thorough knowledges, up to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha appear in the world; the practice of bodhisattvas appears in the world; and stream enterers, once-returners, non-returners, worthy ones, pratyekabuddhas, and bodhisattva great beings appear and exist in the world."

- 28.5 The Lord then said to Śatakratu, head of the gods, “Kauśika, you should take up the perfection of wisdom. Kauśika, you should bear in mind, you should read aloud, you should master, and you should properly pay attention to the perfection of wisdom.
- 28.6 “And why? Kauśika, it is because when it occurs to the asuras [F.295.b] to think, as they habitually do, ‘Let us engage the Trāyastriṃśa gods in battle,’ were you to focus your thoughts on the perfection of wisdom, as you habitually do, and read it aloud, that will make the habitual thoughts of the asuras die down. They will not have thoughts again to engage in battle in the future. Or, because were you to read aloud this perfection of wisdom in the presence of those gods and goddesses when their time of death is at hand, then, even if they were to behold their birth in a terrible form of life, from hearing this perfection of wisdom the thoughts they have about a terrible form of life would die down. In future they would be born in just the abodes of gods. Kauśika, such is the force of hearing the perfection of wisdom.
- 28.7 “Kauśika, because of the wholesome root planted by any son of a good family or daughter of a good family, or god or goddess, who has heard the sound of this perfection of wisdom, they all will gradually fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. And why? Kauśika, it is because those tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas with their śrāvaka saṅghas who appeared in times past trained in this perfection of wisdom and fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening; and those lord buddhas with their śrāvaka saṅghas in future times, and those buddhas who are at the present time dwelling and maintaining themselves in world systems in the ten directions will, having trained in this perfection of wisdom, fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening too. And why? Because all buddha dharmas, all bodhisattva dharmas, all pratyekabuddha dharmas, and all śrāvaka dharmas are included in the perfection of wisdom.”
- 28.8 The Lord having said this, [F.296.a] Śatakratu, head of the gods, then said to him, “This, Lord—that is, the perfection of wisdom—is a great knowledge-mantra. Lord, this perfection of wisdom is an unsurpassable knowledge-mantra. Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a knowledge-mantra equal to the unequalled. And why? Because the perfection of wisdom has been set out for the elimination of all unwholesome dharmas and for the completion of all wholesome dharmas.”
- 28.9 Śatakratu, head of the gods, having said this, the Lord then said to him, “Exactly so, Kauśika, exactly so. This, Kauśika—that is, the perfection of wisdom—is a great knowledge-mantra. Kauśika, this perfection of wisdom is an unsurpassable knowledge-mantra. Kauśika, this perfection of wisdom is a knowledge-mantra equal to the unequaled.

28.10 “And why? Kauśika, it is because past, future, and present tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas in world systems in the ten directions have fully awakened, will fully awaken, and are fully awakening to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening thanks to this very perfection of wisdom; it is because the existence of the ten wholesome actions in the world, Kauśika, and the existence in the world of the four concentrations, the four immeasurables, the four formless absorptions, all the perfections, all the emptinesses, the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, the ten powers, the four fearlessnesses, the four detailed and thorough knowledges, the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, the gateways to liberation, the dharma-constituent, the very limit of reality, suchness, [F.296.b] unmistaken suchness, unaltered suchness, the true nature of dharmas, the establishment of dharmas, the certification of dharmas, the five eyes, the six clairvoyances, the result of stream enterer, the result of once-returner, the result of non-returner, the state of a worthy one, a pratyekabuddha’s awakening, the bodhisattva, and the knowledge of all aspects are all thanks to this very perfection of wisdom; and it is because, Kauśika, the existence of the ten wholesome actions in the world, up to the existence of the knowledge of all aspects in the world, up to the existence of tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas in the world all are thanks to the bodhisattva.

28.11 “To illustrate, Kauśika, just as the existence of all the constellations and stars is thanks to the disk of the moon,<sup>420</sup> similarly the existence of the ten wholesome actions, wholesome practice, perfect practice, emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness meditative stabilization gateways (the constellations), and those in training and for whom there is no more training, and śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas (the lunar mansions and stars) comes down to the bodhisattva (the disk of the moon), the existence of all-knowledge, and the existence of the Tathāgata. When lord buddhas have not fully awakened in the world, when tathāgatas do not appear, it is just the bodhisattva great beings who teach the ordinary and extraordinary Dharma to beings.

28.12 “And why? It is because the vehicle of the gods, the vehicle of humans, the Śrāvaka Vehicle, the Pratyekabuddha Vehicle, and the Great Vehicle issue forth from the bodhisattva great beings. And it is because the skillful means with which bodhisattva great beings bring all the six perfections to completion; [F.297.a] meditate on all the emptinesses; cultivate the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening; cause the ten powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, and eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha to be acquired; cause the thirty-two major marks and the eighty minor signs of a great person to be acquired; cause the śrāvaka and pratyekabuddha levels not to be directly realized; cause beings to be brought to maturity; cause a buddhafiield to be purified; cause the perfect states<sup>421</sup> of a bodhisattva to be appropriated; and cause the knowledge of all aspects to be acquired—it is because that skillful means issues forth from the perfection of wisdom.

28.13 “Furthermore, Kauśika, sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who take up, bear in mind, read aloud, master, and properly pay attention to the perfection of wisdom will also have these good qualities in this very life.”

28.14 The Lord having said this, Śatakratu, head of the gods, then asked him, “Lord, what are these good qualities sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who take up, bear in mind, read aloud, master, and properly pay attention to the perfection of wisdom will also have in this very life?”

28.15 “Kauśika,” replied the Lord, “poisoning will not cause the time of death for sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who take up, bear in mind, read aloud, master, and properly pay attention to the perfection of wisdom; their time of death will not be caused by fire, weapons, or water—their time of death will not be caused by anything at all, up to sickness, unless it is the maturation of karma.

28.16 “Kauśika, when those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who have been persecuted by a royal family have set out for the palace, those who are looking for an opportunity to hurt them will not find an opportunity even though they seek it out. And why? [F.297.b] Because of the splendor of just this perfection of wisdom. Kauśika, if those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family approach that palace reciting the perfection of wisdom, the princes and the important ministers will decide to welcome them, will decide to speak kind words to them, and will decide to celebrate. And why? Because those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family have attended to the mind that loves all beings, and they have attended to the mind that feels compassion and joy for, and has equanimity toward, all beings.

28.17 “Kauśika, sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who take up, bear in mind, read aloud, master, and properly pay attention to the perfection of wisdom will also have those good qualities in this very life.

28.18 “Furthermore, Kauśika, sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who take up, bear in mind, read aloud, master, and properly pay attention to the perfection of wisdom will also have these good qualities in a future life as well, that is, they will never be separated from the ten wholesome actions, and they will never be separated from the four concentrations, the four immeasurables, the four formless absorptions, the perfections, all the emptinesses, the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, the powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, or the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha. They will never be born in the hells, the animal world, or in the world of Yama. They will never have incomplete faculties, will never have missing limbs, will never be born in a family that is destitute, will never be born in a family of bamboo-flute makers, will never be born in a family defiled by crime, and will never be born in the low castes. From then on [F.298.a] they will constantly and always obtain a body adorned with the thirty-two major marks of a great person. In world systems where lord buddhas are standing they will miraculously take birth from a lotus and appear in the presence of those lord buddhas. Their clairvoyances will never weaken. They will attend on those lord buddhas and will pass on from buddhaheld to buddhaheld to listen to the Dharma when and as they want to, and when they are passing on from buddhaheld to buddhaheld they will bring beings to maturity and purify a buddhaheld.

28.19     “Therefore, Kauśika, sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who want to obtain this accumulation of perfect good qualities should take up, bear in mind, read aloud, master, and properly pay attention to this perfection of wisdom and not become separated from the thought of the knowledge of all aspects. Up until they fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, they will never be without these good qualities in this life or in future lives.”

28.20     This was the twenty-eighth chapter, “Declaration of the Good Qualities of the Thought of Awakening,” of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.”

CHAPTER 29: DIFFERENT TĪRTHIKA RELIGIOUS MENDICANTS

29.1 Then, many different tīrthika religious mendicants intent on criticizing, a hundred of them, specifically approached the Lord to level criticism.

29.2 Then it occurred to Śatakratu, head of the gods, to think, “These many different tīrthika religious mendicants intent on criticizing the doctrine, a hundred of them, have specifically approached the Lord to level criticism. I will certainly recite as much of the perfection of wisdom as I have taken up in order that these different tīrthika religious mendicants will not get at all close to the Lord to hinder the teaching of the perfection of wisdom.”

29.3 Śatakratu, head of the gods, then recited as much of the perfection of wisdom as he had taken up from the Lord. Then those different tīrthika religious mendicants circumambulated the Lord from afar and, taking the road on which they had arrived, went back the way they approached.

29.4 Then it occurred to venerable Śāriputra [F.298.b] to think, “Why have those different tīrthika religious mendicants circumambulated the Lord from afar and, taking the road on which they had arrived, gone back the way they approached?”

29.5 The Lord, understanding in his mind the thoughts occurring to venerable Śāriputra, then said to venerable Śāriputra, “Venerable Śāriputra, Śatakratu, head of the gods, focused his thoughts as he habitually does on this perfection of wisdom, and because of that those different tīrthika religious mendicants circumambulated me from afar and, taking the road on which they had arrived, went back the way they approached.

29.6 “Furthermore, Śāriputra, I do not see any hopeful prospect<sup>422</sup> in even one of those different tīrthika religious mendicants. All those different tīrthika religious mendicants decided to come, having taken offense and intent on criticizing, and I do not see anyone among the host of creatures in this world with its celestial beings, its Māras and Brahmās, and its śramaṇas and brahmins who has taken offense at or is intent on criticizing this perfection of wisdom who is capable of approaching. It is impossible.

29.7 “And why? Śāriputra, it is because this perfection of wisdom is looked after by all the Cāturmahārājika gods, up to the Akaniṣṭha class of gods, the śrāvakas, those who have set out in the Pratyekabuddha Vehicle, and the bodhisattvas standing in the great billionfold world system. Why? Because they all have issued forth from this perfection of wisdom.

29.8 “Furthermore, Śāriputra, it is because this perfection of wisdom is looked after by all the lord buddhas together with their śrāvaka saṅghas, as well as by the pratyekabuddhas, the bodhisattva great beings, and the gods, nāgas, yakṣas, gandharvas, asuras, garuḍas, kinnaras, and mahoragas, in as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River in the eastern direction, up to in as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River [F.299.a] in each of the ten directions. Why? Because they all have issued forth from this perfection of wisdom.”

29.9 Then it occurred to Māra the wicked one to think, “The four retinues are seated directly in the presence of the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete Buddha, and the gods living in the desire realm and the formless realm are seated directly in his presence too. It is certain that from among them he will prophesy the unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening of bodhisattva great beings, so I will specifically approach the Lord in order to confuse<sup>423</sup> them.”

29.10 Then it occurred to Śatakratu, head of the gods, to think, “Hey! Māra the wicked one has magically produced this mass of four-unit forces and wants specifically to approach the Lord. Such a mass of four-unit forces that has been drawn up—this mass of four-unit forces Māra the wicked one has drawn up—is not King Bimbisāra’s. Such a mass of four-unit forces that has been drawn up is not King Prasenajit’s, is not the Śākya’s, and is not the Licchavis’. For a long time Māra the wicked one has been looking for a way and seeking for an opportunity to cause trouble for the Lord. Māra the wicked one has drawn up this mass of four-unit forces with the intention of injuring beings, so I will focus on this perfection of wisdom as I habitually do and, having recollected it, recite it.”

29.11 Śatakratu, head of the gods, then focused on this perfection of wisdom as he habitually does, recollected it, and recited it. And to the extent Śatakratu, head of the gods, recited the perfection of wisdom, to that extent Māra the wicked one turned back right on that same road, right through that same gate.

- 29.12 Then those Cāturmahārājika gods and the gods from Akaniṣṭha on down in that retinue magically produced divine flowers, and while arrayed in the sky [F.299.b] they specifically tossed them down on and strewed them over the Lord and made this statement: “For as long as this perfection of wisdom remains among the humans of Jambudvīpa, the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete Buddha will not disappear, the good Dharma will last for a long time, and the Saṅgha will appear in the world. Similarly, the superiority of the practice of the bodhisattva great beings will be famous in all the buddhafiels in the great billionfold world system, and similarly in those in the ten directions, and in whichever region a son of a good family or daughter of a good family has written out and made this perfection of wisdom into a book and borne it in mind, that region will become an awakened place, and the ground where this perfection of wisdom is practiced will have a protector and will be free from gloom. So, let the humans of Jambudvīpa practice this perfection of wisdom for a long time!”
- 29.13 The gods having said this, the Lord then said to Śatakratu, head of the gods, “Exactly so, Kauśika. Kauśika, whichever region, anywhere in this vast world system, where the perfection of wisdom is practiced and where it exists written out in book form is a place that has become awakened, a place with a protector, that will be free from gloom and darkness.”
- 29.14 Then those gods magically produced divine flowers, specifically strewed them over the Lord, and made this statement: “Lord, Māra or the gods of the Māra class cannot find a way to cause trouble to any son of a good family or daughter of a good family who takes up, bears in mind, reads aloud, masters, and properly pays attention to this perfection of wisdom. We too, Lord, will constantly and always guard, protect, and keep safe that son of a good family or daughter of a good family. We will also treat as the Teacher that son of a good family or daughter of a good family<sup>424</sup> who takes up, bears in mind, reads aloud, masters, [F.300.a] and properly pays attention to this perfection of wisdom.”
- 29.15 Then Śatakratu, head of the gods, said to the Lord, “Lord, when sons of a good family or daughters of a good family take up, bear in mind, read aloud, master, and properly pay attention to this perfection of wisdom, they will not become endowed with a paltry wholesome root. Those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family will have served all the former victors well. Those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who take up, up to properly pay attention to this perfection of wisdom will have attended on many buddhas and will have been looked after by spiritual friends. And why? Because the knowledge of all aspects issues forth from this—that is, the perfection of wisdom—and the perfection of wisdom issues forth from this, that is, the knowledge of all aspects. And why? Because the knowledge of all aspects is not one thing and the perfection of wisdom another. Therefore, the knowledge of all aspects and the perfection of wisdom are not two and cannot be divided into two; they have not been broken apart and have not been cut apart.”

29.16 Śatakratu, head of the gods, having spoken thus, the Lord then said to him, “Exactly so, Kauśika, exactly so. It is just as you say. The knowledge of all aspects and the perfection of wisdom are not two and cannot be divided into two; they have not been broken apart and have not been cut apart.”

29.17 This was the twenty-ninth chapter, “Different Tīrthika Religious Mendicants,” of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.” [V30] [F.1.b] [B23] and wisdom that have been dedicated to the knowledge of all aspects in a nondual way get the name 'perfection'?"

30.7 "Ānanda," replied the Lord, "it is because it has been dedicated by way of the nonduality of form, and it has been dedicated by way of the nonduality of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness, up to awakening."

30.8 Ānanda then asked, "Lord, why is it by way of the nonduality of form? Why is it by way of the nonduality of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness? Up to why is it by way of the nonduality of awakening?"

30.9 "Ānanda," replied the Lord, "it is because form is empty of form. Feeling is empty of feeling. Perception is empty of perception. Volitional factors are empty of volitional factors, and consciousness is empty of consciousness. And why? Because form, feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness and that perfection are not two and cannot be divided into two. Perfection and awakening are not two and cannot be divided into two. Therefore, Ānanda, here the five perfections, up to awakening and the knowledge of all aspects are preceded by just this perfection of wisdom.

30.10 "To illustrate, Ānanda, through the power of a collection, seeds grow when planted on this great earth. Similarly, Ānanda, all the perfections, [F.3.a] the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, up to the knowledge of all aspects grow when planted on the perfection of wisdom. And, planted on the knowledge of all aspects, all the perfections, the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, the ten powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, and the distinct attributes of a buddha grow. Therefore, Ānanda, just this perfection of wisdom is the leader of these perfections, up to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha and the knowledge of all aspects."

30.11 Śatakratu then said, "Lord, the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete Buddha has not proclaimed all the good qualities of the perfection of wisdom, the good qualities that have been appropriated by a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who takes up, bears in mind, reads aloud, masters, and properly pays attention to this perfection of wisdom. It is because that son or daughter takes up and properly pays attention to this perfection of wisdom that the ten wholesome actions appear in the world; that the four concentrations, four immeasurables, and four formless absorptions appear in the world; up to that the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha appear in the world. Lord, it is because they have taken up, up to have properly paid attention to the perfection of wisdom that there are great sāla tree-like royal families in the world, there are great sāla tree-like brahmin families, and there are great sāla tree-like business families in the world; that there are the Cāturmahārājika gods, up to and that there are Akaniṣṭha gods in the world. [F.3.b] Lord, it is because they have taken up, up to have properly paid attention to the perfection of wisdom that there are stream enterers in the world; that there are once-returners, non-returners, and worthy ones in the world; that there are pratyekabuddhas in the world; and that there are bodhisattvas in the world. Lord, it is because they have taken up, up to have properly paid attention to the perfection of wisdom that there are tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas in the world.”

30.12 Śatakratu, head of the gods, having said this, the Lord then said to him, “Kauśika, I am not saying a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who has taken up, up to has properly paid attention to the perfection of wisdom has merely that many good qualities. And why? Kauśika, those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who take up, bear in mind, read aloud, master, and properly pay attention to this perfection of wisdom are endowed with an immeasurable aggregate of morality and will not become separated from the thought of the knowledge of all aspects. Those who take up, bear in mind, read aloud, master, and properly pay attention to this perfection of wisdom are endowed with an immeasurable aggregate of meditative stabilization, aggregate of wisdom, aggregate of liberation, and aggregate of knowledge and seeing of liberation, and they will not become separated from the thought of the knowledge of all aspects. Kauśika, you should know that those who ... up to properly pay attention [F.4.a] are like tathāgatas. They will not become separated from the thought of the knowledge of all aspects.

30.13 “Kauśika, the aggregate of morality, meditative stabilization, wisdom, liberation, and knowledge and seeing of liberation in the aggregate of morality, aggregate of meditative stabilization, aggregate of wisdom, aggregate of liberation, and aggregate of knowledge and seeing of liberation of śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas does not, Kauśika, approach the aggregate of morality, up to aggregate of knowledge and seeing of liberation in the aggregate of morality, up to aggregate of knowledge and seeing of liberation of a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who stands in the perfection of wisdom even by a hundredth part, or by a thousandth part, or by a hundred thousandth part; neither does it stand up to any number, or fraction, or counting, or example, or comparison.

30.14 “And why? Because, Kauśika, those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family are freed from the thought of the śrāvaka and pratyekabuddha levels without being separated from any dharma and without it having been produced at all.

30.15 “Kauśika, it is to be expected that a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who has written out this perfection of wisdom and keeps it in mind, who respects, reveres, honors, and worships it with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners, will obtain these good qualities in this life and in future lives.”

30.16 The Lord having said this, Śatakratu, head of the gods, then said to him, “I too will constantly and always guard, protect, and keep safe [F.4.b] a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who takes up this perfection of wisdom, keeps this perfection of wisdom in mind, and respects, reveres, honors, and worships it with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners. They will never be separated from the thought of the knowledge of all aspects.”

30.17 Śatakratu, head of the gods, having said this, the Lord then said to hm, “Kauśika, in order to listen to the Dharma, many hundreds of thousands of gods will come near to a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who is reciting the perfection of wisdom. Those gods will want to connect those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family with the confidence giving a readiness to speak about the perfection of wisdom. When those Dharma preachers do not wish to teach, those very gods will also, because of their respect for the Dharma, want to connect them with the confidence giving a readiness to speak.

30.18 “Kauśika, a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who takes up, bears in mind, reads aloud, masters, and properly pays attention to this perfection of wisdom and, having written it out in book form, respects, reveres, honors, and worships it with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners gets these good qualities too in this life.

30.19 “Furthermore, Kauśika, those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who are explaining this perfection of wisdom in front of the four retinues are not cowed when somebody argues and finds fault with them. And why? [F.5.a] Because this perfection of wisdom guards, protects, and keeps safe those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family. It is also because in the perfection of wisdom ordinary and extraordinary dharmas, those with outflows and without outflows, those shared in common and not shared in common, those that are wholesome and unwholesome, those that are compounded and uncompounded, the dharmas of śrāvakas, the dharmas of pratyekabuddhas, the dharmas of bodhisattvas, the dharmas of buddhas, and all dharmas are not different.

30.20 “And why? Because that son of a good family or daughter of a good family standing in inner emptiness, up to standing in the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature does not see fault finding and does not see a fault finder either. Thus no fault will be found in that son of a good family or daughter of a good family mentored by the perfection of wisdom.

- 30.21 “Furthermore, Kauśika, a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who takes up, up to properly pays attention to the perfection of wisdom does not feel cowed, tense up, tremble, feel frightened, or become terrified. And why? Because those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family do not see a real basis that could feel cowed, could tense up, could tremble, could feel frightened, or could become terrified.
- 30.22 “Kauśika, a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who takes up, bears in mind, reads aloud, masters, and properly pays attention to this perfection of wisdom, and respects, reveres, honors, and worships it with flowers, [F.5.b] perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners appropriates these good qualities too in this life.
- 30.23 “Furthermore, Kauśika, fathers, mothers, friends, retainers, kinsmen, blood relatives, those following a secluded religious life, and brahmins come to feel great affection for any son of a good family or daughter of a good family who takes up, bears in mind, reads aloud, masters, and properly pays attention to this perfection of wisdom and, having written it out in book form, respects, reveres, honors, and worships it with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners. Those bodhisattvas become loved by the lord buddhas standing in all the world systems in the ten directions and by bodhisattvas, śrāvakas, pratyekabuddhas, worthy ones, all those in training, and all those for whom there is no more training; they become dear to the world with its celestial beings, with its Māras, and with its Brahmās, and to the whole populace with those following a secluded religious life and the brahmins, with its gods, humans, and asuras. They become endowed with a seamless confident readiness; endowed with a seamless perfection of giving; endowed with a seamless perfection of morality, patience, perseverance, concentration, and wisdom; endowed with seamless inner emptiness, up to emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature; endowed with seamless applications of mindfulness, right efforts, [F.6.a] legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, paths, ten tathāgata powers, and four fearlessnesses; and endowed with four seamless detailed and thorough knowledges, eighteen seamless distinct attributes of a buddha, seamless dhāraṇī gateways and meditative stabilization gateways, seamless clairvoyances, bringing beings to maturity, and purification of a buddhafield; and endowed with a seamless knowledge of all aspects. They become able, because they are endowed with the Dharma, to curb all the disputes with tīrthikas that ever come up.
- 30.24 “Kauśika, a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who takes up, bears in mind, reads aloud, masters, and properly pays attention to this perfection of wisdom and, having written it out, respects, reveres, honors, and worships it with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners also appropriates these good qualities in this life and future lives, and they will not become separated from the thought of the knowledge of all aspects.

30.25 “Furthermore, Kauśika, the Cāturmahārājika gods that are in the great billionfold world system who have set out for unsurpassed awakening come to where a son of a good family or daughter of a good family, having written out this perfection of wisdom in book form, bears it in mind. They take up this perfection of wisdom, Kauśika, bear it in mind, read it aloud, and master it, and, having venerated and bowed to it, they go back. Similarly, [F.6.b] the Trāyastriṃśa, Yāma, Tuṣita, Nirmāṇarati, Paranirmitavaśavartin, Brahmakāyika, Brahmapurohita, Brahmapārṣadya, Parittābha, Apramāṇābha, Ābhāsvara, Parittaśubha, Apramāṇaśubha, Śubhakṛtsna, Bṛhatphala, and Brahmā<sup>427</sup> gods who have made a prayer for unsurpassed awakening come to where a son of a good family or daughter of a good family writes out this perfection of wisdom in book form and bears it in mind. They take up this perfection of wisdom, Kauśika, bear it in mind, read it aloud, and master it, and, having venerated and bowed down to it, they go back. Kauśika, also the Śuddhāvāsa gods—the Avṛha, Sudarśana, Sudṛśa, Atapa, and Akaniṣṭha gods—think to come there, take up this perfection of wisdom, Kauśika, bear it in mind, read it aloud, and master it, and, having venerated it, they go back.

30.26 “Kauśika, that son of a good family or daughter of a good family should have the following thought. They should think, ‘May the gods included in the Cāturmahārājika and the Bṛhatphala class of gods on down, the Śuddhāvāsa class of gods, and the gods, nāgas, yakṣas, gandharvas, asuras, garuḍas, kinnaras, and mahoragas that are in world systems in the ten directions who have set out for unsurpassed awakening come here, and may they take up this perfection of wisdom, bear it in mind, read it aloud, and master it, and, having venerated and bowed to it, go back. May I make this offering [F.7.a] of a gift of Dharma to them.’

30.27 “Those Cāturmahārājika gods and Bṛhatphala gods on down and the Śuddhāvāsa class of gods that are in world systems in the ten directions who have set out for unsurpassed awakening do think to come there. They take up this perfection of wisdom, bear it in mind, read it aloud, and master it, and, having venerated it, they go back.

30.28 “The Cāturmahārājika gods and the Akaniṣṭha gods on down that are in this great billionfold world system and the Cāturmahārājika gods and the Akaniṣṭha gods on down that are in world systems in the ten directions will guard, protect, and keep safe that son of a good family or daughter of a good family so that those seeking an opportunity to hurt will not get an opportunity unless it is the maturation of karma.

- 30.29 “Kauśika, those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family will appropriate these good qualities too in this life. And why? Because those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family have set out for unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening; they have set out to be a refuge for all beings, not to reject all beings—to be of benefit and bring happiness to all beings.”
- 30.30 Then Śatakratu, head of the gods, asked the Lord, “Lord, how will those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family know the Cāturmahārājika gods have come there from all around and that the Akaniṣṭha gods on down have come there [F.7.b] to take up this perfection of wisdom, bear it in mind, read it aloud, master it, respect, revere, honor, worship, venerate, and bow down to it?”
- 30.31 “Kauśika,” answered the Lord, “when those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family smell a celestial divine fragrance they have never smelled before they will know ‘extremely powerful gods have come here to hear, take up, bear in mind, read aloud, master, respect, revere, honor, worship, venerate, and bow down to this perfection of wisdom.’
- 30.32 “Furthermore, Kauśika, when those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family are habitually clean, because of their habitual cleanliness the gods will come there to hear, take up, bear in mind, read aloud, master, respect, revere, honor, worship, venerate, and bow down to this perfection of wisdom, and they will become enraptured.
- 30.33 “In that place the gods that are only slightly powerful are unable to bear the splendor of the extremely powerful ones and feel they have to withdraw from there.
- 30.34 “The belief of those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family becomes stronger and stronger in line with the arrival there of those extremely powerful gods.
- 30.35 “On that place on the earth one should not behave like those who are not habitually clean. That place should be adorned with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners. That place should be adorned in many ways; it should be daubed with fragrant substances and strewn with loose flowers, and a cloth canopy with tassels hanging down should be stretched out over it.
- 30.36 “Furthermore, Kauśika, those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family will not feel [F.8.a] physical weariness but will feel a sense of physical pleasure, a sense of physical lightness; they will do what they do physically with a sense of ease. They will also feel a sense of mental lightness, will do what they do mentally with a sense of ease, and will experience mental pleasure.

30.37 “From then on, they will conceive of everything in terms of the perfection of wisdom from the bottom of their hearts and will not have bad dreams. In their dreams they will see a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha adorned with the thirty-two major marks of a great person and with a body golden in color, seated and teaching the Dharma at the head of the śrāvaka saṅgha and at the head of the bodhisattva community. From those tathāgatas they hear just discourse connected with the six perfections; they hear just discourse connected with the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, up to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha; and they hear just the meaning of those perfections, up to the meaning of the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha. They will see the Bodhi tree, they will see the bodhisattva great being approaching the site of awakening, and they will see the full awakening to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.<sup>428</sup> They will see many hundreds of thousands of one hundred million billion bodhisattvas chanting the buddha’s words in the assembly, saying, ‘Get the knowledge of all aspects, bring beings to maturity, purify a buddhfield.’ They will hear the sound of one hundred million billion buddhas from the eastern direction. Similarly, they will hear the sound of many hundreds of thousands of one hundred million billion [F.8.b] buddhas from the south, west, and north, below and above, and intermediate directions. They will hear in such and such a world system such and such a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha visibly surrounded by his many hundreds of thousands of one hundred million billion bodhisattvas, and by many hundreds of thousands of one hundred million billion śrāvakas, seated teaching the Dharma. They will see many hundreds of thousands of one hundred million billion buddhas in the eastern direction entering into complete nirvāṇa, and they will also see many hundreds of thousands of one hundred million billion buddhas entering into complete nirvāṇa in ... up to the ten directions. They will also see hundreds of thousands of one hundred million billion reliquaries, receptacles for the remaining physical constituents of those tathāgatas, made of various precious things. They will see the respecting, revering, honoring, and worshiping of them with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners. Kauśika, sons of a good family or daughters of a good family will have such good dreams as those.

30.38 “They will fall asleep happy and wake up happy, they will have the experience of their bodies being infused with energy, and they will have the experience of their bodies not being heavy but light. They will not have a powerful greediness for food, and they will not be greedy for requirements—robes, alms, beds and seats, and medicines for sicknesses. Kauśika, this is like a monk practitioner of yoga who has arisen from meditative stabilization with a mind satisfied by mental work. They do not have a powerful greediness for food. They have less. [F.9.a] Similarly, Kauśika, the nonhumans supply a son of a good family or daughter of a good family with energy. Those lord buddhas, and also the gods, nāgas, yakṣas, gandharvas, asuras, garuḍas, kinnaras, and mahoragas that are in the ten directions, infuse their body with energy.

30.39 “Kauśika, sons of a good family or daughters of a good family with the thought of the knowledge of all aspects who take up, bear in mind, read aloud, master, and properly pay attention to this perfection of wisdom appropriate these good qualities too in this life.

30.40 “Furthermore, Kauśika, even if sons of a good family or daughters of a good family do not take up, do not bear in mind, do not read aloud, do not master, and do not properly pay attention to this perfection of wisdom, still, if, having written it out in book form, they bear it in mind and respect, revere, honor, and worship it with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners, based on that, Kauśika, those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family create a lot of merit. To respect, revere, honor, and worship tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas and their śrāvaka saṅghas that are in world systems all around in the ten directions with requirements—robes, alms, beds and seats, and medicines for sicknesses—and to respect, revere, honor, and worship the reliquaries of those tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfect complete buddhas when they have passed into complete nirvāṇa [F.9.b] along with their śrāvaka saṅghas with requirements—robes, alms, beds and seats, and medicines for sicknesses—is not like that.”

31.1

Then the Lord asked Śatakratu, head of the gods, “Kauśika, which of these two options would you choose: to have this Jambudvīpa filled right to the top with the physical remains of tathāgatas and to respect, revere, honor, and worship them with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners, or to be given this perfection of wisdom?”

31.2

“Lord,” replied Śatakratu, “were I to be offered this Jambudvīpa filled right to the top with the physical remains of the tathāgatas and to be offered this perfection of wisdom written out in book form—were I to be presented with these two options—I would want the perfection of wisdom. And why? Lord, it is not that I do not venerate those physical remains of the tathāgatas. Lord, I do indeed venerate them. It is not that I do not respect those physical remains of the tathāgatas, or do not revere, do not honor, and do not worship them. But I respect, revere, honor, and worship those physical remains of the tathāgatas because they come about from the perfection of wisdom. The physical remains of the tathāgatas [F.10.a] are suffused by the perfection of wisdom. That is why the physical remains of the tathāgatas get to be worshiped.”

Then venerable Śāriputra said to Śatakratu, head of the gods, “Kauśika, the perfection of wisdom cannot be apprehended, cannot be pointed out, does not obstruct, and has only one mark—that is, no mark—so how could you think to take it up? Why can it not be taken up? It is because this perfection of wisdom is not a place to be seized or not seized, to be increased or reduced, to be taken away from or added to, for defilement or purification. It does not bestow the buddha dharmas; it does not remove the dharmas of ordinary persons. It does not bestow the dharmas of bodhisattvas, the dharmas of pratyekabuddhas, the dharmas of śrāvakas, the dharmas of those in training, or the dharmas of those for whom there is no more training. It does not remove the dharmas of ordinary persons. It does not bestow the uncompounded element, and it does not remove the compounded element. It does not bestow inner emptiness, up to or the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature; it does not bestow the applications of mindfulness, the right efforts, the legs of miraculous power, the faculties, the powers, the limbs of awakening, the path, or the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha. It does not bestow the knowledge of all aspects.”

31.4 “Venerable monk Śāriputra, exactly!” said Śatakratu. “I too understand that the perfection of wisdom does not bestow the buddha dharmas, up to [F.10.b] the knowledge of all aspects. Why? Because the perfection of wisdom is not two, because a dual perfection of wisdom is not available. Similarly, a dual perfection of concentration, perfection of perseverance, perfection of patience, perfection of morality, and perfection of giving is not available, because it is not two.”

31.5 Then the Lord complimented Śatakratu, head of the gods. “Kauśika, exactly so! Excellent, excellent, Kauśika, it is exactly as you say! A dual perfection of wisdom is not available because the perfection of wisdom is not two. Similarly, a dual perfection of concentration..., perfection of perseverance..., perfection of patience..., perfection of morality..., and perfection of giving is not available, because it is not two. Kauśika, to accept the perfection of wisdom as two is simply to accept the dharma-constituent as two. And why? Kauśika, the perfection of wisdom and the dharma-constituent are not two, nor are they divided. Similarly, the perfection of concentration, perfection of perseverance, perfection of patience, perfection of morality, and perfection of giving and the dharma-constituent are not two, nor are they divided. Connect this in the same way with each, up to to accept the perfection of wisdom as two is simply to accept suchness as two, up to ... is simply to accept the very limit of reality and the inconceivable element as two.”

31.6 Śatakratu then said, “Lord, [F.11.a] this perfection of wisdom in which bodhisattva great beings train to fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening is the place to which the world with its gods, humans, and asuras rightly bows down.

31.7 “Lord, at the times when I am present on the throne of the head of the gods in the Sudharmā assembly of gods, the gods come to attend on me there in my place. When I am not present on my lion throne they think, ‘Seated on this Dharma throne, Śatakratu, head of the gods, teaches Dharma to the Trāyastriṃśa gods,’ and they bow down to that throne of mine and go back. Similarly, Lord, the gods, nāgas, yakṣas, gandharvas, asuras, garuḍas, kinnaras, and mahoragas come from the ten directions with the thought to go and bow down to where this perfection of wisdom is kept written out, or is read aloud, or is perfectly revealed to others and, having bowed down to this perfection of wisdom, to go back. And why? It is because the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas have come about from this perfection of wisdom, all the requirements for the happiness of all beings have arisen from it, and because whatever physical remains of the tathāgatas there are, they too have come about from this perfection of wisdom. Even when a tathāgata is pursuing the practice of awakening, this perfection of wisdom serves as the foundation, serves as the condition, serves as the cause, and serves as the force for the knowledge of all aspects.

31.8 “Lord, because that is the case, of those two options I would want just the perfection of wisdom. [F.11.b] Having taken the perfection of wisdom, I would recite it with a mind that longs for the good Dharma.

31.9 “Lord, when I pay attention to the perfection of wisdom, I see no reason to fear or be petrified. And why? Lord, it is because the perfection of wisdom has no causal sign; the perfection of wisdom, Lord, has no token, is inexpressible, and cannot be given voice to.

31.10 “Similarly, Lord, the perfection of concentration, the perfection of perseverance, the perfection of patience, the perfection of morality, and the perfection of giving, up to the knowledge of all aspects cannot be given voice to.

31.11 “Lord, were the perfection of wisdom to have a causal sign, were it not to have no causal sign, the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha, having understood that all dharmas have no causal sign, have no token, are inexpressible, and cannot be talked about, would not have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening and taught beings that dharmas have no causal sign, have no token, are inexpressible, and cannot be talked about. Lord, it is because the perfection of wisdom has no causal sign, has no token, is inexpressible, and cannot be talked about that the tathāgata, having understood that all dharmas have no causal sign, have no token, are inexpressible, cannot be talked about, and are inconceivable, did fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening and does teach beings [F.12.a] that dharmas have no causal sign, have no token, are inexpressible, cannot be given voice to, are inconceivable, and are not amenable to language.

31.12 “Therefore, Lord, the world with its gods, humans, and asuras should respect, should revere, should honor, and should worship this perfection of wisdom with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, clothes, parasols, flags, and banners; they should take it up, bear it in mind, read it aloud, and master it. It is correct that life in the hells, the animal world, and the world of Yama will then be no more, and they will not descend to the śrāvaka level or the pratyekabuddha level. It is correct that up until fully awakening to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, they will see the tathāgata, bring beings to maturity, and, passing on from buddhafield to buddhafield, respect, revere, honor, and worship this perfection of wisdom with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, clothes, parasols, flags, and banners.

31.13 “Furthermore, Lord, were I to be offered this great billionfold world system filled right to the top with the physical remains of tathāgatas, and were I to be offered this perfection of wisdom written out in book form, presented with these two options I would want just this perfection of wisdom. [F.12.b] And why? Those physical remains of the tathāgatas come about from the perfection of wisdom; that is why they are respected, revered, honored, and worshiped, and that is why those sons of a good family who have respected, revered, honored, and worshiped them are not born in terrible forms of life, experience everything perfect of the gods and humans, and in the Śrāvaka Vehicle, or the Pratyekabuddha Vehicle, or the Great Vehicle enter complete nirvāṇa in accordance with earlier prayers they have made.

31.14 “To see the Tathāgata and to see the perfection of wisdom is equivalent, because, Lord, the Tathāgata and the perfection of wisdom are not two and cannot be divided into two.

31.15 “Furthermore, Lord, for a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha to teach the discourses, melodious narrations, predictions, up to and expositions with the three sorts of miracles, and for a son of a good family or a daughter of a good family to take up this perfection of wisdom and, having mastered it, teach it to others is equivalent. And why? Lord, it is because a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha’s teaching of the discourses, melodious narrations, predictions, up to and expositions with the three sorts of miracles comes about from it.

31.16 “Furthermore, Lord, for as many tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfect complete buddhas as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River in the east to teach the discourses, melodious narrations, predictions, [F.13.a] up to and expositions with the three sorts of miracles, and similarly, for the lord buddhas in as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River in the south, west, and north, below and above, and the intermediate directions to teach the discourses, melodious narrations, predictions, up to and expositions with the three sorts of miracles, and for a son of a good family or a daughter of a good family to take up this perfection of wisdom, up to master it, and teach it to others is equivalent. And why? Because tathāgatas come about from it, and because discourses, melodious narrations, predictions, up to and expositions with the three sorts of miracles come about from it too.

- 31.17 “Furthermore, Lord, to respect, revere, honor, and worship as many tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River in each of the ten directions with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners, and to respect, revere, honor, and worship this perfection of wisdom written out in book form with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners is equivalent. And why? Because the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas come about from it.
- 31.18 “Furthermore, Lord, for the son of a good family or daughter of a good family who has taken up this perfection of wisdom, [F.13.b] borne it in mind, read it aloud, mastered it, properly paid attention to it, and illuminated it for others, it is correct that life in the hells, the animal world, and the world of Yama will be no more, and it is correct that descent to the śrāvaka level or the pratyekabuddha level will not happen and that they will stand on the irreversible bodhisattva level. And why? Because for the son of a good family or daughter of a good family who has written out this perfection of wisdom and takes it up, bears it in mind, reads it aloud, masters it, and properly pays attention to it, as well as respects, reveres, honors, and worships it with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners, it is right that there are no hazards anywhere.
- 31.19 “To illustrate, Lord, a person fearful of rich creditors seeks safety with the ruler, and in the retinue of the ruler is actually lobbied by those he fears. They do not scare him again. And why? Lord, having sought safety in the powerful, that happens. That is why, having sought safety in the ruler, he is not scared. Similarly, Lord, the physical remains of the tathāgatas get to be worshiped because they are suffused with the perfection of wisdom. Lord, there the perfection of wisdom should be viewed as being like a ruler; the physical relics of the tathāgatas that get to be worshiped because they are suffused by the perfection of wisdom should be viewed as being like the person who has sought safety with the ruler and gets to be feted. [F.14.a] You should know that even the knowledge of all aspects is suffused by the perfection of wisdom.
- 31.20 “Because that is the case, of those two options I would want just the perfection of wisdom. And why? Because the physical remains of the tathāgatas come about from it, the thirty-two major marks of a great person come about from it, the ten tathāgata powers come about from it, the four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, and eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha come about from it, and great love and great compassion come about from it. Lord, all five perfections get the name perfection because they come about from it. The knowledge of all aspects of the tathāgatas comes about from it. [B24]

31.21 “Lord, a human or nonhuman looking for a way to cause trouble to beings in a great billionfold world system does not find a way to cause trouble to those beings who take up this perfection of wisdom, bear it in mind, read it aloud, and master it, so those beings gradually enter into complete nirvāṇa.

31.22 “Thus, Lord, this perfection of wisdom, like a jewel, serves a great purpose. The perfection of wisdom is made available for doing the work a buddha has to do for those beings standing in the great billionfold world system.<sup>430</sup> It is right, Lord, that a buddha comes into being in a world system where the perfection is being practiced. [F.14.b]

31.23 “To give an illustration, Lord, there is a large, priceless jewel. That precious jewel is endowed with good qualities such as the following: Nonhumans do not find an opportunity to cause trouble to any place the large precious jewel is placed, and if, when a man or woman is possessed by a nonhuman, the precious jewel is brought out, the moment the precious jewel is brought out the nonhuman is unable to bear the splendor of that large precious jewel and flees. If the precious jewel is attached to a body feverish with jaundice it clears up the bile disorder, the sickness does not increase, and it is cured; if the precious jewel is attached to a body wracked by chills and the flu it clears up the wind disorder; and if the precious jewel is attached to a body sick with a phlegm disorder, all the phlegm disorders are cured as well. When a son of a good family or daughter of a good family is wracked by a disorder of the three humors in combination,<sup>431</sup> if the precious jewel is attached to the body, that is cured as well. That precious jewel also illuminates the night. During the advent of the hot season, wherever the precious jewel is put it cools that place down; during the advent of the cold season, wherever the precious jewel is put it warms that place up; and wherever the precious jewel is put that place is cool but not cold, warm but not hot, and seasonably pleasant. In whatever place the precious jewel is kept no poisonous snakes and scorpions or other poisonous crawling creatures remain in that place. When the precious jewel is shown to a son of a good family or daughter of a good family bitten by a poisonous snake, the moment it is shown to them [F.15.a] the poison totally disappears. That precious jewel is endowed with good qualities such as those and so on.

31.24 “Lord, if the precious jewel is attached to the bodies of those men or women who are wracked by various sicknesses, all their sicknesses are cured. Lord, all water into which the precious jewel is introduced takes on its natural color and becomes endowed with the eight good qualities. Lord, if the precious jewel is wrapped in a blue cloth and introduced into water it turns the water blue. If the precious jewel, in other instances, is wrapped in a yellow, or red, or reddish brown, or crystal-colored cloth and introduced into water it turns the water those colors. If the precious jewel is wrapped in a cloth of a mixture of colors and introduced into water, it turns the water that mixture of colors. Lord, if the precious jewel is introduced into dirty water it makes it clean. That precious jewel is endowed with good qualities such as those, and so on.”

31.25 Then venerable Ānanda asked Śatakratu, head of the gods, “Kauśika, what do you think? Is this a precious jewel of the gods, or do the humans of Jambudvīpa have something so precious as this as well?”

31.26 “Elder Ānanda,” replied Śatakratu, “this is a precious jewel of the gods. The precious jewels of the humans of Jambudvīpa are stunted and heavy; the precious jewels of the gods are big and light. Unlike the precious jewels of the gods, the precious jewels of the humans of Jambudvīpa are not replete with good qualities, so [F.15.b] those precious jewels of the humans of Jambudvīpa do not compare with a millionth part<sup>432</sup> of a jewel of the gods; they do not stand up to any fraction, or counting, or example.”

31.27 Then Śatakratu, head of the gods, said to the Lord, “Lord, if you introduce this precious jewel into a basket, even when you have taken this precious jewel out of the basket, the basket still retains an attraction because of thinking ‘it was there, in there.’ Similarly, Lord, the physical and mental suffering and harm perpetrated by humans or nonhumans on sons of a good family or daughters of a good family do not occur in any place where this perfection of wisdom is practiced.

31.28 “There precious jewel is an expression for the perfection of wisdom and knowledge of all aspects. The good qualities of the perfection of wisdom are infinite, so it is possible to proclaim as many good qualities of the perfection of wisdom as there are?

31.29 “Similarly, these good qualities of the knowledge of all aspects—the perfection of concentration, perfection of perseverance, perfection of patience, perfection of morality, and perfection of giving; inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature; the applications of mindfulness, right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and path; up to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, the knowledge of a knower of all, the dharma-constituent, the certification of dharmas, suchness, the very limit of reality, and the inconceivable element—are the good qualities on account of which [F.16.a] the physical remains of a tathāgata who has entered complete nirvāṇa get to be worshiped.

- 31.30 “Furthermore, Lord, those physical remains were the receptacle of the knowledge of a knower of all aspects, the elimination of all residual impressions, connections, and afflictions, a constant staying in a state of equanimity, and the natural state not robbed of mindfulness. That is why they get to be worshiped.
- 31.31 “Furthermore, Lord, those physical remains were the receptacle of the jewel-like perfections. Those physical remains of a tathāgata were the receptacle of perfections that are not defiled and are not purified, perfections that are not produced and do not stop, perfections that are not appropriated and are not forsaken, and perfections that do not come and do not go. Those physical remains of a tathāgata were the receptacle of perfections that are the true nature of dharmas. Those physical remains of the Tathāgata are suffused with the true nature of dharmas. That is why those physical remains of a tathāgata get to be worshiped.
- 31.32 “Furthermore, Lord, let alone this great billionfold world system filled right to the top with the physical remains of tathāgatas, Lord, even were I to be offered as many great billionfold world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River filled right to the top with the physical remains of tathāgatas, and this perfection of wisdom written out in book form—Lord, presented with these two options I would want just this perfection of wisdom. And why? The physical remains of the tathāgatas are suffused by the perfection of wisdom. [F.16.b] It is because they come about from it that they get to be worshiped.
- 31.33 “Lord, when the wholesome roots of a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who has respected, revered, honored, and worshiped the physical remains of the tathāgatas have grown to their limit, they experience the happinesses of gods and humans, they experience the happinesses of great sāla tree-like royal families, great sāla tree-like brahmin families, and great sāla tree-like business families, and of the Cāturmahārājika gods and the Trāyastriṃśa, Yāma, Tuṣita, Nirmāṇarati, and Paranirmitavaśavartin gods. The wholesome roots bring the suffering of just those to an end. A son of a good family or daughter of a good family who has respected, revered, honored, and worshiped the perfection of wisdom, on the other hand, completes the perfection of concentration and thereby completes the perfection of perseverance; completes the perfection of perseverance and thereby completes the perfection of patience; completes the perfection of patience and thereby completes the perfection of morality; and completes the perfection of morality and thereby completes the perfection of giving. Similarly, they complete the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, up to practicing the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, and they pass beyond the śrāvaka and pratyekabuddha level and enter into the secure state of a bodhisattva. Having entered into the secure state of a bodhisattva [F.17.a] they gain the clairvoyances of a bodhisattva, pass on from buddhafield to buddhafield, assuming bodies at will, whatever bodies will bring beings to maturity. Alternatively, they assume the body of a wheel-turning emperor, or of those in great sāla tree-like royal families, great sāla tree-like brahmin families, and great sāla tree-like business families, and bring beings to maturity.

31.34 “Lord, because that is the case, it is not that I do not respect the physical remains of the tathāgatas, and it is not that I do not seek to obtain them. But still, it is on account of revering the perfection of wisdom that I revere, that I respect, that I honor, and that I worship the physical remains of the tathāgatas.

31.35 “Furthermore, Lord, those who want to see tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas standing in infinite countless world systems in the ten directions as the dharma body and as the form body<sup>433</sup> should take up this perfection of wisdom, bear it in mind, read it aloud, master it, illuminate it in detail for others, and properly pay attention to it.

31.36 “A son of a good family or daughter of a good family who wants to see the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas of the ten directions, that son of a good family or daughter of a good family, practicing the perfection of wisdom, should cultivate mindfulness of the buddhas in accordance with what the dharmas actually are.<sup>434</sup> As for what the dharmas actually are, [F.17.b] Lord, they are two. What are the two? What the dharmas actually are when the dharmas are compounded and what the dharmas actually are when the dharmas are un-compounded.

31.37 “Lord, what are the actual dharmas when the dharmas are compounded? They are the knowledge of inner emptiness, up to the knowledge of emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, knowledge of the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, knowledge of the ten tathāgata powers, knowledge of the four fearlessnesses, knowledge of the four detailed and thorough knowledges, knowledge of the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, knowledge of wholesome and unwholesome dharmas, knowledge of dharmas with outflows and without outflows, knowledge of basic immorality and what is not basic immorality, knowledge of the ordinary and extraordinary, and knowledge of defilement and purification dharmas. These are said to be what the dharmas actually are when the dharmas are compounded.

31.38 “What are the actual dharmas when the dharmas are un-compounded? They are the nonexistence of production, the nonexistence of stopping, the nonexistence of lasting, the nonexistence of lasting and changing into something else, the nonexistence of defilement, the nonexistence of purification, the nonexistence of decrease, and the nonexistence of increase in any dharma, up to the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature of all dharmas. And what is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature of all dharmas? All dharmas are the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, so this is said to be what the dharmas actually are when the dharmas are un compounded."

31.39 Then the Lord said to Śatakratu, head of the gods, "Exactly so, Kauśika, exactly so! The tathāgatas, [F.18.a] worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas who appeared in times past fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening thanks to just this perfection of wisdom; the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas who will appear in future times will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening thanks to just this perfection of wisdom; and the present tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas presently dwelling and maintaining themselves in infinite, countless world systems in the ten directions fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening thanks to just this perfection of wisdom.

31.40 "Those who were the śrāvakas of past tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas, those who will be the śrāvakas of future tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas, and those who are standing at the present time as the śrāvakas of present tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas reached, will reach, and are reaching the result of stream enterer, the result of once-returner, the result of non-returner, and the result of worthy one thanks to just this perfection of wisdom.

31.41 "Those who were pratyekabuddhas in times past, those who will be pratyekabuddhas in future times, and those presently dwelling and maintaining themselves in infinite, countless world systems in the ten directions reached, [F.18.b] will reach, and are reaching their own awakening thanks to just this perfection of wisdom.

31.42 "And why? It is because this perfection of wisdom gives detailed instruction for the three vehicles and instruction by way of no causal sign, by way of no production, by way of no stopping, by way of no defilement, by way of no purification, by way of no enactment, by way of no appropriating, by way of no forsaking, by way of not taking anything away, by way of not adding anything, by way of no grasping, and by way of no rejecting.

31.43 "Furthermore, it does it as ordinary convention, not ultimately. And why? Because the perfection of wisdom is not perfect and not imperfect. It is not over there or over here, nor has it stayed up or sunk down, nor is it the same or sometimes different, with a causal sign or without a causal sign, ordinary or extraordinary, compounded or un compounded, wholesome or unwholesome, or past, future, or present.

- 31.44 “Kauśika, the perfection of wisdom does not bestow any dharma. It does not bestow pratyekabuddha dharmas, worthy one dharmas, or the dharmas of ordinary persons.”
- 31.45 “Lord,” replied Śatakratu, “this—that is, the perfection of wisdom—is a great perfection. Lord, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom are aware of the thought activities of all beings, but they do not apprehend a being, up to they do not apprehend one who knows and one who sees. They also do not apprehend [F.19.a] form, and they do not apprehend feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness; they do not apprehend the eyes, they do not apprehend a form, they do not apprehend eye consciousness, they do not apprehend eye contact, and they do not apprehend any pleasurable, or suffering, or neither pleasurable nor suffering feeling that arises from the condition of contact with the eyes. Similarly, they do not apprehend the ears ... the nose ... the tongue ... the body ... or the thinking mind, they do not apprehend thinking-mind consciousness, they do not apprehend thinking-mind contact, and they do not apprehend any pleasurable feeling or suffering feeling, or neither pleasurable nor suffering feeling that arises from the condition of contact with the thinking mind. They do not apprehend the applications of mindfulness; they do not apprehend the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, or path; and they do not apprehend the four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, or eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha. They do not apprehend bodhi, buddha, or buddhadharmas.
- 31.46 “And why? Because the perfection of wisdom is not made available in a way that anything can be apprehended. And why? Because what apprehends and what is apprehended have no intrinsic nature.”
- 31.47 “Exactly so, Kauśika, exactly so!” said the Lord. “Kauśika, given that bodhisattva great beings thus practicing the perfection of wisdom by way of not apprehending anything do not apprehend even awakening, what need is there to mention that they do not apprehend a bodhisattva, [F.19.b] and they do not apprehend the dharmas of bodhisattvas.”
- 31.48 Śatakratu then asked, “Lord, why is it that bodhisattva great beings practice only the perfection of wisdom and do not practice the other perfections?”
- 31.49 “Kauśika,” replied the Lord, “bodhisattvas do not practice only the perfection of wisdom; they practice all the perfections, and practice, moreover, by way of not apprehending anything. They do not apprehend a gift, do not apprehend a giver, and do not apprehend a recipient; they do not apprehend morality, do not apprehend being moral, and do not apprehend immorality; they do not apprehend patience, do not apprehend an object of patience, and do not apprehend having patience; they do not apprehend perseverance, do not apprehend something that has to be done, and do not apprehend body and mind; they do not apprehend thought, do not apprehend meditative stabilization, and do not apprehend absorption; and they do not apprehend wisdom, do not apprehend an object of wisdom, and do not apprehend being wise.

31.50 “Kauśika, bodhisattva great beings giving gifts are led by the perfection of wisdom by way of not apprehending all dharmas. The protection of morality, cultivation of patience, exertion at perseverance, and absorption in concentration are preceded by the perfection of wisdom. The investigation of the dharmas of bodhisattvas is preceded by the perfection of wisdom. Connect this in the same way with the investigation of the aggregates, constituents, and sense fields is preceded by the perfection of wisdom by way of not apprehending all dharmas. Connect this with the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening by way of not apprehending all dharmas. Connect this with [F.20.a] the powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, and eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha by way of not apprehending all dharmas. Connect this with the rest, up to the knowledge of all aspects by way of not apprehending all dharmas.

31.51 “Kauśika, the trees in Jambudvīpa have different leaves and bear different fruit, but when it comes to the shadows of those trees, as many as there are, apart from again and again counting it a ‘shadow,’ there is no distinction or differentiation. Similarly, Kauśika, there is no distinction or differentiation among the five perfections informed by the perfection of wisdom and dedicated to the knowledge of all aspects by way of not apprehending anything.”

31.52 Śatakratu then said, “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is endowed with great compassion; this perfection of wisdom brings all good qualities to completion, is endowed with infinite good qualities, is endowed with boundless good qualities, and is endowed with unlimited good qualities.

31.53 “Lord, if a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who has written out this perfection of wisdom and bears it in mind and respects, reveres, honors, and worships it with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners properly pays attention to it as it has been expounded, and if a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who has written out this perfection of wisdom bestows it on others, which of the two creates more merit?”

31.54 The Lord replied, “So, Kauśika, here I will pose a counterquestion right to you. You should answer [F.20.b] to the extent you can. Who do you think, Kauśika, creates more merit—a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who respects, reveres, honors, and worships the physical remains of the Tathāgata with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, clothes, parasols, flags, and banners, or another son of a good family or daughter of a good family who shares them and bestows just a sesame seed measure of the physical remains of the Tathāgata on others, so that a son of a good family or daughter of a good family then respects, reveres, honors, and worships those physical remains of the Tathāgata just a sesame seed in size with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, clothes, parasols, flags, and banners?”

31.55 “The way I understand the meaning of what you, Lord, have said,” answered Śatakratu, “is that the son of a good family or daughter of a good family who bestows them on others creates even more merit than those who just personally respect, revere, honor, and worship the physical remains of the Tathāgata with flowers and so on. The Tathāgata, seeing the force of that reality, feeling great compassion for those who, among the mass of beings, can be trained by the physical remains of a tathāgata, becomes absorbed in vajra-like meditative equipoise, shatters the vajra-like body, and imbues the physical remains of the Tathāgata with a special power. Lord, the end of the wholesome root planted by those who worship even just a sesame seed measure of the physical remains of the Tathāgata when the Tathāgata has passed into complete nirvāṇa cannot be known until they all have passed into complete nirvāṇa.” [F.21.a]

31.56 “Exactly so, Kauśika, exactly so!” said the Lord. “A son of a good family or daughter of a good family who has written out this perfection of wisdom and bestowed it on others creates even more merit than that son of a good family or daughter of a good family who respects, reveres, honors, and worships it with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners.

31.57 “Furthermore, Kauśika, a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who goes to others and explicates, teaches, explains, gives a commentary on, and makes clear this perfection of wisdom creates even more merit than that earlier one—so they are rightfully the teacher or the learned fellow spiritual practitioner occupying the position of guru. And why? Here the teacher is not one thing and the perfection of wisdom another. Just the perfection of wisdom is the teacher and just the teacher is the perfection of wisdom, so just the perfection of wisdom should be seen as the teacher. And why? It is because past, future, and present tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas have appeared because they have trained in this perfection of wisdom, and any learned fellow spiritual practitioners, or bodhisattvas standing in the irreversible state, have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening because they have trained in just this perfection of wisdom. Having trained in just this perfection of wisdom, those in the Śrāvaka [F.21.b] Vehicle have reached the state of a worthy one, those in the Pratyekabuddha Vehicle have reached their own awakening, and bodhisattvas have entered into, enter into, and will enter into the secure state of a bodhisattva. Therefore, Kauśika, a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who wants to directly witness tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas and wants to respect, revere, honor, and worship them with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, clothes, parasols, flags, and banners should write out just this perfection of wisdom in book form and respect, revere, honor, and worship it with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, clothes, parasols, flags, and banners.

31.58 “When I fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening and, seeing the force of this reality, thought, ‘What should I rely on and stay by, whom should I respect, revere, honor, and worship?’ Kauśika, I then saw among the creatures in this world with its celestial beings, Māras, śramaṇas, and brahmins none comparable to myself, and having considered the fact that there are none comparable to myself I again thought, ‘Well then, since this is the case, I should respect, revere, honor, and worship the Dharma to which<sup>435</sup> I fully awakened, and I should rely on and stay by just that Dharma.’ And what is that Dharma, Kauśika? It is just this perfection of wisdom. It is just this perfection of wisdom that I myself, Kauśika, also respect, revere, honor, and worship, that I have respected, revered, honored, and worshiped, and that I rely on and stay by. [F.22.a]

31.59 “So, Kauśika, a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who wants to fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening also should respect this perfection of wisdom; should revere, should honor, and should worship it with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, clothes, parasols, flags, and banners; and should rely on it and stay by it, not to mention that those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who have entered into the Śrāvaka Vehicle or who have entered into the Pratyekabuddha Vehicle should respect this perfection of wisdom; should revere, should honor, and should worship it with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, clothes, parasols, flags, and banners; and should rely on it and stay by it too. And why? Because bodhisattvas have come about from the perfection of wisdom; tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas have come about from bodhisattvas; and śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas have come about from tathāgatas.

31.60 Therefore, Kauśika, sons of a good family or daughters of a good family in the Great Vehicle, in the Śrāvaka Vehicle, and in the Pratyekabuddha Vehicle should respect this perfection of wisdom that sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who have fully awakened, will fully awaken, and are awakening to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening have trained in, and they should revere, should honor, and should worship it with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, clothes, parasols, flags, and banners.”

CHAPTER 32: THE SUPERIORITY OF MERIT

- 32.1 “Kauśika, [F.22.b] there is infinitely great merit from establishing one being in the result of stream enterer, but not so much from establishing the beings in Jambudvīpa in the ten wholesome actions. And why? Kauśika, those who have been established in the ten wholesome actions have not totally got out from the forms of life in the hells, in the animal realms, in the worlds of Yama, or as asuras. A being established in the result of stream enterer is freed from all the terrible forms of life. Similarly, there is infinitely great merit from establishing one being in a pratyekabuddha’s awakening, but not so much from establishing the beings in Jambudvīpa in the ten wholesome actions. Kauśika, a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who establishes one being in unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening creates infinitely greater merit than that. And why? Because it is established specifically so the way of buddhas is not brought to an end.
- 32.2 “Kauśika, to establish a son of a good family or daughter of a good family in unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening creates a lot of merit. And why? Because the Three Jewels have come about from a bodhisattva, and the Three Jewels are for the whole world to worship. Therefore, Kauśika, the creatures in this whole world with its celestial beings, Māras, śramaṇas, and brahmins should respect, revere, honor, and worship this bodhisattva with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, clothes, parasols, flags, and banners.
- 32.3 “Furthermore, Kauśika, were a son of a good family or daughter of a good family to establish [F.23.a] the beings in Jambudvīpa in the ten wholesome actions, what do you think, Kauśika? Based on that, would that son of a good family or daughter of a good family create a lot of merit?”
“A lot, Lord; a lot, Sugata,” replied Śatakratu.
- 32.4 “So then, Kauśika,” the Lord continued, “a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who has written out this perfection of wisdom in book form and bestowed it on others for nothing but copying out and reading aloud creates even more merit than that. And why? Because in this perfection of wisdom are taught in detail those dharmas without outflows that a son of a good family or daughter of a good family has trained in when they have entered into, enter into, and will enter into the flawlessness that is a perfect state, up to when they have reached, will reach, and are reaching the state of a worthy one, and when they have entered into the secure state of a bodhisattva great being, and when they have fully awakened, awaken, and will awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

32.5 “And what are those dharmas without outflows, Kauśika? They are these: the perfections, the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, the four noble truths, inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, the ten tathāgata powers, up to the immeasurable buddhadharmas that tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas have taught in detail in this perfection of wisdom.

32.6 “Therefore, Kauśika, you should also understand from this one of many explanations that those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who write out this perfection of wisdom in book form and bestow it on others for nothing but copying out and reading aloud [F.23.b] create a lot more merit.

32.7 “And why? Because in this perfection of wisdom are taught in detail all those dharmas, dharmas on account of which there are great sāla tree–like royal families, great sāla tree–like brahmin families, and great sāla tree–like business families; there are the Cāturmahārājika gods and there are the Trāyastriṃśa, up to the Naivasamjñānāsamjñāyatana gods; there are the perfections, up to there are the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, up to there is the knowledge of all aspects; and there are stream enterers, once-returners, non-returners, worthy ones, and pratyekabuddhas.

32.8 “Kauśika, let alone having established beings in Jambudvīpa in ... up to a pratyekabuddha’s awakening, were some son of a good family or daughter of a good family, Kauśika, to establish as many beings as there are in this four-continent world system, all of them, in the ten wholesome actions, what do you think, Kauśika? Based on that, would that son of a good family or daughter of a good family create a lot of merit?”

“A lot, Lord; a lot, Sugata,” replied Śatakratu.

32.9 “So then, Kauśika,” said the Lord, “a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who has written out this perfection of wisdom in book form and bestowed it on others for nothing but copying out and reading aloud creates a lot more merit. And why? Because all the dharmas of śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas, the dharmas of bodhisattvas, and the buddhadharmas have come about from the perfection of wisdom.

- 32.10      Connect this in the same way with Kauśika, let alone having established beings that are in this four-continent world system in the ten wholesome actions, [F.24.a] up to in the state of a worthy one and a pratyekabuddha's awakening, were some son of a good family or daughter of a good family, Kauśika, to establish beings that are in a thousandfold world system, all of them, in the ten wholesome actions, up to in the state of a worthy one and a pratyekabuddha's awakening, still a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who has written out this perfection of wisdom in book form and bestowed it on others for nothing but copying out and reading aloud creates even more merit than that.
- 32.11      Connect this in the same way with Kauśika, let alone having established beings that are in a thousandfold world system, even were some son of a good family or daughter of a good family, Kauśika, to establish beings that are in a millionfold world system, all of them, in the ten wholesome actions, up to in the state of a worthy one and a pratyekabuddha's awakening, still a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who has written out this perfection of wisdom in book form and bestowed it on others for nothing but copying out and reading aloud creates even more merit than that.
- 32.12      Connect this in the same way with Kauśika, let alone having established beings that are in a millionfold world system in the ten wholesome actions, up to in a pratyekabuddha's awakening, even were some son of a good family or daughter of a good family, Kauśika, to establish beings dwelling in the great billionfold world system, as many as there are, in the ten wholesome actions, up to a pratyekabuddha's awakening, still, if a son of a good family or daughter of a good family has written out this perfection of wisdom in book form and bestowed it on others for nothing but copying out and reading aloud, that son of a good family or daughter of a good family creates even more merit than that.
- 32.13      Connect this in the same way with Kauśika, let alone the beings that are in the great billionfold world system, [F.24.b] even were some son of a good family or daughter of a good family, Kauśika, to have established as many beings dwelling in as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River, all of them, in the ten wholesome actions, up to established them in the state of a worthy one and a pratyekabuddha's awakening, still, if a son of a good family or daughter of a good family has written out this perfection of wisdom in book form and bestowed it on others for nothing but copying out and reading aloud, Kauśika, that son of a good family or daughter of a good family creates even more merit than that.
- 32.14      “Furthermore, Kauśika, if a son of a good family or daughter of a good family has established those beings who are in Jambudvīpa in the four concentrations, and has established them in the four immeasurables, the four formless absorptions, and the five clairvoyances, what do you think, Kauśika? Based on that, would that son of a good family or daughter of a good family create a lot of merit?"

"A lot, Lord; a lot, Sugata," replied Śatakratu.

32.15 "So then, Kauśika," said the Lord, "a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who has written out this perfection of wisdom in book form and bestowed it on others for nothing but copying out and reading aloud creates even more merit than that. And why? Because in this perfection of wisdom all dharmas are taught in detail.

32.16 "Furthermore, Kauśika, a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who takes up, bears in mind, reads aloud, masters, and properly pays attention to this perfection of wisdom creates a lot more merit, but there is not so much from a son of a good family or daughter of a good family establishing the beings in Jambudvīpa in the ten wholesome actions, the concentrations, the immeasurables, the formless absorptions, and [F.25.a] the clairvoyances.

32.17 "There, properly paying attention is this: taking up, bearing in mind, reading aloud, mastering, and properly paying attention to this perfection of wisdom with an understanding that operates without duality; taking up, bearing in mind, reading aloud, mastering, and properly paying attention to the perfection of concentration, perfection of perseverance, perfection of patience, perfection of morality, and perfection of giving with an understanding that operates without duality; properly paying attention to inner emptiness with an understanding that operates without duality, up to properly paying attention to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature with an understanding that operates without duality; properly paying attention to the applications of mindfulness, right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and paths with an understanding that operates without duality; up to properly paying attention to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha and knowledge of all aspects with an understanding that operates without duality.

32.18 "Furthermore, Kauśika, some son of a good family or daughter of a good family may teach the perfection of wisdom to others in detail, explicate it, sort it out for them and give a commentary on it, or make it clear and give instruction in its meaning with this one of many explanations. There the meaning of the perfection of wisdom is this: not viewing the perfection of wisdom as two and not viewing it as not two, not viewing it as a causal sign or as not a causal sign, and not viewing it as brought in or as sent out, as taken away or as added on, as defilement or as purification, as a production or as a cessation, as grasped or as rejected, as stationed or as not stationed, [F.25.b] as true or as mistaken, as right or as wrong, as tiny or as not tiny, as a part or as not a part, as a dharma or as not a dharma, as suchness or as not suchness, or as the very limit of reality or as not the very limit of reality—this is the meaning of nondual. That son of a good family or daughter of a good family who teaches the perfection of wisdom to others in detail, explicates it, sorts it out for them and gives a commentary on it, and makes it clear and gives instruction in its meaning creates a lot of merit based on that, but not so much someone who just personally takes it up, bears it in mind, reads it aloud, masters it, and properly pays attention to it.

32.19 “Furthermore, Kauśika, a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who teaches the perfection of wisdom to others in detail, gives advice about it, establishes it, sorts it out, makes it clear, and gives instruction in its meaning creates a lot more merit than someone who personally takes up, bears in mind, reads aloud, masters, and properly pays attention to this perfection of wisdom.”

“Exactly so, Lord; exactly so, Sugata,” said Śatakratu.

32.20 “Thus, Kauśika,” continued the Lord, “a son of a good family or daughter of a good family should give instructions in the perfection of wisdom, in both the meaning and the letter. If a son of a good family or daughter of a good family gives such instructions they will be endowed with infinite, countless, immeasurable masses of merit.

32.21 “Even if a son of a good family or daughter of a good family respects, reveres, honors, and worships with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners, with all the requirements for happiness, infinite, countless tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas in each of the ten directions [F.26.a] for as long as they live, Kauśika, a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who teaches the perfection of wisdom to others in detail with many different explanations, who makes it intelligible, sorts it out, gives a commentary on it, and makes it clear will create a lot more merit than that. And why? Because past, future, and present tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas have fully awakened, will fully awaken, and are fully awakening to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening because they have trained in this perfection of wisdom.

32.22 “Furthermore, Kauśika, compared with a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who practices the perfection of giving for infinite, incalculable eons by way of apprehending something, a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who teaches and explains the perfection of wisdom in detail, up to worships it,<sup>436</sup> if it is done without apprehending anything, creates a lot more merit than that.

32.23 “Kauśika, there, what is it to apprehend something? If bodhisattvas who give a gift by way of apprehending something think, ‘I am giving a gift; this is a gift; it has been given to somebody else,’ they stand right in giving, and that is not the perfection of giving. If they think, ‘This is morality; I am being moral; I am guarding it for the sake of these beings,’ that is not the perfection of morality. If they think, ‘I am patient; this is patience; [F.26.b] I should be patient with others,’ that is not the perfection of patience. If they think, ‘I am making a vigorous effort; this is perseverance; I will continue persevering for their sake,’ that is not the perfection of perseverance. If they think, ‘I am becoming absorbed in concentration; this is concentration; I have become absorbed for their sake,’ that is not the perfection of concentration. If they think, ‘I am cultivating wisdom, this is wisdom, I will stay wise for their sake,’ that is not the perfection of wisdom. Kauśika, a son of a good family or daughter of a good family’s perfection of giving by way of apprehending something like that is not complete, and the perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and perfection of wisdom is not complete either.” [B25]

32.24 Śatakratu then asked, “Lord, what are bodhisattva great beings doing when the practice of the perfection of giving is complete, and when the perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and perfection of wisdom are complete?”

32.25 “Kauśika,” said the Lord, “here when bodhisattva great beings give a gift by way of not apprehending a gift, giver, or recipient that is their perfection of giving; when not apprehending morality, being moral, [F.27.a] or a being that is their perfection of morality; when not apprehending patience, an object of patience, or having patience that is their perfection of patience; when not apprehending perseverance, something that has to be done, or a being that is their perfection of perseverance; when not apprehending concentration, somebody concentrating, or something that has to be concentrated on that is their perfection of concentration; and when not apprehending wisdom, being wise, or a topic to be wise about that is their perfection of wisdom. Kauśika, when bodhisattva great beings practice like that the perfection of giving becomes complete, and the perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and perfection of wisdom become complete.”

32.26 “Kauśika, those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family should give instructions in both the meaning and the letter of the perfection of wisdom like that, and they should give such instructions in the perfection of concentration, perfection of perseverance, perfection of patience, perfection of morality, and perfection of giving as well.

- 32.27 “And why? Because at a time in the future, Kauśika, there will be sons of a good family and daughters of a good family who will teach a counterfeit perfection of wisdom. There, having caused sons of a good family and daughters of a good family who have set out for unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening to listen to the counterfeit perfection of wisdom they will destroy them, because of not giving instructions in both the meaning and the letter of this perfection of wisdom.” [F.27.b]
- 32.28 “Lord, what is a counterfeit perfection of wisdom?” asked Śatakratu.
“Kauśika,” replied the Lord, “here, in regard to a counterfeit perfection of wisdom, sons of a good family and daughters of a good family teach something like it. A counterfeit perfection of wisdom is this:<sup>437</sup> They teach ‘form is impermanent’ and that those who make such a practice are practicing the perfection of wisdom. Further, those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family who have been taught that explore whether ‘form is impermanent,’ and they explore whether ‘feeling...,’ ‘perception...,’ ‘volitional factors...,’ and ‘consciousness is impermanent.’
- 32.29 “And those who teach that counterfeit perfection of wisdom also practice a counterfeit perfection of wisdom. They teach ‘the eyes are impermanent,’ and they teach ‘the ears...,’ ‘the nose...,’ ‘the tongue...,’ ‘the body...,’ and ‘the thinking mind is impermanent.’ They teach ‘a form is impermanent,’ and they teach ‘a sound...,’ ‘a smell...,’ ‘a taste...,’ ‘a feeling...,’ and ‘dharmas are impermanent.’ They teach ‘the earth element is impermanent,’ and they teach ‘the water element...,’ ‘the fire element...,’ ‘the wind element...,’ ‘the space element...,’ and ‘the consciousness element is impermanent.’ They teach ‘the eye constituent is impermanent,’ and they teach ‘the ear constituent...,’ ‘the nose constituent...,’ ‘the taste constituent...,’ ‘the body constituent...,’ and ‘the thinking-mind constituent is impermanent.’ They teach ‘the form constituent is impermanent,’ and they teach ‘the sound constituent...,’ ‘the smell constituent...,’ ‘the taste constituent...,’ ‘the touch constituent...,’ and ‘the dharma constituent is impermanent.’ They teach ‘the eye consciousness constituent is impermanent,’ and they teach ‘the ear...,’ ‘the nose...,’ ‘the tongue...,’ ‘the body...’ and ‘the thinking-mind consciousness constituent is impermanent.’ They teach ‘eye contact is impermanent,’ and they teach ‘ear...,’ ‘nose...,’ ‘tongue...,’ ‘body...,’ [F.28.a] and ‘thinking-mind contact is impermanent.’
- 32.30 “They teach ‘form is suffering,’ ‘is selfless,’ and ‘is unpleasant,’ and they teach ‘feeling...,’ ‘perception...,’ ‘volitional factors...,’ and ‘consciousness is suffering,’ ‘is selfless,’ and ‘is unpleasant.’
- 32.31 Similarly, they teach ‘the eye, form, and eye consciousness constituents are suffering, selfless, and unpleasant,’ and they teach ‘the ear, nose, tongue, body, thinking mind, dharma, and thinking-mind constituents are suffering,

- selfless, and unpleasant.’
- 32.32 Similarly, connect this with they teach a counterfeit perfection of concentration, and they teach a counterfeit perfection of perseverance, perfection of patience, perfection of morality, and perfection of giving. They teach ‘form is impermanent, suffering, selfless, and unpleasant,’ and they teach ‘feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are impermanent, suffering, selfless, and unpleasant.’
- 32.33 Similarly, they teach ‘the eye, form, and eye consciousness constituents are impermanent, suffering, selfless, and unpleasant.’
- 32.34 Similarly, they teach ‘the ear..., nose..., tongue..., body..., and thinking mind, dharma, and thinking-mind constituents are impermanent, suffering, selfless, and unpleasant.’
- 32.35 Similarly, they teach ‘the perfection of giving, perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and perfection of wisdom are impermanent, suffering, selfless, and unpleasant.’ [F.28.b] Similarly, they teach ‘the immeasurables and formless absorptions are impermanent, suffering, selfless, and unpleasant.’ They teach ‘the applications of mindfulness are impermanent, suffering, selfless, and unpleasant.’ They teach ‘the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and path are impermanent, suffering, selfless, and unpleasant,’ up to they teach ‘the knowledge of all aspects is impermanent, suffering, selfless, and unpleasant.’
- 32.36 “They say those who practice like that are practicing the perfection of wisdom. Kauśika, this is a counterfeit perfection of wisdom.
- 32.37 “Furthermore, Kauśika, those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family who teach the perfection of wisdom teach, ‘Sons of a good family and daughters of a good family, you should cultivate the perfection of wisdom. When you have cultivated the perfection of wisdom you will stand on the first level,’ up to ‘the tenth level.’
- 32.38 Similarly, they teach, ‘When you have cultivated the perfection of concentration, perfection of perseverance, perfection of patience, perfection of morality, and perfection of giving you will stand on the first level,’ up to ‘you will stand on the tenth level.’
- 32.39 “Still they cultivate that as the perfection of wisdom by way of a causal sign, by way of apprehending something, with a notion of time. Kauśika, this is a counterfeit perfection of wisdom.
- 32.40 “Furthermore, Kauśika, those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family teach, ‘Come here, you son of a good family! You should cultivate the perfection of wisdom. When you have cultivated the perfection of wisdom [F.29.a] you will transcend the śrāvaka level and you will transcend the pratyekabuddha level.’ Kauśika, this is a counterfeit perfection of wisdom.

32.41 “Furthermore, Kauśika, when those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family teach those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family in the Bodhisattva Vehicle, they teach them, ‘Come here, you son of a good family! You should cultivate the perfection of wisdom. When you have cultivated the perfection of wisdom you will enter into the secure state of a bodhisattva.’ Kauśika, this is a counterfeit perfection of wisdom.

32.42 “Furthermore, Kauśika, when those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family teach those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family in the Great Vehicle, they teach them, ‘Come here, you son of a good family! You should cultivate the perfection of wisdom. When you have cultivated the perfection of wisdom you will gain forbearance for the nonproduction of dharmas. When you have gained forbearance for the nonproduction of dharmas, you will stand in the clairvoyance of a bodhisattva. When you stand in the clairvoyance of a bodhisattva, you will pass on from buddhafiield to buddhafiield in order to respect, revere, honor, worship, and venerate the lord buddhas.’ In that way those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family, Kauśika, teach a counterfeit perfection of wisdom.

32.43 “Furthermore, Kauśika, when those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family teach those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family in the Great Vehicle, ‘A son of a good family who takes up, bears in mind, reads aloud, masters, and properly pays attention to this perfection of wisdom becomes endowed with a countless, infinite, immeasurable [F.29.b] mass of merit,’ Kauśika, those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family teach a counterfeit perfection of wisdom.

32.44 “Furthermore, Kauśika, when those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family teach those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family in the Great Vehicle, ‘Come here, you son of a good family! Having rejoiced in the entire wholesome root, all of it, of past, future, and present tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas from their first production of the thought of awakening up to fully awakening to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening and compressed it into one, you should dedicate it to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening,’ Kauśika, those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family teach a counterfeit perfection of wisdom.”

32.45 Śatakratu then asked, “Lord, when they do not teach a counterfeit perfection of wisdom to those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who have set out in the Great Vehicle, what do those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family teach?"

32.46 "Kauśika," replied the Lord, "here, those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family do not teach a counterfeit perfection of wisdom to those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who have set out in the Great Vehicle when they teach thus: 'Come here, you son of a good family! When you cultivate the perfection of wisdom, do not even look at form as impermanent. And why? Because form is empty of the intrinsic nature of form. That intrinsic nature of form is nonexistent, and that which is nonexistent is the perfection of wisdom. So, in that perfection of wisdom you cannot say "form is permanent" or "form is impermanent." [F.30.a] And why? Because form does not exist there, and given that, how could you ever view it as either permanent or impermanent?'

32.47 Similarly, Kauśika, those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family do not teach a counterfeit perfection of wisdom when they teach, 'Do not even look at feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... or consciousness as impermanent. And why? Because consciousness is empty of the intrinsic nature of consciousness. That intrinsic nature of consciousness is nonexistent, and that which is nonexistent is the perfection of wisdom. So, in that perfection of wisdom you cannot say "consciousness is permanent" or "consciousness is impermanent." And why? Because consciousness does not exist there, and given that, how could you ever view it as either permanent or impermanent?'

32.48 "Furthermore, Kauśika, sons of a good family or daughters of a good family cultivating the perfection of wisdom do not teach a counterfeit perfection of wisdom when they teach, 'Come here, you son of a good family! When you cultivate the perfection of wisdom, son of a good family, you should not look at any dharma at all. You should not stand on any dharma at all. And why? Because in the perfection of wisdom there is no dharma you have to go beyond and there is no dharma you have to stand on. And why? Because all dharmas are empty of an intrinsic nature. That dharma empty of an intrinsic nature is nonexistent, and that which is nonexistent is the perfection of wisdom. So, in that perfection of wisdom no dharma has been brought in or sent out, [F.30.b] no dharma arises or ceases.'

32.49 Similarly, connect this with the aggregates, the constituents, the sense fields, dependent origination, all the perfections, the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, all the emptinesses, the powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha as well.

32.50 "Kauśika, those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family do not teach a counterfeit perfection of wisdom when they teach, 'Son of a good family, you thus should not even look at the knowledge of all aspects as impermanent. And why? Because the knowledge of all aspects is empty of the intrinsic nature of the knowledge of all aspects. That intrinsic nature of the knowledge of all aspects is nonexistent, and that which is nonexistent is the perfection of wisdom. So, in that perfection of wisdom you cannot say “the knowledge of all aspects is permanent” or “the knowledge of all aspects is impermanent.” And why? Because the knowledge of all aspects does not exist there, and given that, how could you ever view it as either permanent or impermanent?’

32.51 “Therefore, Kauśika, a son of a good family or daughter of a good family should teach the meaning of the perfection of wisdom like that. When a son of a good family or daughter of a good family teaches like that, they create a lot more merit.

32.52 “Furthermore, Kauśika, were some son of a good family or daughter of a good family to establish the beings in Jambudvīpa, as many as there are, in the result of stream enterer, what do you think, Kauśika? Based on that, would that son of a good family or daughter of a good family create a lot of merit?”

“A lot, Lord; a lot, Sugata,” replied Śatakratu. [F.31.a]

32.53 “So then, Kauśika,” the Lord continued, “when a son of a good family or daughter of a good family gives a discourse to others and explains, reveals, makes clear, and illuminates both the meaning and the letter of the perfection of wisdom with many explanations, saying, ‘Come here, you son of a good family! Take up, bear in mind, read aloud, master, and properly pay attention to this perfection of wisdom, and focus in your practice on this perfection of wisdom as it has been expounded,’ they create a lot more merit. And why? Kauśika, it is because a stream enterer and the result of stream enterer have come about from this perfection of wisdom.

32.54 “Kauśika, let alone having led the beings in Jambudvīpa to the result of stream enterer, and let alone having led all the beings in a thousandfold world<sup>438</sup> system to the result of stream enterer, and let alone having led all the beings in a millionfold world system to the result of stream enterer, and let alone having led all the beings in the great billionfold world system to the result of stream enterer, Kauśika, were some son of a good family or daughter of a good family to have established in the result of stream enterer as many beings standing in as many world systems in the eastern direction as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River, and similarly, were some son of a good family or daughter of a good family to have established in the result of stream enterer as many beings standing in as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River in the southern, western, and northern directions, the intermediate directions, below and above, what do you think? Based on that, would that son of a good family or daughter of a good family create a lot of merit?"

"A lot, [F.31.b] Lord; a lot, Sugata," replied Śatakratu.

32.55 "So then, Kauśika," the Lord continued, "when a son of a good family or daughter of a good family teaches both the meaning and the letter of the perfection of wisdom to others in detail and explains, illuminates, reveals, gives a commentary on, and makes them clear, saying, 'Come here, you son of a good family! Take up, bear in mind, read aloud, master, and properly pay attention to this perfection of wisdom, and focus in your practice on this perfection of wisdom as it has been expounded,' they create a lot more merit. And why? Kauśika, it is because a stream enterer has come about from this perfection of wisdom.

32.56 "Furthermore, Kauśika, were some son of a good family or daughter of a good family to establish all the beings in Jambudvīpa, as many as there are, in the result of once-returner, were to establish them in the result of non-returner, up to the state of a worthy one, what do you think, Kauśika? Based on that, would that son of a good family or daughter of a good family create a lot of merit?"

32.57 "So then, Kauśika," the Lord continued, "a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who explains in detail to others, up to illuminates both the meaning and the letter of the perfection of wisdom with many explanations, saying, 'Come here, you son of a good family! Take up, bear in mind, read aloud, master, and properly pay attention to this perfection of wisdom, and focus in your practice on this perfection of wisdom as it has been expounded,' they create a lot more merit. And why? Kauśika, it is because ... up to the state of a worthy one has come about from [F.32.a] this perfection of wisdom.

32.58 "Kauśika, let alone having led the beings in Jambudvīpa to ... up to the state of a worthy one, were some son of a good family or daughter of a good family to have established all the beings in the four continents in ... up to the state of a worthy one, to have established the beings in a thousandfold world system, the beings in a millionfold world system, the beings in a great billionfold world system in ... up to the state of a worthy one, Kauśika, or were they even to have established as many beings standing in as many world systems in the eastern direction as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River, all of them, in ... up to the state of a worthy one, what do you think? Based on that, would that son of a good family or daughter of a good family create a lot of merit?"

"A lot, Lord; a lot, Sugata," replied Śatakratu.

- 32.59 “So then, Kauśika,” the Lord continued, “a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who illuminates and explains this perfection of wisdom to others, saying, ‘Come here, you son of a good family! Take up, up to master this perfection of wisdom, focus in your practice on this perfection of wisdom as it has been expounded,’ they create a lot more merit. And why? Kauśika, it is because once-returners, non-returners, and worthy ones have come about from this perfection of wisdom.
- 32.60 “Furthermore, Kauśika, were some son of a good family or daughter of a good family to establish all the beings, as many as there are, standing in as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River in each of the ten directions, in the state of a pratyekabuddha, what do you think, Kauśika? Based on that, would that son of a good family or daughter of a good family create a lot of merit?” [F.32.b]
- “A lot, Lord; a lot, Sugata,” replied Śatakratu.
- 32.61 “So then, Kauśika,” the Lord continued, “a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who teaches, up to illuminates both the meaning and the words to those who want this perfection of wisdom, saying, ‘Come here, you son of a good family! Take up this perfection of wisdom. Master it. Focus in your practice on this perfection of wisdom as it has been expounded,’ they create a lot more merit. And why? Kauśika, it is because a pratyekabuddha has come about from this perfection of wisdom.
- 32.62 “Furthermore, Kauśika, compared with some son of a good family or daughter of a good family who has established the beings in Jambudvīpa in unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening,<sup>439</sup> a son of a good family or daughter of a good family creates a lot more merit when explaining in detail, up to illuminating both the meaning and the words to those who want this perfection of wisdom, saying, ‘To the extent that you, son of a good family, train in this perfection of wisdom, to that extent you will gain the dharmas of the knowledge of all aspects; to the extent you gain the dharmas of the knowledge of all aspects, to that extent your vast cultivation of the perfection of wisdom will become completed; to the extent your vast cultivation of the perfection of wisdom becomes completed, to that extent you will be closer and closer to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening’; connect this in the same way with each, up to ‘you will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.’ And why? Kauśika, it is because bodhisattvas who have produced the first thought of awakening have come about from this perfection of wisdom, and as many bodhisattvas as there are, all of them, standing in as many world systems in each direction of the ten directions as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River have come about from it [F.33.a] and have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

32.63 “Furthermore, Kauśika, were some son of a good family or daughter of a good family to establish all the beings, as many as there are, standing in as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River in each direction of the ten directions, in the irreversible state, what do you think, Kauśika? Based on that, would that son of a good family or daughter of a good family create a lot of merit?”

32.64 “So then, Kauśika,” the Lord continued, “a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who explains, up to illuminates both the meaning and the words of this perfection of wisdom to others, saying, ‘Come here, you son of a good family! Take up, up to focus in your practice on this perfection of wisdom as it has been expounded. To the extent that you, son of a good family, focus in your practice on this perfection of wisdom as it has been expounded, to that extent you will gain the dharmas of the knowledge of all aspects’; connect this in the same way with each, up to ‘you will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening,’ they, Kauśika, will create a lot more merit. And why? Kauśika, it is because irreversible bodhisattvas have come about from this perfection of wisdom.

32.65 “Furthermore, Kauśika, compared with all the beings in Jambudvīpa, as many as there are, having set out for unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, a son of a good family or daughter of a good family, Kauśika, creates a lot more merit when explaining, up to illuminating both the meaning and the words of this perfection of wisdom for them, saying, [F.33.b] ‘Come here, you son of a good family! Take up this perfection of wisdom, up to focus in your practice on this perfection of wisdom as it has been expounded. To the extent that you, son of a good family, focus in your practice on this perfection of wisdom as it has been expounded, to that extent you will have trained in this perfection of wisdom and will stand in the irreversible state and gradually fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.’

32.66 “Furthermore, Kauśika, compared with some son of a good family or daughter of a good family who has established the beings standing in the four continents; or the beings standing in a thousandfold world system, in a millionfold world system, or in the great billionfold world system; or the beings, as many as there are, in as many world systems in each of the ten directions as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River, all of them, in unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, a son of a good family or daughter of a good family creates a lot more merit when explaining and illuminating both the meaning and the words of the perfection of wisdom for those beings, saying, ‘Come here, you son of a good family! Take up this perfection of wisdom, up to focus in your practice on this perfection of wisdom as it has been expounded. By focusing on it you will stand in the irreversible state and gradually fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.'

32.67 "Furthermore, Kauśika, compared with some son of a good family or daughter of a good family who establishes all the beings, as many as there are, in Jambudvīpa in the state irreversible from unsurpassed, perfect, [F.34.a] complete awakening and explains, up to illuminates both the meaning and the words of this perfection of wisdom to them, some son of a good family or daughter of a good family creates a lot more merit from teaching both the meaning and the words of this perfection of wisdom to a single one among them who says, 'I want quickly to awaken fully to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.'

32.68 "Compared with someone who establishes as many being as there are standing in as many world systems in each of the ten directions as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River, all of them, in the irreversible state, and explains this perfection of wisdom to them, someone creates a lot more merit from teaching both the meaning and the words of this perfection of wisdom to one among them who says, 'I want quickly to awaken fully to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.' "

32.69 "Lord," said Śatakratu, "to the extent that bodhisattva great beings are closer and closer to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, to that very extent bodhisattva great beings have to be advised and instructed in this perfection of wisdom, have to be advised and instructed in the perfection of concentration, perfection of perseverance, perfection of patience, perfection of morality, and perfection of giving; have to be advised and instructed in all the emptinesses; have to be advised and instructed in the applications of mindfulness, right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and paths; [F.34.b] and have to be advised and instructed in the ten tathāgata powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, and eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha.

32.70 "They have to be taken care of with requirements—robes, alms, beds and seats, and medicines for sicknesses.

32.71 "Those bodhisattva great beings have to be taken care of with a combination of both the dharmas beginning with the perfections and the required material things.

32.72 "Taking care of them with both instruction in the dharmas and with the required material things creates more merit than the earlier two done separately.

32.73 "And why? Because it thus happens that bodhisattva great beings taken care of with the requirements are advised and instructed in the perfections, are advised and instructed in all the emptinesses, are advised and instructed in the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, and are advised and instructed in the ten powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha.”

32.74 Then venerable Subhūti said to Śatakratu, head of the gods, “Excellent, Kauśika, excellent that you have produced enthusiasm in sons of a good family or daughters of a good family, those bodhisattva great beings in the Great Vehicle. It is your work. Noble śrāvakas who want to look after beings should produce an enthusiasm for bodhisattva great beings fully awakening to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. They should take care of and protect bodhisattva great beings with a combination of doctrine and material things. And why? Lord, it is because the śrāvaka saṅgha comes about from them, the Pratyekabuddha Vehicle comes about from them, and the Great Vehicle also comes about from them. Were bodhisattva great beings not to have produced the thought of unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, [F.35.a] and were bodhisattva great beings not to have trained in the six perfections, and not to have trained in the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, the ten powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, they would not fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. Having fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, they abolish the hells of all world systems, abolish the birthplaces of the animal world, and abolish all the regions of ghosts. Great sāla tree-like royal families appear, great sāla tree-like brahmin families appear, and great sāla tree-like business families appear. The Cāturmahārājika gods appear, there are the Trāyastriṃśa, Yāma, Tuṣita, Nirmāṇarati, Paranirmitavaśavartin, Brahmakāyika, Brahmapurohita, Brahmapāṛṣadya, Parīttābha, Apramāṇābha, Ābhāsvara, Parīttāsubha, Apramāṇasubha, Śubhakṛtsna, Bṛhatphala, and Śuddhāvāsa—Avṛha, Sudṛśa, Sudarśana, Atapa, and Akaniṣṭha—gods, and there are the Ākāśānantyāyatana, [F.35.b] the Vijñānānantyāyatana, Ākiṃcityāyatana, and Naivasamjñānāsamjñāyatana gods. The perfection of giving appears in the world, and the perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and perfection of wisdom appear in the world. Inner emptiness, up to and the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature appears in the world; and the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening appear in the world, up to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha appear in the world. The Śrāvaka Vehicle, the Pratyekabuddha Vehicle, and the Great Vehicle appear in the world.”

32.75 This was the thirty-second chapter, “The Superiority of Merit,” of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.”

CHAPTER 33: DEDICATION

- 33.1 Then the bodhisattva great being Maitreya said to the elder Subhūti, “Venerable monk Subhūti, when the basis of meritorious action arisen from a bodhisattva great being’s rejoicing that has been made into something shared in common by all beings has been dedicated to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening—and dedicated, furthermore, by way of not apprehending anything—that basis of meritorious action arisen from a bodhisattva great being’s rejoicing [F.36.a] that has been made into something shared in common by all beings and dedicated to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening is the highest, the most excellent, the foremost, the best, the most superb, sublime, unsurpassed, and unrivaled in comparison to the bases of meritorious action arisen from all beings’ rejoicing, and in comparison to the bases of meritorious action arisen from giving, the bases of meritorious action arisen from morality, and the bases of meritorious action arisen from meditation of those who have set out in the Śrāvaka Vehicle and those who have set out in the Pratyekabuddha Vehicle. And why? Because all the bases of meritorious action arisen from giving, arisen from morality, and arisen from meditation of those in the Śrāvaka Vehicle and those in the Pratyekabuddha Vehicle are made for personal disciplining, for personal calming, and for a personal complete nirvāṇa; the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, up to emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness are for personal disciplining, personal calming, and a personal complete nirvāṇa, but that basis of meritorious action arisen from a bodhisattva’s rejoicing is for disciplining all beings, for calming all beings, and for the complete nirvāṇa of all beings, because it has been dedicated to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.”
- 33.2 Then venerable Subhūti said to the bodhisattva great being Maitreya, “There are the wholesome roots endowed with the six perfections of all the infinite, countless, immeasurable lord buddhas in each of the world systems in infinite, countless world systems in the eastern direction who have passed into complete nirvāṇa, starting from when they first produced the thought, up to when they fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, up to complete nirvāṇa in the element of nirvāṇa without any aggregates left behind, during [F.36.b] the lasting of their good Dharma up to its disappearance. There are the bases of meritorious action arisen from giving, arisen from morality, and arisen from meditation of those śrāvakas of theirs in the Śrāvaka Vehicle and those pratyekabuddhas of theirs in the Pratyekabuddha Vehicle and the wholesome roots without outflows of their trainees and nontrainees. There are the aggregates of morality, aggregates of meditative stabilization, aggregates of wisdom, aggregates of liberation, and aggregates of knowledge and seeing of liberation of those tathāgatas; and there are the wholesome roots planted by wishes to benefit, great compassion, and the infinite, countless buddhadharmas, those planted by the Dharma teachings those lord buddhas gave and those planted, on account of those Dharma teachings, by those who reached the result of stream enterer, up to the state of a worthy one, up to those who reached a pratyekabuddha's awakening, and those who have entered into the secure state of a bodhisattva. Bodhisattva great beings, having compressed together all those wholesome roots that those tathāgatas, present or in complete nirvāṇa, produced, rejoice in them with the highest rejoicing, rejoice with the best, superb, sublime, loftiest, unsurpassed, unrivaled, unequalled, equal to the unequalled rejoicing, and, having made the wholesome root arisen from that rejoicing into something shared in common by all beings, they dedicate it to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening with the thought, 'May this foster unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.' [F.37.a] Maitreya, when those bodhisattvas in the Great Vehicle mentally dedicate like that, as explained, do those objective supports and entities, the objective supports and entities that have produced that state of mind, exist, or are they apprehended as are the causal signs a son of a good family has grasped?"

33.3 The bodhisattva great being Maitreya replied, "Venerable monk Subhūti, those objective supports and entities do not exist and are not apprehended any more than the causal signs those sons of a good family in the Great Vehicle grasp and dedicate to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening."

33.4 Subhūti then asked,<sup>440</sup> "If, with those objective supports that do not exist and those entities that do not exist, having grasped the causal marks of those lord buddhas standing in all the vast world systems in the ten directions, they compress together all those wholesome roots starting from when they first produced the thought up to the disappearance of their good Dharma, together with all the wholesome roots of their trainees and nontrainees in the Śrāvaka Vehicle, and dedicate them to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, would it not be just as it is with the wrong perception, wrong thought, wrong view of impermanence as permanent, suffering as 'happiness,' selflessness as 'self,' and the unpleasant as 'pleasant'? And if, just as it is with the entities and how it is with the objective supports too, awakening is like that; if thought is like that; if the perfection of giving, perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and perfection of wisdom are like that; [F.37.b] if the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening are like that; and if the tathāgata powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha are like that as well, then what would the entities there be, what would the objective supports be, what would meditative stabilization be, what would thought be, what would the wholesome roots be, what would thought arisen from rejoicing be, and what would dedication to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening be?"

33.5 "Venerable monk Subhūti," replied Maitreya, "if those bodhisattva great beings again and again practice the six perfections, attend on many buddhas, produce wholesome roots, are assisted by spiritual friends, and again and again train in all dharmas empty of their own marks, they dedicate them to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening without grasping the causal signs of those entities, those objective supports, those lord buddhas, those wholesome roots, or those bases of meritorious action arisen from rejoicing. [F.38.a] They dedicate them in a nondual way, in a way free from causal marks, as they really are without dedicating them by way of apprehending or by way of not apprehending, by way of defilement or by way of purification, or by way of production or by way of cessation. If those bodhisattva great beings have not trained in the six perfections, have not attended on many buddhas, have not produced wholesome roots, are not assisted by spiritual friends, and have not trained in all dharmas empty of their own marks, they grasp the causal signs of those entities, those objective supports, those wholesome roots, and those bases of meritorious action arisen from rejoicing and dedicate them to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

33.6 "Venerable monk Subhūti, you should not give an exposition of this doctrine of the perfection of wisdom that has been explained like this in the presence of bodhisattvas who have newly set out in the vehicle, and similarly you should not explain the perfection of concentration, perfection of perseverance, perfection of patience, perfection of morality, and perfection of giving, or explain inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature. And why? Because even the smidgeon of faith, smidgeon of serene confidence, smidgeon of liking, and smidgeon of veneration they have will disappear. The exposition and explanation have to be given in the presence of bodhisattvas irreversible from awakening, and the teaching should be up to dharmas being empty of their own marks. Having heard things like that, those bodhisattva great beings will not tremble, feel frightened, or become terrified. If they [F.38.b] have been assisted by spiritual friends, served the victors of the past well, produced wholesome roots, and attended on many buddhas, they will be, venerable monk Subhūti, those whose bases of meritorious action arisen from rejoicing will be dedicated in that way to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.” [B26]

33.7 “Maitreya,” said Subhūti, “the thought that does the rejoicing and dedication is a thought that is extinguished, stopped, nonexistent, and has run out. And those entities and those objective supports, those wholesome roots, and those bases of meritorious action arisen from rejoicing are extinguished, stopped, nonexistent, and have run out. So, what, then, is the thought arisen from rejoicing, what are those entities, what are those objective supports, and what are those wholesome roots, and what is dedication to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening? Does thought dedicate<sup>441</sup> thought? If thought were to dedicate thought, there would be no coming together of two thoughts. The intrinsic nature of thought cannot be dedicated.”

33.8 Maitreya replied, “When bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom thus know the perfection of wisdom is a nonexistent thing; the perfection of concentration, perfection of perseverance, perfection of patience, perfection of morality, and perfection of giving are nonexistent things; form is a nonexistent thing; feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are nonexistent things, the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening are nonexistent things; the tathāgata powers, fearlessnesses, [F.39.a] detailed and thorough knowledges, and eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha are nonexistent things; and awakening is a nonexistent thing, such bodhisattva great beings will be those whose bases of meritorious action arisen from rejoicing will be dedicated in that way to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. If dedicated like that, it is a dedication to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.”

33.9 The bodhisattva Maitreya then asked the elder Subhūti, “Venerable monk Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings who have newly set out in the vehicle hear this doctrine would they not tremble, feel frightened, and become terrified? Venerable monk Subhūti, how then could bodhisattva great beings newly set out in the vehicle dedicate those wholesome roots? And even if they have appropriated those bases of meritorious action arisen from rejoicing, how will they dedicate those wholesome roots to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening?”

33.10 “Maitreya,” replied Subhūti, “when bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom who have newly set out in the vehicle take up that perfection of wisdom it is by way of not apprehending anything, not by way of a causal sign; and similarly, when practicing the perfection of concentration ... the perfection of perseverance ... the perfection of patience ... the perfection of morality ... and the perfection of giving they take up the perfection of giving by way of not apprehending anything, not by way of a causal sign. When they are practicing inner emptiness and take up inner emptiness it is by way of not apprehending anything, not by way of a causal sign; when they are practicing ... [F.39.b] up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature and take up the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature it is by way of not apprehending anything, not by way of a causal sign; when they are practicing the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening and take up the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening it is by way of not apprehending anything, not by way of a causal sign; and when they are practicing the ten powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, and eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha and take them up it is by way of not apprehending anything, not by way of a causal sign.

33.11 “Thus they come to have more belief in the perfection of wisdom; come to have more belief in the perfection of concentration, perfection of perseverance, perfection of patience, perfection of morality, and perfection of giving; come to have more belief in inner emptiness; come to have more belief in ... up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature; come to have more belief in the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening; and come to have more belief in the ten powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, and eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha. Spiritual friends also look after them, and spiritual friends teach both the meaning and the words of just that perfection of wisdom, up to the perfection of giving as well. No matter what, they teach so they are not separated from the perfection of wisdom up until entering into the secure state of a bodhisattva, and similarly, so that there is no separation from all the perfections up until entering into the secure state of a bodhisattva, and so that they are not separated from all the emptinesses, the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, the powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha. [F.40.a] They point out the work of Māra, and, having heard about those works of Māra from them, no decrease happens and no increase happens. And why? Because those works of Māra cannot be apprehended through their intrinsic nature. They are not separated from the lord buddhas up until they have entered into the secure state of a bodhisattva. They plant wholesome roots in relation to them, and on account of these wholesome roots they grasp the bodhisattva lineage<sup>442</sup> and never leave the bodhisattva lineage up until fully awakening to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

33.12 “Furthermore, Maitreya, bodhisattva great beings who have newly set out in the vehicle should compress together the merit accumulations and the wholesome roots planted by the lord buddhas whose path has come to an end, whose thought constructions and cravings for existence have been cut off, for whom the path of speech has ended,<sup>443</sup> and who have laid down their burden, have removed the thorns, have cut the fetters that bind to becoming, and are freed by knowledge of sameness—the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas dwelling and maintaining themselves in infinite, countless world systems in the ten directions; those planted by the śrāvakas of those lord buddhas, as well as those wholesome roots planted in relation to them; and the wholesome roots planted in the great sāla tree-like royal families in the world, the great sāla tree-like brahmin families, the great sāla tree-like business families in the world, the Cāturmahārājika gods, up to and the Śuddhāvāsa gods. They should compress them all together and collect them into one and weigh it, and having done so they should rejoice in it with the highest rejoicing and dedicate the bases of meritorious action arisen from that rejoicing with the most excellent, foremost, best, most superb, and most sublime [F.40.b] rejoicing to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.”

33.13 Maitreya then asked, “Venerable monk Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings who have newly set out in the vehicle consider the wholesome roots planted by the lord buddhas and their śrāvaka saṅghas and rejoice with the highest rejoicing, rejoice with ... up to unrivaled rejoicing, and dedicate it to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, how do those bodhisattva great beings not have a wrong perception, wrong thought, and wrong view?”

33.14 “Maitreya,” replied Subhūti, “if bodhisattva great beings, while focusing on the lord buddhas and their śrāvaka saṅghas as is their habit, have no notion of buddha, have no notion of wholesome roots, and have no notion of a thought doing the dedication, bodhisattva great beings making such a dedication will not have a wrong perception, wrong thought, or wrong view.

33.15 “If, while considering the lord buddhas and those wholesome roots, bodhisattva great beings grasp a causal sign, and, having grasped a causal sign, rejoice and dedicate like that to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, they will have a wrong perception, thought, and view.

33.16 “If bodhisattva great beings understand the lord buddhas, those wholesome roots, and the thoughts that habitually focus, and that are extinguished, as extinguished; and understand that what has been extinguished cannot be dedicated; and understand the thought with which the dedication is done, and its dharmic nature, [F.41.a] and understand that what it is being dedicated to and its true dharmic nature are like that too—if bodhisattva great beings have dedicated like that it is a conforming dedication<sup>444</sup> and it is a perfect dedication, not a nonconforming dedication and not a distorted dedication, so the dedication should be done like that.

33.17 “If bodhisattva great beings compress together the wholesome roots that past, future, and present lord buddhas, up to<sup>445</sup> ordinary persons have planted; the wholesome roots planted by listening to Dharma teachings and planted by the gods, nāgas, yakṣas, gandharvas, asuras, garuḍas, kinnaras, and mahoragas in relation to that; the wholesome roots planted by the great sāla tree-like royal families, great sāla tree-like brahmin families, great sāla tree-like business families, and the Cāturmahārājika gods listening to the Dharma; and all the productions of the thought of unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening—and if, having compressed them all together and collected them into one and weighed it, they rejoice in it with the highest rejoicing, rejoice with the most excellent, foremost, best, most superb, and most sublime rejoicing, rejoice with an unequaled rejoicing equal to the unequaled, and, having rejoiced, dedicate it all to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, and if they perfectly understand that those dharmas are extinguished, stopped, nonexistent, and have run out, and that those dharmas for the sake of which the dedication is done are also ‘empty of an intrinsic nature’—if they dedicate like that, they will have made a dedication to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

33.18 “If they perfectly understand [F.41.b] that dharmas do not dedicate dharmas—and why? because ‘all dharmas are empty of an intrinsic nature’—and if they dedicate it that way, they will have made a dedication to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

33.19 “Bodhisattvas practicing the perfection of wisdom like that will not have a wrong perception, wrong thought, or wrong view of the perfections of concentration, perseverance, patience, morality, or giving. And why? Because they do not settle down on that dedication, those wholesome roots, that awakening, or that thought—they do not even see what is settled down on. That is the bodhisattva great beings’ dedication to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

33.20 “If bodhisattva great beings are aware that the piling up of the bases of meritorious action is isolated from the aggregates; are aware that it is isolated from the perfection of wisdom; are aware that it is isolated from the perfection of concentration, perfection of perseverance, perfection of patience, perfection of morality, and perfection of giving; are aware that it is isolated from inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature; are aware that it is isolated from the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening; and are aware that it is isolated from the ten powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, and eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, in that case bodhisattva great beings will have dedicated the bases of meritorious action to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

33.21 “If bodhisattva great beings are aware that the bases of meritorious action arisen from rejoicing [F.42.a] are isolated from an intrinsic nature of the bases of meritorious action arisen from rejoicing and are aware that the lord buddhas are isolated from an intrinsic nature of buddhas, that wholesome roots are isolated from an intrinsic nature of wholesome roots, that piling up is isolated from an intrinsic nature of piling up, that the thought of awakening is isolated from an intrinsic nature of the thought of awakening, that a dedicating thought is isolated from an intrinsic nature of a dedicating thought, that awakening is isolated from an intrinsic nature of awakening, that the perfection of wisdom is isolated from an intrinsic nature of the perfection of wisdom, and similarly, that the perfection of concentration ... perseverance ... patience ... morality ... and giving is isolated from an intrinsic nature of the perfection of giving; that inner emptiness, up to that the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature is isolated from an intrinsic nature of the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature; up to that the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening ... the ten powers ... the four fearlessnesses ... the four detailed and thorough knowledges ... and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha are isolated from an intrinsic nature of the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, bodhisattva great beings will thus practice the perfection of wisdom that is isolated, and that will be the bodhisattva great beings’ perfection of wisdom.

33.22 “Furthermore, bodhisattva great beings recollecting those wholesome roots of those lord buddhas who have passed into nirvāṇa should make the dedication in just such a way that the thought with which the dedication is made, like the dedication, is true suchness, has that as its basic nature, and is that intrinsic nature.<sup>446</sup> A dedication with such awareness will have been to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. [F.42.b] Such a dedication does not have a wrong perception, wrong thought, or wrong view.

33.23 “If bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom know those wholesome roots of those lord buddhas by way of a causal sign, the dedication is not to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

33.24 “If they were to grasp a causal sign while thus recollecting those past lord buddhas—who have passed into nirvāṇa, have no causal signs, and are not objects—they would not have dedicated those wholesome roots to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. In that case it would be a wrong perception, wrong thought, and wrong view.

- 33.25 “If they do not form a knowledge of and do not grasp at a causal sign of those lord buddhas, of those wholesome roots, of those accumulations, or of those productions of the thought, those wholesome roots are dedicated to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, and thus the bodhisattva great beings do not have a wrong perception, wrong thought, or wrong view.”
- 33.26 “Venerable monk Subhūti, how do bodhisattva great beings not grasp at causal signs and still make a dedication?” asked Maitreya.
- 33.27 “Maitreya,” replied Subhūti, “it is because bodhisattva great beings have trained in skillful means in this perfection of wisdom. Therefore, you should know that bodhisattva great beings are skilled in the perfection of wisdom. Without having resorted to the perfection of wisdom it is not possible to dedicate the bases of meritorious action.”
- 33.28 Maitreya then asked, “Venerable monk Subhūti, would there not be this fault [F.43.a] if, in the perfection of wisdom, those lord buddhas, those wholesome roots, those accumulations, and those productions of the thought dedicated to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening were not to exist?”
- 33.29 “There,<sup>447</sup> bodhisattva great beings practicing this perfection of wisdom should reflect deeply as follows: Those physical beings, those wholesome roots, and those accumulations have ceased,<sup>448</sup> but still they conceive of them, having grasped them as causal signs—having grasped those lord buddhas, those wholesome roots, those accumulations, and those productions of the thought dedicated to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening as causal signs. Tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas do not do the work of dedication and rejoicing by way of causal signs like that. And why? Because it is just this—the apprehension of those lord buddhas who have passed into complete nirvāṇa having grasped a causal sign and conceived of them, that is their great big apprehension. So, bodhisattva great beings who want to dedicate those wholesome roots should not dedicate them having apprehended and grasped them as causal signs. Tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas do not say that there is great value in the dedication of those perceiving apprehended objects and perceiving causal signs. And why? Because that dedication has been poisoned and conceals a sharp object.
- 33.30 “To illustrate, a person with a naturally childish disposition decides to eat a poisoned delicacy that looks and smells good, and even while eating it enjoys its color and aroma. But when they have digested it suffering results.
- 33.31 “Similarly, here certain persons who have taken this perfection of wisdom up wrongly, [F.43.b] know wrongly, and have trained wrongly give instructions without understanding or comprehending the true state of affairs, saying, ‘Come here, you son of a good family! There are the wholesome roots created through the practice of the perfection of wisdom by past, future, and present lord buddhas starting from when they first produced the thought, up to when they fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, up to complete nirvāṇa in the element of nirvāṇa without any aggregates left behind, during the lasting of their good Dharma up to its disappearance. Similarly there are the wholesome roots they created through their practice of the perfection of concentration, perseverance, patience, morality, and giving; the wholesome roots they created endowed with the four concentrations and endowed with the four immeasurables, four formless absorptions, thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, ten tathāgata powers, fearlessnesses, and detailed and thorough knowledges; and the wholesome roots they created endowed with the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha. There are those on account of which the lord buddhas purify buddhafiels and bring beings to maturity and on account of which there are their aggregates of morality, aggregates of meditative stabilization, aggregates of wisdom, aggregates of liberation, up to aggregates of knowledge and seeing of liberation, up to knowledge of a knower of all aspects, up to the natural state not robbed of mindfulness, and constantly staying in a state of equanimity. There are the wholesome roots those in their Śrāvaka Vehicle [F.44.a] have produced and possess, and there are the wholesome roots created by those prophesied as pratyekabuddhas and by the gods, nāgas, yakṣas, gandharvas, asuras, garuḍas, kinnaras, and mahoragas. Having compressed them all together and collected them into one and weighed it, you should dedicate it to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.’ That sort of dedication of theirs is a dedication by way of causal signs and by way of apprehended objects. It is like poisoned food that becomes toxic.

33.32 “A dedication viewing an apprehended object is not a dedication. And why? Because that apprehending is poisonous, has a causal sign, has causes, and has conditions. Such a dedication is demeaning to the Tathāgata. It is not speaking as the Tathāgata said to speak. It is not speaking the Dharma. They should reflect deeply like that.

33.33 “There sons of a good family or daughters of a good family in the Bodhisattva Vehicle should train like this, asking, ‘How should we rejoice in and dedicate the wholesome roots of past, future, and present lord buddhas? How should we rejoice in and dedicate the wholesome roots they, along with the śrāvaka saṅghas, accumulated practicing the perfection of wisdom, starting from when they first produced the thought, up to complete nirvāṇa in the element of nirvāṇa without any aggregates left behind, during the lasting of their good Dharma up to its disappearance, up to gaining the knowledge of all aspects, up to how should they rejoice in and dedicate the wholesome roots planted by the gods, nāgas, yakṣas, gandharvas, asuras, garuḍas, kinnaras, and mahoragas? How should we dedicate those wholesome roots [F.44.b] so they are dedicated to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening?’

33.34 “Sons of a good family or daughters of a good family in the Great Vehicle practicing the perfection of wisdom who do not want to demean the Tathāgata should frame their dedication in these terms: ‘I shall rejoice in those wholesome roots just as the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas with their unsurpassed buddha knowledge comprehend them as existing in their basic character, nature, signs, and true dharmic nature, and I shall dedicate them to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening just as the lord buddhas comprehend them.’ Sons of a good family or daughters of a good family in the Great Vehicle should dedicate wholesome roots to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening like that. Such a dedication is not demeaning to the Tathāgata. It is speaking like the Tathāgata said to, and is speaking the Dharma. That sort of dedication of those bodhisattva great beings has not been poisoned. That is how they should train.

33.35 “Furthermore, sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who have set out in the Great Vehicle and are practicing the perfection of wisdom should dedicate those wholesome roots like this: ‘Thus form does not belong to the desire realm, form realm, or formless realm. Feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness do not belong to the desire realm, form realm, or formless realm. Similarly, the constituents, sense fields, and the perfection of wisdom do not belong to the desire realm, form realm, [F.45.a] or formless realm. Similarly, the perfections of concentration, perseverance, patience, morality, and giving do not belong to the desire realm, form realm, or formless realm, and that which does not belong is not past, is not future, and is not present. Similarly, inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature do not belong to the desire, form, or formless realm. The thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening do not belong to the desire, form, or formless realm. The ten powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha do not belong to the desire realm, form realm, or formless realm. Similarly, suchness, unmistaken suchness, unaltered suchness, the true nature of dharmas, the dharma-constituent, the establishment of dharmas, the certification of dharmas, the very limit of reality, and the inconceivable element, morality, meditative stabilization, wisdom, liberation, and knowledge and seeing of liberation, the knowledge of all aspects, the natural state not robbed of mindfulness, and constantly staying in a state of equanimity do not belong to the desire, form, or formless realm, and that which does not belong is not past, is not future, and is not present.

33.36 “And why? Just as they do not belong because they do not belong in that way, similarly dedication does not belong either.<sup>449</sup> The dharma to which they are dedicating and those dharmas do not belong. The one doing the dedication [F.45.b] also does not belong. The lord buddhas also do not belong; those wholesome roots do not belong; those śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas do not belong; and their wholesome roots do not belong to the desire, form, or formless realm either, and that which does not belong is not past, is not future, and is not present. That is how they should make the dedication.

33.37 “If bodhisattvas practicing the perfection of wisdom have this awareness—‘Thus form, whatever it is, does not belong to the desire realm, form realm, or formless realm. Similarly, feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness do not belong to the desire realm, form realm, or formless realm. Similarly, the constituents and sense fields do not belong to the desire realm, form realm, or formless realm, and that which does not belong is not past, is not future, and is not present. It cannot be dedicated by way of causal signs or by way of apprehended objects. And why? Because it has no intrinsic nature, and something without an intrinsic nature is a nonexistent thing. A nonexistent thing cannot dedicate a nonexistent thing. Similarly, feeling, perception, volitional factors, consciousness, and the constituents and sense fields; similarly, the perfection of giving, perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and perfection of wisdom; similarly inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature; [F.46.a] similarly the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, the powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, the knowledge of all aspects, the natural state not robbed of mindfulness, and constantly staying in a state of equanimity does not belong to the desire realm, do not belong to the form realm, and do not belong to the formless realm, and that which does not belong is not past, is not future, and is not present. That which is not past, that which is not future, and that which is not present cannot be dedicated by way of causal signs or by way of apprehended objects. And why? Because it has no intrinsic nature, and something without an intrinsic nature is a nonexistent thing. A nonexistent thing cannot dedicate a nonexistent thing’—if bodhisattvas have just such awareness, then the dedication has not been poisoned.

33.38 “A son of a good family or daughter of a good family who has set out in the Great Vehicle and who dedicates those wholesome roots by way of causal signs and by way of apprehended objects dedicates those wholesome roots in the wrong way and does not dedicate perfectly. The lord buddhas do not praise a dedication that is wrong. Those who dedicate with a dedication not praised by the lord buddhas do not complete the perfection of giving and do not complete the perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, or perfection of wisdom. Those who do not complete the six perfections [F.46.b] do not complete the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening and do not complete inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, the powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, or the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha. They do not complete a buddhafiield. Those who do not complete a buddhafiield do not complete bringing beings to maturity. Those who do not complete a buddhafiield and do not complete bringing beings to maturity do not fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

“And why? Because a dedication like that has been poisoned.

33.39 “Furthermore, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom should reflect deeply as follows: ‘Those lord buddhas comprehended that they must dedicate wholesome roots in this truly dharmic way. I too must dedicate these wholesome roots to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening in just this truly dharmic way as well.’ They should reflect deeply like that.”

33.40 Then the Lord said to venerable Subhūti, “Excellent, excellent, Subhūti! It is excellent that you have given such instruction about the bodhisattva great beings’ aggregate of dedication by way of no causal sign, by way of not apprehending anything, by way of no production, by way of no appearance, by way of no defilement, by way of no purification, by way of the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, by way of the emptiness of its own mark, by way of the dharma-constituent, by way of suchness, by way of unmistakable suchness, and by way of unaltered suchness.

33.41 “Subhūti, if all the beings that are in the great billionfold world system [F.47.a] were to obtain the ten wholesome actions and were to obtain the four concentrations, the four immeasurables, the four formless absorptions, and the five clairvoyances, what do you think, Subhūti? Based on that would those beings create a lot of merit?”<sup>450</sup>

33.42 “Subhūti,” continued the Lord, “a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who makes an untainted dedication of the wholesome roots creates even more merit than that. Subhūti, that dedication of the wholesome roots by that son of a good family or daughter of a good family is the highest, the most excellent, foremost, the best, superb, sublime, unsurpassed, and unrivaled.

33.43 “Furthermore, Subhūti, if as many beings as there are stationed in the great billionfold world system were to become stream enterers or were to become once-returners, or non-returners, or worthy ones, and were some son of a good family or daughter of a good family for as long as they live to respect, revere, honor, and worship them all with requirements—robes, alms, beds and seats, and medicines for sicknesses—what do you think, Subhūti? Based on that would that son of a good family or daughter of a good family create a lot of merit?”

33.44 “Subhūti,” continued the Lord, “a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who makes an untainted dedication of the wholesome roots creates even more merit [F.47.b] than that.

33.45 “Furthermore, Subhūti, if as many beings as there are stationed in the great billionfold world system were to become pratyekabuddhas, and were some son of a good family or daughter of a good family for as long as they live to respect, revere, honor, and worship them all with requirements—robes, alms, beds and seats, and medicines for sicknesses—what do you think, Subhūti? Based on that would that son of a good family or daughter of a good family create a lot of merit?”

33.46 “Subhūti,” continued the Lord, “a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who makes an untainted dedication of the wholesome roots creates even more merit than that.

33.47 “Furthermore, Subhūti, if as many beings as there are stationed in the great billionfold world system had set out for unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening and as many beings standing in as many world systems in the eastern direction as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River, all of them, for as many eons as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River, were to respect, revere, honor, and worship each of those bodhisattvas there with requirements—robes, alms, beds and seats, and medicines for sicknesses—and attend on them with all the requirements for happiness, and similarly, if as many beings standing in as many world systems in the south, west, and north, below and above, and the intermediate directions as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River, all of them, for as many eons as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River, were to respect, revere, honor, and worship each of those bodhisattvas from among those bodhisattvas there with requirements (robes, alms, beds [F.48.a] and seats, and medicines for

- sicknesses) and attend on them with all the requirements for happiness, what do you think, Subhūti? Based on that would those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family create a lot of merit?"
- 33.48 "A lot, Lord; a lot, Sugata; an infinite, countless, immeasurable amount," replied Subhūti. "Lord, to give an illustration for that basis of meritorious action is not easy. Lord, if that basis of meritorious action had a physical form it would not fit in even as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River."
- 33.49 Venerable Subhūti having said this, the Lord said to him, "Excellent, excellent, Subhūti! What you have said is excellent.
- 33.50 "Subhūti, a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who, with an untainted dedication of the wholesome roots, dedicates to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening the wholesome roots like that creates even more merit than that. Therefore, Subhūti, that dedication of the wholesome roots by that son of a good family or daughter of a good family is the highest, the most excellent, foremost, the best, superb, sublime, unsurpassed, and unrivaled. Subhūti, that earlier mass of merit does not approach the merit of an untainted dedication even by a hundredth part, or by a thousandth part, or by a hundred thousandth part, or by a hundred millionth part, or by a thousandth one hundred millionth part, or by a hundred thousandth one hundred millionth part; it does not stand up to any number, or fraction, or counting, or example, or comparison.
- 33.51 "And why? Because those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family [F.48.b] are endowed with the ten wholesome actions and endowed with the four concentrations, the four immeasurables, the four formless absorptions, and the five clairvoyances while having a perception that apprehends something.
- 33.52 "And why? Because those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family respect, revere, honor, and worship with the requirements—robes, alms, beds and seats, and medicines for sicknesses—while having a perception that apprehends something. They attend on those bodhisattvas caught up in apprehending things with all the requirements for happiness, and they respect, revere, honor, and worship them."
- 33.53 Then twenty thousand gods from among the Cāturmahārājika gods cupped their palms together in a gesture of supplication, bowed to the Lord, and said, "Ah! Lord, bodhisattva great beings with skillful means dedicate those wholesome roots to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening in an untainted way, by way of not apprehending anything, by way of no causal sign, by way of not doing anything. The dedication done like this without asserting 'two' or 'not two' is a great dedication."

- 33.54 Then Śatakratu, head of the gods, together with the Trāyastriṃśa gods, having brought divine flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners, worshiped the Lord with a divine orchestra of cymbals and drums and made this statement: “These bodhisattva great beings with skillful means dedicate those wholesome roots to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening by way of not apprehending anything, in an untainted way, [F.49.a] by way of no causal sign. The dedication done like this without asserting ‘two’ or ‘not two’ is a great dedication.”
- 33.55 Then many hundred thousand one hundred million billion Brahmakāyika gods approached the Lord, and, having arrived, bowed to his feet with their heads, melodiously giving voice to and proclaiming the words, “Lord, it is amazing how the wholesome roots of bodhisattva great beings with such a perfection of wisdom and skillful means as their mentor surpass those of the aforementioned bodhisattva great beings and sons of a good family or daughters of a good family caught up in apprehending things.”
- 33.56 Similarly, the Brahmakāyika gods and the Brahmapurohita, Brahmapāṛṣadya, Parīttābha, Apramāṇābha, Ābhāsvara, Parīttāśubha, Apramāṇaśubha, Śubhakṛtsna, Anabhakā, Puṇyaprasava, Bṛhatphala, Avṛha, Sudarśana, Sudṛśa, Atapa, and Akaniṣṭha gods, together with many hundred thousand one hundred million billion gods, approached the Lord and, having arrived, bowed to his feet with their heads, proclaiming the words, “Lord, it is amazing how the wholesome roots of bodhisattva great beings with such a perfection of wisdom and skillful means as their mentor surpass those of the aforementioned bodhisattva great beings and sons of a good family or daughters of a good family practicing while caught up in apprehending things.”
- 33.57 Then the Lord said to the Cāturmahārājika gods, up to the Akaniṣṭha gods, “Gods, were all the beings that are in a great billionfold world system [F.49.b] to have set out for unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, and were they all to compress together the wholesome roots that past, future, and present tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas together with their śrāvaka saṅghas planted, starting from when they first produced the thought up to for as long as their good Dharma lasts (in these are the wholesome roots of those śrāvakas, of those pratyekabuddhas, and of all other beings, arisen from the perfection of giving and arisen from the perfections of morality, patience, perseverance, concentration, and wisdom, and the aggregates of morality, meditative stabilization, wisdom, liberation, and knowledge and seeing of liberation, and immeasurable other buddhadharmas), and were they to rejoice in them and, having rejoiced, dedicate them to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening by way of apprehending something; and were some son of a good family or daughter of a good family who has set out for unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening to compress together the wholesome roots of the perfection of giving, up to the perfection of wisdom, up to immeasurable other buddhadharmas of those past, future, and present lord buddhas together with their śrāvaka saṅghas starting from when they first produced the thought, up to for as long as their good Dharma lasts, and rejoice in all that with the highest rejoicing, and, having rejoiced, dedicate that to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening by way of not apprehending anything, in a nondual way, by way of no causal sign, in an untainted way, by way of not doing anything, that son of a good family or daughter of a good family would thus create more merit than those earlier sons of a good family or daughters of a good family. [F.50.a] That earlier wholesome root, furthermore, would not approach even by a hundredth part, up to would not stand up to any comparison to this wholesome root. That dedication by a bodhisattva great being by way of not apprehending anything is the highest, up to unrivaled.”

33.58 Subhūti then asked, “Lord, what is that ‘highest rejoicing,’ up to ‘unrivaled rejoicing’ you talk about where you say, Lord, ‘A son of a good family or daughter of a good family compresses all together the mass of merit from that rejoicing, up to dedication of all their wholesome roots and collects them into one and rejoices with the highest rejoicing, up to the unrivaled rejoicing’?”

33.59 The Lord replied, “It is when that son of a good family or daughter of a good family, without grasping, without rejecting, without falsely projecting, without acquiring, and without apprehending those wholesome roots of past, future, and present tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas together with their śrāvaka saṅghas, those wholesome roots of their pratyekabuddhas, and of all other beings, thinks, ‘Here there is no production, no cessation, no defilement, no purification of a dharma; those dharmas do not decrease, do not increase, do not come, do not go, and do not turn into an aggregate, so on that account I rejoice just in the suchness, the unmistakable suchness, the unaltered suchness, the true nature of dharmas, the dharma-constituent, the establishment of dharmas, and the certification of dharmas [F.50.b] of those past, future, and present dharmas and, having rejoiced, dedicate it to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.’ The rejoicing by bodhisattva great beings making such a dedication is the highest rejoicing, up to unrivaled rejoicing. All other rejoicing, Subhūti, does not approach it even by a hundredth part, up to does not stand up to any comparison to it. Compared with other rejoicing this rejoicing is the highest, up to unrivaled rejoicing.

33.60 “Furthermore, Subhūti, a son of a good family or daughter of a good family newly set out in the vehicle who wants to rejoice in all the wholesome roots of past, future, and present tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas together with their śrāvaka saṅghas and their pratyekabuddhas starting from when they first produced the thought, up to for as long as their good Dharma lasts (in these are the wholesome roots endowed with the perfection of giving and endowed with the perfection of morality, patience, perseverance, concentration, and wisdom, up to immeasurable other buddhadharmas) and the wholesome roots of all other beings, should rejoice like this: ‘As liberation<sup>451</sup> is, so too is giving; as liberation is, so too is morality, patience, perseverance, and concentration; and as liberation is, so too is wisdom. As liberation is, so too are form, feeling, perception, and volitional factors, and so too is consciousness. As liberation is, so too is inner emptiness, up to [F.51.a] the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature. As liberation is, so too are the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening. As liberation is, so too are the powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, and eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha. As liberation is, so too is the knowledge and seeing of liberation. As liberation is, so too is belief, so too is rejoicing. As liberation is, so too are the dharmas of past, future, and present buddhas; as liberation is, so too are the lord buddhas; as liberation is, so too is the complete awakening of those lord buddhas; and as liberation is, so too is the complete nirvāṇa of those lord buddhas. As liberation is, so too are the śrāvakas, so too the pratyekabuddhas of those lord buddhas, and so too is the nirvāṇa of those śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas. As liberation is, so too is the true dharmic nature of those lord buddhas. As liberation is, so too is the true dharmic nature of those śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas. As liberation is, so too is the suchness of all dharmas.’ They should rejoice like that. And, because nothing has changed places and nothing has been destroyed, so too is the true dharmic nature of dharmas that are not bound, are not freed, are not defiled, and are not purified; so to is the true dharmic nature of dharmas that are not produced, do not appear, and do not stop. [F.51.b] If the dedication to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening is like that, Subhūti, it is the highest rejoicing of bodhisattva great beings. Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings endowed with such rejoicing quickly and fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

33.61 “Furthermore, Subhūti, some son of a good family or daughter of a good family who has set out in the Great Vehicle, for as long as they live, may respect, revere, honor, and worship with all the requirements for happiness and with the requirements (robes, alms, beds and seats, and medicines for sicknesses) those tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfect complete buddhas with their śrāvaka saṅghas—the lord buddhas presently dwelling and maintaining themselves with their śrāvaka saṅghas in world systems as many as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River in each direction in the ten directions. They may produce an enthusiasm for respecting, revering, honoring, and worshiping those lord buddhas who have passed into complete nirvāṇa, with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners. They may stand in morality, cultivate patience, exert themselves at perseverance, be absorbed in concentration, and cultivate wisdom, but cultivating by way of apprehending something. And another son of a good family or daughter of a good family who has set out for unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, practicing the perfection of giving and practicing the perfections of morality, patience, perseverance, concentration, and wisdom may dedicate those wholesome roots [F.52.a] to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening by way of not apprehending anything. That earlier accumulation of merit does not approach even by a hundredth part, up to does not stand up to any comparison with that accumulation of merit. That dedication is the highest, up to unrivaled.

33.62 “Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of giving and practicing the perfections of morality, patience, perseverance, concentration, and wisdom with skillful means should dedicate those wholesome roots like this by way of not apprehending anything.”

33.63 This was the thirty-third chapter, “Dedication,” of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.” [B27]

CHAPTER 34: PERFECT PRAISE OF THE QUALITY OF ACCOMPLISHMENT

Then venerable Śāriputra said to the Lord, “Lord, the perfection of wisdom makes things clear because of absolute purity. Lord, the perfection of wisdom makes you want to bow. Lord, I bow to the perfection of wisdom. Lord, the perfection of wisdom is untainted by all three realms. Lord, the perfection of wisdom corrects visual distortions because of having eliminated all the darkness of afflictive emotion and views. Lord, the perfection of wisdom works as the highest of the dharmas on the side of awakening. Lord, the perfection of wisdom provides security because it has eliminated all hazards, terrors, and persecution. Lord, the perfection of wisdom gives light because then all beings easily appropriate [F.52.b] the five eyes. Lord, the perfection of wisdom shows the ruts<sup>452</sup> because beings caught in the ruts avoid the two edges. Lord, the perfection of wisdom works as the knowledge of all aspects because of having eliminated all residual impressions, connections, and afflictions. Lord, the perfection of wisdom is the mother of great bodhisattvas because she gives birth to all the buddhadharmas. Lord, the perfection of wisdom is unproduced and unceasing because of being empty of its own mark. Lord, the perfection of wisdom counteracts saṃsāra because it is not unmoved and not destroyed. Lord, the perfection of wisdom works as the protector of all unprotected beings because it is the giver of all precious dharmas. Lord, the perfection of wisdom works as the ten powers because it deals with those who are untamed. Lord, the perfection of wisdom works as repeating and thus turning the wheel of the Dharma that has twelve aspects three times because it does not go forward and does not turn back.<sup>453</sup> Lord, the perfection of wisdom works to show the intrinsic nature of all dharmas because of the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature. Since this is the case, Lord, how does one stand in the perfection of wisdom?”

34.2 The Lord said, “Śāriputra, you should stand with the perfection of wisdom just as you stand with the Teacher. You should bow to the perfection of wisdom just as you bow to the Teacher. And why? Because this perfection of wisdom is not one thing and the Teacher another; the Teacher is not one thing and the perfection of wisdom another. The perfection of wisdom is itself the Teacher [F.53.a] and the Teacher is himself the perfection of wisdom, because even the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas are a category because of the perfection of wisdom. Bodhisattvas, pratyekabuddhas, worthy ones, non-returners, once-returners, and stream enterers are also categories because of it. The ten wholesome actions are categories because of it. The four concentrations, four immeasurables, and four formless absorptions are categories because of it. The five clairvoyances, the five perfections, inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, the ten tathāgata powers, the four fearlessnesses, the four detailed and thorough knowledges, and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha are categories because of it, up to the knowledge of all aspects is a category because of it.”

34.3 Then it occurred to Śatakratu, head of the gods to think, “What occasioned this inquiry by the venerable monk Śāriputra? What was the catalyst?”

34.4 Then venerable Śāriputra, understanding in his mind the thoughts occurring to Śatakratu, head of the gods, said to Śatakratu, head of the gods, “Kauśika, it occurred to you to think, ‘What occasioned this inquiry by the venerable monk Śāriputra? What was the catalyst?’ In regard to that, I made the inquiry with the thought that bodhisattva great beings assisted by the perfection of wisdom with skillful means dedicate those wholesome roots of the past, future, and present lord buddhas, as many as there are, starting from when they first produced the thought, up to for as long as their good Dharma lasts, to the knowledge of all aspects.

34.5 “Kauśika, [F.53.b] this perfection of wisdom of the bodhisattva great beings surpasses the perfection of giving, and similarly, it surpasses the perfections of morality, patience, perseverance, and concentration.

34.6 “To illustrate, without a guide a hundred, a thousand, or one hundred thousand with congenital blindness cannot even find the road, so how could they ever make it to the city? Similarly, Kauśika, without the perfection of wisdom as a guide these five perfections, like those with congenital blindness, cannot even find the path to awakening, so how could they ever make it to the city of the knowledge of all aspects? Kauśika, when the five perfections are assisted by the perfection of wisdom, then they too have eyes and get the name perfection.”

- 34.7 Śatakratu then inquired, “Venerable monk Śāriputra, you have said, ‘When the five perfections are assisted by the perfection of wisdom then they too have eyes and get the name perfection.’ So then, venerable monk Śāriputra, when the five perfections are assisted by the perfection of giving, do they not get the name perfection? Similarly, when the five perfections are assisted by the perfections of morality, patience, perseverance, and concentration, do those five perfections not get the name perfection either?”<sup>454</sup>
- 34.8 “It is not so, Kauśika, it is not so,” replied Śāriputra. “When the five perfections are assisted by the perfection of giving, they do not get the name perfection. Similarly, when the five perfections are assisted by the perfections of morality, patience, perseverance, and concentration, those five perfections do not get the name perfection either. Therefore, Kauśika, the perfection of wisdom [F.54.a] is the highest, the most excellent, foremost, the best, the most superb, sublime, and unsurpassed, and it is unrivaled by the five perfections.”
- 34.9 Then venerable Śāriputra asked the Lord, “Lord, how should bodhisattva great beings<sup>455</sup> find and produce within themselves the perfection of wisdom?”
- 34.10 The Lord replied, “Śāriputra, they should find and produce within themselves the perfection of wisdom so they do not find and produce within themselves form; they should find and produce within themselves the perfection of wisdom so they do not find and produce within themselves feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness. Similarly, they should find and produce within themselves the perfection of wisdom so they do not find and produce within themselves constituents, sense fields, dependent originations, or the perfection of giving; they should find and produce within themselves the perfection of wisdom so they do not find and produce within themselves the perfections of morality, patience, perseverance, or concentration. They should find and produce within themselves the perfection of wisdom so they do not find and produce within themselves inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature. They should find and produce within themselves the perfection of wisdom so they do not find and produce within themselves the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening. They should find and produce within themselves the perfection of wisdom so they do not find and produce within themselves the ten powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, or distinct attributes of a buddha. They should find and produce within themselves the perfection of wisdom so they do not find and produce within themselves the knowledge of all aspects. Thus, they should find and produce within themselves the perfection of wisdom so they do not find and produce within themselves any of those dharmas.”

- 34.11 Śāriputra then asked, [F.54.b] “Lord, how do they find and produce within themselves the perfection of wisdom so that they do not find and produce within themselves form? Lord, how do they find and produce within themselves the perfection of wisdom so they do not find and produce within themselves ... up to all dharmas?”
- 34.12 “Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “they should find and produce within themselves the perfection of wisdom as the nonenactment, the nonproduction, the noncessation, the nonappearance, the nondestruction, and the nonapprehension of form.”
- 34.13 “Lord, does finding and producing within themselves the perfection of wisdom like that cause any dharma to be gained?” asked Śāriputra.
- 34.14 “Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “finding and producing within themselves the perfection of wisdom like that does not cause any dharma to be gained, and it is because it does not cause any dharma to be gained that it is counted the perfection of wisdom.”
- 34.15 “Lord, what dharmas does it not cause to be gained?” asked Śāriputra.
“Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “it does not cause wholesome dharmas to be gained, it does not cause unwholesome dharmas to be gained, and similarly it does not cause dharmas that are basic immorality or what is not basic immorality, compounded or un-compounded, afflicted or unafflicted, ordinary or extraordinary, or defilement or purification to be gained. It does not cause the dharmas of saṃsāra to be gained, and it does not cause the dharmas of nirvāṇa to be gained. And why? [F.55.a] Because the perfection of wisdom does not make any dharma available by way of apprehending it. Therefore, it does not cause it to be gained.”
- 34.16 Then Śatakratu, head of the gods, asked the Lord, “Does this perfection of wisdom also not cause the knowledge of all aspects to be gained?”
- 34.17 The Lord said, “In regard to what you, Kauśika, have said—‘Does this perfection of wisdom also not cause the knowledge of all aspects to be gained?’—exactly so! Exactly so! The perfection of wisdom does not cause any dharma to be gained. It does not cause any to be apprehended and therefore does not cause even the knowledge of all aspects to be gained. It does not apprehend it.”
- 34.18 “Lord, why does this perfection of wisdom not cause the knowledge of all aspects to be gained? Why does it not apprehend it?” asked Śatakratu.
- 34.19 “Kauśika,” replied the Lord, “it is because the perfection of wisdom does not cause it to be gained as a name, as a causal sign, or as something to be enacted.”
- 34.20 “Well then, Lord, how does this perfection of wisdom cause it to be gained?” asked Śatakratu.

- 34.21      “Kauśika,” replied the Lord, “it is because the perfection of wisdom causes it to be gained without apprehending, without asserting, without being stationed on, without forsaking, without settling down on, without grasping, and without rejecting anything at all, but it does not cause any dharma to be gained.”
- 34.22      Śatakratu said, “It is amazing, Lord, how this perfection of wisdom has been made available in order to make the nonproduction, noncessation, nonenactment, nonapprehension, nonpurification, and nondestruction of all [F.55.b] dharmas easy.”
- 34.23      Then venerable Subhūti said to the Lord, “Lord, if bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom have such ideas as ‘the perfection of wisdom causes all dharmas to be gained’ or ‘the perfection of wisdom does not cause all dharmas to be gained,’ then, Lord, the perfection of wisdom is forsaken, and this causes distance from the perfection of wisdom.”
- 34.24      The Lord replied, “There is a way in which bodhisattva great beings forsake the perfection of wisdom, a way that causes distance from the perfection of wisdom. When bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom have such ideas as ‘This perfection of wisdom rings hollow. This perfection of wisdom is in vain. This perfection of wisdom is pointless. This perfection of wisdom is a fraud,’ that makes those bodhisattva great beings forsake the perfection of wisdom. It causes those bodhisattva great beings to be distant from the perfection of wisdom.”
- 34.25      “The Lord is confident about the perfection of wisdom. In what dharmas do you not have confidence?”<sup>456</sup> asked Subhūti.
- 34.26      “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “being confident about the perfection of wisdom, I do not have confidence in form, and I do not have confidence in feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness; I do not have confidence in eyes, and I do not have confidence in ears, nose, tongue, body, or thinking mind; I do not have confidence in a form, and I do not have confidence in a sound, a smell, a taste, a feeling, or dharmas; I do not have confidence in the perfection of giving, [F.56.a] and I do not have confidence in the perfections of morality, patience, perseverance, concentration, or wisdom,<sup>457</sup> I do not have confidence in inner emptiness, up to and I do not have confidence in the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature. I do not have confidence in the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening. I do not have confidence in the ten powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, or eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha; I do not have confidence in the result of stream enterer, and I do not have confidence in the result of once-returner or the result of non-returner, the state of a worthy one, the state of a pratyekabuddha, or unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. Being confident about the perfection of wisdom, I do not have confidence in the knowledge of all aspects.”

34.27 “Lord, why, being confident about the perfection of wisdom, do you not have confidence in form, and why do you not have confidence in..., up to the knowledge of all aspects?” asked Subhūti.

34.28 The Lord said, “Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom gives me confidence because form cannot be apprehended. The perfection of wisdom gives me confidence because..., up to the knowledge of all aspects cannot be apprehended. Therefore, Subhūti, being confident about the perfection of wisdom, I do not have confidence in form, and I do not have confidence in..., up to the knowledge of all aspects.”

“Lord, this—namely, the perfection of wisdom—is a huge perfection,” said Subhūti.

34.29 “What do you think, Subhūti?” asked the Lord. “In what way is this perfection of wisdom a huge perfection?”

34.30 Subhūti replied, “Lord, the perfection of wisdom does not make form bigger, nor does it make it smaller; [F.56.b] it does not make feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness bigger, nor does it make them smaller; similarly, it does not make the constituents, sense fields, or dependent originations bigger nor does it make them smaller. It does not make the perfection of giving bigger, nor does it make it smaller; similarly, it does not make the perfection of morality, patience, perseverance, or concentration bigger, nor does it make them smaller; it does not make inner emptiness bigger, nor does it make it smaller; it does not make ... up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature bigger, nor does it make it smaller; it does not make the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening bigger, nor does it make them smaller; it does not make the powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, or distinct attributes of a buddha bigger, nor does it make them smaller; it does not make awakening bigger, nor does it make it smaller; and it does not make an awakened one bigger, nor does it make an awakened one smaller.

34.31 “It does not compress form, nor does it expand it; it does not compress feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness, nor does it expand them; up to it does not compress awakening or an awakened one, nor does it expand them.

34.32 “It does not make form measurable, nor does it make it immeasurable; it does not make feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness measurable, nor does it does not make them immeasurable; up to it does not make awakening or an awakened one measurable, nor does it make them immeasurable.

- 34.33 “It does not free up form, nor does it enclose it; it does not free up feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness, nor does it enclose them; up to it does not free up awakening or an awakened one, nor does it enclose them.
- 34.34 “It does not strengthen form, nor does it weaken it; [F.57.a] it does not strengthen feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness, nor does it weaken them; up to it does not strengthen awakening or an awakened one, nor does it weaken them.
- 34.35 “In this way, Lord, this perfection of wisdom of bodhisattva great beings is a huge perfection.
- 34.36 “Lord, when bodhisattva great beings newly set out in the vehicle, having resorted to the perfection of wisdom and resorted to the perfection of concentration, perfection of perseverance, perfection of patience, perfection of morality, and perfection of giving, have the notion, ‘It does not make form bigger nor, does it make it smaller,’ up to ‘It does not make an awakened one bigger, nor does it make an awakened one smaller,’ up to ‘It does not strengthen, nor does it weaken form,’ those bodhisattva great beings with such notions, Lord, are not practicing the perfection of wisdom. And why? Because making form bigger or smaller, up to making an awakened one bigger or smaller is not in harmony with the perfection of wisdom as cause; strengthening or weakening form, up to and strengthening or weakening an awakened one is not in harmony with the perfection of wisdom as cause.
- 34.37 “And why? Because there is no awakening for those with a notion that something is being apprehended.
- 34.38 “Thus, you should know that the nonproduction of the perfection of wisdom is because beings are not produced. Similarly, you should know that the nonproduction of the perfection of wisdom [F.57.b] is because form is not produced, up to you should know that the nonproduction of the perfection of wisdom is because a buddha is not produced.
- 34.39 “You should know that the perfection of wisdom has no intrinsic nature because beings have no intrinsic nature. You should know that the perfection of wisdom has no intrinsic nature because form has no intrinsic nature, up to you should know that the perfection of wisdom has no intrinsic nature because a buddha has no intrinsic nature.
- 34.40 “You should know that the perfection of wisdom is not an existing thing because a being is not an existing thing. Similarly, you should know that the perfection of wisdom is not an existing thing because form is not an existing thing. You should know that the perfection of wisdom is not an existing thing because feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are not existing things, up to you should know that the perfection of wisdom is not an existing thing because a buddha is not an existing thing.

- 34.41 “You should know that the perfection of wisdom is empty because beings are empty. Similarly, you should know that the perfection of wisdom is empty because form is empty. You should know that the perfection of wisdom is empty because feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are empty, up to you should know that the perfection of wisdom is empty because a buddha is empty.
- 34.42 “Similarly, you should know that the perfection of wisdom is signless and wishless because beings are signless and wishless. Similarly, you should know that the perfection of wisdom is signless and wishless because form is signless and wishless. You should know that the perfection of wisdom is signless and wishless because feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are signless and wishless, [F.58.a] up to you should know that the perfection of wisdom is signless and wishless because a buddha is signless and wishless.
- 34.43 “Similarly, you should know the isolation and nonexistence of the perfection of wisdom because of the isolation and nonexistence of beings.
- 34.44 “Similarly, you should know the inconceivability of the perfection of wisdom because of the inconceivability of beings.
- 34.45 “You should know the nondestruction of the perfection of wisdom because of the nondestruction of beings.
- 34.46 “You should know that there is no full awakening of the perfection of wisdom because there is no full awakening of beings. You should know that there is no full awakening of the perfection of wisdom because there is no full awakening of form. You should know that there is no full awakening of the perfection of wisdom because there is no full awakening of feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness, up to you should know that there is no full awakening of the perfection of wisdom because there is no full awakening of a buddha.
- 34.47 “You should know that the perfection of wisdom is not endowed with the powers because beings are not endowed with the powers. You should know that the perfection of wisdom is not endowed with the powers because form is not endowed with the powers. You should know that the perfection of wisdom is not endowed with the powers because feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are not endowed with the powers, [F.58.b] up to you should know that the perfection of wisdom is not endowed with the powers because a buddha is not endowed with the powers.
- 34.48 “In this way too, Lord, this perfection of wisdom of bodhisattva great beings is a huge perfection.”
- 34.49 This was the thirty-fourth chapter, “Perfect Praise of the Quality of Accomplishment,” of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.”

35.

CHAPTER 35: HELLS

- 35.1 Then venerable Śāriputra inquired of the Lord, “Where did they die, Lord, bodhisattva great beings who have come here and believe in this perfection of wisdom? How long has it been since a son of a good family or daughter of a good family believing in this perfection of wisdom as the meaning and method<sup>458</sup> set out for unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening? On how many tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas have they attended? For how long have they been practitioners of the perfection of giving? For how long have they been practitioners of the perfection of morality, patience, perseverance, and concentration? For how long have they been practitioners of the perfection of wisdom?”
- 35.2 Venerable Śāriputra having thus inquired, the Lord said to him, “Śāriputra, those bodhisattva great beings have come here and have been reborn here after attending on tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas in the ten directions. Śāriputra, it has been an infinite, countless hundred thousand one hundred million billion eons since those bodhisattva great beings set out for unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. After their first production of the thought, from then on they practiced the perfection of giving, practiced [F.59.a] the perfection of morality, patience, perseverance, concentration, and wisdom, and took rebirth here; from then on they attended on infinite, countless, immeasurable, inconceivable, imponderable tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas and came here. Śāriputra, if those bodhisattva great beings even see or hear the perfection of wisdom, the thought arises, ‘I am beholding the Teacher,’ and the thought arises, ‘I am hearing the Teacher.’ Śāriputra, those bodhisattva great beings, by way of no causal signs, nonduality, and not apprehending anything, comprehend this perfection of wisdom as the meaning and method.”
- 35.3 Then venerable Subhūti asked the Lord, “Lord, can you view or listen to the perfection of wisdom?”

35.4 “No, Subhūti,” the Lord replied. “Subhūti, because dharmas are in an inanimate material state<sup>459</sup> there is no viewer of, or listener to, the perfection of wisdom, so they do not see or hear the perfection of wisdom. Similarly, because dharmas are in an inanimate material state they do not see or hear the perfection of concentration, perseverance, patience, morality, or giving; because dharmas are in an inanimate material state they do not see or hear inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature; and similarly, because dharmas are in an inanimate material state they do not see or hear the applications of mindfulness; because dharmas are in an inanimate material state they do not see or hear the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, or paths; because dharmas are in an inanimate material state they do not see or hear the ten tathāgata powers, four [F.59.b] fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, or eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha; and because dharmas are in an inanimate material state they do not see or hear awakening, and do not see and hear an awakened one.”

35.5 Then venerable Subhūti asked the Lord, “Lord, for how long have those bodhisattva great beings who do the yogic practice of this deep perfection of wisdom here been practicing?”

35.6 The Lord said, “To pronounce on this you have to go into detail.<sup>460</sup> Subhūti, if bodhisattva great beings who, after their first production of the thought, from then on do the yogic practice of this deep perfection of wisdom and similarly do the yogic practice of the perfection of concentration, perfection of perseverance, perfection of patience, perfection of morality, and perfection of giving—doing it, furthermore, with skillful means, without any dharma at all, and without seeing how there is increase or decrease<sup>461</sup>—then they will never be separated from the six perfections and never be separated from the lord buddhas. With whatever special offerings they want to respect, revere, honor, and worship the lord buddhas, immediately after their first production of the thought they obtain them and pass on from buddhafiield to buddhafiield. They are never born in a mother’s womb, they are never separated from the clairvoyant knowledges, they never entertain any afflictive emotion, they never entertain a śrāvaka thought or pratyekabuddha thought, and they also bring beings to maturity, purify a buddhafiield, and pass on from buddhafiield to buddhafiield. [F.60.a] Subhūti, those bodhisattva great beings do the yogic practice of this deep perfection of wisdom.

35.7 “Subhūti, there are those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family in the Bodhisattva Vehicle who have seen many hundreds of buddhas, many thousands of buddhas, many hundreds of thousands of one hundred million billion buddhas. When they were disciples in their presence, they gave gifts and cultivated morality, patience, perseverance, concentration, and wisdom by way of apprehending something. They leave the retinue when this deep perfection of wisdom is being taught. Those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family do not respect this deep perfection of wisdom when it is being taught, and they walk out on those lord buddhas.

35.8 “Those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family in the Bodhisattva Vehicle are gathered right here. They are those who leave when this deep perfection of wisdom is being taught. And why? Because those bodhisattva great beings walked out in the past when this deep perfection of wisdom was being taught, so they walk out again now when this deep perfection of wisdom is being taught. They are not collected in body and mind,<sup>462</sup> so they amass the karma of those who act out of intellectual confusion. Those who have made and amassed that karma of the intellectually confused, on account of that, reject this deep perfection of wisdom when it is being taught, and because of rejecting this deep perfection of wisdom they reject the knowledge of all aspects of past, future, and present lord buddhas as well. Those who have made an enactment of, and amassed the karma that comes from, rejecting the knowledge of all aspects and those who have made [F.60.b] and amassed the karma that leads to the loss of the Dharma roast in the hells<sup>463</sup> for many hundred years, many thousand years, many hundreds of thousands of one hundred million billion years. They pass on from great hells to great hells, and as they are passing on from great hells to great hells the destruction by fire, destruction by water, and destruction by wind come about.<sup>464</sup> When the destruction is happening there, they are hurled into those great hells in other world systems. After they are born there they again pass on from great hells to great hells, and as they are passing on from great hells to great hells again the destructions happen and they are hurled from those world systems into yet other world systems. When the destructions come about in those as well, they are again hurled into the eastern direction and hurled into the great hells in the south, west, and north, the intermediate directions, and below and above. And when the destructions also happen in those world systems, they are again hurled into the great hells in other world systems. But even when the destructions happen in those world systems, still the karma for being deprived of the Dharma is not exhausted, so after they have died in those world systems they again take rebirth right here and again pass on from the great hells to the great hells. And when they are born in those great hells they experience the sufferings of hell, and their experience of the sufferings of hell continues until [F.61.a] the destructions again happen. But even after the destructions happen, they die here and are again reborn in the great hells in other world systems. Similarly, they are born over and over again in the animal worlds in all the ten directions, and they are born over and over again in the worlds of Yama in all the ten directions.

35.9 “Born there, the experience of those feelings of suffering uses up the karma. When their experience of those many sufferings has used up the karma and they somehow or other gain a human rebirth, still, just because of amassing that karma that leads to the loss of the Dharma, wherever they are born they are born congenitally blind in congenitally blind families, in outcast families, in families of garbage workers, and in low-class families. And when they are born, they are born such that they also become blind, or blind in one eye, or without a tongue, or without arms, or without legs, or without ears, or without a nose, or where the word Buddha is never heard, the word Dharma and the word Saṅgha are never heard, and the words bodhisattva and pratyekabuddha are never heard.”

35.10 Then venerable Śāriputra said to the Lord, “Lord, committing and amassing the five inexpressible sins does not rank with the karma that leads to the loss of the Dharma.”

35.11 “Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “when the perfection of wisdom is being taught there are those who think they have to put a stop to it and say, ‘This is not the Dharma, this is not the Vinaya, these are not the Teacher’s words; tathāgatas, worthy ones, [F.61.b] perfectly complete buddhas did not say, do not say, and will not say this, so you should not train in it.’ They think, ‘I too have to oppose this,’ and they cause other beings to separate from it. Having harmed their own mental continuums, they plot harm to the mental continuums of others; having poisoned their own mental continuums they poison the mental continuums of others; having ruined their own mental continuums, they want to ruin the mental continuums of others, and they think, ‘Since even I do not comprehend or understand the deep perfection of wisdom, I will put a stop to it,’ and they cause others to take it like that as well. Since this is the case you have to say, ‘Those who have committed the five inexpressible sins do not rank with those who have done and amassed the karma that leads to the loss of the Dharma.’ Śāriputra, I do not let such persons hear it, let alone look at it. How could that ever possibly be? And why? Śāriputra, you should know that it is because such persons spoil the Dharma; such persons are like rotten trees and have a wicked nature. Śāriputra, those are the sort of persons who think they should have faith and listen but who do it in a wrong way, so calamity befalls them.

35.12 “Śāriputra, you should know that those persons who spoil my perfection of wisdom are those who spoil the Dharma.”

35.13 Śāriputra said, “Lord, the Lord has not yet explained the extent of the physical horrors<sup>465</sup> for a person born there who spoils the Dharma.”

- 35.14 “Śāriputra,” said the Lord, “leave aside the extent of the physical horrors for that person born there who spoils the Dharma. And why? Because the consequences from hearing about the extent of the physical horrors for the person who spoils the Dharma are as bad as those physical horrors encountered by that person who spoils the Dharma, as much as that— [F.62.a] vomiting warm blood from the mouth, or dying, or experiencing pain enough to die, or on hearing it being impaled on a shaft of pain, or drying out and shriveling into oneself like a severed blue green naḍa reed.”
- 35.15 So the Lord did not make a space for venerable Śāriputra to know just how great an extent the physical horror there would be.
- 35.16 Śāriputra said, “Lord, please explain so later generations will be given a glimpse of the fact that persons who spoil the Dharma will appropriate physical horrors like that on account of having done and amassed karma that leads to the loss of the Dharma.”
- 35.17 “Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “later generations, just from this, will also glimpse the fact that ‘on account of having completely done and amassed karma that leads to the loss of the Dharma, they will experience suffering in the hells lasting that long, they will experience the immeasurability of that suffering—the amount of it and its duration—for that amount of time.’ ”
- 35.18 “Lord, sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who have a bright nature will, just from this, turn back from those actions that lead to the loss of the Dharma. And we too, thinking ‘we will meet with such sufferings as those,’ will not reject the good Dharma even at the cost of our lives,” said Śāriputra.
- 35.19 Then venerable Subhūti said to the Lord, “Those who have made and amassed speech karma that rejects the good Dharma make and amass karma that leads to the loss of the Dharma, so we sons of good family or daughters of good family will restrain well our actions of body, speech, and mind lest we meet with such suffering as that, or lest we not see the tathāgatas, or not hear the Dharma, or not provide service to the saṅgha, or be born in buddhafi elds where there are [F.62.b] no buddhas, or be born as paupers, or become those whose words are not accepted.”<sup>466</sup>
- 35.20 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “those ignorant persons gone forth to homelessness in the well-spoken Dharma and Vinaya thinking they have to strongly object to this perfection of wisdom, through the karma they have made and amassed, make and amass karma that leads to the loss of the Dharma. Subhūti, strongly objecting and putting a stop to the perfection of wisdom is strongly objecting and putting a stop to the awakening of the lord buddhas; strongly objecting and putting a stop to the awakening of the lord buddhas is strongly objecting and putting a stop to the knowledge of all aspects of past, future, and present lord buddhas; strongly objecting and putting a stop to the knowledge of all aspects is strongly objecting and putting a stop to the Dharma; putting a stop to the Dharma is putting a stop to the Saṅgha; putting a stop to the Saṅgha is putting a stop to ordinary right view and extraordinary right view, and similarly putting a stop to the six perfections, thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, ten powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, up to the knowledge of all aspects. Those who put a stop to the knowledge of all aspects get saddled with an unbounded, infinite, incalculable mass of demerit, and those who are saddled with a mass of demerit get saddled with unbounded, infinite, incalculable suffering and mental anguish.”

35.21 “Lord, what different things [F.63.a] dispose those ignorant persons who put a stop to this deep perfection of wisdom to put a stop to this deep perfection of wisdom?” asked Subhūti.

35.22 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “four things dispose them to put a stop to this deep perfection of wisdom. What four things? Those ignorant persons are these, namely, they are possessed by Māra, they do not believe in and do not find faith in the deep Dharma, they fall into the clutches of bad friends, so they settle down on the five aggregates, and while those ignorant persons are doing wrong they praise themselves and disparage others. Subhūti, ignorant persons beset by these four things put a stop to this deep perfection of wisdom.”

35.23 Subhūti said, “Lord, it is hard for those who do not work hard, who are without wholesome roots, and who have fallen into the clutches of bad friends to believe in this perfection of wisdom.”

35.24 “Exactly so, Subhūti, exactly so,” said the Lord. “It is hard for those who do not work hard, who are without wholesome roots, and who have fallen into the clutches of bad friends to believe in this perfection of wisdom.”

35.25 Subhūti then asked, “Just how deep, Lord, is this perfection of wisdom in which it is so hard for them to believe?”

35.26 “Subhūti,” said the Lord, “form is not bound and is not freed. And why? Because the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature in form is form.<sup>467</sup> Similarly, Subhūti, feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is not bound and is not freed. And why? Because the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature in consciousness is consciousness.

35.27 “Subhūti, the perfection of giving [F.63.b] is not bound and is not freed. And why? Because the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature in the perfection of giving is the perfection of giving. Similarly, Subhūti, the perfection of morality ... the perfection of patience ... the perfection of perseverance ... the - perfection of concentration ... and the perfection of wisdom is not bound and is not freed. And why? Because the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature in the perfection of wisdom is the perfection of wisdom.

- 35.28 “Subhūti, inner emptiness is not bound and is not freed. And why? Because the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature in inner emptiness is inner emptiness, up to Subhūti, the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature is not bound and is not freed. And why? Because the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature in the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature is the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature.
- 35.29 “Subhūti, the applications of mindfulness are not bound and they are not freed. And why? Because the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature in the applications of mindfulness is the applications of mindfulness. Similarly, Subhūti, the right efforts ... the legs of miraculous power ... the faculties ... the powers ... the limbs of awakening ... and the path is not bound and is not freed. And why? Because the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature in the path is the path.
- 35.30 “Similarly, Subhūti, the ten tathāgata powers ... the four fearlessnesses ... the four detailed and thorough knowledges ... the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha ... and the knowledge of all aspects is not bound and is not freed. And why? Because the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature in the knowledge of all aspects is the knowledge of all aspects.
- 35.31 “Subhūti, the prior limit of form is not bound and is not freed. And why? Because the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature in the prior limit is form. [F.64.a] Similarly, Subhūti, the prior limit of feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness, up to the knowledge of all aspects is not bound and is not freed. And why? Because the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature in the prior limit is the knowledge of all aspects.
- 35.32 “Subhūti, the later limit of form is not bound and is not freed. And why? Because the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature in the later limit is form. Similarly, Subhūti, the later limit of feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness, up to the knowledge of all aspects is not bound and is not freed. And why? Because the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature in the later limit is the knowledge of all aspects.
- 35.33 “Subhūti, present form is not bound and is not freed. And why? Because the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature in the present is form. Similarly, Subhūti, present feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness, up to knowledge of all aspects is not bound and is not freed. And why? Because the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature in the present is the knowledge of all aspects.”

- 35.34 Subhūti said, “Lord, it is hard for those who do not work hard, have not planted wholesome roots, have fallen into the clutches of bad friends, are under the control of Māra, and are lazy, deficient in perseverance, forgetful, and without introspection to believe in this perfection of wisdom.”
- 35.35 “Exactly so, Subhūti, exactly so,” replied the Lord. “Subhūti, it is hard for those who do not work hard, up to are without introspection to believe in this perfection of wisdom. [F.64.b]
- 35.36 “Subhūti, that purity of form is just the purity of the result. That purity of feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is just the purity of the result, up to that purity of the knowledge of all aspects is just the purity of the result.” [B28]
- 35.37 “Furthermore, Subhūti, that purity of form is the purity of the result. That purity of the result is the purity of the perfection of wisdom. That purity of the perfection of wisdom is the purity of form. That purity of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects is the purity of the result. That purity of the result is the purity of the perfection of wisdom. That purity of the perfection of wisdom is the purity of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects. Thus, all of these—purity of form, purity of the result, purity of the perfection of wisdom, and purity of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects—are not two, are not divided, are not broken apart, and are not cut apart.
- 35.38 “Furthermore, Subhūti, that purity of form is the purity of the perfection of wisdom. That purity of the perfection of wisdom is the purity of form. That purity of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects is the purity of the perfection of wisdom. That purity of the perfection of wisdom is the purity of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects. Thus, this purity of form, [F.65.a] purity of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects, and purity of the perfection of wisdom are not two, are not divided, are not broken apart, and are not cut apart.
- 35.39 “Furthermore, Subhūti, that purity of self is the purity of form. That purity of form is the purity of self. Thus, this purity of self and purity of form are not two, are not divided, are not broken apart, and are not cut apart. This purity of a being, a living being, up to one who knows, and one who sees, and the purity of form, and the purity of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness, up to the knowledge of all aspects are not two, are not divided, are not broken apart, and are not cut apart.
- 35.40 “Furthermore, Subhūti, because of the purity of greed there is the purity of form, the purity of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects. Thus, this purity of greed, purity of form, purity of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects is not two, is not divided, is not broken apart, and is not cut apart. Similarly, because of the purity of hatred and confusion there is the purity of form, the purity of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects. Thus, this purity of hatred and confusion, purity of form, purity of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects is not two, is not divided, is not broken apart, and is not cut apart.

35.41 “Furthermore, Subhūti, because of the purity of greed, hatred, and confusion there is the purity of form, the purity of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects. Thus this purity of greed, hatred, and confusion, the purity of form, [F.65.b] this purity of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects is not two, is not divided, is not broken apart, and is not cut apart.

35.42 “Furthermore, Subhūti, because of the purity of ignorance there is the purity of volitional factors; because of the purity of volitional factors there is the purity of consciousness, and similarly, there is the purity of name and form, purity of the six sense fields, purity of contact, purity of feeling, purity of craving, purity of appropriation, purity of existence, purity of birth, and purity of old age and death.

35.43 “Because of the purity of old age and death there is the purity of the perfection of giving; because of the purity of the perfection of giving there is the purity of the perfection of morality; because of the purity of the perfection of morality there is the purity of the perfection of patience; because of the purity of the perfection of patience there is the purity of the perfection of perseverance; because of the purity of the perfection of perseverance there is the purity of the perfection of concentration; because of the purity of the perfection of concentration there is the purity of the perfection of wisdom; because of the purity of the perfection of wisdom there is the purity of inner emptiness; because of the purity of inner emptiness there is the purity of ... up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature; and because of the purity of the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature there is the purity of the applications of mindfulness. Similarly, there is the purity of the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and path; because of the purity of the path there is the purity of all-knowledge; because of the purity of all-knowledge there is the purity of the ten powers; because of the purity of the ten powers there is the purity of the fearlessnesses; because of the purity [F.66.a] of the fearlessnesses there is the purity of the detailed and thorough knowledges; because of the purity of the detailed and thorough knowledges there is the purity of the distinct attributes of a buddha; and because of the purity of the distinct attributes of a buddha there is the purity of the knowledge of all aspects. Thus, this purity of the knowledge of all aspects and purity of the distinct attributes of a buddha is not two, is not divided, is not broken apart, and is not cut apart.

- 35.44       “Furthermore, Subhūti, that purity of the perfection of wisdom is the purity of form. That purity of form is the purity of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects. Thus, this purity of the perfection of wisdom, purity of form, purity of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects is not two, is not divided, is not broken apart, and is not cut apart.
- 35.45       “Similarly, that purity of the perfection of concentration, purity of the perfection of perseverance, purity of the perfection of patience, purity of the perfection of morality, and purity of the perfection of giving is the purity of form. That purity of form is the purity of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects. Thus, this purity of the perfection of giving, purity of form, purity of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects is not two, is not divided, is not broken apart, and is not cut apart. Because of the purity of inner emptiness, up to the purity of the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature there is the purity of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects; because of the purity of the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening there is the purity of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects; because of the purity of the powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, and distinct attributes of a buddha there is the purity of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects. Thus, this purity of the aggregates, the constituents, the sense fields, the perfections, all the emptinesses, the dharmas on the side of awakening, the ten powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, [F.66.b] and the purity of the knowledge of all aspects is not two, is not divided, is not broken apart, and is not cut apart.
- 35.46       “Furthermore, Subhūti, because of the purity of the compounded there is the purity of the un compounded; because of the purity of the un compounded there is the purity of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects. Thus, this purity of the compounded, purity of the un compounded, and purity of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects is not two, is not divided, is not broken apart, and is not cut apart.
- 35.47       “Furthermore, Subhūti, because of the purity of the past there is the purity of the future; because of the purity of the future there is the purity of the past; because of the purity of the present there is purity of the past and future; and because of the purity of the past and future there is purity of the present. Thus, this purity of the past, purity of the future, and purity of the present is not two, is not divided, is not broken apart, and is not cut apart.”
- 35.48       This was the thirty-fifth chapter, “Hells,” of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.”

extremely pure. Purity is light because the ears, nose, tongue, body, and thinking mind are extremely pure. Purity is light because a form, a sound, a smell, a taste, a feeling, and dharmas are extremely pure. Purity is light because the earth element, water element, fire element, wind element, space element, and consciousness element are extremely pure. Purity is light because the perfection of giving is extremely pure. Purity is light because the perfections of morality, patience, perseverance, concentration, and wisdom are extremely pure. Purity is light because inner emptiness is extremely pure, up to purity is light because the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature is extremely pure. Purity is light because the applications of mindfulness are extremely pure. Purity is light because the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and path are extremely pure. Purity is light because the ten powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, and eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha are extremely pure, up to purity is light because the knowledge of all aspects is extremely pure.”

- 36.5 “Lord, purity does not link up,” said Śāriputra.
“That is because it is extremely pure, Śāriputra,” said the Lord.
- 36.6 “Lord, on account of what not linking up is it pure?” asked Śāriputra.
“Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, [F.68.a] “form does not link up because it does not change places, so it is pure, up to the knowledge of all aspects does not link up because it does not change places, so it is pure.”
- 36.7 “Lord, purity is without defilement,” said Śāriputra.
“Because it is extremely pure, Śāriputra,” said the Lord.
- 36.8 “Lord, on account what not being defiled is it pure?” asked Śāriputra.
“Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “because form is naturally without defilement it is pure, up to because the knowledge of all aspects is naturally without defilement it is pure.”
- 36.9 “Lord, there is no obtaining and no clear realization of purity,” said Śāriputra.
“Because it is extremely pure, Śāriputra,” said the Lord.
- 36.10 “Lord, on account of not obtaining and not clearly realizing what is it pure?” asked Śāriputra.
- 36.11 “Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “because of not obtaining and not clearly realizing form it is pure, up to because of not obtaining and not clearly realizing the knowledge of all aspects it is pure.”
- 36.12 “Lord, purity does not come into being,” said Śāriputra.
“Because it is extremely pure, Śāriputra,” said the Lord.
- 36.13 “Lord, on account of what [F.68.b] not coming into being is it pure?” asked Śāriputra.

- “Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “because form does not come into being it is pure, up to because the knowledge of all aspects does not come into being it is pure.”
- 36.14 “Lord, purity does not arise in the desire realm,” said Śāriputra.
“Because it is extremely pure, Śāriputra,” said the Lord.
- 36.15 “Lord, why does purity not arise in the desire realm?” asked Śāriputra.
“Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “purity does not arise because you cannot apprehend the desire realm’s intrinsic nature.”
- 36.16 “Lord, purity does not arise in the form realm,” said Śāriputra.
“Because it is extremely pure, Śāriputra,” said the Lord.
- 36.17 “Lord, why does purity not arise in the form realm?” asked Śāriputra.
“Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “purity does not arise because you cannot apprehend the form realm’s intrinsic nature.”
- 36.18 “Lord, purity does not arise in the formless realm,” said Śāriputra.
“Because it is extremely pure, Śāriputra,” said the Lord.
- 36.19 “Lord, why does purity not arise in the formless realm?” asked Śāriputra.
“Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “purity does not arise because you cannot apprehend the formless realm’s intrinsic nature.”
- 36.20 “Lord, purity does not know,” said Śāriputra.
“Because it is extremely pure, Śāriputra,” said the Lord.
- 36.21 “Lord, why does purity not know?” [F.69.a] asked Śāriputra.
“Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “purity does not know because dharmas are inanimate material.”
- 36.22 “Lord, purity does not know form,” said Śāriputra.
“Because it is extremely pure, Śāriputra,” said the Lord.
- 36.23 “Lord, why does purity not know form?” asked Śāriputra.
“Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “purity does not know form because it is empty of its own mark.”
- 36.24 “Lord, purity does not know feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness,” said Śāriputra.
“Because it is extremely pure, Śāriputra,” said the Lord.
- 36.25 “Lord, why does purity not know feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness?” asked Śāriputra.
- 36.26 “Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “purity does not know feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness because it is empty of its own mark.”
- 36.27 “Lord, purity does not know all dharmas,” said Śāriputra.
“Because they are extremely pure, Śāriputra,” said the Lord.
- 36.28 “Lord, why does purity not know all dharmas?” asked Śāriputra.
“Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “purity does not know all dharmas because all dharmas cannot be found.”

- 36.29 “Lord, the perfection of wisdom does not help, nor does it hinder, the knowledge of all aspects,” said Śāriputra.
- 36.30 “Because it is extremely pure, Śāriputra,” [F.69.b] said the Lord.
- 36.31 “Lord, why does the perfection of wisdom not help or hinder the knowledge of all aspects?” asked Śāriputra.
“Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “the perfection of wisdom does not help or hinder the knowledge of all aspects because of the establishment of the dharma-constituent.”
- 36.32 “Lord, the purity that is the perfection of wisdom does not assist any dharma,” said Śāriputra.
“Because it is extremely pure, Śāriputra,” said the Lord.
- 36.33 “Lord, why does the perfection of wisdom not assist any dharma?” asked Śāriputra.
“Because the dharma-constituent is without movement,” said the Lord.
- 36.34 Then venerable Subhūti said to the Lord, “Lord, form is pure because self is pure.”
“Because it is extremely pure, Subhūti,” said the Lord.
- 36.35 “Lord, why is form extremely pure because self is pure?” asked Subhūti.
“Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “because of the nonexistence of self the nonexistence of form is extremely pure.”
- 36.36 “Lord, feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are pure because self is pure,” said Subhūti.
“Because they are extremely pure, Subhūti,” said the Lord.
- 36.37 “Lord, why are feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness extremely pure because self is pure?” asked Subhūti. [F.70.a]
- 36.38 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “because of the nonexistence of self the nonexistence of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness is extremely pure.”
- 36.39 “Lord,” said Subhūti, “the perfection of giving is pure because self is pure. Similarly, the perfections of morality, patience, perseverance, concentration, and wisdom are pure because self is pure; the applications of mindfulness are pure because self is pure; the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and path are pure because self is pure. Lord, because self is pure the ten tathāgata powers are pure, and similarly, Lord, the fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, and distinct attributes of a buddha are pure.”
“Because they are extremely pure, Subhūti,” said the Lord.
- 36.40 “Lord, why are all the buddhadharmas extremely pure because self is pure?” asked Subhūti.
- 36.41 “Subhūti, because of the nonexistence of self the nonexistence of all the buddhadharmas is extremely pure,” said the Lord.

36.42 “Lord, the result of stream enterer is pure because self is pure. Similarly, Lord, the result of once-returner, the result of non-returner, the state of a worthy one, and a pratyekabuddha’s awakening are pure because self is pure,” said Subhūti.

“Because they are empty of their own mark, Subhūti,” [F.70.b] said the Lord.

36.43 “Lord, why is the result of stream enterer pure because self is pure? Why are the result of once-returner, the result of non-returner, the state of a worthy one, and a pratyekabuddha’s awakening pure because self is pure?” asked Subhūti.

“Because they are extremely pure, Subhūti,” said the Lord.

36.44 “Lord, awakening is pure because self is pure,” said Subhūti.

“Because it is extremely pure, Subhūti,” said the Lord.

36.45 “Lord, why is awakening pure because self is pure?” asked Subhūti.

“Because it is empty of its own mark, Subhūti,” said the Lord.

36.46 “Lord, the knowledge of all aspects is pure because self is pure,” said Subhūti.

“Because it is extremely pure, Subhūti,” said the Lord.

36.47 “Lord, why is the knowledge of all aspects pure because self is pure?” asked Subhūti.

“Because knowledge is not found and is not discarded, Subhūti,” said the Lord.

36.48 “Lord, there is no obtaining and no clear realization of nonduality and purity,” said Subhūti.

“Because they are extremely pure, Subhūti,” said the Lord.

36.49 “Lord, why is there is no obtaining and no clear realization of nonduality and purity?” asked Subhūti.

“Because there is no defilement and no purification, Subhūti,” said the Lord.

36.50 “Lord, form is unlimited because self is unlimited,” said Subhūti. [F.71.a]

“Because it is extremely pure, Subhūti,” said the Lord.

36.51 “Lord, why is form unlimited and pure because self is unlimited?” asked Subhūti.

“Because of the emptiness of what transcends limits and the emptiness of no beginning and no end, Subhūti,” said the Lord.

36.52 “Lord, feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are unlimited because self is unlimited,” said Subhūti.

“Because they are extremely pure, Subhūti,” said the Lord.

36.53 “Lord, why are feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness unlimited and pure because self is unlimited?” asked Subhūti.

- 36.54 “Because of the emptiness of what transcends limits and the emptiness of no beginning and no end, Subhūti,” said the Lord.
- 36.55 “Lord, such a realization as that is the perfection of wisdom of bodhisattva great beings,” said Subhūti.
“Because it is extremely pure, Subhūti,” said the Lord.
- 36.56 “Lord, why is such a realization as that the perfection of wisdom of bodhisattva great beings?” asked Subhūti.
“Because it is the knowledge of path aspects, Subhūti,” said the Lord.
- 36.57 “Lord, you cannot apprehend the perfection of wisdom of bodhisattva great beings [F.71.b] on this side, on the farther side, or on neither,” said Subhūti.
“Because it is extremely pure, Subhūti,” said the Lord.
- 36.58 “Lord, why can you not apprehend the perfection of wisdom of bodhisattva great beings on this side, on the farther side, or on neither?” asked Subhūti.
“Because of the sameness of the three time periods, Subhūti,” said the Lord.
- 36.59 “Lord,” said Subhūti, “if without skillful means a son of a good family or daughter of a good family in the Great Vehicle forms a notion of this perfection of wisdom by way of thus apprehending something, they will nullify the perfection of wisdom and distance themselves from the perfection of wisdom.”
- 36.60 “Excellent, Subhūti, excellent! Exactly so, Subhūti, exactly so!” said the Lord. “They are attached to a name and attached to a causal sign, Subhūti, even though all dharmas are without causal signs and without names.”
- 36.61 “Lord, how are they attached to a name and attached to a causal sign?” asked Subhūti.
- 36.62 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “here a son of a good family or daughter of a good family in the Great Vehicle seizes on this perfection of wisdom as a name, seizes on this perfection of wisdom as a causal sign, and, having seized on a name and causal sign, falsely projects a perfection of wisdom. Because they falsely project a perfection of wisdom they forsake and distance themselves from the perfection of wisdom.”
- 36.63 “Lord, such an excellent exposition and excellent definitive teaching of this perfection of wisdom and those who are attached and not attached to bodhisattva great beings is amazing,” said Subhūti.
- 36.64 Then venerable Śāriputra asked venerable Subhūti, “Venerable Subhūti, who are those bodhisattva great beings who are attached, and who are those who are not attached to the perfection of wisdom?”

- 36.65      “Venerable Śāriputra,” replied Subhūti, “here when sons of a good family or daughters of a good family in the Bodhisattva Vehicle [F.72.a] without skillful means perceive that form is ‘empty,’ they are attached; when they perceive that feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are ‘empty,’ they are attached, and similarly with the constituents, elements, and dependent origination too. When they perceive that the perfection of giving is ‘empty,’ they are attached, and similarly, when they perceive that the perfection of morality, patience, perseverance, concentration, and wisdom are ‘empty,’ they are attached. Similarly, when they perceive that the applications of mindfulness are ‘empty,’ they are attached, and similarly, when they perceive that the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, path, ten powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, distinct attributes of a buddha, and knowledge of all aspects are ‘empty,’ they are attached.
- 36.66      “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, when sons of a good family or daughters of a good family in the Bodhisattva Vehicle without skillful means perceive that past dharmas are ‘past dharmas,’ they are attached; when they perceive that future dharmas are ‘future,’ they are attached; and when they perceive present dharmas are ‘present,’ they are attached.
- 36.67      “Furthermore, Venerable Śāriputra, starting from the first production of the thought, when sons of a good family or daughters of a good family in the Bodhisattva Vehicle without skillful means practice the perfection of giving by way of apprehending something, they are attached; when they practice the perfections of morality, patience, perseverance, concentration, and wisdom, they are attached; when they practice the applications of mindfulness, right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and path, [F.72.b] they are attached; and when they practice the ten powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, distinct attributes of a buddha, and knowledge of all aspects, they are attached.
- 36.68      “Venerable Śāriputra, you have asked, ‘Who are those bodhisattva great beings not attached to practicing the perfection of wisdom?’ Venerable Śāriputra, it does not occur to bodhisattva great beings with skillful means practicing the perfection of wisdom to think like this: Form does not perceive form, feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness does not perceive consciousness; nor do past dharmas not perceive past dharmas, nor do future dharmas not perceive future dharmas, nor do present dharmas not perceive present dharmas. Venerable Śāriputra, because of inner emptiness, outer emptiness, inner and outer emptiness, the emptiness of emptiness, great emptiness, the emptiness of ultimate reality, the emptiness of the compounded, the emptiness of the un compounded, the emptiness of what transcends limits, the emptiness of no beginning and no end, the emptiness of nonrepudiation, the emptiness of a basic nature, the emptiness of all dharmas, the emptiness of its own mark, the emptiness of not apprehending, the emptiness of a nonexistent thing, the emptiness of an intrinsic nature, and the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, it does not occur to bodhisattva great beings with skillful means practicing the perfection of wisdom to think, 'I am giving a gift; I am giving to them; I am giving this,' and similarly, 'I am cultivating morality ... patience ... perseverance ... concentration ... and wisdom, I am cultivating this wisdom, [F.73.a] I am cultivating wisdom like this'; 'I am increasing merit, I am increasing this merit, I am increasing merit like this'; and 'I am entering into the secure state of a bodhisattva, I am purifying a buddhafield, I am bringing beings to maturity, I am accomplishing the knowledge of all aspects.' Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings with skillful means practicing the perfection of wisdom do not have such ideas. Venerable Śāriputra, those are the bodhisattva great beings who are not attached to practicing the perfection of wisdom."

36.69 Then Śatakratu, head of the gods, asked venerable Subhūti, "Venerable monk Subhūti, in what way do bodhisattva great beings become attached?"

36.70 "Kauśika," replied Subhūti, "here all that bodhisattvas perceive as the thought of awakening; all they perceive as giving, morality, patience, perseverance, concentration, and wisdom; all they perceive as inner emptiness, up to perceive as the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature; all they perceive as the ten powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, and distinct attributes of a buddha; all they perceive as the lord buddhas; and all they perceive as the wholesome roots produced from the buddhas—all of that they compress together and collect into one, weigh, and dedicate to<sup>468</sup> unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. That is the bodhisattva great beings' attachment. On account of it they are not able to practice the perfection of wisdom that has no attachment. And why? Kauśika, [F.73.b] it is because the basic nature of form cannot be dedicated. Kauśika, it is because the basic nature of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness cannot be dedicated, and similarly, up to it is because the basic nature of the knowledge of all aspects cannot be dedicated.

36.71 "Furthermore, Kauśika, bodhisattva great beings who want to teach and want to inspire others to take up unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening should teach them, inspire them to take it up, motivate them, and excite them with a thinking mind that understands things as they really are and one way or another should teach so that when practicing the perfection of giving they do not have the idea, 'I am giving a gift, I am guarding morality, I am being patient, I am making a vigorous effort, I am becoming absorbed in concentration, I am cultivating wisdom; I am practicing inner emptiness, up to I am practicing the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature; I am cultivating the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening; or I am practicing for the sake of awakening.’ Bodhisattva great beings who teach, inspire to take up, motivate, and excite others in that way do not destroy themselves, and they inspire others with the inspiration to take it up endorsed by the buddhas. Kauśika, bodhisattva great beings should teach others, should inspire others to take up, should motive others, and should excite others. Those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family will eliminate all [F.74.a] the extremes of attachment like that.”

36.72 Then the Lord said to venerable Subhūti, “Excellent, excellent, Subhūti, that you teach those extremes of attachment that bodhisattva great beings have. Subhūti, I will teach you other sorts of attachment even more subtle than those. Listen well and hard and pay attention, and I will speak to you about them.”

36.73 “Indeed I will,” venerable Subhūti said to the Lord, and he listened to the Lord accordingly.

36.74 The Lord said, “Venerable Subhūti, when those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family who have set out for unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening pay attention to the tathāgatas as a causal sign, then, to the extent that they pay attention to a causal sign, to that extent they are attached. Furthermore, there are the wholesome roots of those tathāgatas starting from when they first produced the thought, up to their full awakening to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, passing into complete nirvāṇa in the element of nirvāṇa without any aggregates left behind, and the lasting of their good Dharma. When they pay attention to them, as many as there are, as a causal sign, and while paying attention dedicate them to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, then, Subhūti, to the extent that they pay attention to a causal sign, to that extent they are attached. There are those wholesome roots of tathāgatas free from all attachment and the wholesome roots of beings other than those. When they pay attention to them as a causal sign and dedicate them to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, then, Subhūti, to the extent that they pay attention to a causal sign, to that extent they are attached.

36.75 “And why? Subhūti, it is because the tathāgatas are not something you should pay attention to as a causal sign, [F.74.b] and the wholesome roots of those other than them are not something you should pay attention to as a causal sign either.”

36.76 Then venerable Subhūti said to the Lord, “Lord, the perfection of wisdom is deep.”

- “Subhūti, it is because all dharmas are isolated in their basic nature,” said the Lord.
- 36.77 “Lord, I bow down to the perfection of wisdom,” said Subhūti “Subhūti,” said the Lord, “nobody can fully awaken to the perfection of wisdom because it is unmade and has not caused anything to come into being.”
- 36.78 “Lord, it is hard to fully awaken to all dharmas,” said Subhūti.
“Subhūti,” said the Lord, “this is because the basic nature of a dharma is not two; it is simply one. And that one basic nature of a dharma is not a basic nature. What is not a basic nature is not made, and what is not made has not caused anything to come into being. Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings know the one basic nature that is not a basic nature, that is unmade, and that has not caused anything to come into being, they eliminate all the extremes of attachment.”
- 36.79 “Lord, it is hard to realize the perfection of wisdom,” said Subhūti.
“Subhūti,” said the Lord, “this is because nobody has seen, heard, thought about, been conscious of, or fully awakened to the perfection of wisdom.”
- 36.80 “Lord, the perfection of wisdom is inconceivable,” said Subhūti.
“Subhūti,” said the Lord, “this is because [F.75.a] nobody has known the perfection of wisdom. It is not known through form; it is not known through feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness; it is not known through the constituents, sense fields, dependent origination, perfections, all the emptinesses, or dharmas on the side of awakening; and it is not known through the powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, or distinct attributes of a buddha.”
- 36.81 This was the thirty-sixth chapter, “Teaching the Purity of All Dharmas,” of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.”

CHAPTER 37: NOBODY

37.1 Then venerable Subhūti said to the Lord, “Lord, the perfection of wisdom is not an agent.”

37.2 The Lord responded, “Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom is the nonapprehender of all dharmas.”

37.3 “Lord, how do bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of wisdom?” asked Subhūti

37.4 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “here when bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of wisdom, if they do not practice form, they practice the perfection of wisdom; if they do not practice feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness, they practice the perfection of wisdom. Similarly, if they do not practice the constituents, sense fields, dependent originations, perfections, emptinesses, dharmas on the side of awakening, powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, distinct attributes of a buddha, up to or the knowledge of all aspects, [F.75.b] they practice the perfection of wisdom.

37.5 “If they do not practice with the idea ‘form is permanent’ or ‘impermanent,’ they practice the perfection of wisdom. If they do not practice with the idea ‘form is happiness’ or ‘suffering,’ ‘self’ or ‘selfless,’ ‘pleasant’ or ‘unpleasant,’ they practice the perfection of wisdom. Similarly, up to if they do not practice with the idea ‘the knowledge of all aspects is happiness’ or ‘suffering,’ ‘self’ or ‘selfless,’ ‘pleasant’ or ‘unpleasant,’ they practice the perfection of wisdom.

37.6 “And why? Because there is no such form that is permanent or impermanent, happiness or suffering, self or selfless, pleasant or unpleasant; there is no such feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness that is permanent or impermanent, happiness or suffering, self or selfless, pleasant or unpleasant. Similarly, up to there is no such knowledge of all aspects that is permanent or impermanent, happiness or suffering, self or selfless, pleasant or unpleasant.

- 37.7       “Furthermore, Subhūti, here when bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of wisdom, if they do not practice with the idea ‘form is completed’ or ‘not completed,’ they practice the perfection of wisdom; similarly, if they do not practice with the idea ‘feeling...,’ ‘perception...,’ ‘volitional factors...,’ or ‘consciousness is completed’ or ‘not completed,’ they practice the perfection of wisdom; and similarly, [F.76.a] up to if they do not practice with the idea ‘the knowledge of all aspects is completed’ or ‘not completed,’ they practice the perfection of wisdom.
- 37.8       “‘And why? ‘Form that is completed or not completed is not form.’ If they do not even practice like that, they practice the perfection of wisdom. Similarly, ‘feeling...,’ ‘perception...,’ ‘volitional factors...,’ and ‘consciousness that is completed or not completed is not consciousness.’ If they do not even practice like that, they practice the perfection of wisdom, and similarly, up to ‘the knowledge of all aspects that is completed or not completed is not the knowledge of all aspects.’ If they do not even practice like that, they practice the perfection of wisdom.”
- 37.9       The Lord having said this, venerable Subhūti replied to him, “Lord, such an excellent exposition for bodhisattva great beings of those who are attached and not attached is amazing.”
- 37.10      “Exactly so, Subhūti, exactly so!” said the Lord. “The tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete Buddha gives an excellent exposition of the attachments and nonattachments bodhisattva great beings have.
- 37.11      “Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of wisdom, if they do not practice with the idea ‘form is not attached,’ they practice the perfection of wisdom; if they do not practice with the idea ‘feeling...,’ ‘perception...,’ ‘volitional factors...,’ or ‘consciousness is not attached,’ they practice the perfection of wisdom. [F.76.b]
- 37.12      “‘If they do not practice with the idea ‘the eyes are not attached,’ they practice the perfection of wisdom; similarly, if they do not practice with the idea ‘the ears...,’ ‘the nose...,’ ‘the tongue...,’ ‘the body...,’ or ‘the thinking mind is not attached,’ they practice the perfection of wisdom.
- 37.13      “‘If they do not practice with the idea ‘the perfection of giving is not attached,’ they practice the perfection of wisdom; similarly, if they do not practice with the idea ‘the perfection of morality...,’ ‘the perfection of patience...,’ ‘the perfection of perseverance...,’ ‘the perfection of concentration...,’ or ‘the perfection of wisdom is not attached,’ they practice the perfection of wisdom. Similarly, if they do not practice with the idea ‘the ten powers...,’ ‘the fearlessnesses...,’ ‘the detailed and thorough knowledges...,’ ‘the distinct attributes of a buddha...,’ or ‘the knowledge of all aspects is not attached,’ they practice the perfection of wisdom.

- 37.14 “Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of wisdom like that, they do not perceive ‘form is not attached’; they do not perceive ‘feeling...,’ ‘perception...,’ ‘volitional factors...,’ or ‘consciousness is not attached’; up to they do not perceive ‘the knowledge of all aspects is not attached.’ They do not perceive ‘the result of stream enterer...,’ ‘the result of once-returner...,’ ‘the result of non-returner...,’ ‘the state of a worthy one...,’ ‘a pratyekabuddha’s awakening,’ or ‘unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening is not attached.’ ” [B29]
- 37.15 Then venerable Subhūti said to the Lord, “Lord, that there is no improvement even with such an exposition of this deep Dharma teaching, and no decline even without an exposition, is amazing.”
- 37.16 Venerable Subhūti having said that, the Lord replied to him, “Exactly so, Subhūti, [F.77.a] exactly so! Even with an exposition of the perfection of wisdom there is no improvement, and even without an exposition there is no decline.
- 37.17 “This is like, Subhūti, tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas raising their voice, for as long as they live, in praise and denigration of space. Though they raise their voice in praise it does not improve, and though they raise their voice in denigration it does not decline. Praising space does not improve it and denigrating it does not make it decline.
- 37.18 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, a voice raised in praise of illusory persons does not improve them, and a voice raised to denigrate them does not make them decline. They are not attached even to a voice raised in praise and do not feel enraged even by a voice raised to denigrate. It is similar, Subhūti, with the true nature of dharmas. It is like that whether it is explained, and it is like that whether it is not explained.”
- 37.19 Subhūti said, “Lord, those bodhisattva great beings who practice the perfection of wisdom, who meditate on the perfection of wisdom and are not cowed, who do the yogic practice of this perfection of wisdom and do not turn back from unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening are those who do what is difficult. And why? Lord, it is because of this: the cultivation of the perfection of wisdom is the cultivation of space, and the perfection of wisdom does not appear;<sup>469</sup> the perfection of concentration, perfection of perseverance, perfection of patience, perfection of morality, and perfection of giving do not appear in space either. Form does not appear, and feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness do not appear in space either. Inner emptiness does not appear, [F.77.b] up to and the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature does not appear in space either. The applications of mindfulness do not appear; the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and path do not appear in space either. The ten powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, and distinct attributes of a buddha do not appear in space. The result of stream enterer does not appear, and similarly the result of once-returner, the result of non-returner, the state of a worthy one, and a pratyekabuddha's awakening do not appear in space, and neither does unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening appear in space.

37.20 "Those bodhisattva great beings who have buckled on armor for the sake of beings want<sup>470</sup> to strive, want to try, want to make an effort for the sake of space. Lord, those bodhisattva great beings who want armor for the sake of beings want to liberate space. Lord, those bodhisattva great beings who want armor for the sake of all space-like dharmas want great armor. Lord, those bodhisattva great beings who want great armor for the sake of beings want to lift up space into the sky. Lord, those bodhisattva great beings who want to fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening gain the perfection of perseverance. It is to those bodhisattva great beings wanting that sort of armor, Lord, that I bow down.

37.21 "And why? To illustrate, Lord, if [F.78.a] this great billionfold world system were filled with tathāgatas like a thicket of sugarcane, or a thicket of naḍa reeds, or a thicket of bamboo, or a thicket of rushes, or a thicket of rice, or a thicket of sesame, and were those tathāgatas for an eon or for even more than an eon to explain the Dharma, and were each of those tathāgatas to bring infinite, countless beings to maturity, still, a decline or increase in the mass of beings would not appear. And why? Because of the nonexistence of beings, and because of the isolation of beings. By the same token, Lord, I have said, 'Those bodhisattva great beings who will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening for the sake of beings want to liberate space.' "

37.22 Then it occurred to some monk or other to think this: "I bow down to Bhagavatī Prajñāpāramitā, where no dharma is produced and no dharma is stopped and yet there is the aggregate of morality; there is the aggregate of [F.78.b] wisdom and the aggregate of meditative stabilization, aggregate of liberation, and aggregate of knowledge and seeing of liberation; there is the result of stream enterer, and there is the result of once-returner, the result of non-returner, the state of a worthy one, and a pratyekabuddha's awakening; there is also unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening; there are the Three Jewels—Buddha, Dharma, and Saṅgha—and there is the turning of the wheel of the Dharma."

37.23 Then Śatakratu, head of the gods, asked venerable Subhūti, "Venerable monk Subhūti, what yogic practice are the bodhisattva great beings who are doing the yogic practice of this perfection of wisdom doing?"

- 37.24      “Kauśika,” replied Subhūti, “bodhisattva great beings who think they should train in this perfection of wisdom do a yogic practice in space.”
- 37.25      Then Śatakratu, head of the gods, inquired of the Lord, “Lord, how should I guard, protect, and keep safe sons of a good family and daughters of a good family who take up, bear in mind, read aloud, master, and properly pay attention to this perfection of wisdom?”
- 37.26      Subhūti asked in return, “Kauśika, do you see that dharma you have to guard, protect, and keep safe?”
- 37.27      “Venerable monk Subhūti, I do not see that dharma I have to guard, protect, and keep safe,” replied Śatakratu,
- 37.28      “Kauśika,” Subhūti continued, “if sons of a good family or daughters of a good family stand in this perfection of wisdom as it has been expounded, just that will guard, protect, and keep them safe. Humans and even [F.79.a] nonhumans find no opportunity to hurt them if they are inseparable from this perfection of wisdom as it has been expounded. Kauśika, whoever thinks that they have to guard, protect, and keep safe bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom thinks that they have to guard, protect, and keep space safe.
- 37.29      “What do you think, Kauśika, can you guard, protect, and keep safe an illusion, a mirage, a dream, an echo, or an apparition?”
- “No, venerable monk Subhūti, you cannot,” said Śatakratu.
- 37.30      “Similarly, Kauśika,” said Subhūti, “anyone who thinks they will guard, protect, and keep safe bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom will in that case just become frustrated and get tired out.
- 37.31      “What do you think, Kauśika, can you guard, protect, and keep safe the dharma-constituent, the very limit of reality, suchness, or the inconceivable element?”
- “No, venerable monk Subhūti, you cannot,” said Śatakratu.
- 37.32      “Similarly, Kauśika,” said Subhūti, “anyone who thinks they will guard, protect, and keep safe bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom will in that case just become frustrated and tire themselves out.” [F.79.b]
- 37.33      Śatakratu responded, “To the extent, venerable monk Subhūti, that bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom comprehend all dharmas to be like a dream, like an illusion, like an echo, like a mirage, like an apparition, like the city of the gandharvas—that they comprehend all dharmas to be like a magical creation—bodhisattva great beings with such a comprehension still do not falsely project it as a dream, do not project the dream as ‘mine,’ do not project anything in a dream, do not project a causal sign of a dream, up to do not falsely project it as a magical creation, do not project the magical creation as 'mine,' do not project anything in a magical creation, and do not falsely project a causal sign of a magical creation."

37.34 "Kauśika," said Subhūti, "if bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom do not falsely project form, do not project form as 'mine,' do not project anything onto form, and do not project a causal sign of form, then they do not falsely project it as a dream, do not project the dream as 'mine,' do not project anything onto a dream, do not falsely project a causal sign of a dream; up to they do not falsely project it as a magical creation, do not project the magical creation as 'mine,' do not project anything onto a magical creation, and do not falsely project a causal sign of a magical creation. Similarly, if they do not falsely project feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... or consciousness, do not falsely project consciousness as 'mine,' do not project anything onto consciousness, and do not project a causal sign of consciousness, up to do not falsely project the knowledge of all aspects, do not project the knowledge of all aspects as 'mine,' do not project [F.80.a] anything onto the knowledge of all aspects, and do not project a causal sign of the knowledge of all aspects, then they do not falsely project it as a dream, do not project the dream as 'mine,' do not project anything onto a dream, do not project a causal sign of a dream, up to do not falsely project it as a magical creation, do not project the magical creation as 'mine,' do not project anything onto a magical creation, and do not falsely project a causal sign of a magical creation."

37.35 Then through the power of the Buddha, all the Cāturmahārājika gods and the Trāyastriṃśa, Yāma, Tuṣita, Nirmāṇarati, Paranirmitavaśavartin, Brahmakāyika, Brahmapurohita, Brahmapārṣadya, up to the Śuddhāvāsa class of gods, as many as there were stationed in the great billionfold world system, took divine sandalwood powders and specifically strewed them right over the Lord, approached the Lord, went up to him, bowed their heads to the feet of the Lord, and stood to one side.

37.36 Then all the Cāturmahārājika, Indra, Brahmā, up to the Śuddhāvāsa class of gods focused their thoughts, as they habitually do, through the power of the Buddha on a thousand buddhas in the eastern direction appearing in just these ways<sup>471</sup> teaching the Dharma with just these words; on monks, all of them with the name Subhūti, asking about this very perfection of wisdom and about this very chapter of the Perfection of Wisdom; and on Śatakratus, heads of the gods, all of them asking, through the power of the Buddha, about this very perfection of wisdom. Similarly, they focused their thoughts, as they habitually do, through the power of the Buddha on a thousand buddhas each in the south, west, and north, below and above, and the intermediate directions as well, appearing in just these ways teaching the Dharma with just these words; on monks, all of them with the name Subhūti, asking about [F.80.b] this very perfection of wisdom, about this very chapter of the Perfection of Wisdom; and on Śatakratus, heads of the gods, all of them asking, through the power of the Buddha, about this very perfection of wisdom.

37.37 Then the Lord said to venerable Subhūti, “Subhūti, the bodhisattva great being Maitreya, having fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, will teach just this perfection of wisdom at just this place on the earth as well. Those tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas that appear during this Fortunate Age will also, having fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, teach just this perfection of wisdom at just this place on the earth.”

37.38 The Lord having said this, venerable Subhūti then inquired of him, “Lord, with which attributes, tokens, and signs will the bodhisattva great being Maitreya, having fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, teach this perfection of wisdom?”

37.39 The Lord said, “Subhūti, here the bodhisattva great being Maitreya, having fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, will not teach the Dharma ‘form is permanent’ or ‘impermanent’; and similarly, he will not teach the Dharma ‘form is happiness’ or ‘suffering,’ ‘form is self’ or ‘selfless,’ or ‘form is pleasant’ or ‘unpleasant.’ He will not teach the Dharma ‘form is bound’ or ‘freed.’

37.40 “Similarly, he will not teach the Dharma ‘feeling...,’ ‘perception...,’ ‘volitional factors...,’ or ‘consciousness is permanent’ or ‘impermanent’; and similarly, he will not teach the Dharma ‘consciousness is happiness’ or ‘suffering,’ ‘consciousness is self’ [F.81.a] or ‘selfless,’ or ‘consciousness is pleasant’ or ‘unpleasant.’ He will not teach the Dharma ‘consciousness is bound’ or ‘freed.’

37.41 “He will not teach the Dharma ‘form is past,’ ‘is future,’ or ‘is present.’ Similarly, he will not teach the Dharma ‘feeling...,’ ‘perception...,’ ‘volitional factors...,’ or ‘consciousness is past,’ ‘is future,’ or ‘is present.’ Similarly, up to he will not teach the Dharma ‘the knowledge of all aspects is past,’ ‘is future,’ or ‘is present.’ He will not teach the Dharma ‘the knowledge of all aspects is bound’ or ‘freed.’ ”

37.42 Then venerable Subhūti asked the Lord, “Lord, how will the bodhisattva great being Maitreya, having fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, teach this perfection of wisdom?”

37.43 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “he will teach the extremely pure Dharma ‘form is extremely pure,’ and similarly, he will teach the extremely pure Dharma ‘feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are extremely pure.’ Similarly, up to he will teach the extremely pure Dharma ‘the knowledge of all aspects is extremely pure.’ ”

37.44 “Lord, the perfection of wisdom is pure,’ said Subhūti.

“Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “the perfection of wisdom is pure because form is pure. Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom is pure because feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are pure, up to Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom is pure because [F.81.b] the knowledge of all aspects is pure.”

37.45 Subhūti asked, “In what way, Lord, is the perfection of wisdom pure because form is pure? In what way is the perfection of wisdom pure because feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are pure, up to in what way, Lord, is the perfection of wisdom pure because the knowledge of all aspects is pure?”

37.46 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “form that is unproduced and unceasing, without defilement and without purification, is pure form. Subhūti, feeling..., perception..., volitional factors..., and consciousness that is unproduced and unceasing, without defilement and without purification, is pure consciousness. Similarly, Subhūti, up to the knowledge of all aspects that is unproduced and unceasing, without defilement and without purification, is the pure knowledge of all aspects.

37.47 “Furthermore, Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom is pure because space is pure.”

“In what way, Lord, is the perfection of wisdom pure because space is pure?” asked Subhūti.

37.48 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “space is pure because it is unproduced and unceasing, without defilement and without purification.

37.49 “Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom is pure because space is untainted.”

“In what way, Lord, is the perfection of wisdom pure because space is untainted?” [F.82.a] asked Subhūti.

37.50 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “the perfection of wisdom is pure because space cannot be grasped.”

37.51 “In what way, Lord, is the perfection of wisdom pure because space cannot be grasped?” asked Subhūti.

37.52 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “the perfection of wisdom is pure because space does not say anything.”

37.53 “In what way, Lord, is the perfection of wisdom pure because space does not say anything?” asked Subhūti.

37.54 The Lord replied, “The perfection of wisdom is pure because, Subhūti, just like the two sounds of an echo, to give an analogy, so too space does not say anything.

- 37.55 “Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom is pure because space does not converse about anything.”
- 37.56 “In what way, Lord, is the perfection of wisdom pure because space does not converse about anything?” asked Subhūti.
- 37.57 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “in space there is no conversation at all, so the perfection of wisdom is pure because space does not converse about anything.
- 37.58 “Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom is pure because space cannot be apprehended.”
“In what way, Lord, is the perfection of wisdom pure because space cannot be apprehended?” asked Subhūti.
- 37.59 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “in space there is nothing at all that can be apprehended, so the perfection of wisdom is pure because space cannot be apprehended.
- 37.60 “Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom is pure because form is extremely pure, cannot be apprehended, is unproduced and unceasing, [F.82.b] and without defilement and without purification. Similarly, Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom is pure because feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are extremely pure, cannot be apprehended, are unproduced and unceasing, and are without defilement and without purification. Similarly, Subhūti, up to the perfection of wisdom is pure because the knowledge of all aspects is extremely pure, cannot be apprehended, is unproduced and unceasing, and is without defilement and without purification. Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom is pure because all dharmas are extremely pure, cannot be apprehended, are unproduced and unceasing, and are without defilement and without purification.”
- 37.61 “In what way, Lord, is the perfection of wisdom pure because all dharmas are extremely pure, cannot be apprehended, are unproduced and unceasing, and are without defilement and without purification?” asked Subhūti.
- 37.62 “Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom is pure because all dharmas are extremely pure,” replied the Lord.
- 37.63 Subhūti said, “Lord, sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who take up, bear in mind, read aloud, master, and properly pay attention to this perfection of wisdom will not contract diseases of the eyes; will not contract diseases of the ears, nose, tongue, or body; and will not contract diseases of the thinking mind, will not have stunted minor parts of the body, and will not have decrepit bodies. [F.83.a] Those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family will not die in a distressed state. Many thousands of gods who want to listen to the Dharma follow right behind them. The Cāturmahārājika, up to the Śuddhāvāsa class of gods follow right behind. On the eighth, the fourteenth, and the fifteenth<sup>472</sup> many hosts of gods gather wherever sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who are Dharma preachers preach the perfection of wisdom. Those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who are preaching the perfection of wisdom create a lot of merit—create infinite, countless, inconceivable, immeasurable amounts of merit.”

37.64 “Exactly so, Subhūti, exactly so!” said the Lord. “Those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who preach the perfection of wisdom in front of an audience of gods on the eighth, the fourteenth, and the fifteenth create infinite, countless, inconceivable, immeasurable, inexpressible amounts of merit.

37.65 “And why? Subhūti, it is because this—namely, the perfection of wisdom—is a great jewel. Thanks to this, the perfection of wisdom jewel, beings are freed from hell, freed from the animal world, freed from the world of Yama, and freed from being a poor human.

37.66 “They are born in great sāla tree–like royal families, born in great sāla tree–like brahmin families, born in great sāla tree–like business families, up to born as Naivasamjñānāsamjñāyatana gods. This perfection of wisdom produces the result of stream enterer, and it produces [F.83.b] the result of once-returner, the result of non-returner, the state of a worthy one, a pratyekabuddha’s awakening, and unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

37.67 “And why? Because in this perfection of wisdom the ten wholesome actions are taught in detail. Because thanks to it great sāla tree–like royal families exist, great sāla tree–like brahmin families exist, and great sāla tree–like business families exist; the Cāturmahārājika gods, the Trāyastriṃśa, Yāma, Tuṣita, Nirmāṇarati, and Paranirmitavaśavartin gods, the Brahmapurohita, Brahmakāyika, Brahmapāṛṣadya, Parītābha, Apramāṇābha, Ābhāsvara, Parittaśubha, Apramāṇāsubha, Śubhakṛtsna, Bṛhatphala, and Asamjñīsattva, the Sudarśana, Sudṛśa, Avṛha, Atapa, and Akaniṣṭha gods, and the gods in the Ākāśānāntyaayatana, Vijñānānāntyaayatana, Ākimcityāyatana, and Naivasamjñānāsamjñāyatana exist; the result of stream enterer exists, and the result of once-returner, the result of non-returner, the state of a worthy one, a pratyekabuddha’s awakening, and unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening exist. Because in this perfection of wisdom the four concentrations, the four immeasurables, and four formless absorptions exist; the perfection of giving exists; the perfections of morality, patience, perseverance, concentration, and wisdom exist; the applications of mindfulness exist; the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and path exist; inner emptiness, [F.84.a] up to the existence of the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature exists; the ten powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, and eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha exist, up to the knowledge of all aspects exists, that is to say, in this perfection of wisdom those dharmas and so on are taught in detail. Therefore this—that is, the perfection of wisdom—is a great jewel.

37.68 “Subhūti, in the perfection of wisdom there is no dharma that is produced or ceases, is defiled or purified, or is appropriated or rejected at all. And why? Because those dharmas that could be produced or cease, or could be defiled or purified, or could be appropriated or rejected do not exist.

37.69 “Subhūti, you cannot apprehend any dharma that is wholesome or unwholesome, with outflows or without outflows, a basic immorality or not a basic immorality, with afflictions or without afflictions, ordinary or extraordinary, compounded or uncompounded in this perfection of wisdom jewel at all. Subhūti, because of this one of many explanations, this perfection is a great jewel.

37.70 “Subhūti, that perfection is a great jewel because that great jewel is not tainted by any dharma. And why? Because you cannot apprehend that dharma on account of which it might become tainted. Therefore, Subhūti, this great jewel perfection is untainted.

37.71 “Subhūti, if bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom thus do not form any notion and thus do not conceive, thus do not apprehend, thus do not engage in thought construction, they are practicing the perfection of wisdom, they are meditating on the perfection of wisdom, and they see the lord buddhas. They go from [F.84.b] buddhafiield to buddhafiield to respect, revere, honor, and worship those lord buddhas, and when they are going from buddhafiield to buddhafiield they also bring beings to maturity and purify a buddhafiield.

37.72 “Subhūti,<sup>473</sup> this perfection of wisdom does not cause any dharma to be gained, does not teach it, does not cause it to be borne in mind, does not bestow it, does not make it arise, does not make it stop, does not make it defiled, does not make it pure, does not make it decline, and does not make it increase. It is not past, or future, or present either.

37.73 “Subhūti, this perfection of wisdom also does not cause the desire realm to be transcended, and it does not make it be there either. It does not cause the form realm to be transcended, and it does not make it be there either. It does not cause the formless realm to be transcended, and it does not make it be there either. It does not bestow the perfection of giving, and it also does not remove it; it does not bestow the perfections of morality, patience, perseverance, concentration, or wisdom, and it also does not remove them. It does not bestow inner emptiness, and it also does not remove it; it does not bestow, up to the existence of the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, and it also does not remove it. It does not bestow the applications of mindfulness, and it also does not remove them. Similarly, it does not bestow the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, or path, and it also does not remove them. It does not bestow the ten powers, and it also does not remove them; it does not bestow the four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, [F.85.a] or eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, and it also does not remove them. It does not bestow the result of stream enterer, and it also does not remove it; it does not bestow the result of once-returner, the result of non-returner, the state of a worthy one, a pratyekabuddha's awakening, or the knowledge of all aspects, and it also does not remove them.

37.74 "This perfection of wisdom does not bestow the buddhadharmas, and it also does not remove them; it does not bestow the dharmas of ordinary persons, and it also does not remove them; it does not bestow the dharmas of śrāvakas or pratyekabuddhas, and it also does not remove them; it does not bestow the buddha dharmas, and it also does not remove them. Subhūti, this perfection of wisdom does not remove the compounded element, and it does not bestow the un-compounded element.

37.75 "And why? Because this principle of the dharma-constituent simply remains whether the tathāgatas arise or whether the tathāgatas do not arise, and the tathāgatas fully awaken to and are clearly aware of it, and while fully awakened and clearly aware they speak about it and explain, reveal, and teach it."

37.76 Then a great many hundred thousands of gods standing in the sky above shouted and let out a cheer, and while strewing down blue lotus, lotus, red lotus, white lotus, and coral tree flowers they also exclaimed, "Ah! We are seeing a second turning of the wheel of the Dharma in the world." And while this perfection of wisdom was being taught, a great many thousands of gods [F.85.b] gained the forbearance for the nonproduction of dharmas from it.

37.77 Then the Lord said to venerable Subhūti, "Subhūti, given the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, this perfection of wisdom has not been made available because any Dharma has to be engaged in or backed away from, so it is not a second turning of the wheel of Dharma, and it is not a first turning either."

37.78 "Lord, what is the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature when<sup>474</sup> this perfection of wisdom has not been made available in order to turn forward or turn backward any Dharma?" asked Subhūti.

37.79 "Subhūti," replied the Lord, "the perfection of wisdom is empty of the perfection of wisdom, and similarly, the perfection of concentration..., perseverance..., patience..., morality..., and giving is empty of the perfection of giving. Inner emptiness is empty of inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature is empty of the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature. The applications of mindfulness are empty of the applications of mindfulness, and similarly, the right efforts..., the legs of miraculous power..., the faculties..., the powers..., the limbs of awakening..., and path is empty of the path. The ten powers are empty of the ten powers, and the four fearlessnesses..., the four detailed and thorough knowledges..., and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha are empty of the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha. The result of stream enterer is empty of the result of stream enterer, and similarly, the result of once-returner..., the result of non-returner..., the state of a worthy one..., a pratyekabuddha's awakening..., and the knowledge of all aspects is empty of the knowledge of all aspects."

37.80 Subhūti said, "This—that is, [F.86.a] the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, the perfection of wisdom—is a great perfection. All dharmas are empty of the intrinsic nature of all dharmas, but still bodhisattva great beings, thanks to this perfection of wisdom, will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening without fully awakening to any dharma at all, will turn the wheel of the Dharma even though any Dharma that has to be engaged in or backed away from does not exist, will not see any Dharma at all, and will not not see any Dharma at all either. And why? Because a dharma that engages or backs away cannot be apprehended, because all dharmas absolutely do not come into being, so emptiness does not engage, nor does it back away; the signless and the wishless also do not engage, nor do they back away.

37.81 "Therefore, this teaching of the perfection of wisdom, this illumination, discourse, exposition, advancement, explanation, revelation, description, making clear, and explication is the teaching of the perfection of wisdom that is perfectly pure. Nobody teaches that teaching of the perfection of wisdom, and nobody receives it, and what nobody has taught and nobody has received, that nobody has directly realized. And what nobody has taught, nobody has received, and nobody has directly realized, there nobody has entered into nirvāṇa either. And in this Dharma teaching there is also nobody who becomes worthy of offerings."

37.82 This was the thirty-seventh chapter, "Nobody," of "The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines."<sup>475</sup>

38.           CHAPTER 38: CANNOT BE APPREHENDED

38.1       Then [F.86.b] venerable Subhūti said to the Lord, “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection of a nonexistent thing.”

          “Because space is a nonexistent thing, Subhūti,” replied the Lord.

38.2       “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection of equality,” said Subhūti.
          “Because all dharmas are equally nonapprehendable, Subhūti,” replied the Lord.

38.3       “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection of isolation,” said Subhūti.
          “Because of the emptiness that transcends limits,” replied the Lord.

38.4       “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that cannot be crushed,” said Subhūti.

          “Because all dharmas are unfindable,” replied the Lord.

38.5       “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection with no basis,” said Subhūti.

          “Because of not having a name and body,” replied the Lord.

38.6       “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection like space,” said Subhūti.
          “Because the movement of breath in and out is unfindable,” replied the Lord.

38.7       “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection without language,” said Subhūti.

          “Because applied and sustained thought is unfindable,” replied the Lord.

38.8       “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a nameless perfection,” [F.87.a] said Subhūti.

          “Because the feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness aggregates are unfindable,”<sup>476</sup> replied the Lord.

38.9       “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that does not go away,” said Subhūti.

          “Because all phenomena do not go away,” replied the Lord.

38.10      “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is not stolen,” said Subhūti.

- “Because all dharmas cannot be seized,” replied the Lord.
- 38.11 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that has not come to an end,”<sup>477</sup> said Subhūti.
“Because all dharmas have come to an end in extreme purity,” replied the Lord.
- 38.12 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that has no arising,” said Subhūti.
“Because all dharmas do not arise and do not stop,” replied the Lord.
- 38.13 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection without a maker,” said Subhūti.
“Because a maker is unfindable,” replied the Lord.
- 38.14 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection without a knower,” said Subhūti.
“Because a knower is unfindable,” replied the Lord.
- 38.15 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that does not change places,” said Subhūti.
“Because death and rebirth are unfindable,” replied the Lord.
- 38.16 “Lord, [F.87.b] this perfection of wisdom is an indestructible perfection,” said Subhūti.
“Because all dharmas are indestructible in their nature, death and rebirth cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.17 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a dream-like perfection,” said Subhūti.
“Because a dream that has been dreamed cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.18 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is an echo-like perfection,” said Subhūti.
“Because a sound called out cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.19 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is an apparition-like perfection,” said Subhūti.
“Because a reflection in a mirror cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.20 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a mirage-like perfection,” said Subhūti.
“Because falling<sup>478</sup> water cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.21 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is an illusion-like perfection,” said Subhūti.
“Because a causal sign cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.22 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection without confusion,” said Subhūti.
“Because the gloom of ignorance cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.23 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection without defilement,” said Subhūti.

- “Because defilement cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.24 “Lord, [F.88.a] this perfection of wisdom is a perfection without purification,” said Subhūti.
- “Because the presence of defilement cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.25 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that does not stand,” said Subhūti.
- “Because all phenomena cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.26 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that cannot be apprehended,” said Subhūti.
- “Because the possible cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.27 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection without thought construction,” said Subhūti.
- “Because all thought construction has been destroyed,” replied the Lord.
- 38.28 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection without false projection,” said Subhūti.
- “Because all false projection has been destroyed,” replied the Lord.
- 38.29 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is an immovable perfection,” said Subhūti.
- “Because of the establishment of the dharma-constituent,” replied the Lord.
- 38.30 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a detached perfection,” said Subhūti.
- “Because it is a full awakening to all dharmas as unmistakable suchness,” replied the Lord.
- 38.31 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection without obsession,” [F.88.b] said Subhūti.
- “Because all dharmas are in a state where there is no conceptualization,” replied the Lord.
- 38.32 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a calm perfection,” said Subhūti.
- “Because all dharmas are without causal signs and cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.33 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection without greed,” said Subhūti.
- “Because the causal sign of greed cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.34 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection without hate,” said Subhūti.
- “Because hate is not real,” replied the Lord. [B30]
- 38.35 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection without confusion,” said Subhūti.
- “Because of blowing away the darkness of confusion,” replied the Lord.

- 38.36 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection without affliction,” said Subhūti.
“Because it is without false imagination,” replied the Lord.
- 38.37 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection without a being,” said Subhūti.
“Because a being cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.38 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is not a means of measurement,” said Subhūti.
“Because all phenomena do not fully arise,” [F.89.a] replied the Lord.
- 38.39 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is not at the two extremes,” said Subhūti.
“Because an extreme is unfindable,” replied the Lord.
- 38.40 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a distinct perfection,” said Subhūti.
“Because all phenomena are distinct,” replied the Lord.
- 38.41 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is an untarnished perfection,” said Subhūti.
“Because it has gone beyond the śrāvaka and pratyekabuddha levels,” replied the Lord.
- 38.42 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that does not conceptualize,” said Subhūti.
“Because conceptualization cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.43 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection without a measure,” said Subhūti.
“Because the measure of all phenomena cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.44 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a space-like perfection,” said Subhūti.
“Because all phenomena are without attachment, like space,” replied the Lord.
- 38.45 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is an impermanent perfection,” said Subhūti.
“Because there is no destruction of all phenomena,” replied the Lord.
- 38.46 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a suffering perfection,” said Subhūti.
[F.89.b]
“Because all phenomena are not suitable to be clung to,” replied the Lord.
- 38.47 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a selfless perfection,” said Subhūti.
“Because all phenomena are not settled down on,” replied the Lord.
- 38.48 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is emptiness,” said Subhūti.
“Because an intrinsic nature of all phenomena cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.49 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection without a defining mark,” said Subhūti.

- “Because all phenomena have no causal sign,” replied the Lord.
- 38.50 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is inner emptiness,” said Subhūti.
- “Because all inner phenomena cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.51 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is the outer emptiness,” said Subhūti.
- “Because all outer phenomena cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.52 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is inner and outer emptiness,” said Subhūti.
- “Because all inner and outer phenomena cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.53 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is the emptiness of emptiness,” said Subhūti.
- “Because the emptiness of emptiness cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.54 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is the great emptiness,” [F.90.a] said Subhūti.
- “Because the great emptiness cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.55 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is the emptiness of ultimate reality,” said Subhūti.
- “Because the emptiness of ultimate reality cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.56 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is the emptiness of the compounded,” said Subhūti.
- “Because the emptiness of the compounded cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.57 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is the emptiness of the uncompounded,” said Subhūti.
- “Because the emptiness of the uncompounded cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.58 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is the emptiness of what transcends limits,” said Subhūti.
- “Because the emptiness of what transcends limits cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.59 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is the emptiness of no beginning and no end,” said Subhūti.
- “Because the emptiness of no beginning and no end cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.60 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is the emptiness of nonrepudiation,” said Subhūti.

- “Because the emptiness of nonrepudiation cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.61 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is the emptiness of a basic nature,” said Subhūti.
“Because compounded and uncompounded dharmas [F.90.b] cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.62 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is the emptiness of all dharmas,” said Subhūti.
“Because the emptiness of all dharmas cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.63 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is the emptiness of its own mark,” said Subhūti.
“Because the emptiness of its own mark cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.64 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is the emptiness of not apprehending,” said Subhūti.
- 38.65 “Because the emptiness of not apprehending cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.66 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is the emptiness of a nonexistent thing,” said Subhūti.
“Because the emptiness of a nonexistent thing cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.67 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is the emptiness of an intrinsic nature,” said Subhūti.
“Because the emptiness of an intrinsic nature cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.68 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature,” said Subhūti.
“Because the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.69 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is the applications of mindfulness,” said Subhūti.
“Because body, feeling, mind, and dharmas cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord. [F.91.a]
- 38.70 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is the right efforts,” said Subhūti.
“Because wholesome and unwholesome dharmas cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.71 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is the legs of miraculous power,” said Subhūti.

- “Because the four legs of miraculous power cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.72 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is the faculties,” said
Subhūti.
“Because the five faculties cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.73 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is the powers,” said
Subhūti.
“Because the five powers cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.74 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is the limbs of awakening,” said Subhūti.
“Because the seven limbs of awakening cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.75 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is the path,” said
Subhūti.
“Because the eightfold path cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.76 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is emptiness,” said
Subhūti.
“Because distortion cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.77 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is signlessness,” said
Subhūti.
“Because conceptualization cannot be apprehended,” [F.91.b] replied the Lord.
- 38.78 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is wishlessness,” said
Subhūti.
“Because a wish cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.79 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is deliverance,” said
Subhūti.
“Because the eight deliverances cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.80 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is absorption,” said
Subhūti.
“Because the nine serial absorptions cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.81 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is the noble truth,” said Subhūti.
“Because suffering, origination, cessation, and path cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.82 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is giving,” said
Subhūti.
“Because miserliness cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.

- 38.83 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is morality,” said Subhūti.
“Because immorality cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.84 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is patience,” said Subhūti.
“Because malice cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.85 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is perseverance,” [F.92.a] said Subhūti.
“Because laziness cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.86 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is concentration,” said Subhūti.
“Because distraction cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.87 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is wisdom,” said Subhūti.
“Because intellectual confusion cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.88 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is the ten powers,” said Subhūti.
“Because all the aspects of all dharmas cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.89 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is fearlessness,” said Subhūti.
“Because the knowledge of path aspects cannot be apprehended,” replied the Lord.
- 38.90 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is detailed and thorough knowledge,” said Subhūti.
“Because knowledge is totally unattached and unimpeded,” replied the Lord.
- 38.91 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is great compassion,” said Subhūti.
“Because it does not forsake all beings,” replied the Lord.
- 38.92 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is the distinct attributes of a buddha,” said Subhūti.
“Because it has gone beyond all śrāvaka and pratyekabuddha attributes,” [F.92.b] replied the Lord.
- 38.93 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is suchness,” said Subhūti.
“Because it is the suchness of all that has been said,” replied the Lord.
- 38.94 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is self-originated,” said Subhūti.
“Because it is in control of all dharmas,” replied the Lord.

38.95      “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is a perfection that is buddha,” said Subhūti.

            “Because it has fully awakened to all aspects of all phenomena,” replied the Lord.

38.96      This was the thirty-eighth chapter, “Cannot Be Apprehended,” of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.”

CHAPTER 39: THE NORTHERN REGION

39.1

Then it occurred to Śatakratu, head of the gods, to think, “Those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family must have served the earlier victors well for the proclamation of this perfection of wisdom to be within their range of hearing; their wholesome roots must be sprung from the Tathāgata, and they must have been assisted by spiritual friends for the proclamation of this perfection of wisdom to be within their range of hearing too, so what need is there to say more about those who take up, bear in mind, read aloud, and master it, and about those who, having taken it up and borne it in mind, read it aloud, and mastered it, also practice it for suchness?<sup>479</sup> Those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who take up, bear in mind, read aloud, and master this perfection of wisdom, and who, having taken it up and borne it in mind, read it aloud and mastered it, also practice it for suchness, have attended on many buddhas. Those sons of a good family [F.93.a] or daughters of a good family who do not tremble, feel frightened, or become terrified even when they have listened to this deep perfection of wisdom have also made inquiries about it with earlier tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas. Those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who do not tremble, feel frightened, or become terrified even when they have listened to this deep perfection of wisdom have also practiced the perfection of giving and practiced the perfection of morality, patience, perseverance, concentration, and wisdom for many hundred millions of eons.”

Then venerable Śāriputra said to the Lord, “Lord, those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who do not tremble, feel frightened, or become terrified even when they have listened to this deep perfection of wisdom, those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who bear in mind, read aloud, master, and properly strive for this perfection of wisdom, should be treated just as one treats the bodhisattva great beings irreversible from awakening. And why? Because, Lord, this perfection of wisdom is deep, and because those who have not practiced the six perfections before are not able to believe in this deep perfection of wisdom. Lord, those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who have it in mind to reject this deep perfection of wisdom are those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who have rejected this deep perfection of wisdom in the past as well. And why? Lord, it is because those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who do not have faith in, do not like, and do not have a serene confidence in this perfection of wisdom are [F.93.b] those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who do not inquire of the buddhas or śrāvakas of the buddhas, ‘How do you practice the perfection of giving? How do you practice the perfection of morality, patience, perseverance, concentration, and wisdom? How do you cultivate inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature? How do you cultivate the applications of mindfulness? How do you cultivate the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and paths? How do you cultivate the ten tathāgata powers? How do you cultivate the fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, and distinct attributes of a buddha?’ ”

39.3 Then Śatakratu, head of the gods, said to venerable Śāriputra, “Venerable monk Śāriputra, what is the big surprise, given that this perfection of wisdom is so deep, that those bodhisattva great beings who in the past did not believe in this deep perfection of wisdom; did not believe in the perfection of giving, morality, patience, perseverance, concentration, or wisdom; did not believe in inner emptiness, up to did not believe in the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature; did not believe in the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening; did not believe in the ten tathāgata powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, five clairvoyances, or [F.94.a] eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha—what is the big surprise that they reject this deep perfection of wisdom? It is no big surprise.

39.4 “Venerable monk Śāriputra, one who bows down to this deep perfection of wisdom bows down to the knowledge of a knower of all aspects. I bow down to Bhagavatī Prajñāpāramitā.”

39.5 Then the Lord said to Śatakratu, head of the gods, “Exactly so, Kauśika, exactly so! One who bows down to this deep perfection of wisdom bows down to the knowledge of a knower of all aspects. And why? Kauśika, it is because the knowledge of all aspects has come forth from this perfection of wisdom, and a knower of the knowledge of all aspects generates<sup>480</sup> the perfection of wisdom, so a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who wants to stand in the knowledge of all aspects should stand in the perfection of wisdom. Similarly, a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who wants to produce the knowledge of a knower of all aspects; who wants to destroy all residual impressions, connections, and afflictions; who wants to fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening; and who wants to turn the wheel of the Dharma should stand in the perfection of wisdom. Similarly, bodhisattva great beings who want to establish beings in the result of stream enterer; who want to establish them in the result of once-returned, the result of non-returned, and the result of a worthy one; who want to establish them in a pratyekabuddha's awakening; who want to establish beings in unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening; [F.94.b] and who want to draw together a community of monks should practice the yoga of the perfection of wisdom."

39.6 The Lord having said that, Śatakratu, head of the gods, inquired of him, "Lord, how do those bodhisattva great beings stand<sup>481</sup> in the perfection of wisdom? How do they practice the yoga? How do they stand in the perfection of concentration, perseverance, patience, morality, and giving? How do they practice the yoga? How, practicing the perfection of wisdom, do they practice the yoga of inner emptiness, up to how do they practice the yoga of the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature? Lord, how do bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom practice the yoga of the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening? Similarly, how do bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom practice the yoga of the ten tathāgata powers, the four fearlessnesses, the four detailed and thorough knowledges, the five clairvoyances, and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha?"

39.7 Śatakratu, head of the gods, having thus inquired, the Lord replied to him, "Excellent, Kauśika, excellent that you have it in mind to inquire of the Tathāgata about this topic! Kauśika, your confidence giving a readiness to speak has arisen through the power of the Buddha, so listen well and hard and pay attention, and I will speak to you about it.

39.8 "Here, Kauśika, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom do not stand [F.95.a] in form, and when they do not stand in form they practice the yoga of form.<sup>482</sup> Similarly, they do not stand in feeling..., they do not stand in perception..., they do not stand in volitional factors..., and they do not stand in consciousness, and when they do not stand in consciousness they practice the yoga of consciousness. Similarly, they do not stand in the eyes..., and they do not stand in the ears, the nose, the tongue, the body, or the thinking mind, and thus they practice the yoga of the perfection of wisdom. Similarly, they do not stand in a form, and they do not stand in a sound, a smell, a taste, a feeling, or dharmas, and thus they practice the yoga of the perfection of wisdom. Similarly, they do not stand in the perfection of giving and thus practice the yoga of the perfection of wisdom. Similarly, they do not stand in the perfection of morality, patience, perseverance, concentration, or wisdom, and thus practice the yoga of the perfection of wisdom. They do not stand in inner emptiness and thus practice the yoga of the perfection of wisdom. They do not stand in ... up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature and thus practice the yoga of the perfection of wisdom. They do not stand in the applications of mindfulness and thus practice the yoga of the perfection of wisdom. Similarly, they do not stand in the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, or paths and thus practice the yoga of the perfection of wisdom. They do not stand in the four immeasurables and thus practice the yoga of the perfection of wisdom. They do not stand in the four concentrations, four formless absorptions, or five clairvoyances; and they do not stand in the ten tathāgata powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, or eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, [F.95.b] and thus they practice the yoga of the perfection of wisdom.

39.9 “And why? Because they cannot apprehend that form that they might stand in or the application to it that they might practice. Similarly, it is because they cannot apprehend feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness; and similarly, the constituents, the sense fields, dependent origination, the perfections, the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, all the emptinesses, the ten powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, or the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha that they might stand in or the yoga of which they might practice.

39.10 “Furthermore, Kauśika, bodhisattva great beings do not apply themselves to form,<sup>483</sup> and because they do not apply themselves to form like that, they practice the yoga of form. Similarly, they do not apply themselves to feeling..., perception..., volitional factors..., or consciousness, and because they do not apply themselves to consciousness like that, they practice the yoga of consciousness. Similarly, they do not apply themselves to the constituents..., the sense fields..., dependent origination..., the perfections..., the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening..., all the emptinesses..., the ten powers..., the fearlessnesses..., the detailed and thorough knowledges..., or the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, and because they do not apply themselves to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha like that, they practice the yoga of the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha.

39.11 “And why? Because those bodhisattva great beings do not apprehend form as past, do not apprehend form as future, and do not apprehend form as present. Similarly, they do not apprehend feeling..., perception..., volitional factors..., or consciousness [F.96.a] as past, do not apprehend consciousness as future, and do not apprehend consciousness as present. Similarly, they do not apprehend the constituents..., the sense fields..., dependent origination..., the perfections..., the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening..., all the emptinesses..., the ten powers..., the fearlessnesses..., the detailed and thorough knowledges..., or the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha as past, do not apprehend them as future, and do not apprehend them as present.”

39.12 Venerable Śāriputra then said to the Lord, “Lord, the perfection of wisdom is deep.”

“Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “because the suchness of form is deep, the perfection of wisdom is deep. Śāriputra, similarly, because the suchness of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness is deep, the perfection of wisdom is deep. Śāriputra, similarly, because the suchness of the constituents, the sense fields, dependent origination, the perfections, the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, all the emptinesses, the ten powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, and the distinct attributes of a buddha are deep, the perfection of wisdom is deep.”

39.13 “Lord, the perfection of wisdom is hard to fathom,” said Śāriputra.

“Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “because the suchness of form is hard to fathom, the perfection of wisdom is hard to fathom. Śāriputra, similarly, because the suchness of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness is hard to fathom, the perfection of wisdom is hard to fathom. [F.96.b] Śāriputra, similarly, because the suchness of the constituents, the sense fields, dependent origination, the perfections, the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, all the emptinesses, the ten powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, and the distinct attributes of a buddha is hard to fathom, the perfection of wisdom is hard to fathom.

39.14 “Lord, the perfection of wisdom is immeasurable,” said Śāriputra.

“Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “because the suchness of form is immeasurable, the perfection of wisdom is immeasurable. Śāriputra, similarly, because the suchness of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness is immeasurable, the perfection of wisdom is immeasurable. Śāriputra, similarly, because the suchness of the constituents, the sense fields, dependent origination, the perfections, the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, all the emptinesses, the ten powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, and the distinct attributes of a buddha is immeasurable, the perfection of wisdom is immeasurable.

39.15 Śāriputra then asked, “Lord, how then do bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of wisdom?”

- 39.16 “Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “if bodhisattva great beings do not practice with the idea ‘form is deep,’ they practice the perfection of wisdom. Similarly, if they do not practice with the idea ‘feeling...,’ ‘perception...,’ ‘volitional factors...,’ or ‘consciousness is deep,’ they practice the perfection of wisdom. Similarly, if they do not practice with the idea ‘the constituents...,’ ‘the sense fields...,’ ‘dependent origination...,’ ‘the perfections...,’ [F.97.a] ‘the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening...,’ ‘all the emptinesses...,’ ‘the ten powers...,’ ‘the fearlessnesses...,’ ‘the detailed and thorough knowledges...,’ or ‘the distinct attributes of a buddha are deep,’ they practice the perfection of wisdom.
- 39.17 “And why? Śāriputra, it is because if they also do not practice with the idea ‘it is because the depth of form is not form’ and ‘the depth of feeling..., perception..., volitional factors..., [F.97.b] and consciousness is not consciousness’; and similarly ‘the depth of the constituents..., the sense fields..., dependent origination..., the perfections..., the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening..., all the emptinesses..., the ten powers..., the fearlessnesses..., the detailed and thorough knowledges..., and the distinct attributes of a buddha is not the buddhadharmas,’ they thus practice the perfection of wisdom.<sup>484</sup>
- 39.18 “Śāriputra, if bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom do not practice with the idea ‘form is hard to fathom,’ they practice the perfection of wisdom. If they do not practice with the idea ‘feeling...,’ ‘perception...,’ ‘volitional factors...,’ or ‘consciousness is hard to fathom,’ they practice the perfection of wisdom. Similarly, if they do not practice with the idea ‘the constituents...,’ ‘the sense fields...,’ ‘dependent origination...,’ ‘the perfections...,’ ‘the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening...,’ ‘all the emptinesses...,’ ‘the ten powers...,’ ‘the fearlessnesses...,’ ‘the detailed and thorough knowledges...,’ or ‘the distinct attributes of a buddha are hard to fathom,’ they practice the perfection of wisdom.
- 39.19 “And why? Śāriputra, it is because if they do not practice with the idea ‘that state of being hard to fathom of form is not form; that state of being hard to fathom of feeling..., perception..., volitional factors..., and consciousness is not consciousness; and similarly, that state of being hard to fathom of the constituents..., the sense fields..., dependent origination..., the perfections..., the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening..., all the emptinesses..., the ten powers..., the fearlessnesses..., the detailed and thorough knowledges..., and the distinct attributes of a buddha is not the buddhadharmas,’ they practice the perfection of wisdom. And why? Because that state of being hard to fathom of the buddhadharmas is not the buddhadharmas.

39.20 “Furthermore, Śāriputra, if bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom do not practice with the idea ‘form is immeasurable,’ they practice the perfection of wisdom. Similarly, if they do not practice with the idea ‘feeling...,’ ‘perception...,’ ‘volitional factors...,’ or ‘consciousness is immeasurable,’ they practice the perfection of wisdom. And why? Śāriputra, it is because the immeasurability of form is not form; the immeasurability of feeling..., perception..., volitional factors..., and consciousness is not consciousness; and similarly, the immeasurability of the constituents..., the sense fields..., dependent origination..., the perfections..., all the emptinesses..., the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening..., the ten powers..., the fearlessnesses..., the detailed and thorough knowledges..., and the distinct attributes of a buddha is not the buddhadharmas. And why? Śāriputra, it is because the immeasurability [F.98.a] of the distinct attributes of a buddha is not the distinct attributes of a buddha.”

39.21 Śāriputra said, “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is just as deep as that,<sup>485</sup> just as hard to fathom as that, just as hard to understand as that, and just as immeasurable as that, so an exposition of it should not be given in the presence of bodhisattva great beings who have newly set out in the vehicle, because they will tremble, feel frightened, and become terrified when they hear this perfection of wisdom. An exposition of it should be given in the presence of bodhisattva great beings irreversible from awakening because they do not tremble, feel frightened, or become terrified, do not feel unsure, and do not harbor doubt when they hear this perfection of wisdom, and on top of that they also believe it when they hear it.”

39.22 Then Śatakratu, head of the gods, asked venerable Śāriputra, “Venerable monk Śāriputra, what is wrong with giving an exposition of this deep perfection of wisdom in the presence of bodhisattva great beings who have newly set out in the vehicle?”

39.23 “Kauśika,” replied Śāriputra, “when an exposition of this deep perfection of wisdom is given in the presence of bodhisattva great beings who have newly set out in the vehicle, they tremble, feel frightened, become terrified, reject it, and do not believe in it. Kauśika, because those bodhisattva great beings who have newly set out in the vehicle reject this deep perfection of wisdom when they hear it and amass the karma of those headed to a blunder,<sup>486</sup> they are hard-pressed to fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening even for a very long time.”

39.24 “Venerable monk Śāriputra, are there [F.98.b] bodhisattva great beings who have not been prophesied who, when they hear this deep perfection of wisdom, do not tremble, feel frightened, and become terrified?” asked Śatakratu.

39.25        “Kauśika,” replied Śāriputra, “those bodhisattva great beings who do not tremble, feel frightened, or become terrified when they hear this deep perfection of wisdom obtain a prophecy before long of their unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. They obtain a prophecy of unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening before they have passed beyond more than one or two tathāgatas.”<sup>487</sup>

39.26        Then the Lord said to venerable Śāriputra, “Exactly so, Śāriputra, exactly so! Śāriputra, those bodhisattva great beings who do not tremble, feel frightened, or become terrified when they hear this deep perfection of wisdom and, on top of that, having heard this perfection of wisdom, take it up, bear it in mind, read it aloud, master it, and keep on with it as it has been taught have long set out in the vehicle, practice the practice of the six perfections, and serve many buddhas with their service.”

39.27        Venerable Śāriputra then said to the Lord, “Lord, I have great confidence giving a readiness to speak, and I set forth an illustration. Tathāgata, I have the confidence giving a readiness to speak.”

              “Be confident in your readiness to speak then, Śāriputra,” replied the Lord.

39.28        Śāriputra said, “To illustrate, Lord, sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who have set out in the Great Vehicle might dream in a dream they are cultivating the perfection of wisdom and are cultivating the perfection of concentration, perfection of perseverance, perfection of patience, [F.99.a] perfection of morality, and perfection of giving, up to<sup>488</sup> going to the site of awakening. Lord, if those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family are known to be approaching unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, Lord, when it comes to those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who, having woken up, intend<sup>489</sup> to cultivate the perfection of wisdom, and cultivate the perfection of concentration, perfection of perseverance, perfection of patience, perfection of morality, and perfection of giving, to fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, and, having fully awakened, to go to the site of awakening and turn the wheel of the Dharma, what need is there to say that they are approaching unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening? Lord, those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who get to hear this deep perfection of wisdom and then practice it exactly as<sup>490</sup> they have heard it have wholesome roots that have matured. Lord, those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who, having heard this perfection of wisdom, take it up, bear it in mind, read it aloud, master it, and properly pay attention to it have long set out in the vehicle, have planted wholesome roots, have served many buddhas, and have been assisted by spiritual friends.

- 39.29 “Lord, those bodhisattvas and sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who get this perfection of wisdom and, having got it, take it up, bear it in mind, read it aloud, master it, [F.99.b] and properly pay attention to it, of those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family, Lord, their awakening is close to being prophesied, or it will be prophesied, or they will become irreversible from unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.
- 39.30 “To illustrate, Lord, a person might emerge from a vast jungle a hundred yojanas wide or might emerge from a vast jungle two hundred yojanas wide, or three hundred yojanas wide, or four hundred yojanas wide, or five hundred yojanas wide, and when they emerge they might see cow herders, or goat herders, or the boundary markers of fields, or parks, or orchards that are signs presaging a town, or they might see some other signs presaging a town, or villages, or markets, or cities, or kingdoms. When they do so they would think, ‘These kinds of signs presage a town, or village, or market, or city, or kingdom, or palace, so one must be near at hand.’ They would breathe out a sigh of relief and would not face danger from robbers, danger from poisonous animals, danger from savages, danger from angry wild animals, or danger from hunger and thirst anymore.
- 39.31 “Similarly, Lord, with bodhisattva great beings who get this deep perfection of wisdom and, having got it, take it up, bear it in mind, read it aloud, master it, and properly pay attention to it—Lord, it is known that the awakening of those bodhisattva great beings is close to being prophesied and that before long they will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. Those [F.100.a] bodhisattva great beings do not face the danger of the śrāvaka level or the pratyekabuddha level. And why? Because there are those signs presaging that—that is, that the bodhisattva great beings get to see, bow down to, and serve this deep perfection of wisdom and get to hear it.”
- 39.32 Venerable Śāriputra having said this, the Lord said to him, “Excellent, Śāriputra, excellent. Be even more confident in your readiness to speak, Śāriputra, through the power of the Buddha.”
- 39.33 Śāriputra said, “To illustrate, Lord, a person who wants to see the ocean goes off to see the ocean, and as they are going off to see the ocean they see trees or signs of trees, or mountains or signs of mountains, and they can know because of that ‘The ocean is a long way from here. The ocean is not near here.’ And why? Because there are no trees or signs of trees, or mountains or signs of mountains, when the ocean is near.
- 39.34 “To illustrate further, Lord, a person who wants to see the ocean goes off to see the ocean, and as they are going off to see the ocean they see no trees or signs of trees, or mountains or signs of mountains, and it occurs to them to think, ‘The ocean is not a long way from here.’ And why? Because there are no trees or signs of trees, or mountains or signs of mountains, when the ocean is near. Even though that person does not see the ocean with their eyes, they become certain, 'I am close to the ocean. The ocean is near here. The ocean is not a long way from here.' [F.100.b]

39.35 "Similarly, Lord, bodhisattva great beings who hear, take up, bear in mind, read aloud, and master this perfection of wisdom can thus know, can thus think, 'Even though the Tathāgata has not prophesied in my presence, "You will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening in some certain amount of eons, or in eons amounting to a hundred, or in eons amounting to a thousand, or in eons amounting to a hundred thousand, or in eons amounting to one hundred million billion," ' those bodhisattva great beings can know, 'My unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening is close to being prophesied.' And why? Because they think, 'I have got this deep perfection of wisdom to see and hear, and having heard it I have taken it up, borne it in mind, read it aloud, mastered it, and properly paid attention to it.'

39.36 "To illustrate further, Lord, when spring has come and the buds and blossoms have come out on the trees, the people of Jambudvīpa can know, because of that, the leaves, flowers, and fruit will appear before long. And why? Because there are those signs presaging that on the trees. When the people of Jambudvīpa see those signs presaging that on the trees, they think, 'It will not be long now before the leaves, flowers, and fruit appear,' and they are enraptured.

39.37 "Similarly, Lord, when bodhisattva great beings get to view [F.101.a] and hear this deep perfection of wisdom, and having heard it take it up, bear it in mind, read it aloud, master it, and properly pay attention to it, Lord, those bodhisattva great beings can know that their wholesome roots have matured. Lord, those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family can know that they have attended again and again on many buddhas. Lord, those bodhisattva great beings<sup>491</sup> also can know, 'We are close to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening because we have found this deep perfection of wisdom and have seen, heard, bowed down to, and practiced the perfection of wisdom as it has been explained, because of those earlier wholesome roots.' There the gods who have seen buddhas before think, 'Earlier bodhisattvas also had such signs as these presaging their prophecy, so it will not be long before the prophecy of the unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening of these bodhisattva great beings happens too.' They rejoice and feel joy; a joy and mental happiness arise.

39.38 "To illustrate further, Lord, when a woman is pregnant her body undergoes changes as she gets closer and closer to giving birth. Physically she feels utterly exhausted, she does not move about, and she is forgetful, has no appetite, finds it hard to get drowsy and fall asleep, and becomes taciturn because of feeling that way. And, realizing that her experience of those sorts of feelings is because of having indulged in that earlier improper attention, indulged in it [F.101.b] frequently and fully, she steers clear of her proclivity for sex. Other women see the signs presaging that in that woman and come to realize, 'It will not be long before that woman gives birth.'

39.39 "Similarly, Lord, bodhisattva great beings who have planted wholesome roots, served many buddhas, practiced the practices well, and been assisted by spiritual friends and whose wholesome roots have matured get this deep perfection of wisdom and, having got it, take it up, bear it in mind, read it aloud, master it, and properly pay attention to it. They can know it will not be long before the unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening of those bodhisattva great beings will be prophesied."

39.40 The Lord responded, "This confidence giving a readiness to speak that you had, Śāriputra, through the power of the Buddha, is excellent, Śāriputra, excellent." [B31]

39.41 Then venerable Subhūti said to the Lord, "Lord, it is amazing that the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete Buddha has benefited these bodhisattva great beings like this."

39.42 "Subhūti," replied the Lord, "it is because bodhisattva great beings have set out for unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening to benefit many people, to make many people happy, out of pity for the world, for the welfare of the mass of gods and humans, for benefit and happiness. [F.102.a] When those bodhisattva great beings pursue their career they benefit many thousands of bodhisattva great beings in the four ways of gathering a retinue—giving gifts, kind words, beneficial actions, and consistency between words and deeds; cause beings to take up the ten wholesome actions; and cause them to take up the four concentrations, four immeasurables, and four formless absorptions; and they establish themselves in those dharmas too. They personally practice the perfection of giving, and they cause others to take up the perfection of giving as well; they personally practice the perfection of morality..., the perfection of patience..., the perfection of perseverance..., the perfection of concentration..., and the perfection of wisdom, and they cause others to take up the perfection of wisdom as well. Thanks to the perfection of wisdom, with skillful means they establish beings in the result of stream enterer, but they do not themselves actualize it. Similarly, they establish beings in the result of once-returner..., the result of non-returner..., the state of a worthy one..., and the state of a pratyekabuddha, but they do not themselves actualize it. They personally step onto the irreversible level, and they establish others at the irreversible level as well. They personally purify a buddhafiield, and they personally cause other bodhisattvas to take up the purification of a buddhafield as well; they personally bring beings to maturity, and they cause others to take up bringing beings to maturity as well; they personally produce the clairvoyances, [F.102.b] and they cause others to take up gaining the clairvoyances as well; they personally purify the dhāraṇī gateways, and they cause others to take up the purification of the dhāraṇī gateways as well; they personally gain perfected confidence giving a readiness to speak, and they cause others to take up perfecting confidence giving a readiness to speak as well; they personally appropriate a perfected physical form, and they cause others to take up the appropriation of a perfected physical form as well; they personally appropriate perfected major marks, and they cause others to take up the appropriation of perfected major marks as well; they personally appropriate the state of the perfected unmarried person, and they cause others to take up gaining the state of the perfected unmarried person as well; they personally perfect the ten tathāgata powers, and they cause others to take up perfecting the ten tathāgata powers as well; they personally generate the ten concentrations, and they cause others to take up the generation of the ten concentrations as well; they personally generate the four immeasurables..., the four formless absorptions..., the four fearlessnesses..., and the four detailed and thorough knowledges, and they cause others to take up the generation of the four detailed and thorough knowledges as well; they personally perfect the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, and they cause others to take up perfecting the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha as well; they personally reach the knowledge of all aspects, and they cause others to take up the knowledge of all aspects as well; they personally eliminate all residual impressions, connections, [F.103.a] and afflictions, and they cause others to take up the elimination of all residual impressions, connections, and afflictions as well; they personally fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, and they cause others to take up fully awakening to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening as well; and they personally turn the wheel of the Dharma, and they cause others to take up turning the wheel of the Dharma as well.”

39.43 Subhūti said, “Lord, it is amazing that those bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom for the sake of beings will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening in possession of many good qualities like this. Sugata, it is amazing!

39.44 “Lord, how is meditation on the perfection of wisdom of bodhisattva great beings completed?”

39.45 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “when bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom do not see an increase in form and do not see an increase in feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness, then meditation on the perfection of wisdom of bodhisattva great beings is completed. Similarly, when they do not see an increase in the constituents, the sense fields, dependent origination, the perfections, all the emptinesses, the dharmas on the side of awakening, the ten powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, [F.103.b] the distinct attributes of a buddha, or the knowledge of all aspects, then meditation on the perfection of wisdom of bodhisattva great beings is completed.

39.46 “Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom do not see a decline in form and do not see a decline in feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness, then meditation on the perfection of wisdom of bodhisattva great beings is completed. Similarly, when they do not see a decline in the constituents, the sense fields, dependent origination, the perfections, all the emptinesses, the dharmas on the side of awakening, the ten powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, the distinct attributes of a buddha, or the knowledge of all aspects, then meditation on the perfection of wisdom of bodhisattva great beings is completed.

39.47 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom do not see ‘a dharma’ and do not see ‘not a dharma’; do not see ‘past,’ do not see ‘future,’ and do not see ‘present’; do not see ‘wholesome, unwholesome, neutral, and not neutral’; [F.104.a] do not see ‘compounded and uncompounded’; do not see ‘the desire realm,’ do not see ‘the form realm,’ and do not see ‘the formless realm’; do not see ‘the perfection of giving’ and do not see ‘the perfection of morality, patience, perseverance, concentration, or wisdom’; up to do not see ‘the knowledge of all aspects,’ then the meditation on the perfection of wisdom of bodhisattva great beings is completed. And why? Subhūti, it is because what marks dharmas as dharmas is irreversibility, vanity, hollowness, pointlessness, and fraudulence.”

39.48 “Lord, the inconceivable is being taught,” said Subhūti.

“Subhūti,” continued the Lord, “it is a teaching of the inconceivable because form is inconceivable. It is a teaching of the inconceivable because feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are inconceivable. It is a teaching of the inconceivable because the perfection of giving is inconceivable. Similarly, it is a teaching of the inconceivable because the perfections of morality, patience, perseverance, concentration, and wisdom are inconceivable. Similarly, it is a teaching of the inconceivable because the constituents, the sense fields, dependent origination, the perfections, all the emptinesses, the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, the ten powers, the fearlessnesses, [F.104.b] the detailed and thorough knowledges, and the distinct attributes of a buddha ... up to the knowledge of all aspects is inconceivable.

39.49 “Subhūti, if bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom do not form the notion ‘form is inconceivable’ and do not form the notion ‘feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are inconceivable,’ then meditation on the perfection of wisdom is completed. If they do not form the notion ‘the constituents, the sense fields, dependent origination, the perfections, all the emptinesses, the dharmas on the side of awakening, the ten powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, the distinct attributes of a buddha ...’ up to ‘the knowledge of all aspects is inconceivable,’ then meditation on the perfection of wisdom is completed.”

39.50 “Lord, who will come to believe in this deep perfection of wisdom?” asked Subhūti.

“Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “bodhisattva great beings who have earlier practiced the practice of the six perfections, planted wholesome roots sprung from the Tathāgata,<sup>492</sup> served many buddhas with their service, and been assisted by spiritual friends will come to believe in this deep perfection of wisdom.”

39.51 “Lord, to what extent will bodhisattva great beings have practiced the six perfections, planted wholesome roots sprung from the Tathāgata, served many buddhas, and been assisted [F.105.a] by spiritual friends?” asked Subhūti.

39.52 The Lord replied, “Here, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom do not mentally construct and do not conceive of form, do not mentally construct and do not conceive of a causal sign of form, and do not mentally construct and do not conceive of an intrinsic nature of form. They do not mentally construct and do not conceive of feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness; do not mentally construct and do not conceive of a causal sign of feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness; and do not mentally construct and do not conceive of an intrinsic nature of feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness. Similarly, they do not mentally construct and do not conceive of the constituents, sense fields, or dependent origination; the desire, form, or formless realms; the perfection of giving; the perfections of morality, patience, perseverance, concentration, or wisdom; inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature; the applications of mindfulness, right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, or path; the ten tathāgata powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, or the distinct attributes of a buddha; up to do not mentally construct and do not conceive of the knowledge of all aspects, do not mentally construct and do not conceive of a causal sign of the knowledge of all aspects, and do not mentally construct and do not conceive of an intrinsic nature of the knowledge of all aspects. And why? Subhūti, it is because form is inconceivable; feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are inconceivable; and similarly, the constituents, the sense fields, dependent origination, the perfections, all the emptinesses, the dharmas on the side of awakening, the ten powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, [F.105.b] the distinct attributes of a buddha, and also the knowledge of all aspects are inconceivable. In that case, Subhūti, the bodhisattva great beings will have practiced the six perfections, planted wholesome roots sprung from the Tathāgata, served many buddhas, and been assisted by spiritual friends.”

39.53 Subhūti responded, “Lord, the perfection of wisdom is deep because form is deep. The perfection of wisdom is deep because feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are deep. Similarly, the perfection of wisdom is deep because the constituents, the sense fields, dependent origination, the perfections, all the emptinesses, the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, the ten powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, and the distinct attributes of a buddha are deep. The perfection of wisdom is deep because the knowledge of all aspects is deep.

39.54 “Lord, the perfection of wisdom is a heap of jewels insofar as it generates the result of stream enterer, the result of once-returner, the result of non-returner, the state of a worthy one, a pratyekabuddha’s awakening, and unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening that are great jewels.

39.55 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom turns the wheel of the Dharma. Lord, the perfection of wisdom is an aggregate of the purity of all dharmas.”

39.56 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “it is because of the purity of form, the purity of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness, and the purity of the constituents, the sense fields, dependent origination, [F.106.a] the perfections, all the emptinesses, the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, the ten powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, the distinct attributes of a buddha, and the knowledge of all aspects.”

39.57 “Lord, that such an exposition of this deep perfection of wisdom would not give rise to many hindrances would be amazing,” said Subhūti.

39.58 “Exactly so, Subhūti, exactly so!” replied the Lord. “There are many hindrances to this deep perfection of wisdom. Sons of a good family or daughters of a good family copying out, teaching, reading aloud, explaining, properly paying attention to, and cultivating this deep perfection of wisdom should quickly write it out and quickly cultivate it before hindrances to copying out, reading aloud, teaching, explaining, up to properly paying attention to this deep perfection of wisdom arise.<sup>493</sup> And why? Because even if those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family are copying for a month, they should do the copying accordingly; even if they are copying for two, or three, or four, or five, or six, or seven months, or for up to a year, they should do the copying accordingly; and even if they are explaining, reciting from memory, illuminating, properly paying attention to, and cultivating this deep perfection of wisdom for up to a year, they should do the cultivation accordingly. And why? Subhūti, it is because this great jewel gives rise to many hindrances.”

39.59 “Lord, Māra the wicked one will cause hindrances, will he not, to this deep perfection of wisdom, in order that it will not be copied out, will not be read aloud, will not be recited from memory, will not be properly paid attention to, [F.106.b] and will not be cultivated?” asked Subhūti.

39.60 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “Māra the wicked one will indeed make whatever efforts he can to cause hindrances to this deep perfection of wisdom, in order that it will not be copied out, will not be read aloud, will not be recited from memory, up to will not be cultivated, but he cannot hinder bodhisattva great beings copying out, reading aloud, reciting from memory, properly paying attention to, and cultivating this deep perfection of wisdom.”

39.61 Then venerable Śāriputra asked the Lord, “Lord, because of whose power is Māra the wicked one incapable of hindering bodhisattva great beings copying out, reading aloud, up to cultivating this deep perfection of wisdom?”

39.62 “Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “it is because of the power of the buddhas that Māra the wicked one cannot hinder bodhisattva great beings copying out, reading aloud, explaining, reciting from memory, properly paying attention to, and cultivating this deep perfection of wisdom. Śāriputra, it is the power of those lord buddhas—the lord buddhas dwelling and maintaining themselves in all the ten directions. Those lord buddhas watch over those bodhisattva great beings and help. Māra the wicked one cannot hinder those bodhisattva great beings copying out, reading aloud, teaching, reciting from memory, properly paying attention to, and cultivating this deep perfection of wisdom whom those lord buddhas watch over and help. And why? Śāriputra, it is because Māra the wicked one cannot hinder those bodhisattva great beings copying out, reading aloud, reciting from memory, explaining, properly paying attention to, and cultivating this deep perfection of wisdom whom the buddhas have assisted. And why? Śāriputra, it is because it is in the nature of things [F.107.a] that infinite, countless tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas dwelling and maintaining themselves in infinite, countless world systems in all the ten directions watch over those bodhisattva great beings copying out, reading aloud, reciting from memory, explaining, properly paying attention to, and cultivating this deep perfection of wisdom.

39.63 “Śāriputra, those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family copying out, reading aloud, reciting from memory, teaching, properly paying attention to, and cultivating this deep perfection of wisdom should also know, ‘It is because of the power of the Buddha that I am copying out this deep perfection of wisdom, that I am reading it aloud, that I am reciting it from memory, that I am teaching it, that I am properly paying attention to it, and that I am cultivating it.’ ”

39.64 “Lord, are all those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family copying out, reading aloud, reciting from memory, teaching, cultivating, and properly paying attention to this deep perfection of wisdom through the power of the buddhas? Have all been assisted by the Buddha?” asked Śāriputra.

39.65 “Exactly so, Śāriputra, exactly so!” replied the Lord. “It is exactly as you say! You should know that any and all the sons of a good family or daughters of a good family copying out, reading aloud, clearly articulating, reciting from memory, teaching to others, properly paying attention to, [F.107.b] and cultivating this deep perfection of wisdom, Śāriputra, do so through the power of the Buddha. All have also been assisted by the Buddha.”

39.66 Śāriputra then asked, “Lord, do those tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas dwelling and maintaining themselves in infinite, countless world systems in all the ten directions know about those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family copying out, reading aloud, clearly articulating, reciting from memory, explaining, teaching, cultivating, and properly paying attention to this deep perfection of wisdom?”

39.67 “Lord, do those lord buddhas see with the buddha eye and are they aware of those bodhisattva great beings copying out, reading aloud, clearly articulating, reciting from memory, explaining, teaching, cultivating, and properly paying attention to this deep perfection of wisdom?”

39.68 “Exactly so, Śāriputra, exactly so!” replied the Lord. “You should know that all those tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas in all the ten directions know about those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family copying out, reading aloud, clearly articulating, reciting from memory, explaining, teaching, cultivating, and properly paying attention to this deep perfection of wisdom, as well as practicing it for suchness. Those lord buddhas see with the buddha eye and are aware of those bodhisattva great beings.

- 39.69 “Śāriputra, those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family in the Great Vehicle are close to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.
- 39.70 “Śāriputra, those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family in the Bodhisattva Vehicle [F.108.a] bearing this deep perfection of wisdom in mind are those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who have come to have an abundance of belief in this deep perfection of wisdom and respect, revere, honor, and worship this deep perfection of wisdom with flowers, incense, perfumes, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners.
- 39.71 “Śāriputra, with the buddha eye the tathāgatas see those bodhisattva great beings, and also those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family.
- 39.72 “Śāriputra, great is the profit, great the benefit, great the result, and great the maturation for those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who write out this deep perfection of wisdom and bear it in mind. On account of that wholesome root they are never separated from the lord buddhas; they are never born in terrible forms of life; though born as gods and humans they are not separated from the buddhas and bodhisattvas; and also they step onto the irreversible level.
- 39.73 “Śāriputra, on account of that wholesome root those bodhisattva great beings and those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family are never separated from the six perfections; they are never separated from inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature; they are never separated from the applications of mindfulness, right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, or path; they are never separated from the ten tathāgata powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, or the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha; and they are never separated from the knowledge [F.108.b] of all aspects.
- 39.74 “Śāriputra, with the passing away of the Tathāgata this perfection of wisdom will circulate in the southern region. There the monks and nuns, laymen and laywomen will write out, take up, bear in mind, read aloud, master, and properly pay attention to this deep perfection of wisdom. On account of that wholesome root they will not blunder into terrible forms of life, they will experience everything perfect as gods and humans, and they will ennoble themselves with the six perfections; respect, revere, honor, and worship the lord buddhas; and gradually pass into complete nirvāṇa in the three vehicles—in the Śrāvaka Vehicle, or Pratyekabuddha Vehicle, or Great Vehicle.

- 39.75 “Śāriputra, from the southern region this deep perfection of wisdom will circulate into the country of Vartani.<sup>494</sup> There too the monks and nuns, laymen and laywomen will write out, take up, bear in mind, read aloud, master, and properly pay attention to this deep perfection of wisdom and respect, revere, honor, and worship it with flowers, incense, perfumes, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners. On account of that wholesome root they will not blunder into terrible forms of life, they will experience everything perfect as gods and humans, and they will ennoble themselves with the six perfections, will worship the lord buddhas, and will gradually go forth<sup>495</sup> in the three vehicles—the Śrāvaka Vehicle, Pratyekabuddha Vehicle, and Great Vehicle. [F.109.a]
- 39.76 “Śāriputra, from the country of Vartani this deep perfection of wisdom will circulate into the northern region. There too, Śāriputra, the monks and nuns, laymen and laywomen will write out, take up, bear in mind, read aloud, master, and properly pay attention to this deep perfection of wisdom, and on account of that wholesome root they will not blunder into terrible forms of life, they will experience everything perfect as gods and humans, and they will ennoble themselves with the six perfections, will worship the lord buddhas, and will gradually go forth in the three vehicles—the Śrāvaka Vehicle, Pratyekabuddha Vehicle, and Great Vehicle.
- 39.77 “Therefore, Śāriputra, they<sup>496</sup> do the work of the Buddha, this deep perfection of wisdom, at a time in the future, during the last of the ‘five hundreds.’<sup>497</sup> And why? Śāriputra, it is because when the Dharma and Vinaya have become the site,<sup>498</sup> the good Dharma does not disappear.
- 39.78 “Śāriputra, I watch over those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family who write out, take up, bear in mind, read aloud, master, and properly pay attention to this deep perfection of wisdom and practice it for suchness.
- 39.79 “Śāriputra, those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family who write out this deep perfection of wisdom and, having copied it out, respect, revere, honor, and worship it with flowers, incense, perfumes, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners—those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family who do that, on account of that wholesome root will not blunder into terrible forms of life. [F.109.b] They will experience everything perfect as gods and humans, will ennoble themselves with the six perfections, and, having ennobled themselves, will respect, revere, honor, and worship the lord buddhas and will gradually go forth in the three vehicles—the Śrāvaka Vehicle, Pratyekabuddha Vehicle, and Great Vehicle. And why? Śāriputra, it is because with the buddha eye the Tathāgata sees those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family, the Tathāgata praises them, and the Tathāgata extols them; all the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas dwelling and maintaining themselves in all the vast world systems in all the ten directions also see those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family with the buddha eye and praise and glorify those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family.”

39.80 “Lord, at a later time, during a later period, will this deep perfection of wisdom spread widely in the northern region?” asked Śāriputra.

39.81 “Exactly so, Śāriputra, exactly so!” replied the Lord. “Śāriputra, at a later time, at a later period, this deep perfection of wisdom will spread widely in the northern region. Śāriputra, there at a later time, during a later period, those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family will hear this deep perfection of wisdom and, having heard it, will write out, take up, bear in mind, read aloud, master, and properly pay attention to this deep perfection of wisdom, and practice it for suchness. Those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family who hear this deep perfection of wisdom, and, having heard it, take up, bear in mind, [F.110.a] read aloud, master, and properly pay attention to this deep perfection of wisdom and practice it for suchness have long set out in the vehicle, have served many buddhas, and have planted wholesome roots sprung from the Tathāgata.”

39.82 “Lord, at a later time, during a later period, how many sons of a good family and daughters of a good family in the region to the north will there be who hear this deep perfection of wisdom and, having heard it, take up, bear in mind, read aloud, master, and properly pay attention to this deep perfection of wisdom and practice it for suchness?” asked Śāriputra.

39.83 “Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “at a later time, during a later period, there will be many bodhisattva great beings in the region to the north, but still there will not be many bodhisattva great beings or sons of a good family or daughters of a good family, Śāriputra, who will hear this deep perfection of wisdom and, having heard it, will write out, take up, bear in mind, read aloud, master, and properly pay attention to this deep perfection of wisdom and practice it for suchness. Those bodhisattva great beings and sons of a good family and daughters of a good family, when they hear an exposition of this deep perfection of wisdom, will not tremble, feel frightened, or become terrified. And why? Because those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family will have followed after the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfect complete buddhas and questioned them and made inquiries. And why? Because those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family will have completed the perfection of wisdom, and similarly, those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family [F.110.b] will have completed the perfection of concentration, perfection of perseverance, perfection of patience, perfection of morality, and perfection of giving; those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family will have completed inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature; those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family will have completed the applications of mindfulness; those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family will have completed the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and path; and those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family will have completed the ten tathāgata powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, and the distinct attributes of a buddha. Śāriputra, those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family are firmly planted on wholesome roots and, taking unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening as their point of departure, will work for the welfare of many beings.

39.84 “And why? Śāriputra, it is because I have had conversations that concerned just the knowledge of all aspects with those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family; and those tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfect complete buddhas who were there in times gone by, those lord buddhas have also had conversations that concerned just the knowledge of all aspects with those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family as well, so, even after they have exchanged lives they again behave like this, namely, they take unsurpassed, complete awakening as their point of departure and have those sorts of conversations concerned with just the knowledge of all aspects.

39.85 “Even Māra and the Māra class of gods cannot split those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family from [F.111.a] unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, so what need is there to say more about the others who forsake this deep perfection of wisdom, who admire wrongdoing, and who habitually do wrong not being able to split them?

39.86 “Śāriputra, when those bodhisattva great beings and sons of a good family and daughters of a good family hear this deep perfection of wisdom, they obtain immense joy from, and feel great delight in, the fact that many beings will be established on wholesome roots that have to do with unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.<sup>499</sup>

39.87 “Those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family declare to me, face to face, ‘Lord, when we practice the practice of the perfection of wisdom we will establish many hundreds of creatures, many thousands of creatures, many hundreds of thousands of creatures in the wholesome dharmas; that is, taking unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening as our point of departure, we will establish them in awakening—we will teach them, inspire them to take it up, motivate them, and excite them about it, and we prophesy their irreversibility.’ And why? It is because the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas see in their hearts the thought those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family in the Bodhisattva Vehicle have—the thought to make that declaration, and rejoice—and I too, Śāriputra, have rejoiced, when those bodhisattva great beings are practicing for awakening, in their declaration, ‘We will teach many hundreds of creatures, many thousands of creatures, many hundreds of thousands of creatures unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. We will inspire them to take it up, motivate them, and excite them about it. [F.111.b] We will establish them in unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.’

39.88 “Also in the presence of past tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas, those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family have declared, ‘When we practice the practice of the perfection of wisdom we will establish many hundreds of creatures, many thousands of creatures, many hundreds of thousands of creatures in unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening—we will teach them, inspire them to take it up, motivate them, and excite them about it, and we prophesy their irreversibility.’ And why? Because the past tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas saw in their hearts the intention of those bodhisattva great beings and sons of a good family and daughters of a good family to make that declaration, and rejoiced. And I too, Śāriputra, have rejoiced, when those bodhisattva great beings are practicing for awakening, in their declaration, ‘We will teach many hundreds of creatures, many thousands of creatures, many hundreds of thousands of creatures unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening—we will inspire them to take it up, motivate them, and excite them about it. We will establish them in unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.’

39.89 “Śāriputra, those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family will have a greater admiration for form, sound, smell, taste, feeling, and dharmas, and they will give away greater gifts. Because of giving away greater gifts they will make [F.112.a] an occasion for greater wholesome roots. Because they have made an occasion for greater wholesome roots they will appropriate a greater maturation.<sup>500</sup> Because they appropriate a greater maturation, from that maturation they will, for the welfare of just those beings, appropriate a greater maturation; they will give away everything inner and outer to just those beings; and on account of that wholesome root they will reach other buddhafiels and come face to face with tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas wherever those buddhas are teaching the Dharma. In those buddhafiels they will hear just this perfection of wisdom and again inspire many hundreds of creatures, many thousands of creatures, many hundreds of thousands of creatures to take up unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening—they will teach it, motivate them, and excite them about it.”

39.90 “Lord,” said Śāriputra, “it is amazing that there is thus not any dharma the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete Buddha does not know, there is not any true nature of dharmas and suchness he does not know, there is not any Dharma teaching he does not know, and there is not any behavior of beings he does not know; and that he thus knows as well past bodhisattvas, knows as well past buddhafiels; knows as well the śrāvakas of past tathāgatas; knows as well the bodhisattvas of future tathāgatas, knows as well the buddhafiels and śrāvakas of future tathāgatas, [F.112.b] knows as well the bodhisattvas of present tathāgatas, knows as well the buddhafiels and śrāvakas of present tathāgatas, knows as well the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas dwelling and maintaining themselves in vast world systems in the ten directions, knows as well the bodhisattvas of those tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas, and knows as well their buddhafiels and their śrāvakas.

39.91 “Lord, when any bodhisattva great beings strive at these six perfections—those who seek and search for these six perfections, those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family who seek and search for these six perfections—some of them seek and find these six perfections, and some of them seek and do not find these six perfections.”

39.92 “It is not so, Śāriputra, it is not so,” said the Lord. “In general, all the sons of a good family and daughters of a good family who do not give up striving find these six perfections. And why? Śāriputra, it is because those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family are striving at these six perfections.”<sup>501</sup>

39.93 “Lord, will those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family find these deep sūtras connected with the six perfections?” asked Śāriputra.

39.94 “Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family who, without any concern for body and life, strive for the six perfections with a burning desire to practice and with great faith do find them. [F.113.a] And why? Śāriputra, it is because it happens like that for those who mature beings for unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening—who teach it, inspire them to take it up, motivate them, excite them, cause them to enter into it, and establish them in it. Śāriputra, even after those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family have exchanged lives they find these six perfections, they practice these six perfections as they have been expounded, and they persevere without letting up until they have purified the buddhafiels, until they have brought beings to maturity, and until they fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.”

39.95 This was the thirty-ninth chapter, "The Northern Region," of "The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines." [B32]

CHAPTER 40: THE WORK OF MĀRA

- 40.1 Then venerable Subhūti inquired of the Lord,<sup>502</sup> “Lord, in light of these pronouncements you have made about the good qualities that accrue to those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family who have set out for unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, and who are practicing the six perfections, bringing beings to maturity, and taking possession of a buddhafiield, what sorts of hindrances can those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family expect to face?”
- 40.2 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “when it takes a really long time to have the confidence giving a readiness to speak, bodhisattva great beings should know it is the work of Māra.”
- 40.3 “Why should bodhisattva great beings know it is the work of Māra if it takes [F.113.b] a really long time to have the confidence giving a readiness to speak?” asked Subhūti.
- 40.4 The Lord replied, “Here if it is very hard for bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom to complete the perfection of wisdom, if it is very hard for them to complete the perfection of concentration, perfection of perseverance, perfection of patience, perfection of morality, and perfection of giving—Subhūti, if it takes a really long time to have the confidence giving a readiness to speak, in that case, Subhūti, from this one of many explanations, bodhisattva great beings should know it is the work of Māra.
- 40.5 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when the confidence giving a readiness to speak happens too fast, bodhisattva great beings should know that this, too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.”
- 40.6 “Why should bodhisattva great beings know that it is the work of Māra when the confidence giving a readiness to speak happens too fast?” asked Subhūti.

- 40.7 The Lord replied, “Here it is when bodhisattva great beings are practicing the perfection of giving, and are practicing the perfection of morality, patience, perseverance, concentration, and wisdom, Subhūti, and the confidence giving a readiness to speak happens too fast. Subhūti, from this one of many explanations, bodhisattva great beings should know that this is the work of Māra.
- 40.8 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should know of yawning while writing out the perfection of wisdom that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.
- 40.9 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should know of laughing while writing out the perfection of wisdom that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.
- 40.10 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should know of laughing at each other<sup>503</sup> while writing out the perfection of wisdom that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.
- 40.11 “Furthermore, [F.114.a] Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should know of sneering<sup>504</sup> at each other while writing out the perfection of wisdom that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.
- 40.12 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should know of mental distraction while writing out the perfection of wisdom that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.
- 40.13 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should know that if they harmonize their thoughts with each other while writing it out that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.
- 40.14 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should know of thinking, ‘I find no enjoyment in this,’ that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.
- 40.15 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should know that if they yawn, get up from their seat, and leave, this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.
- 40.16 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should know that if they yawn while reciting it, or taking it up, or teaching it, or yawn while paying attention to it, this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.
- 40.17 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should know that laughing at each other while taking up, bearing in mind, reading aloud, and mastering—or laughing at each other while properly paying attention to—this perfection of wisdom is also, Subhūti, the work of Māra.
- 40.18 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should know of sneering at each other while taking it up, bearing it in mind, reading it aloud, mastering it, and properly paying attention to it, that this also, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.

- 40.19       “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings [F.114.b] should know that mental distraction while taking it up, bearing it in mind, reading it aloud, mastering it, teaching it, and properly paying attention to it is also, Subhūti, the work of Māra.
- 40.20       “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should know that if they harmonize their thoughts with each other while taking it up, bearing it in mind, reading it aloud, mastering it, teaching it, and properly paying attention to it, this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.”
- 40.21       The Lord having said this, venerable Subhūti inquired further of him, “Lord, you have said, ‘Bodhisattva great beings should know that getting up from their seats and leaving with the thought “I find no enjoyment in this” is also the work of Māra.’ Why do they find no enjoyment in it?”
- 40.22       “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “it is because those bodhisattva great beings have not practiced the perfection of wisdom before; have not practiced the perfection of concentration, perfection of perseverance, perfection of patience, or perfection of morality before; and, Subhūti, it is because they have not practiced the perfection of giving before. Subhūti, because of that they find no enjoyment in an exposition of this deep perfection of wisdom and get up from their seats and leave.
- 40.23       “Furthermore, Subhūti, when those bodhisattva great beings think, ‘We have not been prophesied in this perfection of wisdom,<sup>505</sup> they lose their faith in it, get up from their seats, and leave. Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should know that this too is the work of Māra.”
- 40.24       “Lord, why do those who are not prophesied [F.115.a] in the perfection of wisdom get up from their seats and leave?” asked Subhūti.
- 40.25       “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening is not prophesied of bodhisattva great beings who have not entered into flawlessness.
- 40.26       “Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should know that when they lose their faith, get up from their seats, and leave, thinking, ‘Our names are not given in this perfection of wisdom,’ this too is the work of Māra.”
- 40.27       “Lord, why are the names of bodhisattva great beings not announced in this deep perfection of wisdom?” asked Subhūti.
- 40.28       “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “the Tathāgata does not announce the names of bodhisattva great beings who have not been prophesied. They think, ‘My name, and the settlement, or village, or market town in which I was born are not given here.’ They do not think, ‘I am going to listen to the perfection of wisdom.’ They think, ‘I have to leave the circle,’ and as many thoughts as they have to leave, they appropriate that many eons of practice. They reject this perfection of wisdom and they think, ‘I have to practice the yoga in other sūtras—the ones that do not bring about the knowledge of all aspects—and I have to master those.’ Thus those bodhisattvas and sons of a good family and daughters of a good family would reject the root of the tree of the knowledge of all aspects and think instead to take the branches, petals, and leaves as supports. So, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should know that this too is the work of Māra.”

40.29 “Lord, what are the sūtras that do not bring about the knowledge of all aspects, [F.115.b] the sūtras they think they have to master?” asked Subhūti.

40.30 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “they are the sūtras connected with those in the Śrāvaka Vehicle, that is, those only explaining the applications of mindfulness, right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and paths, and the emptiness, signless, and wishless gateways to liberation, standing in which sons of a good family and daughters of a good family reach the result of stream enterer, the result of once-returner, the result of non-returner, and the result of a worthy one. Subhūti, they are the sūtras connected with the Śrāvaka Vehicle. They are the ones that do not bring about the knowledge of all aspects they still think they have to master, even after having rejected this perfection of wisdom. And why? Subhūti, it is because bodhisattva great beings who have issued forth from the perfection of wisdom have issued forth because of ordinary and extraordinary dharmas. Subhūti, it is because when bodhisattva great beings train in the perfection of wisdom, they also train in all ordinary and extraordinary dharmas as well.

40.31 “To illustrate, Subhūti, a dog might spurn a bowlful of food from an owner with the thought to get a mouthful of food from a servant. Similarly, Subhūti, at a future time there will be sons of a good family and daughters of a good family in the Great Vehicle who reject this deep perfection of wisdom and think they have to master sūtras connected with the Śrāvaka Vehicle and the Pratyekabuddha Vehicle. Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should know that this too is the work of Māra.

40.32 “Furthermore, Subhūti, at a future time there will be sons of a good family and daughters of a good family in the Great Vehicle [F.116.a] who reject this deep perfection of wisdom and think they have to master sūtras connected with the Śrāvaka Vehicle and the Pratyekabuddha Vehicle for wealth and respect. Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should know that this too is the work of Māra.

40.33 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, somebody might seek an elephant, find the elephant, and still think they have to track the elephant. What do you think, Subhūti, is that a person gifted with intelligence?”

“No, Lord,” said Subhūti.

- 40.34 “Similarly, Subhūti,” said the Lord, “you should know that at a future time those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family in the Bodhisattva Vehicle who reject this deep perfection of wisdom and think that they have to master those sūtras connected with the Śrāvaka Vehicle and the Pratyekabuddha Vehicle are like that. Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should know that this too is the work of Māra.
- 40.35 “Further, Subhūti, somebody might want to see an ocean, then see the ocean, and still think, ‘I have to go looking for the water in the hoofprint left by a bull.’ They might look at the water in the hoofprint and think, ‘Is this not just the amount of water there is in the ocean?’ What do you think, Subhūti, is that a person gifted with intelligence?”
- “No, Lord,” said Subhūti.
- 40.36 “Similarly, Subhūti,” continued the Lord, “you should know that at a future time those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family in the Great Vehicle who, having heard or found this deep perfection of wisdom, reject it and think they have to take up those sūtras connected with the Śrāvaka Vehicle and the Pratyekabuddha Vehicle are like that. Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings [F.116.b] should know that this too is the work of Māra.
- 40.37 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, a contractor or contractor’s apprentice might want to build a palace on the scale of the Vaijayanta palace but might think that they have to take the circles of the sun and the moon as the scale. What do you think, Subhūti, is that man who has examined the Vaijayanta palace and wants to build a palace on the scale of the Vaijayanta, taking the celestial mansion circles of the sun and the moon as the scale, a person gifted with intelligence?”
- “No, Lord,” said Subhūti.
- 40.38 “It is similar, Subhūti,” continued the Lord, “with some of those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family in the Bodhisattva Vehicle who will be there at a future time, and who, having heard or found this deep perfection of wisdom, reject and discard it, thinking they have to seek the knowledge of all aspects in the sūtras connected with the Śrāvaka Vehicle and the Pratyekabuddha Vehicle. What do you think, Subhūti, are those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family in the Bodhisattva Vehicle persons gifted with intelligence?”
- “No, Lord,” said Subhūti.
- 40.39 “Subhūti,” said the Lord, “bodhisattva great beings should know that this too is the work of Māra.
- 40.40 “Further, Subhūti, somebody might want to see a wheel-turning emperor. Having seen a commander of a fort they might think, ‘The color and form of a wheel-turning emperor must be just the same sort as those of this commander of a fort.’ Having grasped the color, shape, dress, signs, and tokens of the commander of a fort, they then say, ‘The distinguishing color, shape, dress, signs, and tokens of a wheel-turning emperor [F.117.a] are like these.’ What do you think, Subhūti, is that person gifted with intelligence?”

“No, Lord,” said Subhūti.

40.41 “It is similar, Subhūti,” continued the Lord, “with those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family in the Great Vehicle who will be there at a future time, and who, having heard or found this deep perfection of wisdom, reject and discard it, thinking they have to seek and master the knowledge of all aspects in the sūtras connected with the Śrāvaka and Pratyekabuddha Vehicles. What do you think, Subhūti, are those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family in the Great Vehicle persons gifted with intelligence?”

“No, Lord,” said Subhūti.

40.42 “Subhūti,” said the Lord, “bodhisattva great beings should know that this too is the work of Māra.

40.43 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family write out this deep perfection of wisdom they are disturbed, and, while writing, frequently become confident in their readiness to speak—confident, that is, to speak about a form, and confident in their readiness to speak about a sound, a smell, a taste, a feeling, and dharmas; confident in their readiness to speak about the perfection of giving, and confident in their readiness to speak about the perfections of morality, patience, perseverance, concentration, and wisdom; confident in their readiness to speak about the desire realm, form realm, and formless realm; confident in their readiness to speak about clear articulation and recitation, and confident in their readiness to speak about what has to be taught to students; confident in their readiness to speak about the applications of mindfulness, right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and paths; confident in their readiness to speak about all the concentrations, deliverances, meditative stabilizations, and absorptions; [F.117.b] confident in their readiness to speak about inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature; confident in their readiness to speak about the powers, and confident in their readiness to speak about the fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, and distinct attributes of a buddha; up to and confident in their readiness to speak about unsurpassed, complete awakening.

40.44 “And why? Subhūti, it is because the perfection of wisdom does not give confidence giving a readiness to speak—because, Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom is inconceivable; because, Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom is without production and without cessation; because, Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom is without defilement and without purification; because, Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom is without distraction; because, Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom is not something that can be spoken out loud; because, Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom is not part of a conversation; because, Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom is not something that can be talked about; and because, Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom cannot be apprehended. And why? Subhūti, it is because all the dharmas do not exist in this deep perfection of wisdom.

40.45 “Subhūti, if, when those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family write out this deep perfection of wisdom, they are distracted by those dharmas, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should know that this too is the work of Māra.”

40.46 “Lord, is it possible to write out the perfection of wisdom?” asked Subhūti. “Subhūti, it is not possible,” replied the Lord. “And why? Subhūti, it is because the perfection of wisdom has no intrinsic nature; the perfection of concentration, perfection of perseverance, perfection of patience, perfection of morality, and perfection [F.118.a] of giving have no intrinsic nature; all the emptinesses, the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, the ten powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, and the distinct attributes of a buddha have no intrinsic nature; and the knowledge of all aspects has no intrinsic nature. That which has no intrinsic nature does not exist and the perfection of wisdom is something that does not exist, so, what does not exist cannot write out what does not exist.

40.47 “Subhūti, if those certain sons of a good family and daughters of a good family in the Great Vehicle form the notion ‘this deep perfection of wisdom is not an existent thing,’ Subhūti, they should know that this too is the work of Māra.”

40.48 Subhūti said, “Lord, when those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family in the Great Vehicle who write out this deep perfection of wisdom in written letters think, ‘I have written out this deep perfection of wisdom,’ and settle down on this deep perfection of wisdom as the letters, Lord, they should know that this too is the work of Māra. And why? Lord, it is because the perfection of wisdom is without letters, and the perfection of concentration, perfection of perseverance, perfection of patience, perfection of morality, and perfection of giving are without letters; Lord, form is without letters, and feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are without letters; the constituents are without letters and the sense fields too are without letters; the deliverances are without letters; [F.118.b] the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening are without letters; the powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, and distinct attributes of a buddha are without letters; and the knowledge of all aspects is without letters as well.

40.49 “Lord, if those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family in the Great Vehicle settle down thinking, ‘This deep perfection of wisdom is without letters’; and similarly, settle down thinking, ‘The perfection of concentration, perfection of perseverance, perfection of patience, perfection of morality, and perfection of giving and without letters’; and similarly, settle down thinking, ‘The thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, the gateways to liberation, the powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, and the distinct attributes of a buddha are without letters’; and, Lord, if bodhisattva great beings settle down thinking, ‘The knowledge of all aspects is without letters as well,’ Lord, they should know that this too is the work of Māra.”

40.50 “Exactly so, Subhūti, exactly so,” said the Lord. “They should know that this too is the work of Māra.

40.51 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattvas, sons of a good family, and daughters of a good family write out this deep perfection of wisdom, if their imagination turns to the city, bodhisattva great beings should know that this too is the work of Māra.

40.52 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when sons of a good family and daughters of a good family in the Great Vehicle write out this deep perfection of wisdom [F.119.a] and get caught up thinking about a settlement, get caught up thinking about a town, get caught up thinking about a king’s palace, get caught up thinking about a country, get caught up thinking about gurus and teachers, get caught up thinking about their parents, brothers, sisters, kinsmen, and blood relatives, get caught up thinking about thieves, get caught up in thoughts connected with savages, get caught up in thoughts imagining being in society and being with courtesans, or get caught up thinking about other things, because Māra the wicked one will interrupt them with hindrances and distractions when they clearly articulate this deep perfection of wisdom, read it aloud, and properly pay attention to it, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should know that these too are the work of Māra.

40.53 “Furthermore, Subhūti, sons of a good family and daughters of a good family in the Bodhisattva Vehicle writing out this deep perfection of wisdom get wealth and respect, verses of praise, and requirements—robes, alms, beds and seats, and medicines for sicknesses. When bodhisattvas, sons of a good family, and daughters of a good family are relishing this experience, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should know when they write out, clearly articulate, read aloud, and properly pay attention to this deep perfection of wisdom, that this too is the work of Māra.

- 40.54      “Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings are writing out, clearly articulating, reading aloud, and properly paying attention to this deep perfection of wisdom and Māra the wicked one supplies deep sūtras, there bodhisattva great beings with skillful means should not get excited about those deep sūtras that Māra supplies. And why? Subhūti, it is because those sūtras do not bring about [F.119.b] the knowledge of all aspects. Subhūti, there bodhisattva great beings without skillful means, having heard this deep perfection of wisdom, will reject it, even though in it I have taught skillful means for bodhisattva great beings in detail, and it is in just this deep perfection of wisdom that they should search for a detailed description of skillful means.
- 40.55      “Subhūti, when sons of a good family or daughters of a good family in the Great Vehicle, having rejected this deep perfection of wisdom, decide to seek for skillful means in those sūtras connected with the Śrāvaka and Pratyekabuddha Vehicles, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should know that this too is the work of Māra.”
- 40.56      This was the fortieth chapter, “The Work of Māra,” of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.”

41.           CHAPTER 41: NOT COMPLETE BECAUSE OF MĀRA

- 41.1       “Furthermore, Subhūti, when the Dharma listener wants to listen to the perfection of wisdom, to write it out, take it up, clearly articulate it, recite it, and read it out loud, and the Dharma preacher has become too lazy, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should know that this too is the work of Māra.
- 41.2       “Furthermore, Subhūti, when the Dharma preacher has not become too lazy to write out this deep perfection of wisdom, to take it up, clearly articulate it, and recite it, but the Dharma listener has gone off to some other place, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should know that this too is the work of Māra.
- 41.3       “Furthermore, Subhūti, when the Dharma listener wants to write out the perfection of wisdom, wants to clearly articulate it, and wants to recite it, but the Dharma preacher has gone off to some other place, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should know that this too is the work of Māra.
- 41.4       “Furthermore, Subhūti, when the Dharma preacher longs for wealth, respect, and verses of praise, and is greedy for requirements—robes, alms, beds and seats, and medicines for sicknesses—while [F.120.a] the Dharma listener is not needy, and is contented, energetic, mindful, collected, focused, and intelligent, then too, Subhūti, everything for the perfection of wisdom is not complete and bodhisattva great beings should know that this is the work of Māra.
- 41.5       “Furthermore, Subhūti, when the Dharma preacher is not needy, is contented, lives in solitude, and is energetic, mindful, collected, focused, and intelligent, while the Dharma listener is very needy, wants to do wrong, longs for wealth, respect, and verses of praise, and is greedy for requirements—robes, alms, beds and seats, and medicines for sicknesses—then too, Subhūti, everything for writing out, transmitting, reciting, and properly paying attention to this deep perfection of wisdom is not complete and bodhisattva great beings should know that this is the work of Māra.

- 41.6 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when the Dharma preacher is a jungle dweller, an alms-food eater, a refuse-rags wearer, a later-food refuser, a single-sitter, one satisfied with whatever alms they get, a cemetery dweller, an open-air dweller, a tree-root dweller, one who sleeps sitting up, a natural-bed user, and a three-robe wearer, and the Dharma listener does not believe in being a jungle dweller, up to a three-robe wearer, then too, Subhūti, everything for writing out, clearly articulating, and reciting this deep perfection of wisdom is not complete and bodhisattva great beings should know that this is the work of Māra.
- 41.7 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when the Dharma listener is a jungle dweller, up to a three-robe wearer, and the Dharma preacher is not a jungle dweller, up to a three-robe wearer, [F.120.b] then too, Subhūti, everything for writing out, clearly articulating, reciting, and properly paying attention to this deep perfection of wisdom is not complete and bodhisattva great beings should know that this is the work of Māra.
- 41.8 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when the Dharma listeners have faith and a virtuous character, want to write out this deep perfection of wisdom, want to take it up, want to clearly articulate it, and want to recite it, while the Dharma preacher does not have faith, wants unwholesome dharmas, does not want to write out and give this deep perfection of wisdom, and does not want to grasp the body of meanings, bodhisattva great beings should know that this is the work of Māra.
- 41.9 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when the Dharma preacher gives up all personal possessions with no thought to hold back, and the Dharma listener is stingy and very needy, wants to do wrong, longs for wealth, respect, and verses of praise, and longs for requirements—robes, alms, beds and seats, and medicines for sicknesses—then too, Subhūti, everything for writing out, clearly articulating, reciting, up to properly paying attention to this deep perfection of wisdom is not complete and bodhisattva great beings should know that this is the work of Māra.
- 41.10 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when the Dharma listener gives up all personal possessions with no thought to hold back, and the Dharma preacher is stingy and miserly, then too, Subhūti, everything for writing out, clearly articulating, reciting, up to properly paying attention to this deep perfection of wisdom is not complete and bodhisattva great beings should know that this is the work of Māra.
- 41.11 “Furthermore, [F.121.a] Subhūti, when the Dharma listener wants to give away the requirements—robes, alms, beds and seats, and medicines for sicknesses—to the Dharma preacher but the Dharma preacher does not want to accept them, then too, Subhūti, everything for writing out, reciting, up to properly paying attention to this deep perfection of wisdom is not complete and bodhisattva great beings should know that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.

41.12 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when the Dharma preacher understands just from headings,<sup>506</sup> but the Dharma listener needs to be led, understands from a detailed explanation, and responds well to words, then too, Subhūti, everything for writing out, transmitting, reciting, up to properly paying attention to this deep perfection of wisdom is not complete and bodhisattva great beings should know that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.

41.13 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when the Dharma listener understands just from headings, but the Dharma preacher needs to be led, understands from a detailed explanation, and responds well to words, then too, Subhūti, everything for writing out, clearly articulating, reciting, up to properly paying attention to this deep perfection of wisdom is not complete and bodhisattva great beings should know that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.

41.14 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when the Dharma preacher knows the different features<sup>507</sup> of the discourses, melodious narrations, predictions, verses, summaries, tales, introductions, accounts, birth stories, expanded texts, marvels, and expositions, and the Dharma listener does not know the different features of the discourses, melodious narrations, [F.121.b] predictions, verses, summaries, tales, introductions, accounts, birth stories, expanded texts, marvels, and expositions, then too, Subhūti, everything for writing out, clearly articulating, reciting, up to properly paying attention to this deep perfection of wisdom is not complete and bodhisattva great beings should know that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.

41.15 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when the Dharma preacher is endowed with the six perfections but the Dharma listener is not endowed with the six perfections, then too, Subhūti, everything for writing out, reading aloud, reciting from memory, and properly paying attention to this deep perfection of wisdom is not complete and bodhisattva great beings should know that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.

41.16 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when the Dharma listener is endowed with the six perfections but the Dharma preacher is not endowed with them, then too, Subhūti, everything for writing out, up to properly paying attention to this deep perfection of wisdom is not complete and bodhisattva great beings should know that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.

41.17 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when the Dharma preacher is skillful at the six perfections but the Dharma listener is not skillful at them, then too, Subhūti, everything for writing out, reading aloud, up to properly paying attention to this deep perfection of wisdom is not complete and bodhisattva great beings should know that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.

- 41.18 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when the Dharma listener is skillful at the six perfections [F.122.a] but the Dharma preacher is not skillful at them, then too, Subhūti, everything for writing out, up to properly paying attention to this deep perfection of wisdom is not complete and bodhisattva great beings should know that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.
- 41.19 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when the Dharma preacher has obtained the dhāraṇīs but the Dharma listener has not obtained the dhāraṇīs, then too, Subhūti, everything for writing out, up to properly paying attention to this deep perfection of wisdom is not complete and bodhisattva great beings should know that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.
- 41.20 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when the Dharma preacher wants to write it out, up to wants to properly pay attention to it, but the Dharma listener does not want to write it out, up to does not want to properly pay attention to it, then too, Subhūti, everything for writing out, reading aloud, up to meditating on this deep perfection of wisdom is not complete and bodhisattva great beings should know that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.
- 41.21 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when the Dharma listener wants to write it out, up to wants to properly pay attention to it, but the Dharma preacher does not want to write it out, up to does not want to properly pay attention to it, then too, Subhūti, everything for writing out, up to meditating on this deep perfection of wisdom is not complete and bodhisattva great beings should know that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.
- 41.22 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when the Dharma preacher is free from the greed that causes them to act on the desire for sense gratification, or from malice, drowsiness, dozing, gross mental excitement, uneasiness, or doubt, and the Dharma listener is not free from the greed that causes them to act on the desire for sense gratification, or from malice, drowsiness, dozing, gross mental excitement, uneasiness, or doubt, [F.122.b] then too, Subhūti, everything for writing out, up to meditating on this deep perfection of wisdom is not complete and bodhisattva great beings should know that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.
- 41.23 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when the Dharma listener is free from the greed that causes them to act on the desire for sense gratification, or from malice, drowsiness, dozing, gross mental excitement, uneasiness, or doubt, and the Dharma preacher is not free from obscuration, then too, Subhūti, everything for writing out, up to meditating on this deep perfection of wisdom is not complete and bodhisattva great beings should know that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.
- 41.24 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when they are writing out, up to meditating on this deep perfection of wisdom and someone comes up to them and tells them what is awful about the hells, and tells them what is awful about the animal world, the world of Yama, and the world of ghosts, saying, ‘Those in the hells have such suffering, those in the animal worlds have such suffering, and those in the world of ghosts have such suffering. You should put an end to suffering right here. What will fully awakening to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening do for you?’ then too, Subhūti, everything for writing out, up to meditating on this deep perfection of wisdom is not complete and bodhisattva great being should know that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.

41.25 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when they are writing out, up to meditating on this deep perfection of wisdom someone comes up to them and speaks in praise of the Cāturmahārājika gods, up to speaks in praise of the gods in the Naiva-saṃjñānāsaṃjñāyatana, [F.123.a] saying, ‘The desire realm is such a pleasure because of the enjoyment of sense objects; the form realm is such a pleasure because of the concentrations and absorptions; the formless realm is such a pleasure because of the quiet calm and absorptions. And yet they are all impermanent, suffering, unowned, subject to change, subject to extinction, unattractive, and subject to cessation, so you should obtain the result of stream enterer, or you should obtain the result of once-returner, or the result of non-returner, or the state of a worthy one, or a pratyekabuddha’s awakening right here, or else you will be in a cycle of cyclic existences for a long time,’ bodhisattva great beings should know that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.

41.26 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when the Dharma preacher is a loner without companions who does things personally, while the Dharma listener is gregarious, then too, Subhūti, everything for writing out, reading aloud, reciting, and meditating on this deep perfection of wisdom is not complete and bodhisattva great beings should know that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.

41.27 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when the Dharma listener is a loner without companions who does things personally, while the Dharma preacher is gregarious, then too, Subhūti, everything for writing out, clearly articulating, reciting, and properly paying attention to this deep perfection of wisdom is not complete and bodhisattva great beings should know that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.

41.28 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when the Dharma preacher says, ‘I will give this perfection of wisdom to those who follow after me to write out, up to and properly [F.123.b] pay attention to,’ and the Dharma listener does not follow, then too, Subhūti, everything for writing out, up to meditating on this deep perfection of wisdom is not complete and bodhisattva great beings should know that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.

- 41.29 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when the Dharma listener wants to follow after the Dharma preacher but the Dharma preacher provides no opportunity for following, then too, Subhūti, everything for writing out, explaining, up to meditating on this deep perfection of wisdom is not complete and bodhisattva great beings should know that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.
- 41.30 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when for the sake of some trifling material possession the Dharma preacher wants to give this deep perfection of wisdom to write out, clearly articulate, recite, up to meditate on, and, on account of some trifling material possession the Dharma listener is not willing to approach, then too, Subhūti, everything for writing out, clearly articulating, reciting, properly paying attention to, and meditating on this deep perfection of wisdom is not complete and bodhisattva great beings should know that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.
- 41.31 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when the Dharma preacher wants to go to a location where there is a life-threatening danger and the Dharma listener does not want to go there, then too, Subhūti, everything for writing out, up to meditating on this deep perfection of wisdom is not complete and bodhisattva great beings should know that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.
- 41.32 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when the Dharma listener wants to go to a location where there is a life-threatening danger and the Dharma preacher does not want to go there, [F.124.a] then too, Subhūti, everything for writing out, up to meditating on this deep perfection of wisdom is not complete and bodhisattva great beings should know that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.
- 41.33 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when the Dharma listener wants to go where food is scarce and water is scarce and the Dharma preacher does not want to go there, then too, Subhūti, everything for writing out, up to meditating on this deep perfection of wisdom is not complete and bodhisattva great beings should know that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.
- 41.34 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when the Dharma preacher wants to go where there is no food and there is no water and the Dharma listener does not want to go there, then too, Subhūti, everything for writing out, up to meditating on this deep perfection of wisdom is not complete and bodhisattva great beings should know that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.
- 41.35 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when the Dharma preacher wants to go where there is ample food and plenty of water and the Dharma listeners have followed, and the Dharma preacher then says to them, ‘Sons of a good family, it would not be right, would it, if you have come here for the sake of material possessions? Think about this carefully for a moment or else you might, on account of the amount of alms you might actually get, come to feel regret,' then that Dharma preacher in a subtle way will have rejected them. And if, disgusted, they decide, 'This is a sign of rejection, it is not a sign of generosity,' then too, Subhūti, everything for writing out, up to meditating on this deep perfection of wisdom is not complete and bodhisattva great beings should know that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.

41.36 "Furthermore, Subhūti, when a Dharma preacher who is a monk wants to go into a dangerous forest, wild jungle, or steep ravine where there is danger from robbers, danger from savages, danger from hunters, danger from angry wild animals, and danger from poisonous snakes, but still the Dharma listeners who want to listen to this deep perfection of wisdom follow the Dharma preacher, yet the Dharma preacher who is a monk says to them, 'Sons of a good family, [F.124.b] it is not right, is it, that you have to come here to this dangerous forest, wild jungle, where there is danger from robbers,' then, because that Dharma preacher who is a monk still does not want to explain, does not want to write out, does not want to clearly articulate, does not want to cause them to listen to, and does not want to cause them to meditate on this deep perfection of wisdom, they become disgusted after hearing that from the Dharma preacher who is a monk and do not go where that Dharma preacher who is a monk goes, then too, Subhūti, everything for writing out, up to meditating on this deep perfection of wisdom is not complete and bodhisattva great beings should know that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.

41.37 "Furthermore, Subhūti, when a Dharma preacher who is a monk gets attached to a generous alms-giving family, and, attached to the generous alms-giving family, continually thinks about going to see that family, and, continually thinking about them, goes to see that family and therefore rejects Dharma listeners, saying, 'Venerables, I have to go to see and visit the generous alms-giving families,' the Dharma preacher rejects those Dharma listeners. When they, rejected, turn back, then too, Subhūti, everything for writing out, up to meditating on this deep perfection of wisdom is not complete and bodhisattva great beings should know that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.

41.38 "Furthermore, Subhūti, Māra the wicked one disguised in the form of a monk and disguised in the form of a tathāgata employs whatever means possible so that no matter who it is, they will not write out, will not take up, will not bear in mind, will not recite, will not master, will not properly pay attention to, and will not meditate on this deep perfection of wisdom."

41.39 The Lord having said that, venerable Subhūti then asked him, [F.125.a] "Lord, why does Māra the wicked one disguised in the form of a monk employ whatever means possible so that no matter who it is, they will not write out, will not clearly articulate, will not read aloud, will not recite, will not properly pay attention to, and will not meditate on this deep perfection of wisdom?"

41.40 "Subhūti," replied the Lord, "here Māra the wicked one disguised in the form of a monk causes a split and separation, saying, 'This is not the perfection of wisdom. The perfection of wisdom is the sūtra that has come down to me, which I have mastered.' Subhūti, there, when Māra the wicked one thus causes a split, those bodhisattvas who have not been prophesied begin to harbor doubt, and those who have harbored doubt do not write out, do not clearly articulate, do not master, do not recite from memory, do not properly pay attention to, and do not meditate on this deep perfection of wisdom. Then too, Subhūti, everything for writing out, clearly articulating, mastering, reciting, meditating on, and properly paying attention to this deep perfection of wisdom is not complete and bodhisattva great beings should know that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.

41.41 "Furthermore, Subhūti, when Māra the wicked one disguised in the form of a monk comes up to a bodhisattva great being and says, 'A bodhisattva who practices this deep perfection of wisdom actualizes the very limit of reality and reaches the result of stream enterer, or reaches the result of once-returned, or reaches the result of non-returned, or reaches the state of a worthy one, or reaches the state of a pratyekabuddha,' then too, Subhūti, [F.125.b] everything for writing out, expounding, teaching, up to meditating on this deep perfection of wisdom is not complete and bodhisattva great beings should know that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.

41.42 "Furthermore, Subhūti, there are many works of Māra that act as hindrances to writing out, expounding, up to meditating on this deep perfection of wisdom. Bodhisattvas should know those works of Māra, and knowing them, should eliminate them as well."

41.43 "Lord, what are those works of Māra that bodhisattva great beings should know, and knowing them, should eliminate as well?" asked Subhūti.

41.44 "Subhūti," replied the Lord, "works of Māra arise with counterfeit perfections of wisdom, and similarly, works of Māra arise with counterfeit perfections of concentration, perseverance, patience, morality, and giving. Bodhisattva great beings should know and eliminate them.

41.45 "Furthermore, Subhūti, works of Māra also arise with counterfeit inner emptiness, up to arise with counterfeit emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, and works of Māra arise with a counterfeit Śrāvaka Vehicle and Pratyekabuddha Vehicle as well. Bodhisattva great beings should know and eliminate them. And that counterfeit perfection of wisdom says, 'Cultivate these four applications of mindfulness; cultivate these right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and path; and cultivate these emptiness, signless, and wishless gateways to liberation. Master them, [F.126.a] and having mastered them reach the result of stream enterer, or reach the result of once-returner, the result of non-returner, or the state of a worthy one right here. What use is there in fully awakening to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening?’ Then too, Subhūti, everything for writing out, taking up, teaching, clearly articulating, properly paying attention to, up to meditating on this deep perfection of wisdom is not complete, and works such as these of Māra the wicked one start to pose a threat.

41.46 “Furthermore, Subhūti, Māra the wicked one disguised in the form of a buddha with a halo the length of two outstretched arms extending out around his body, gold-like in color, approaches bodhisattvas. When, on seeing him, they experience a feeling of delight, and having experienced that feeling of delight they neglect the knowledge of all aspects, then too, Subhūti, everything for writing out, clearly articulating, reciting, expounding, and properly paying attention to this deep perfection of wisdom is not complete. Bodhisattva great beings should know that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.

41.47 “Furthermore, Subhūti, Māra the wicked one makes visible a buddha and so on at the head of<sup>508</sup> the monastic saṅgha in front of those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family, and the bodhisattvas experience a longing for that, thinking, ‘In future I too must become such a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha. Similarly, I must gather a retinue and I too must teach the Dharma just like that tathāgata teaches it.’ When they experience a longing for that they neglect the knowledge of all aspects. Then too, Subhūti, everything for writing out, clearly [F.126.b] articulating, mastering, expounding, paying attention to, and meditating on this deep perfection of wisdom is not complete. Bodhisattva great beings should know that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra.

41.48 “Furthermore, Subhūti, Māra the wicked one makes visible many hundreds of bodhisattvas, many thousands of bodhisattvas practicing the perfection of giving and practicing the perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and perfection of wisdom. When those bodhisattvas experience a longing for those magical productions of Māra they neglect the knowledge of all aspects. Then too, Subhūti, everything for writing out, clearly articulating, reciting, expounding, paying attention to, and meditating on this deep perfection of wisdom is not complete. Bodhisattva great beings should know that this too, Subhūti, is the work of Māra. And why? Subhūti, it is because form does not exist in this deep perfection of wisdom, and neither does feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness; the constituents and sense fields do not exist; and the perfections, thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, gateways to liberation, and awakening do not exist. And, Subhūti, where form does not exist, feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness do not exist; up to awakening does not exist; where awakening does not exist a buddha [F.127.a] does not exist there either, and neither do bodhisattvas or śrāvakas exist. And why? Subhūti, it is because all dharmas are empty of their own intrinsic nature.

41.49 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when sons of a good family and daughters of a good family are writing out, reading aloud, clearly articulating, mastering, and properly paying attention to this deep perfection of wisdom, they encounter many hindrances to this perfection of wisdom. To illustrate, Subhūti, as many precious things as there are in the world—namely, gold, jewels, pearls, sapphires, beryl, conch shells, crystals, corals, and silver—they occasion many hindrances and many opponents. Similarly, Subhūti, when sons of a good family and daughters of a good family write out, read aloud, clearly articulate, master, explain, properly pay attention to, and meditate on this deep perfection of wisdom, it occasions many hindrances and many opponents.”

41.50 “Exactly so, Lord, exactly so,” said Subhūti. “Sūtras connected with the perfection of wisdom occasion many opponents and many hindrances. Ignorant persons possessed by Māra hinder those writing out, clearly articulating, reading aloud, reciting, and properly paying attention to the deep perfection of wisdom. Lord, those ignorant, narrow-minded simpletons hinder those writing out, up to meditating on this deep perfection of wisdom, and those who do not write out this deep perfection of wisdom, or who hinder those writing it out do not have the intellect to advance toward the vast buddhadharmas. [F.127.b] Those who do not write out this deep perfection of wisdom, or who hinder those writing it, who do not meditate on it, or who hinder those meditating on it, do not have the intellect to advance toward the vast buddhadharmas.”

41.51 “Exactly so, Subhūti, exactly so,” said the Lord. “Those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family who do not write out, read aloud, clearly articulate, recite from memory, properly pay attention to, and meditate on this deep perfection of wisdom, causing hindrances to it, have newly set out in the vehicle, have not produced wholesome roots, have stunted wholesome roots, have not served well the victors of the past, and have not been assisted by spiritual friends. Subhūti, those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family who do not write out, up to meditate on this deep perfection of wisdom, who hinder others from writing it out, up to meditating on it are narrow-minded simpletons with stunted intellects, so they do not have the intellect to advance toward the vast buddhadharmas.

41.52      “There are also other works of Māra like that, Subhūti, that hinder writing out, up to meditating on this deep perfection of wisdom. But still, Subhūti, they should know that even if there are works of Māra that act as hindrances to those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family writing out, reciting, properly paying attention to, and meditating on this deep perfection of wisdom, Subhūti, they still, through the force of the buddha, keep on completing the perfection of concentration more and more; completing the perfection of perseverance, perfection of patience, perfection of morality, and perfection of giving; [F.128.a] completing the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening; and completing the gateways to liberation, powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, distinct attributes of a buddha, up to the knowledge of all aspects. Because of that those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family do not encounter hindrances when they write out, read aloud, clearly articulate, meditate on, and properly pay attention to this deep perfection of wisdom, continuing to complete more and more all the perfections, and complete all the dharmas on the side of awakening, all the gateways to liberation, the four concentrations, the four immeasurables, the four formless absorptions, and the five clairvoyances. Those lord buddhas dwelling and maintaining themselves in the ten directions also make an effort for the sake of those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family writing out, reading aloud, clearly articulating, reciting from memory, and properly paying attention to this deep perfection of wisdom. And those bodhisattva great beings irreversible from awakening standing in the ten directions also make an effort to look after those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family writing out, reading aloud, clearly articulating, reciting from memory, properly paying attention to, and meditating on this deep perfection of wisdom as well.”

41.53      This was the forty-first chapter, “Not Complete Because of Māra,” of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.”<sup>509</sup> [B33]

CHAPTER 42: REVEALING THE WORLD

42.1

“To illustrate, Subhūti, there might be [F.128.b] five, or ten, or twenty, or thirty, or forty, or fifty, or a hundred, or a thousand, or a hundred thousand sons of a certain woman and all of them would make an effort,<sup>510</sup> thinking, ‘What can we do so that our mother who gave birth to us, gave us the bodies we have and gave us life, does not fall sick; what can we do so that our mother is not in danger; what can we do so that our mother lives for a long time; what can we do so that our mother is not physically uncomfortable?’ Serving their mother with the finest service, protecting her with the finest protection, those sons think, ‘She must not face danger to her life or grow physically weak; or be attacked by mosquitos, black flies, or poisonous crawling creatures; or suffer from cold or heat, hunger or thirst.’ Thus, those sons attend on their mother with all the requirements for happiness; thus they serve their mother, thinking, ‘She reveals this world to us.’

42.2

“Similarly, Subhūti, the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas constantly and always watch over this deep perfection of wisdom with their buddha eye. And why? Because this deep perfection of wisdom gives birth to all the buddhadharmas; it causes the light of knowledge to shine. Also, those buddhas standing in as many world systems in the eastern direction as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River constantly and always watch over this deep perfection of wisdom with their buddha eye. And why? Because this deep perfection of wisdom gives birth to the tathāgatas and perfectly reveals the knowledge of a knower of all. Therefore, those tathāgatas constantly and always watch over this deep perfection of wisdom with their buddha eye. And why? Because the perfection of concentration, [F.129.a] perfection of perseverance, perfection of patience, perfection of morality, and perfection of giving of the tathāgatas issues forth from her; also inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature of the tathāgatas issues forth from her; also the four applications of mindfulness, right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and paths issue forth from her; also the gateways to liberation, ten powers, four fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, and distinct attributes of a buddha issue forth from her; up to also the knowledge of all aspects of all buddhas issues forth from her; and also stream enterers, once-returners, non-returners, worthy ones, buddhas, and tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas issue forth from her.

42.3 “Subhūti, it is also thanks to this deep perfection of wisdom that all those tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas, whoever they are, who have fully awakened, are fully awakening, and will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening have fully awakened, are fully awakening, and will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

42.4 “Subhūti, the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas also constantly and always look out with their buddha eye for all those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family who have set out in the Great Vehicle and are writing out, reading aloud, clearly articulating, and properly paying attention to this deep [F.129.b] perfection of wisdom. Subhūti, the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfect complete buddhas also constantly and always guard, protect, and keep safe those bodhisattva great beings, and sons of a good family and daughters of a good family so that one way or the other they will not abandon unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.”

42.5 Subhūti said, “Lord, you have said, ‘The perfection of wisdom gives birth to the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas and reveals this world.’ How, then, does the perfection of wisdom give birth to those bodhisattva great beings and buddhas, and how, Lord, does the perfection of wisdom reveal this world? How, Lord, is a tathāgata born from the perfection of wisdom, and what is this world of which the Tathāgata has spoken?”

42.6 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “this deep perfection of wisdom gives birth to a tathāgata’s ten powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, great love, great compassion, eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, and knowledge of all aspects, and it is on account of those, Subhūti, that a tathāgata comes to be known as a tathāgata. Therefore, Subhūti, this deep perfection of wisdom gives birth to the tathāgatas.”

42.7 “And what, Lord, has the Tathāgata said is the world?” asked Subhūti.

“Subhūti, the Tathāgata has said that the five aggregates are the world,” replied the Lord. [F.130.a]

42.8 “Lord, how does the perfection of wisdom reveal the five aggregates?” asked Subhūti.

“Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “the perfection of wisdom does not reveal those five aggregates as being destroyed, nor does it reveal them as being really destroyed.<sup>511</sup> It does not reveal them as being produced. It does not reveal them as defilement. It does not reveal them as purification. It does not reveal them as increasing. It does not reveal them as declining. It does not reveal past, future, or present dharmas. And why? Because emptiness does not mean being destroyed, nor does it mean being really destroyed; because signlessness..., and wishlessness is not being destroyed, nor is it being really destroyed; because not occasioning anything..., not being produced..., not stopping..., being nonexistent..., and having no intrinsic nature is not being destroyed, nor is it being really destroyed. It is thus, Subhūti, that this deep perfection of wisdom is said to reveal the world.

42.9 “Subhūti, the tathāgatas know the infinite, countless thought activities of beings without measure, and know them thanks to the perfection of wisdom, but still, Subhūti, in this deep perfection of wisdom a being and the designation of a being are not apprehended. Form and the designation of form are not apprehended; feeling..., perception..., volitional factors..., and consciousness and the designation of consciousness are not apprehended. The eyes, eye consciousness, and eye contact are not apprehended, and the designation of eye contact is not apprehended; the ears and a sound ... ; a nose and a smell ... ; a tongue and a taste ... ; a body and a feeling ... ; and a thinking mind, dharmas, thinking-mind consciousness, and thinking-mind contact are not apprehended, and the designation of thinking-mind contact is not apprehended. The perfections..., the thirty-seven dharmas [F.130.b] on the side of awakening..., the gateways to liberation..., the powers..., the fearlessnesses..., the detailed and thorough knowledges..., up to the distinct attributes of a buddha..., up to the knowledge of all aspects is not apprehended, and the designation of the knowledge of all aspects is not apprehended. It is thus, Subhūti, that this deep perfection of wisdom reveals the world to the tathāgatas.

42.10 “And why? Because, Subhūti, if even this very perfection of wisdom does not exist and is not apprehended in this deep perfection of wisdom, how could form, feeling, perception, and volitional factors ever be apprehended; how could consciousness ever be apprehended; up to how could the knowledge of all aspects ever be apprehended?

42.11 “Furthermore, Subhūti, the tathāgatas know for what they are the collected thoughts and distracted thoughts of as many beings designated with the designation being as there are, be they material or immaterial, with perception or without perception, or with neither perception nor nonperception, who are in this world or in other vast world systems in the ten directions. And why, Subhūti, do the tathāgatas know for what they are those collected thoughts and distracted thoughts of those beings? Subhūti, the tathāgatas know those collected thoughts and distracted thoughts of those beings for what they are through the true nature of dharmas.”

42.12 “Lord, what is this true nature of dharmas such that the tathāgatas know for what they are those collected thoughts and distracted thoughts of those beings?” asked Subhūti.

42.13 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “it is that true nature of dharmas in which even the very true nature of dharmas is not apprehended, let alone collected thoughts [F.131.a] or distracted thoughts. So, Subhūti, the tathāgatas know for what they are those collected thoughts and distracted thoughts of those beings through that true nature of dharmas.

42.14 “Furthermore, Subhūti, the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas know those collected thoughts and distracted thoughts of those beings for what they are, as inexhaustible. And how, Subhūti, do they know collected thoughts and distracted thoughts for what they are, as inexhaustible? Subhūti, here the tathāgatas know those minds of those beings for what they are, as free from greed, as cessation, and as abandonment. It is thus, Subhūti, that the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas know those collected thoughts and distracted thoughts of those beings for what they are, as isolated.

42.15 “Furthermore, Subhūti, the tathāgatas know a greedy thought of those beings for what it is, a greedy thought. They know a mind free from greed for what it is, a mind free from greed. Similarly, they know a mind with hate and free from hate, and one with confusion and free from confusion.”

42.16 “Lord,” asked Subhūti, “how do the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas know a greedy thought of those beings for what it is, a greedy thought; know a mind free from greed for what it is, a mind free from greed; [F.131.b] and similarly, know, for what it is, a mind with hate and free from hate, and one with confusion and free from confusion?”

42.17 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “a mind that is greedy is not as it really is. And why? Because, Subhūti, if even mind and mental factor dharmas are not apprehended as they really are, what need is there to say more about those with greed and free from greed, or with hate and free from hate, or with confusion and free from confusion? . . . . And, Subhūti, a mind with confusion is not as it really is. And why? Because, Subhūti, if even mind and mental factor dharmas are not apprehended as they really are, what need is there to say more about a mind free from confusion? It is thus, Subhūti, that the tathāgatas, thanks to the perfection of wisdom, know a greedy mind for what it is, a greedy mind; and similarly knows, for what it is, a mind free from greed..., a mind with hate and free from hate..., and one with confusion..., and one free from confusion for what it is, a mind free from confusion.

42.18 “Subhūti, how do the tathāgatas know a mind of beings free from greed for what it is, a mind free from greed? Subhūti, a mind that has greediness is not a mind that is free from greediness. And why? Because, Subhūti, two thoughts do not meet together. Therefore, Subhūti, a mind that is free from greediness is not a greedy mind. Similarly, a mind that is free from hatred [F.132.a] is not a mind with hate . . . . And a mind that is free from a confused state is not a mind with confusion. And why? Because, Subhūti, two thoughts do not come together. Therefore, Subhūti, the tathāgatas know a mind of those beings free from confusion for what it is, a mind free from confusion.

42.19 “Furthermore, Subhūti, thanks to this deep perfection of wisdom the tathāgatas know an inclusive thought of other beings or other persons for what it is, an inclusive thought. Subhūti, how do the tathāgatas know an inclusive thought of other beings or other persons for what it is, an inclusive thought? Subhūti, here the tathāgatas know that a thought of other beings or other persons is not inclusive, that a thought is not constricted, that a thought does not increase, that a thought is not reduced, that a thought does not come, and that a thought does not go. And why? Subhuti, it is because no intrinsic nature is apprehended which might make it inclusive, up to come and go. Therefore, Subhūti, the tathāgatas, thanks to this deep perfection of wisdom, know an inclusive thought of other beings or other persons for what it is, an inclusive thought.

42.20 “Furthermore, Subhūti, thanks to this deep perfection of wisdom [F.132.b] the tathāgatas know a great thought of other beings or other persons for what it is, a thought that has become great. Furthermore, Subhūti, how do the tathāgatas, thanks to this deep perfection of wisdom, know a thought of other beings or other persons for what it is, a thought that has become great? Subhūti, here the tathāgatas do not view the intrinsic nature of a thought of other beings or other persons as coming, going, being stationary, being produced, stopping, or as lasting and then changing into something else. And why? Subhuti, it is because an intrinsic nature that comes or goes, or arises or stops, or lasts or lasts and then changes into something else does not exist. Therefore, Subhūti, the tathāgatas, thanks to this deep perfection of wisdom, know a thought of other beings or other persons for what it is, a thought that has become great.

42.21 “Furthermore, Subhūti, thanks to this deep perfection of wisdom the tathāgatas know an immeasurable thought of other beings or other persons for what it is, an immeasurable thought. Furthermore, Subhūti, how do the tathāgatas, thanks to this deep perfection of wisdom, know an immeasurable thought of other beings or other persons for what it is, an immeasurable thought? Subhūti, here the tathāgatas view that thought of other beings or other persons as not there, as not not there, as not fixed, and as not not fixed. And why? Subhūti, it is because streams of thought are without outflows<sup>512</sup> and immeasurable, because a foundation on which they might persist does not exist. Therefore, Subhūti, the tathāgatas, thanks to this deep perfection of wisdom, know an immeasurable thought of other beings [F.133.a] or other persons for what it is, an immeasurable thought.

42.22 “Furthermore, Subhūti, thanks to this deep perfection of wisdom the tathāgatas know a thought of other beings or other persons that does not show itself for what it is, a thought that does not show itself. Subhūti, how do the tathāgatas know a thought of other beings or other persons that does not show itself for what it is, a thought that does not show itself? Subhūti, here, because it is empty of its own mark, the tathāgatas, thanks to this deep perfection of wisdom, view that thought of other beings or other persons as without a mark and separated from an intrinsic nature. Therefore, Subhūti, the tathāgatas, thanks to this deep perfection of wisdom, know that thought of other beings or other persons that does not show itself for what it is, a thought that does not show itself.

42.23 “Furthermore, Subhūti, thanks to this deep perfection of wisdom the tathāgatas know an invisible thought of other beings or other persons for what it is, an invisible thought. Subhūti, how do the tathāgatas, thanks to this deep perfection of wisdom, know an invisible thought of other beings or other persons for what it is, an invisible thought? Subhūti, here, those thoughts of others are not even visible to the five eyes of a tathāgata; therefore, Subhūti, the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas, thanks to this deep perfection of wisdom, know an invisible thought of other beings or other persons for what it is, an invisible thought.

42.24 “Furthermore, Subhūti, [F.133.b] thanks to this deep perfection of wisdom the tathāgatas know the thoughts of other beings or other persons that have moved excessively, are freed from movement, have moved to abridge, or are expanded for what they are,<sup>513</sup> thoughts that have moved excessively, are freed from movement, have moved to abridge, or are expanded. Subhūti, how do the tathāgatas, thanks to this deep perfection of wisdom, know the thoughts of other beings or other persons that have moved excessively, are freed from movement, have moved to abridge, or are expanded for what they are, thoughts that have moved excessively, are freed from movement, have moved to abridge, or are expanded? Subhūti, here, the tathāgatas, thanks to this deep perfection of wisdom, know those thoughts of other beings or other persons as follows. When the thoughts of beings who have moved excessively, are freed from movement, have moved to abridge, or are expanded arise, whichever of them arises they all arise based on form, or based on feeling, or based on perception, or based on volitional factors, or based on consciousness. Therefore, Subhūti, thanks to this deep perfection of wisdom the tathāgatas know the thoughts of other beings or other persons that have moved excessively, are freed from movement, have moved to abridge, or are expanded for what they are.

42.25 “ ‘Just this statement—“the soul and the world are permanent”—is true, the others are false’ [F.134.a] refers to form. ‘Just this statement—“the soul and the world are impermanent ... both permanent and impermanent ... neither permanent nor impermanent”—is true, the others are false’ refers to form. Connect this in the same way also with feeling, perception, and volitional factors. ‘Just this statement—“the soul and the world are permanent”—is true, the others are false’ refers to consciousness. ‘Just this statement—“the soul and the world are impermanent ... both permanent and impermanent ... neither permanent nor impermanent”—is true, the others are false’ refers to consciousness.

42.26 “Similarly, ‘Just this statement—“the soul and the world are finite”—is true, the others are false’ refers to form. ‘Just this statement—“the soul and the world are not finite ... both finite and not finite ... neither finite nor not finite”—is true, the others are false’ refers to form. Connect this in the same way also with feeling, perception, and volitional factors. ‘Just this statement—“the soul and the world are finite”—is true, the others are false’ refers to consciousness. ‘Just this statement—“the soul and the world are not finite ... both finite and not finite ... neither finite nor not finite”—is true, the others are false’ refers to consciousness.

42.27 “ ‘Just this statement—“the soul and the world continue to exist after death”—is true, the others are false’ refers to form. ‘Just this statement—“the soul and the world do not continue to exist after death ... both continue to exist and do not continue to exist ... neither continue to exist nor not continue to exist”—is true, the others are false’ refers to form. Connect this in the same way also with feeling, perception, and volitional factors. ‘Just this statement—“the soul and the world continue to exist after death”—is true, the others are false’ refers to consciousness. ‘Just this statement—“the soul and the world do not continue to exist after death ... both [F.134.b] continue to exist and do not continue to exist ... neither continue to exist nor not continue to exist”—is true, the others are false’ refers to consciousness.

42.28 “ ‘Just this statement—“the living being is the body ... the living being is one thing and the body is another”—is true, the others are false’ refers to form. Connect this in the same way also with feeling, perception, and volitional factors. ‘Just this statement—“the living being is the body ... the living being is one thing and the body is another”—is true, the others are false’ refers to consciousness. Therefore, Subhūti, the tathāgatas, thanks to this deep perfection of wisdom, know the thoughts of other beings or other persons that have moved excessively, are freed from movement, have moved to abridge, or are expanded for what they are.

42.29 “Furthermore, Subhūti, thanks to this deep perfection of wisdom the tathāgatas know form. How do they know form? They know it just as they know suchness without distortion, without conceptualization, without a causal sign, without effort, without thought construction, and without apprehending anything. Similarly, they know feeling..., perception..., volitional factors..., and consciousness. How do they know consciousness? They know it just as they know suchness without distortion, without conceptualization, without a causal sign, without effort, without thought construction, and without apprehending anything. Therefore, Subhūti, the tathāgatas, thanks to this deep perfection of wisdom, know the thoughts of other beings and other persons that have moved excessively, are freed from movement, have moved to abridge, or are expanded for what they are.

42.30 “Therefore, Subhūti, [F.135.a] the suchness of the thoughts of other beings or other persons that have moved excessively, are freed from movement, have moved to abridge, or are expanded is the suchness of the aggregates, constituents, and sense fields. The suchness of the aggregates, constituents, and sense fields is the suchness of all dharmas. The suchness of all dharmas is the suchness of the six perfections. The suchness of the six perfections is the suchness of the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening. The suchness of the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening is the suchness of the emptinesses. The suchness of the emptinesses is the suchness of the eight gateways to liberation. The suchness of the eight gateways to liberation is the suchness of the nine serial absorptions. The suchness of the nine serial absorptions is the suchness of the ten tathāgata powers. The suchness of the ten tathāgata powers is the suchness of the fearlessnesses. The suchness of the fearlessnesses is the suchness of the detailed and thorough knowledges. The suchness of the detailed and thorough knowledges is the suchness of love and compassion. The suchness of love and compassion is the suchness of the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha. The suchness of the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha is the suchness of the knowledge of all aspects. The suchness of the knowledge of all aspects is the suchness of wholesome and unwholesome dharmas. The suchness of wholesome and unwholesome dharmas is the suchness of dharmas that are ordinary and extraordinary, are with outflows and without outflows, [F.135.b] are basic immorality and not basic immorality, are with afflictions and without afflictions, are defilement and purification, and are compounded and un-compounded. The suchness of dharmas that are compounded and un-compounded is the suchness of past, future, and present dharmas. The suchness of past, future, and present dharmas is the suchness of a stream enterer. The suchness of a stream enterer is the suchness of the result of stream enterer, and similarly, the suchness of a once-returned, a non-returned, a worthy one, and a pratyekabuddha. The suchness of a pratyekabuddha is the suchness of a pratyekabuddha's awakening. The suchness of a pratyekabuddha's awakening is the suchness of unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. The suchness of unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening is the suchness of a tathāgata. The suchness of a tathāgata is the suchness of all beings. Therefore, Subhūti, the suchness of a tathāgata and the suchness of all beings is a single suchness, an unbroken suchness, and that unbroken suchness is not extinguished, and since it is not extinguished it is nondual.

42.31     “Subhūti, the tathāgatas have fully awakened to this suchness of all dharmas thanks to this perfection of wisdom. Subhūti, this perfection of wisdom gives birth to the tathāgatas. Similarly, Subhūti, this perfection of wisdom reveals the world. Therefore, Subhūti, the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly [F.136.a] complete buddhas comprehend the suchness of all dharmas, comprehend the unmistakable suchness, and the unaltered suchness that is the suchness on account of which they are called a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha.”

42.32     Subhūti said, “Lord, this—namely, the perfection of wisdom, the suchness of all dharmas, unmistakable suchness, and unaltered suchness—is deep. Lord, this suchness has made the awakening of the lord buddhas clear. Lord, who with the exception of bodhisattvas irreversible from awakening, persons who have a perfect view, and worthy ones whose outflows have dried up believes this? Lord, these dharmas are deep. The Tathāgata has revealed them having fully awakened.”

42.33     “It is because suchness is not extinguished, Subhūti,” said the Lord. “And why is it not extinguished? Suchness is not extinguished because all dharmas are not extinguished. Subhūti, this—namely, the suchness of all dharmas—the Tathāgata has explained having fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.”

42.34     This was the forty-second chapter, “Revealing the World,” of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.”

CHAPTER 43: INCONCEIVABLE

43.1 Then as many gods as there were stationed in the great billionfold world system, living in the desire realm, and living in the form realm took sandalwood powders and specifically approached the Lord, went up to him, bowed their heads to the feet of the Lord, and stood to one side. Even while standing to one side those gods living in the desire realm and living in the form realm said [F.136.b] to the Lord, “Lord, this revelation of the perfection of wisdom is deep. Why, Lord, is the perfection of wisdom deep?”

43.2 The Lord replied, “Gods, this perfection of wisdom is deep because it is marked<sup>514</sup> by emptiness. Gods, the perfection of wisdom is marked by signlessness, is marked by wishlessness, marked by the absence of occasioning anything, marked by the absence of production, marked by the absence of stopping, marked by the absence of defilement, marked by the absence of purification, marked by the absence of an existent thing, marked by an intrinsic nature,<sup>515</sup> marked by the absence of a foundation, marked by the absence of annihilation, marked by the absence of going on and on forever, marked by the absence of unity, marked by the absence of difference, marked by the absence of coming, marked by the absence of going, and is marked by space. Gods, since this perfection of wisdom is marked like that, the Tathāgata uses the conventional label as an ordinary conventional term, but not as an ultimate one.

43.3 “Gods, the world with its gods, humans, and asuras cannot disturb those marks. And why? Gods, it is because the world with its gods, humans, and asuras has just the marks it has as well. Gods, a mark does not disturb a mark. A mark does not know a mark. A mark does not know the absence of a mark. The absence of a mark does not know a mark. And the absence of a mark does not know the absence of a mark. Therefore, in that mark, and in that absence of a mark, and also in them both that which makes known, or who [F.137.a] makes known, or to whom it is made known, or the intrinsic nature of whom it is made known to do not exist.

- 43.4 “Gods, those marks are not occasioned by form, and they are not occasioned by feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness. They are not occasioned by the perfection of giving. They are not occasioned by the perfection of morality, patience, perseverance, concentration, or wisdom. They are not occasioned by all the emptinesses. They are not occasioned by the dharmas on the side of awakening; they are not occasioned by the powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, or distinct attributes of a buddha; and they are not occasioned by the knowledge of all aspects. Gods, they are not human or nonhuman, or with outflows or without outflows, or ordinary or extraordinary, or compounded or un-compounded, because all marks have no mark.
- 43.5 “Gods, if somebody says ‘the mark of space is like this,’ would they be making a correct statement?”
- 43.6 “Lord, they would not be making a correct statement,” said the gods. “And why? Lord, space is not known through any mark, because the space element is un-compounded.”
- 43.7 “Gods,” said the Lord, “whether the tathāgatas arise or whether the tathāgatas do not arise the element of marks simply remains as it really is, the element of no marks. A tathāgata has perfectly and fully awakened to that, [F.137.b] therefore a tathāgata is called a ‘tathāgata.’ ”
- 43.8 “Lord,” replied the gods, “because a tathāgata has fully awakened to those marks, the knowledge of a tathāgata is unattached. Those are the marks with which a tathāgata remains teaching all marks, and these marks a tathāgata has fully awakened to are deep.
- 43.9 “Lord, the Tathāgata has given an exposition of all marks by giving an exposition of the perfection of wisdom. Lord, this perfection of wisdom within the range of the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas is deep, and it is totally amazing that the Tathāgata has fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening through practicing it, and, having fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, has differentiated all the marks: has differentiated the mark of form, and the marks of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness; up to has differentiated the mark of all dharmas; and has differentiated the mark of the knowledge of all aspects.”
- 43.10 Then the Lord said to those gods living in the desire realm and living in the form realm, “The mark of form is something that can show itself,<sup>516</sup> but a tathāgata has fully awakened even to that very form through the absence of a mark. Similarly, the mark of feeling is experience ... ; the mark of perception is taking up ... ; the mark of volitional factors is occasioning something ... ; and the mark of consciousness is a specific cognition, but [F.138.a] a tathāgata has fully awakened even to that through the absence of a mark.

The mark of the aggregates is suffering, but a tathāgata has fully awakened even to those through the absence of a mark. The mark of the constituents is like a poisonous snake, but a tathāgata has fully awakened even to those through the absence of a mark. The mark of the sense fields is a gateway to coming about, but a tathāgata has fully awakened even to those through the absence of a mark. The mark of dependent origination is where everything is complete, but a tathāgata has fully awakened even to that through the absence of a mark. The mark of the perfection of giving is abandoning, but a tathāgata has fully awakened even to that through the absence of a mark. The mark of the perfection of morality is not getting overheated...<sup>517</sup> the mark of the perfection of patience is not being upset ... ; the mark of the perfection of perseverance is not being able to be crushed ... ; the mark of the perfection of concentration is being collected ... ; and the mark of the perfection of wisdom is rejecting,<sup>518</sup> but a tathāgata has fully awakened even to that through the absence of a mark. The mark of the four concentrations ... ; the four immeasurables ... ; and the four formless absorptions is being undisturbed, but a tathāgata has fully awakened even to them through the absence of a mark. The thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening are marked by causing escape, but a tathāgata has fully awakened even to them through the absence of a mark. The mark of emptiness is detachment ... ; the mark of signlessness is peace ... ; and the mark of wishlessness is eliminating suffering, but a tathāgata has fully awakened even to that through the absence of a mark. The mark of the deliverances [F.138.b] is causing release, but a tathāgata has fully awakened even to them through the absence of a mark.

43.11 Similarly, connect the powers with the mark of being very certain ... ; the fearlessnesses with the mark of being very firmly grounded ... ; the detailed and thorough knowledges with the mark of being something that cannot be torn away ... ; great love with the mark of supplying benefit ... ; great compassion with the mark of protecting ... ; great joy with the mark of great delight in all the buddhadharmas ... ; great equanimity with the mark of remaining indifferent toward pleasure and pain, gaining and not gaining, fame and infamy, and praise and blame that cause faults in beings ...<sup>519</sup> and the distinct attributes of a buddha with the mark of not being partaken of, but the Tathāgata has fully awakened even to them through the absence of a mark. The mark of the knowledge of a knower of all aspects is direct perception, but a tathāgata has fully awakened even to that through the absence of a mark. Thus, gods, a tathāgata has fully awakened to all dharmas through the absence of a mark. Therefore, gods, the Tathāgata is said to have knowledge that is unattached."

- 43.12 Then the Lord said to venerable Subhūti, “Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom gives birth to the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas. The perfection of wisdom reveals the world to the tathāgatas. Why? The tathāgatas are contingent on this dharma, that is, the perfection of wisdom. They respect, revere, honor, and worship this dharma. Therefore, Subhūti, that dharma, the perfection of wisdom the tathāgatas respect, revere, honor, [F.139.a] and worship, is the true nature of dharmas. And why? Subhūti, the lord buddhas have appeared from this perfection of wisdom.
- 43.13 “Subhūti, the Tathāgata is cognizant of what has been done, and acknowledges what has been done. Subhūti, those who say ‘the Tathāgata is cognizant of what has been done and acknowledges what has been done’ make a correct statement. And how does the Tathāgata demonstrate that he is cognizant of what has been done, and acknowledge what has been done? Subhūti, since the Tathāgata, having traveled in that vehicle and on that path, fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, therefore the Tathāgata respects, reveres, honors, worships, protects, and treasures just that vehicle and just that path. You should view that as the Tathāgatas’ cognizance of what has been done and acknowledgment of what has been done.<sup>520</sup>
- 43.14 “Furthermore, Subhūti, the Tathāgata fully awakens to all dharmas as not done and not changed because there is no doer; because there is no body,<sup>521</sup> he fully awakens to them as not done. Subhūti, the full awakening by the Tathāgata to all dharmas as without the act of doing, thanks to the perfection of wisdom, that is the Tathāgata’s cognizance of what has not been done, and acknowledgment of what has not been done. Furthermore, Subhūti, thanks to the perfection of wisdom, on account of being ultimately unoriginated, the Tathāgata has engaged with all the dharmas of the unmade transcendental knowledge.<sup>522</sup>
- 43.15 “Subhūti, because of this one of many explanations, the perfection of wisdom gives birth to the tathāgatas.”
- 43.16 “Lord, when all dharmas are not producers and are not revealers, how then does the perfection of wisdom [F.139.b] give birth to the tathāgatas and reveal the world?” asked Subhūti.
- 43.17 “Exactly so, Subhūti, exactly so!” replied the Lord. “All dharmas are not producers and are not revealers. And why, Subhūti, are all dharmas not producers and not revealers? Subhūti, it is because all dharmas are empty, ring hollow, are in vain, are a fraud, and are pointless. Because of this one of many explanations, Subhūti, all dharmas are not producers and are not revealers.

- 43.18 “And why, Subhūti, are all dharmas not producers and not revealers? Subhūti, it is because all dharmas are without a foundation and do not belong to anything. Because of this one of many explanations, Subhūti, all dharmas are not producers and are not revealers. Therefore, Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom gives birth to the tathāgatas and reveals the world.
- 43.19 “It reveals it, moreover, because form is not seen. It reveals it because feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are not seen. Therefore, Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom gives birth to the tathāgatas and reveals the world.”
- 43.20 “Lord, how, because form, feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are not seen, does it reveal it?” asked Subhūti.
- 43.21 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “when a consciousness with form as objective support does not arise, because, Subhūti, form is thus not seen, it reveals the world. Similarly, when a mind with feeling..., perception..., volitional factors..., and consciousness as objective support does not arise, because consciousness is thus not seen, it reveals the world. Connect this in the same way with each, up to when a consciousness with the knowledge of all aspects as objective support does not arise, because, Subhūti, the knowledge of all aspects [F.140.a] is thus not seen, it reveals the world. Therefore, Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom gives birth to the tathāgatas and reveals the world.”
- 43.22 “Furthermore, Subhūti, how does the perfection of wisdom give birth to the tathāgatas and reveal the world? Subhūti, here this perfection of wisdom points out ‘the world is empty.’ How does it point out ‘the world is empty’? It points out ‘the world that is the five aggregates is empty’; it points out ‘the world that is the eighteen constituents is empty’; it points out ‘the world that is the twelve sense fields is empty’; it points out ‘the world that is the path of the ten wholesome actions is empty’; it points out ‘the world that is the four concentrations, four immeasurables, and four formless absorptions is empty’; it points out ‘the world that is the twelve links of dependent origination arising from ignorance as its condition is empty’; it points out ‘the world that is the sixty-two views, the view of the perishable collection, and so on, is empty’; it points out ‘the world that is the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening is empty’; it points out ‘the world that is the six perfections is empty’; similarly, it points out ‘the world that is inner emptiness, outer emptiness, inner and outer emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature is empty’; similarly, it points out ‘the world that is the ten powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, and eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha is empty’; up to and it points out ‘the world that is the knowledge of all aspects is empty.’ Therefore, Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom gives birth to the tathāgatas and reveals the world.

- 43.23      “Furthermore, Subhūti, [F.140.b] the tathāgatas are aware the world is empty, perfectly know the world is empty, realize the world is empty, and comprehend the world is empty. Therefore, Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom gives birth to the tathāgatas and reveals the world.
- 43.24      “Furthermore, Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom reveals to the tathāgatas ‘the world is empty.’ How does it reveal ‘the world is empty’? It is because it reveals ‘the world that is the aggregates, the constituents, the sense fields, the path of the ten wholesome actions, the four concentrations, four immeasurables, and four formless absorptions, dependent origination, the sixty-two views (the view of the perishable collection and so on), the six perfections, the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, all the emptinesses, the powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, the distinct attributes of a buddha, and the knowledge of all aspects is empty.’ Therefore, Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom gives birth to the tathāgatas and reveals the world.
- 43.25      “Furthermore, Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom reveals to the tathāgatas that the world is inconceivable. How does it reveal that the world is inconceivable? It reveals that the world that is from the five aggregates up to the knowledge of all aspects is inconceivable. Similarly, it reveals that the world that is utterly isolated, inner emptiness, up to and the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature is inconceivable. Therefore, Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom gives birth to the tathāgatas and reveals the world.
- 43.26      “Furthermore, Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom reveals to the tathāgatas that the world is calm. How does it reveal that the world is calm? It reveals that the world that is the aggregates, constituents, sense fields, up to and the knowledge of all aspects is calm. Therefore, Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom gives birth to the tathāgatas and reveals the world.
- 43.27      “Furthermore, Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom reveals to the tathāgatas that the world is just emptiness. How does it reveal that the world is just emptiness? It reveals that [F.141.a] the world that is the five aggregates is just emptiness, it reveals that the world that is ... up to the knowledge of all aspects is just emptiness. Therefore, Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom gives birth to the tathāgatas and reveals the world.
- 43.28      “Subhūti, this perfection of wisdom reveals the world to the tathāgatas such that there is no perception of the world here at all, and neither is there any perception of the world beyond. And why? Because those dharmas that cause the perception of the world here or a perception of the world beyond do not exist.” [B34]
- 43.29      Subhūti said, “Lord! This perfection of wisdom has been made available through the tremendous work of the lords. Lord, this perfection of wisdom has been made available through inconceivable work, incomparable work, immeasurable work, work equal to the unequaled.”

43.30 “Exactly so, Subhūti, exactly so!” replied the Lord. “This perfection of wisdom has been made available through the tremendous work of the tathāgatas. And how, through tremendous work, has this perfection of wisdom been made available? Protecting, supporting, and not giving up on all beings is the tremendous work of the tathāgatas. Because of this one of many explanations, Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom has been made available through the tremendous work of the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas.

43.31 “How has this perfection of wisdom been made available through the inconceivable work of the tathāgatas? Subhūti, buddhahood, [F.141.b] tathāgatahood, the self-originated state, and the state of all-knowing are inconceivable. Because of this one of many explanations, Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom has been made available through the inconceivable work of the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas.

43.32 “How has this perfection of wisdom been made available through the incomparable work of the tathāgatas? Subhūti, among the mass of beings there is no being at all to which the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas can be related in thought or to whom they can be compared. Because of this one of many explanations, Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom has been made available through the incomparable work of the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas.

43.33 “How has this perfection of wisdom been made available through the immeasurable work of the tathāgatas? Subhūti, buddhahood, tathāgatahood, the self-originated state, and the state of all-knowing are immeasurable; nobody takes their measure. Because of this one of many explanations, Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom has been made available through the immeasurable work of the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas.

43.34 “How has this perfection of wisdom been made available through the work of the tathāgatas that is equal to the unequaled? There is no equal of the tathāgatas, so however could there be something superior? Because of this one of many explanations, Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom has been made available through the work of the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas that is equal to the unequaled.”

43.35 “Lord, are buddhahood, tathāgatahood, the self-originated state, and the state of a knower of all aspects [F.142.a] inconceivable, incomparable, immeasurable, uncountable, and equal to the unequaled?” asked Subhūti.

43.36 “Exactly so, Subhūti, exactly so!” replied the Lord. “Subhūti, buddhahood, tathāgatahood, the self-originated state, and the state of all-knowing are inconceivable. Similarly, Subhūti, buddhahood, tathāgatahood, the self-originated state, and the state of all-knowing are incomparable, immeasurable, uncountable, and equal to the unequaled.

43.37 “Subhūti, in that which is the natural state of dharmas allmind and mental factor dharmas are not apprehended.<sup>523</sup> Subhūti, form is inconceivable, incomparable, immeasurable, uncountable, and equal to the unequaled because it is not something to be known. Similarly, Subhūti, feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are inconceivable, incomparable, immeasurable, uncountable, and equal to the unequaled because they are not something to be known, up to the knowledge of all aspects is inconceivable, incomparable, immeasurable, uncountable, and equal to the unequaled because it is not something to be known.”

43.38 “Lord,” asked Subhūti, “why is form inconceivable, incomparable, immeasurable, uncountable, equal to the unequaled, and not something to be known; feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness inconceivable, incomparable, immeasurable, uncountable, equal to the unequaled, and not something to be known; up to the knowledge of all aspects inconceivable, incomparable, [F.142.b] immeasurable, uncountable, equal to the unequaled, and not something to be known?”

43.39 The Lord said, “Subhūti, because the intrinsic nature of form is no intrinsic nature it is inconceivable, incomparable, immeasurable, uncountable, equal to the unequaled, and not something to be known. Subhūti, because the intrinsic nature of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness is no intrinsic nature they are inconceivable, incomparable, immeasurable, uncountable, equal to the unequaled, and not something to be known, up to because the intrinsic nature of the knowledge of all aspects is no intrinsic nature it is inconceivable, incomparable, immeasurable, uncountable, equal to the unequaled, and not something to be known.

43.40 “What do you think, Subhūti, can you, in form that is inconceivable, incomparable, immeasurable, uncountable, equal to the unequaled, and not something to be known, apprehend form? Similarly, Subhūti, can you apprehend feeling..., perception..., volitional factors..., or consciousness in consciousness that is inconceivable, incomparable, immeasurable, uncountable, equal to the unequaled, and not something to be known? What do you think, Subhūti, can you apprehend ... up to the knowledge of all aspects in the knowledge of all aspects that is inconceivable, incomparable, immeasurable, uncountable, equal to the unequaled, and not something to be known?”

“No, Lord,” replied Subhūti.

43.41 “Because of this one of many explanations, Subhūti,” continued the Lord, “all dharmas are inconceivable, incomparable, immeasurable, uncountable, and equal to the unequaled. [F.143.a] Subhūti, these are the dharmas that are inconceivable, incomparable, immeasurable, uncountable, and equal to the unequaled. Similarly, Subhūti, the tathāgata dharmas of the tathāgatas are inconceivable, incomparable, immeasurable, uncountable, equal to the unequaled, and not anything to be known. Subhūti, these tathāgata dharmas of the tathāgatas are inconceivable because there is no conceiving; incomparable because there is no comparing; immeasurable because there is no measuring; uncountable because there is no counting; and equal to the unequaled because there is no equal or unequal. Because of this one of many explanations, Subhūti, all dharmas are inconceivable, incomparable, immeasurable, uncountable, and equal to the unequaled.

43.42 “Subhūti, those tathāgata dharmas of the tathāgatas are inconceivable because they are beyond conception; incomparable because they are beyond comparing; immeasurable because they are beyond measuring; uncountable because they are beyond counting; and equal to the unequaled because they are beyond equal and unequal. Because of this one of many explanations, Subhūti, all dharmas are inconceivable, incomparable, immeasurable, uncountable, and equal to the unequaled.

43.43 “Subhūti, inconceivable is a word for no conception. Subhūti, incomparable is a word for no comparing. Subhūti, immeasurable is a word for no measuring. Subhūti, uncountable is a word for beyond counting. Subhūti, equal to the unequaled is a term for unequalled and not equal.<sup>524</sup>

43.44 “Subhūti, those tathāgata dharmas of the tathāgatas are inconceivable, incomparable, immeasurable, uncountable, and equal to the unequaled. Subhūti, they are inconceivable because space is inconceivable. Similarly, they are incomparable, immeasurable, uncountable, and [F.143.b] equal to the unequaled because they are similar to space. Therefore, Subhūti, the dharmas of the tathāgatas are inconceivable, incomparable, immeasurable, uncountable, and equal to the unequaled. All the śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas, and the world with its celestial beings, cannot think about, compare, measure, or count them. Therefore, the buddhas too are inconceivable and the buddhadharmas inconceivable as well.”

43.45 When this “Inconceivable, Incomparable, Immeasurable, Uncountable, and Equal to the Unequaled” chapter, one of many explanations of the Dharma, was being expounded, five hundred monks stopped appropriating anything and their minds became freed from outflows, and two thousand nuns stopped appropriating anything and their minds became freed from outflows as well. Dust-free and stainless, the Dharma eye of sixty thousand laymen became clear about the dharmas; and dust-free and stainless, the Dharma eye of thirty thousand laywomen became clear about the dharmas as well. Twenty thousand bodhisattvas also gained forbearance for the nonproduction of dharmas and the Lord prophesied they would become buddhas right in this Fortunate Age.

43.46 This was the forty-third chapter, "Inconceivable," of "The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines."

CHAPTER 44: MADE UP

44.1 Then venerable Subhūti said to the Lord, “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is deep. Lord, this perfection of wisdom has been made available through tremendous work. This perfection of wisdom has been made available through incomparable work, immeasurable work, incalculable work, [F.144.a] work equal to the unequaled.”

44.2 Venerable Subhūti having said this, the Lord replied to him, “Exactly so, Subhūti, exactly so! Subhūti, this perfection of wisdom has been made available through tremendous work. This perfection of wisdom has been made available through incomparable work, immeasurable work, incalculable work, work equal to the unequaled. And why? Subhūti, it is because the six perfections make up this deep perfection of wisdom. Subhūti, it is because inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature make it up; and the four applications of mindfulness, four right efforts, four legs of miraculous power, five faculties, five powers, seven limbs of awakening, and eightfold noble path make up this deep perfection of wisdom. Subhūti, it is because the Tathāgata’s ten powers make up this deep perfection of wisdom; the four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, and eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha make it up; and because, Subhūti, the buddha, up to the knowledge of all aspects make up this deep perfection of wisdom.

44.3 “To illustrate, Subhūti, all royal work and all civic work of a king from a royal family who has been crowned in a consecration ceremony, who is powerful and has become His Majesty to his people, is given to a minister to do, so the king is less concerned with it and is relieved of the burden. Similarly, all the dharmas of śrāvakas, or all the dharmas of pratyekabuddhas, or all the dharmas of bodhisattvas, or all the buddha dharmas, whatever they are, they all make up the perfection of wisdom; it is this perfection of wisdom that [F.144.b] does their work. Therefore, Subhūti, this perfection of wisdom has been made available through tremendous work. Subhūti, this perfection of wisdom has been made available through incomparable work, immeasurable work, incalculable work, work equal to the unequaled. And why? Because, Subhūti, this deep perfection of wisdom is made available so you do not hold on to and do not settle down on form; this deep perfection of wisdom is made available so you do not hold on to and do not settle down on feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness; this deep perfection of wisdom is made available so you do not hold on to and do not settle down on ... up to the knowledge of all aspects; this deep perfection of wisdom is made available so you do not hold on to and do not settle down on the result of stream enterer; and similarly, this deep perfection of wisdom is made available so you do not hold on to and do not settle down on the result of once-returner, the result of non-returner, the state of a worthy one, a pratyekabuddha's awakening, up to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening."

44.4 "Lord," asked Subhūti, "how is this perfection of wisdom made available so you do not hold on to and do not settle down on form? Lord, how is this deep perfection of wisdom made available so you do not hold on to and do not settle down on feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness? How is this deep perfection of wisdom made available so you do not hold on to and do not settle down on ... up to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening?"

44.5 "Subhūti," replied the Lord, "do you see that form which you might hold on to and might settle down on, or which itself holds on and settles down? Subhūti, do you see that [F.145.a] feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness which you might hold on to and might settle down on, or which itself holds on and settles down?"

"No, Lord," he replied.

44.6 "Subhūti, do you see that unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening which you might hold on to and might settle down on, or which itself holds on and settles down?" he asked.

"No, Lord," he replied.

44.7 "Excellent, excellent, Subhūti!" said the Lord. "Subhūti, I too do not see that form which you might hold on to and might settle down on, or which itself holds on and settles down. Subhūti, I too do not see ... up to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. And because I do not see it, I do not hold on to it. Because I do not hold on to it, I do not settle down on it. Subhūti, I too do not see a buddha level, all-knowledge, knowledge of all aspects, or tathāgatahood. And because I do not see it, I do not hold on to it. Because I do not hold on to it, I do not settle down on it. Therefore, Subhūti, bodhisattvas should not hold on to and should not settle down on form. They should not hold on to and should not settle down on feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness. Similarly, connect this with they should not hold onto and should not settle down on a buddha level, all-knowledge, knowledge of all aspects, or tathāgatahood.”

44.8 Then the gods living in the desire realm and in the form realm said to the Lord, “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is deep, [F.145.b] hard to behold, hard to understand, not something about which you can speculate, not an object of speculative thought, calm, investigated as subtle, delicate, an object to be known by the brilliantly learned and wise. Lord, those bodhisattvas who believe in this perfection of wisdom served well the victors of the past and have been assisted by spiritual friends. Lord, those beings who believe in this deep perfection of wisdom keep on producing wholesome roots.

44.9 “Lord, even if all the beings who are in the great billionfold world system were faith followers, Dharma followers, the eighth,<sup>525</sup> stream enterers, once-returners, non-returners, worthy ones, and pratyekabuddhas, still, far superior to their knowledge and effort in, and single day’s pleasure in, and forbearance for thinking about, weighing, testing, exploration, and examination of this deep perfection of wisdom would be a single day’s<sup>526</sup> pleasure in and forbearance for this sort of perfection of wisdom.

44.10 “And why? Because that knowledge and effort of faith followers, Dharma followers, the eighth, and stream enterers, as well as the knowledge and effort of once-returners, non-returners, worthy ones, and pratyekabuddhas, is<sup>527</sup> the forbearance of the bodhisattva great beings who have gained forbearance for the nonproduction of dharmas.”

44.11 Then the Lord said to the gods living in the desire realm and in the form realm, “Excellent, excellent, gods! Exactly so, gods, exactly so! The knowledge and effort of faith followers, Dharma followers, the eighth, [F.146.a] stream enterers, once-returners, non-returners, worthy ones, and pratyekabuddhas is the forbearance of the bodhisattva great beings who have gained forbearance for the nonproduction of dharmas. Gods, you should know that any sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who hear this perfection of wisdom and, having heard this perfection of wisdom, write it out, and having written it out, transmit, recite, and properly pay attention to it are sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who will quickly pass into complete nirvāṇa, while those in the Śrāvaka Vehicle and Pratyekabuddha Vehicle practicing other sūtras unconnected with this perfection of wisdom are not like that. And why? Because what faith followers and Dharma followers have to train in; what stream enterers, once-returners, non-returners, and worthy ones, and those who have set out in the Pratyekabuddha Vehicle have to train in; what bodhisattva great beings have to train in; and the most excellent dharmas that tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas who have fully awakened, will fully awaken, and are fully awakening to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening have trained in are taught in detail in this perfection of wisdom.”

44.12 Then the gods living in the desire realm and in the form realm said to the Lord, crying out cries of delight, “Lord, this—namely, this perfection of wisdom—is a tremendous perfection. Lord, this perfection of wisdom is an incomparable perfection, [F.146.b] immeasurable perfection, incalculable perfection, a perfection equal to the unequaled. Lord, even though faith followers, Dharma followers, the eighth, stream enterers, once-returners, non-returners, worthy ones, and pratyekabuddhas have gone forth by training in this perfection of wisdom, and bodhisattva great beings have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening by training in it, still there has not become less of this deep perfection and there has not become more.”

44.13 Then the gods living in the desire realm and in the form realm bowed their head to the Lord’s feet, circumambulated the Lord three times, withdrew from the presence of the Lord, and before they had gone very far disappeared—those gods who live in the desire realm to live in the desire realm, and those gods who live in the form realm to live in the form realm.

44.14 Venerable Subhūti then asked to the Lord, “Where did they die, Lord, the bodhisattva great beings who have taken birth here and believe in this deep perfection of wisdom the moment they hear it?”

44.15 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “bodhisattva great beings who believe in this deep perfection of wisdom the moment they hear it will not be cowed, will not tense up, will not go blank, will not be of two minds, will not doubt, will delight [F.147.a] in hearing this deep perfection of wisdom, and, having heard it, will not become separated from attention to this deep perfection of wisdom. Whether they go or come or stand or sit, constantly and always they will not give up that attention to this deep perfection of wisdom—constantly and always they will follow after those persons who are Dharma preachers. To illustrate, Subhūti, a cow with a baby calf does not let go of her calf. Similarly, Subhūti, those bodhisattva great beings newly set out in the vehicle do not give up a Dharma preacher until they have internalized this deep perfection of wisdom, taken it up, memorized and recited it, investigated it with their thinking mind, and seen and penetrated it. So, because of this deep perfection of wisdom, Subhūti, having died as humans, they have taken birth here. And why? Because those bodhisattva great beings newly set out in the vehicle have written out this deep perfection of wisdom, and, having written it out, have made it into a book, and have respected, revered, honored, and worshiped it with flowers, perfumes, incense, garlands, creams, powders, robes, parasols, flags, and banners.

Because of that wholesome root, Subhūti, they have died as humans and taken birth as humans who believe in this deep perfection of wisdom the moment they hear it.”

44.16 Subhūti asked, “Lord, is there one of those many bodhisattvas endowed with those good qualities who, having attended on other lord buddhas, died there, and having taken birth here believes in this [F.147.b] deep perfection of wisdom the moment they hear it, and believing in it also writes it out, and having written it out transmits, recites, and properly pays attention to it?”

44.17 “Exactly so, Subhūti, exactly so!” replied the Lord. “That bodhisattva great being who attends on other lord buddhas in other buddhafi elds and, having died there, takes birth here and believes in this deep perfection of wisdom the moment they hear it, and believing in it also writes it out, and having written it out clearly articulates, recites, and properly pays attention to it. And why? Because that bodhisattva great being heard this deep perfection of wisdom from those lord buddhas, and having heard it also took it up, bore it in mind, recited it, and properly paid attention to it. It is because of those wholesome roots and that proper attention that they have taken birth here.

44.18 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings who have died among the Tuṣṭa gods and, having taken birth here, share in the good fortune of humans—you should also be aware that they are indeed endowed with those good qualities as well. And why? Subhūti, it is because those bodhisattva great beings have thoroughly questioned the bodhisattva great being Maitreya about this perfection of wisdom. It is because of that wholesome root that they have taken birth here.

44.19 “Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings who have not heard or asked about the perfection of wisdom in the past have taken birth in the human world, they have doubt, go blank, and feel cowed. [F.148.a] Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings who have heard and asked about the perfection of wisdom in the past hear an explanation of this deep perfection of wisdom, they do not have doubt, do not go blank, and do not feel cowed. Connect this in the same way with Subhūti, ... the perfection of concentration ... the perfection of perseverance ... the perfection of patience ... and the perfection of morality as well. Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings who have not heard and not asked about this perfection of giving in the past hear an explanation of this deep perfection of wisdom, they have doubt, go blank, and feel cowed.

44.20 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings who have not heard and not asked about inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature in the past hear an explanation of this deep perfection of wisdom, they have doubt, go blank, and feel cowed.

- 44.21 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings who have not heard and not asked about the four applications of mindfulness in the past hear an explanation of this deep perfection of wisdom, they have doubt, go blank, and feel cowed. Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings who have not heard about the four right efforts, four legs of miraculous power, five faculties, five powers, seven limbs of awakening, and eightfold noble path in the past, or have heard but have not asked about them, hear an explanation of this deep perfection of wisdom, they have doubt, [F.148.b] go blank, and feel cowed.
- 44.22 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings have heard and asked about this deep perfection of wisdom in the past, but even after hearing and asking about it still do not put it into practice and do not meditate on this deep perfection of wisdom for one day, or two days, or three days, or four days, or five days, or six days, or even ten days, they get robbed of it and they become separated from this deep perfection of wisdom. And why? Subhūti, it is because bodhisattva great beings who sometimes do and sometimes do not have the desire to practice the perfection of wisdom get robbed of it, because their minds are flighty like a wisp of cotton. Subhūti, you should know that, having set out in the vehicle, those bodhisattva great beings have not gone far, have not been looked after by spiritual friends, and have not attended on a perfectly complete buddha.
- 44.23 “Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings who have not clearly articulated this deep perfection of wisdom, have not recited, have not properly paid attention to, and have not trained in the perfection of wisdom; bodhisattva great beings who have not trained in the perfection of concentration, perfection of perseverance, perfection of patience, perfection of morality, or perfection of giving; who have not trained in inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature; [F.149.a] who have not trained in the applications of mindfulness; who have not trained in the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, or path; and who have not trained in the five clairvoyances, the powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, up to the knowledge of all aspects— Subhūti, you should know that they have newly set out in the vehicle. Subhūti, they just have faith, they just find pleasure in this deep perfection of wisdom, but they are not able to write out, read aloud, clearly articulate, recite from memory, or properly pay attention to this deep perfection of wisdom. Subhūti, sons of a good family or daughters of a good family in the Bodhisattva Vehicle who do not write out this deep perfection of wisdom, do not clearly articulate it, do not recite it, do not properly pay attention to it, and also do not take up this deep perfection of wisdom, up to do not take up the knowledge of all aspects, do not put this deep perfection of wisdom into practice, connect this in the same way with each, up to do not put this knowledge of all aspects into practice—you should know that they will come to be at one of these two levels—that is, the śrāvaka level or the pratyekabuddha level. Why? Because those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family did not write out this deep perfection of wisdom in the past, and did not clearly articulate it, did not recite it, and did not properly pay attention to it. This deep perfection of wisdom did not look after them, and those bodhisattva [F.149.b] great beings also did not put this deep perfection of wisdom into practice. Therefore, you should know that those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family will come to be at one of those two levels.”

44.24 This was the forty-fourth chapter, “Made Up,” of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.”

CHAPTER 45: A BOAT

45.1

“To illustrate, Subhūti, you should know that when a boat has broken up on the ocean, unless those people who are standing in it grab hold of a log, or an inflated skin, or a human corpse as a support, Subhūti, they will not reach the shore of the ocean and will die. Subhūti, when a boat has broken up on the ocean, those people who have it in mind to grab hold of a log, or an inflated skin, or a human corpse as a support, Subhūti, they will not die in the ocean; they will happily cross over the ocean and stand on dry land. Similarly, Subhūti, those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family in the Bodhisattva Vehicle endowed with just faith and just joy who do not write out, clearly articulate, recite, or properly pay attention to the sūtras connected with this deep perfection of wisdom, and similarly, connect this with do not write out, clearly articulate, recite, or hold as a support the perfection of concentration, perfection of perseverance, perfection of patience, perfection of morality, or perfection of giving, and similarly, connect this with each, up to do not write out, clearly articulate, recite, properly pay attention to, or hold as a support the knowledge of all aspects—you should know about these people in the Bodhisattva Vehicle who have set forth to the knowledge of all aspects that in the interim they will get into trouble on the path. They [F.150.a] will actualize the śrāvaka level or pratyekabuddha level. Subhūti, those people in the Bodhisattva Vehicle who have faith, have forbearance, have serene confidence, have a surpassing aspiration, have enjoyment, have belief, have renunciation, and have not given up the effort for full awakening to unsurpassed, complete awakening will write out, clearly articulate, recite, and properly pay attention to this perfection of wisdom. Look, Subhūti, those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family with faith, forbearance, serene confidence, a surpassing aspiration, belief, and renunciation, who have not given up the effort for unsurpassed, complete awakening, and those who assist<sup>528</sup> the perfection of wisdom, up to assist the knowledge of all aspects will not get into trouble in the interim. They pass beyond the śrāvaka and pratyekabuddha levels and, having brought beings to maturity and purified a buddhafiield, fully awaken to unsurpassed, complete awakening.

45.2 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, when a man or a woman has it in mind to ladle water into an unfired, unbaked pot, you should know, Subhūti, that pot does not last long; straight away it gets ruined and dissolves. And why? Because that pot has not been fired and therefore afterward goes back to being ordinary earth. Similarly, Subhūti, if those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family in the Bodhisattva Vehicle who have faith in, [F.150.b] have forbearance for, take joy in, have serene confidence in, have a surpassing aspiration toward, enjoy, have belief in, have sacrificed for, and have not given up the effort for full awakening to unsurpassed, complete awakening, but still are not assisted by the perfection of wisdom; are not assisted by skillful means; are not assisted by the perfection of concentration, perfection of perseverance, perfection of patience, perfection of morality, or perfection of giving; are not assisted by inner emptiness, up to are not assisted by emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature; are not assisted by the applications of mindfulness, right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, or path; are not assisted by the ten tathāgata powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, or eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha; up to are not assisted by the knowledge of all aspects, then in the interim those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family will get into trouble. Subhūti, in the interim what trouble do those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family in the Bodhisattva Vehicle get into? It is this, namely, the śrāvaka level and the pratyekabuddha level.

45.3 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, when a man or a woman has ladled river, or spring, or lake, or pond, or tank water into a fired pot you should know, Subhūti, that pot will happily make it back home. Similarly, if bodhisattva great beings who have faith in, have forbearance for, [F.151.a] take joy in, have serene confidence in, have a surpassing aspiration toward, enjoy, have belief in, have sacrificed for, and have not given up the effort for full awakening to unsurpassed, complete awakening are assisted by the perfection of wisdom, are assisted by skillful means, up to the knowledge of all aspects, then you should know, Subhūti, that those bodhisattva great beings will not in the interim get into trouble on the path—that is, on the śrāvaka level or the pratyekabuddha level—and without harm will fully awaken to unsurpassed, complete awakening.

45.4 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, if an oceangoing ship that has not been well joined, with leaks unpatched and heavily loaded with goods, is launched on the water, Subhūti, you should know in the interim that boat will sink, the goods going one way and the boat another, and such a trader as that, unskilled in means, will meet with great harm and become separated from the great jewels. Similarly, Subhūti, bodhisattvas who have faith in, have forbearance for, take joy in, have serene confidence in, have a surpassing aspiration toward, enjoy, have belief in, have sacrificed for, and have not given up the effort for full awakening to unsurpassed, complete awakening, but still are not assisted by the perfection of wisdom, are not assisted by skillful means, up to are not assisted by the knowledge of all aspects, then, Subhūti, those bodhisattva great beings will get into trouble in the interim and lose a great profit—namely, they will lose the heap of jewels that is the knowledge of all aspects. Subhūti, [F.151.b] in the interim what trouble do those bodhisattva great beings get into? It is this, namely, the śrāvaka level and the pratyekabuddha level.

45.5 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, if a man gifted with intelligence plies his way on an oceangoing ship that has been well joined, with the leaks patched, you should know, Subhūti, in the interim that boat will not break up and will reach where it is going. Similarly, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings who have faith in, have forbearance for, take joy in, have serene confidence in, have a surpassing aspiration toward, enjoy, have belief in, have sacrificed for, and have not given up the effort for full awakening to unsurpassed, complete awakening, and are also assisted by the perfection of wisdom, are also assisted by skillful means as well, up to are assisted by the knowledge of all aspects as well, then, Subhūti, those bodhisattva great beings will not turn back in the interim from unsurpassed, complete awakening. And why? Because, Subhūti, those bodhisattva great beings have faith in, have forbearance for, take joy in, have serene confidence in, have a surpassing aspiration toward, enjoy, have belief in, have sacrificed for, and have not given up the effort for full awakening to unsurpassed, complete awakening, and are assisted by the perfection of wisdom, also are assisted by skillful means, up to and are assisted by the knowledge of all aspects as well. Those bodhisattvas do not fall to the śrāvaka level or the pratyekabuddha level.

45.6 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, if there is a very old, decrepit, one hundred and twenty-year-old man [F.152.a] and he falls sick in his body with a wind, or bile, or phlegm disorder, or a disorder from them in combination, what do you think, Subhūti, does that man have the power to get up as he personally might want to do?”

“No, Lord,” said Subhūti.

45.7 “Subhūti, does that man get up?” asked the Lord.

“Lord,” replied Subhūti, “even were that man able to get up from a chair, still, because of his old age and his sickness he is frail, so he would not have the strength to go one krośa<sup>529</sup> or two krośa. Even though he is able to get up from a chair he is not able to go.”

45.8 “Similarly, Subhūti,” continued the Lord, “even though bodhisattva great beings have faith in, have forbearance for, take joy in, have serene confidence in, have a surpassing aspiration toward, enjoy, have belief in, have sacrificed for, and have not given up the effort for full awakening to unsurpassed, complete awakening, because they have not also been assisted by the perfection of wisdom, up to have not been assisted by the knowledge of all aspects, then, Subhūti, because those bodhisattva great beings thus have not been assisted by the perfection of wisdom and have not been assisted by skillful means, they will fall in the interim to the śrāvaka level or the pratyekabuddha level.

45.9 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, it is like two strong people lifting up from under his left and right armpits that same very old, decrepit, one hundred and twenty-year-old man who has fallen sick in his body with a wind, or bile, or phlegm disorder, or a disorder from them in combination, [F.152.b] and raising him up out of that chair, saying, ‘Hey! You sir! Held and supported by us go where you want to go, wherever you like. In the interim, up to arriving in that place, you will not fall.’ Similarly, Subhūti, you should know that if bodhisattva great beings who have faith in, have forbearance for, take joy in, have serene confidence in, have a surpassing aspiration toward, enjoy, have belief in, have sacrificed for, and have not given up the effort for full awakening to unsurpassed, complete awakening have also been assisted by the perfection of wisdom and also have been assisted by skillful means, those bodhisattva great beings will not turn back in the interim; those bodhisattva great beings have the power to reach that ground—namely, unsurpassed, complete awakening.”

45.10 Subhūti then asked, “How is it, Lord, that those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who have set out in the Bodhisattva Vehicle have not been assisted by the perfection of wisdom and have not been assisted by skillful means and even fall to the śrāvaka level and the pratyekabuddha level?”

45.11 “Excellent, Subhūti, excellent that you have it in mind to inquire of the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete Buddha about this topic!” said the Lord. “Subhūti, here, right from the beginning when bodhisattvas give a gift they give the gift with a mindstream that has fallen into grasping at ‘I’ and grasping at ‘mine.’ When they guard morality, are patient, make a vigorous effort, [F.153.a] are absorbed in concentration, and cultivate wisdom, they cultivate wisdom with a mind that has fallen into grasping at ‘I’ and grasping at ‘mine.’ While giving a gift it occurs to them to think, ‘I am giving a gift; this gift has to be given; I am generous. I am protecting morality; morality has to be cultivated by me; I am moral. I am being patient; patience has to be cultivated by me; I am patient. I am making an effort; effort has to be made by me; I am industrious. I am becoming absorbed in concentration; concentration has to be cultivated by me; I am in possession of concentration. I am cultivating wisdom; wisdom has to be cultivated by me; I am wise.’ Thus, on account of that giving they falsely project things. They falsely project ‘that gift.’ They falsely project, ‘It is my gift.’ Similarly, they falsely project ‘morality, patience, perseverance, and concentration,’ as well as ‘wisdom.’ On account of wisdom they falsely project things. They falsely project, ‘This is my wisdom.’

45.12 “And why? Because these thought constructions do not exist in the perfection of giving because the perfection of giving has gone to the farthest limit. These thought constructions do not exist in the perfection of morality. Similarly, thought construction also does not arise in the perfection of patience, the perfection of perseverance, the perfection of concentration, or the perfection of wisdom. And why? Because, whereas the perfection of wisdom has gone to the farthest limit, those in the Bodhisattva Vehicle [F.153.b] neither know the farthest limit nor know the farther shore, so they have not been assisted by the perfection of giving; have not been assisted by the perfection of morality, the perfection of patience, the perfection of perseverance, the perfection of concentration, or the perfection of wisdom; up to have not been assisted by the knowledge of all aspects, and hence fall to the śrāvaka level and the pratyekabuddha level and do not go forth to the knowledge of all aspects.

45.13 “Subhūti, how is it that a son of a good family or daughter of a good family in the Bodhisattva Vehicle comes to be without skillful means? Subhūti, here, right from the beginning it occurs to a son of a good family or daughter of a good family in the Bodhisattva Vehicle giving a gift without skillful means, guarding morality without skillful means, cultivating patience without skillful means, making an effort without skillful means, becoming absorbed in concentration without skillful means, and cultivating wisdom without skillful means that, ‘I am giving a gift; it has to be given to them; this gift has to be given. I am protecting morality. I am cultivating patience. I am making an effort. I have to become absorbed in concentration. I have to cultivate wisdom; wisdom has to be cultivated.’ So, they falsely project on account of that giving. They falsely project on account of the gift. They falsely project, ‘I am generous.’ They falsely project that it is moral. They falsely project on account of morality. They falsely project, ‘I am moral.’ They falsely project patience. They falsely project on account of patience. [F.154.a] They falsely project, ‘I am patient.’ They falsely project perseverance. They falsely project on account of perseverance. They falsely project, ‘I am industrious.’ They falsely project concentration. They falsely project on account of concentration. They falsely project, 'I am in possession of concentration.' They falsely project wisdom. They falsely project on account of wisdom. They falsely project, 'I am wise.'

45.14 "And why? Because those thought constructions do not exist in the perfection of giving as thought constructs them. And why? Because that—namely, the perfection of giving—has gone to the farthest limit. Similarly, connect this with because that—namely, the perfection of wisdom—has gone to the farthest limit. This is because those thought constructions do not exist in the perfection of wisdom as thought constructs them. And why? Because whereas that perfection of wisdom has gone to the farthest limit, those sons of a good family in the Bodhisattva Vehicle neither know the farthest limit nor know the farther shore. They have not been assisted by the perfection of giving. Similarly, connect this with each as before, up to they have not been assisted by the perfection of wisdom, up to have not been assisted by the knowledge of all aspects, and hence fall to the śrāvaka level and the pratyekabuddha level and do not go forth to the knowledge of all aspects. Therefore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings who have not been assisted by the perfection of wisdom and skillful means fall to the śrāvaka level and the pratyekabuddha level.

45.15 "How is it, Subhūti, that bodhisattva great beings assisted by the perfection of wisdom and skillful means do not fall to the śrāvaka level or the pratyekabuddha level [F.154.b] and reach unsurpassed, complete awakening?

45.16 "Subhūti, here, right from the beginning it does not occur to bodhisattva great beings when giving a gift, up to cultivating wisdom, to falsely project with a thought that has fallen into grasping at 'I' and grasping at 'mine' that, 'I am giving a gift; this gift has to be given; the gift has to be given to them.' Similarly, connect this with each, up to the perfection of wisdom. They do not falsely project giving. They do not falsely project on account of a gift. They do not falsely project, 'This is my gift.' Similarly, connect this with each, up to They do not falsely project the perfection of wisdom. They do not falsely project anything on account of wisdom. They do not falsely project, 'This is my wisdom.'

45.17 "And why? Because the thought construction on account of which there is false projection does not exist in the perfection of giving, up to the thought construction on account of which there is false projection does not exist in the perfection of wisdom. That—namely, the perfection of giving—up to the perfection of wisdom has gone to the farthest limit. And those bodhisattvas, furthermore, know the farthest limit and know the farther shore, so they have been assisted by the perfection of giving. They have been assisted by the perfection of morality, the perfection of patience, the perfection of perseverance, the perfection of concentration, and the perfection of wisdom, up to have been assisted by the knowledge of all aspects, and hence do not fall to the śrāvaka level or the pratyekabuddha level and go forth to the knowledge of all aspects.

45.18 “It is thus, Subhūti, that the bodhisattva great beings have been assisted by the perfection of wisdom and similarly have been assisted [F.155.a] by skillful means so they do not fall to the śrāvaka level or the pratyekabuddha level. Similarly, connect this with all the bright side just as you have with the dark side.”<sup>530</sup>

45.19 This was the forty-fifth chapter, “Boat,” of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.” [B35]

46.                    CHAPTER 46: TEACHING THE INTRINSIC
   NATURE OF ALL DHARMAS

46.1            The Lord having said that, venerable Subhūti inquired of him, “Lord, how should bodhisattva great beings beginning the work train in the perfection of wisdom? How should they train in the perfection of concentration, perfection of perseverance, perfection of patience, perfection of morality, and perfection of giving?”

46.2            “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “bodhisattva great beings beginning the work who want to train in the perfection of wisdom, and who want to train in the perfection of concentration, perfection of perseverance, perfection of patience, perfection of morality, and perfection of giving, should attend on spiritual friends who teach the perfection of wisdom. Those who want to train in ... up to the perfection of giving should pursue,<sup>531</sup> worship,<sup>532</sup> and attend on spiritual friends who teach the perfection of giving.

46.3            “They will also teach them this perfection of wisdom: ‘Come, son of a good family! Dedicate all your giving, and what you give, to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. Come, son of a good family! Dedicate all your guarding of morality, your cultivation of patience, your making an effort at perseverance, your absorption [F.155.b] into concentration, and your cultivation of wisdom to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening—but, son of a good family, you should not form an idea of unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening from form.<sup>533</sup> You should not form an idea from feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness. Son of a good family, you should not form an idea of unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening from the perfection of giving. You should not form such an idea from the perfection of morality, patience, perseverance, concentration, or wisdom. You should not form such an idea from inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, or from the applications of mindfulness. You should not form such an idea from the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, or paths. You should not form such an idea from the five clairvoyances, ten tathāgata powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, or eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha. Son of a good family, you should not even form an idea of unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening itself. You should not form an idea even of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects. And why? Because when an idea of form has not been formed,<sup>534</sup> up to the knowledge of all aspects is gained. When an idea of feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness has not been formed, the knowledge of all aspects is gained. When an idea of the perfection of giving, the perfection of morality, the perfection of patience, the perfection of perseverance, the perfection of concentration, or the perfection of wisdom has not been formed; when an idea of inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature has not been formed; when an idea of the applications of mindfulness has not been formed; [F.156.a] when an idea of right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, or path has not been formed; and when an idea of the clairvoyances, ten powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, or eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha has not been formed, up to the knowledge of all aspects is gained.

46.4 “ ‘Son of a good family, while practicing the perfection of wisdom you should not produce a longing for form. And why? Because form is without longing. Son of a good family, you should not produce a longing for feeling ... , perception..., volitional factors..., up to consciousness. And why? Because consciousness is without longing. Son of a good family, you should not produce a longing for the perfection of giving, and you should not produce a longing for the perfection of morality, patience, perseverance, or concentration. Son of a good family, you should not produce a longing for the perfection of wisdom. You should not produce a longing for inner emptiness, and you should not produce a longing for..., up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature. You should not produce a longing for the applications of mindfulness, and you should not produce a longing for the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, up to the path. You should not produce a longing for the five clairvoyances, ten powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, up to the distinct attributes of a buddha. Son of a good family, you should not produce a longing even for the knowledge of all aspects. And why? Because the knowledge of all aspects is without longing and is not an object of longing. Son of a good family, you should not produce a longing for the result of stream enterer. You should not produce a longing for the result of once-returner, or the result of non-returner, the state of a worthy one, or a pratyekabuddha’s awakening. [F.156.b] You should not produce a longing for the secure state of a bodhisattva. And why? Son of a good family, it is because awakening is without longing. And why? Son of a good family, it is because all dharmas are empty of their own intrinsic nature.' They teach the Dharma in that way."

46.5 Subhūti said, "Lord, those bodhisattva great beings who want unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, yearning for unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, even while all phenomena are empty of their own marks, are those who do what is difficult."

46.6 "Exactly so, Subhūti, exactly so," replied the Lord. "Those bodhisattva great beings who want unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, who are yearning for unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening even while all phenomena are empty of their own mark, are those who do what is difficult. But still, Subhūti, if bodhisattva great beings understand that all phenomena are like an illusion and like a dream they have set out for unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. Bodhisattva great beings have set out for the benefit and happiness of the world. They have set out for unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, thinking, 'May I become the world's protector.' They have set out for unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, thinking, 'May I become the world's refuge, the world's resting place, the world's final ally, the world's island, the world's leader, and the world's support.'

46.7 "How, Subhūti, have bodhisattva great beings set out for the benefit of the world? Here, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings free beings from the five forms of life [F.157.a] and establish them in nirvāṇa on the fearless plain of happiness. In that way, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings who want to fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening have set out for the benefit of the world.

46.8 "How, Subhūti, have bodhisattva great beings set out for the happiness of the world? Here, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings who want to fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening free beings from suffering, depression, and grief and establish them on the fearless plain of happiness in nirvāṇa. In that way, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings have set out for the happiness of the world.

46.9 "How, Subhūti, are bodhisattva great beings who want to fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening the world's protector? Here, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings who want to fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening protect beings from whatever suffering there is in saṃsāra, teaching them the Dharma so they can stop it. They, having listened to that Dharma, gradually pass into complete nirvāṇa in the three vehicles. In that way, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings who want to fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening are the world's protector.

- 46.10 “How, Subhūti, are bodhisattva great beings who want to fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening the world’s refuge? Here, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings who want to fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening [F.157.b] liberate beings subject to birth, old age, sickness, death, pain, lamentation, suffering, depression, and grief, from birth, old age, sickness, death, pain, lamentation, suffering, depression, and grief, and having liberated them, cause them to pass into complete nirvāṇa in the element of nirvāṇa without any aggregates left behind. In that way, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings are the world’s refuge.
- 46.11 “How, Subhūti, are bodhisattva great beings the world’s resting place?<sup>535</sup> Here, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings teach the Dharma so that all phenomena do not mingle. In that way, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings who want to fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening are the world’s resting place.”
- 46.12 “How are all phenomena not mingled?” asked Subhūti.
The Lord replied, “That nonmingling of form is the nonconnection<sup>536</sup> of form. That is the nonproduction of form. That nonproduction of form is the noncessation of form, and that is why there is the nonmingling of form. That which is the nonproduction and noncessation of feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is the nonmingling of consciousness; connect this in the same way with each, up to the knowledge of all aspects. In that way, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings who want to fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening teach the Dharma so that all phenomena do not mingle.
- 46.13 “How, Subhūti, are bodhisattva great beings who want [F.158.a] to fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening the world’s final ally? Here, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings teach the Dharma to beings as follows: ‘The farther shore of form is not form. The farther shore of feeling ... perception ... volitional factors ... and consciousness is not the farther shore of consciousness; connect this in the same way with each, up to the farther shore of the knowledge of all aspects is not the knowledge of all aspects.’ They teach the Dharma like that. Subhūti, as form really is, so too are all dharmas.”
- 46.14 Subhūti asked, “Lord, if all phenomena too are as form really is, will not bodhisattva great beings have indeed fully awakened to the knowledge of all aspects? Why? Because, Lord, on the farther shore of form there is no thought construction whatsoever; on the farther shore of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness there is no thought construction whatsoever, of the sort ‘this is form, this is feeling, this is perception, these are volitional factors,’ or ‘this is consciousness’; up to ‘this is the knowledge of all aspects’; up to on the farther shore of the knowledge of all aspects there is no thought construction whatsoever.”

- 46.15 “Exactly so, Subhūti, exactly so!” replied the Lord. “On the farther shore of form, Subhūti, there is no thought construction whatsoever, up to on the farther shore of the knowledge of all aspects there is no thought construction whatsoever. But still, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings ponder and are not cowed by such phenomena as those, and think, ‘I must thus fully awaken to those phenomena.’ Those who thus, having fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, teach those phenomena that are so calm and [F.158.b] so sublime are those who do what is difficult. In that way, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings who want to fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening are the world’s final ally.
- 46.16 “How, Subhūti, do bodhisattva great beings, having fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, become the world’s island?
- 46.17 “To illustrate, Subhūti, those places delimited by the waters of great rivers or oceans are called islands. Similarly, Subhūti, form is delimited by a past and a future. Feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are delimited by a past and a future, up to the knowledge of all aspects is delimited by a past and a future. Subhūti, all phenomena are delimited by those past and future delimitations. Subhūti, that delimitation of all phenomena by a past and a future is this: namely, emptiness, the absence of being apprehended, the end of the road, the extinction of craving, the remainder,<sup>537</sup> detachment, cessation, and nirvāṇa. It is calm, it is sublime, it is as it really is. In that way, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings teaching that all phenomena are delimited by past and future delimitation, having fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, are the world’s island.
- 46.18 “How, Subhūti, do bodhisattva great beings, having fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, become the world’s leader?
- 46.19 “Subhūti, here bodhisattva great beings who want to fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening [F.159.a] generate great compassion for the mass of beings and teach and explain the Dharma: form is unproduced, does not stop, is not defilement, and is not purification. They teach the Dharma: feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are unproduced, do not stop, are not defilement, and are not purification; and similarly, they teach and explain the Dharma: all the perfections, all the emptinesses, the dharmas on the side of awakening, the ten powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, and the knowledge of all aspects are unproduced, do not stop, are not defilement, and are not purification. They teach and explain the Dharma: a pratyekabuddha’s awakening is unproduced, does not stop, is not defilement, and is not purification. They teach and explain the Dharma: the result of stream enterer is unproduced, does not stop, is not defilement, and is not purification; and similarly, they teach and explain the Dharma: the result of once-returner, the result of non-returner, and the state of a worthy one are unproduced, do not stop, are not defilement, and are not purification. In that way, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings, having fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, become the world's leader.

46.20 "How, Subhūti, do bodhisattva great beings, having fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, become the world's support?

46.21 "Subhūti, here bodhisattva great beings, having fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, teach the Dharma explaining that 'form has space as its way of being'; [F.159.b] teach beings that 'feeling...,' 'perception...,' 'volitional factors...,' and 'consciousness has space as its way of being'; and teach the Dharma explaining ... up to 'the knowledge of all aspects has space as its way of being.' They teach beings that 'the emptiness of form does not go and does not come because in it there is no going and no coming; the emptiness of feeling, perception, and volitional factors does not go and does not come.' They teach beings that 'the emptiness of consciousness does not go and does not come because in it there is no going and no coming.' Similarly, they teach beings ... up to 'the emptiness of the knowledge of all aspects does not go and does not come because in it there is no going and no coming.' In that way, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings, having fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, become the world's support.

46.22 "And why? Subhūti, it is because all phenomena have emptiness as their way of being, because they do not pass beyond that way of being. And why? Because in emptiness neither going nor coming is apprehended.

46.23 "Subhūti, all phenomena have signlessness as their way of being; they do not pass beyond that way of being. And why? Because in signlessness neither going nor coming is apprehended.

46.24 "Subhūti, all phenomena have wishlessness as their way of being; they do not pass beyond that way of being. And why? Because in wishlessness neither going nor coming is apprehended.

46.25 "Subhūti, all phenomena have the absence of occasioning anything as their way of being; they do not pass beyond that way of being. And why? Because in the absence of occasioning anything, neither going nor coming is apprehended.

46.26 "Connect this in the same way with Subhūti, all phenomena have nonproduction, nonstopping, nondefilement, and nonpurification as their way of being; they do not pass beyond those ways of being. And why? Because in nonproduction, nonstopping, nondefilement, and nonpurification neither going nor coming is apprehended. [F.160.a]

- 46.27 “Subhūti, all phenomena have a dream-like way of being; they do not pass beyond that way of being. And why? Because in a dream neither going nor coming is apprehended.
- 46.28 “Subhūti, all phenomena have an illusion-like way of being..., an apparition-like way of being..., and a magical creation-like way of being. They do not pass beyond that way of being. And why? Because in a magical creation neither going nor coming is apprehended.
- 46.29 “Subhūti, all phenomena have the unborn and unreal as their way of being; they do not pass beyond that way of being. And why? Because in the unborn and unreal neither going nor coming is apprehended.
- 46.30 “Subhūti, all phenomena have the limitless and boundless as their way of being; they do not pass beyond that way of being. And why? Because in the limitless and boundless neither going nor coming is apprehended.
- 46.31 “Subhūti, all phenomena have the absence of being taken away from and the absence of being added to as their way of being; they do not pass beyond that way of being. And why? Because where nothing has been taken away and nothing added neither going nor coming is apprehended.
- 46.32 “Subhūti, all phenomena have not going and not coming as their way of being. Subhūti, all phenomena have not bringing in and not sending out as their way of being. Subhūti, all phenomena have not joining, not not joining, not mingling, and not not mingling as their way of being.
- 46.33 “Subhūti, all phenomena have a self as their way of being; they do not pass beyond that way of being. And why? Because in a self neither going nor coming is apprehended.
- 46.34 “Subhūti, all phenomena have a being as their way of being. Subhūti, all dharmas have one who lives, an individual, a person, one born of Manu, a child of Manu, one who does, one who motivates, one who feels, one who knows, and one who sees as their way of being; they do not pass beyond that way of being. And why? Subhūti, it is because if a self absolutely does not exist—if a being, one who lives, an individual, a person, one born of Manu, a child of Manu, one who does, one who motivates, one who feels, one who knows, and one who sees absolutely do not exist—however, Subhūti, could going or coming [F.160.b] be apprehended?
- 46.35 “Subhūti, all phenomena have permanence as their way of being; they do not pass beyond that way of being. And why? Because if permanence absolutely does not exist at all, however could going or coming be apprehended? Subhūti, all phenomena have pleasure as their way of being; they do not pass beyond that way of being. Subhūti, all phenomena have self as their way of being, and have beauty as their way of being; they do not - pass beyond that way of being. And why? Because if permanence, pleasure, self, and beauty absolutely do not exist, however could their going or coming be apprehended?

- 46.36 “Subhūti, all phenomena have impermanence as their way of being. Subhūti, all phenomena have suffering, no self, and unpleasantness as their way of being; they do not pass beyond that way of being. And why? Because if impermanence absolutely does not exist, and suffering, no self, and unpleasantness absolutely do not exist, however could their going or coming be apprehended?
- 46.37 “Subhūti, all phenomena have greed as their way of being; they do not pass beyond that way of being. And why? Because if a place for greed absolutely does not exist, however could greed exist? Subhūti, all phenomena have hatred as their way of being; they do not pass beyond that way of being. And why? Because if a place for hatred absolutely does not exist, however could hatred exist? Subhūti, all phenomena have confusion as their way of being; they do not pass beyond that way of being. And why? Because if a place for confusion absolutely does not exist, however could confusion exist? Subhūti, all phenomena have distortion as their way of being; they do not pass beyond that way of being. And why? Because if a place for distortion absolutely does not exist, however could distortion exist?
- 46.38 “Subhūti, all phenomena have suchness as their way of being; they do not pass beyond that way of being. And why? Because in suchness neither going nor coming is apprehended. Subhūti, all phenomena have the dharma-constituent as their way of being. Subhūti, all phenomena have the very limit of reality as their way of being..., sameness as their way of being..., and the inconceivable element as their way of being; [F.161.a] they do not pass beyond that way of being. And why? Because in the inconceivable element neither going nor coming is apprehended.
- 46.39 “Subhūti, all phenomena have being unmoving as their way of being; they do not pass beyond that way of being. And why? Because phenomena do not move anywhere, so going and coming do not exist.
- 46.40 “Subhūti, all phenomena have form as their way of being; they do not pass beyond that way of being. And why? Because if form absolutely does not exist, however could its going or coming exist? Similarly, Subhūti, all phenomena have feeling..., perception..., volitional factors..., and consciousness as their way of being; they do not pass beyond that way of being. And why? Subhūti, it is because if consciousness absolutely is not apprehended, however could its going or coming be apprehended?
- 46.41 “Subhūti, all phenomena have the perfection of giving as their way of being; they do not pass beyond that way of being. And why? Because if the perfection of giving absolutely does not exist, however could the perfection of giving's going or coming exist? Similarly, Subhūti, all phenomena have the perfection of morality as their way of being ... ; and all phenomena have the perfection of patience..., perseverance..., concentration..., and wisdom as their way of being; they do not pass beyond that way of being. And why? Because if the perfection of wisdom absolutely does not exist, however could the perfection of wisdom's going or coming exist?

46.42 "Subhūti, all phenomena have inner emptiness as their way of being. Subhūti, all phenomena have ... up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature as their way of being; they do not pass beyond that way of being. And why? Because if the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature absolutely does not exist, however could its going or coming exist?

46.43 "Subhūti, all phenomena have the applications of mindfulness as their way of being; they do not pass beyond that way of being. And why? Because if the applications of mindfulness absolutely do not exist, however could their going or coming exist? Similarly, Subhūti, [F.161.b] all phenomena have the right efforts..., the legs of miraculous power..., the faculties..., the powers..., the limbs of awakening..., the path..., the ten powers..., the four fearlessnesses..., the four detailed and thorough knowledges..., and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha as their way of being; they do not pass beyond that way of being. And why? Because in the buddhadharmas neither going nor coming is apprehended.

46.44 "Subhūti, all phenomena have stream enterer as their way of being; they do not pass beyond that way of being. Subhūti, all phenomena have once-returned..., non-returned..., the state of a worthy one..., and a pratyekabuddha's awakening as their way of being; they do not pass beyond that way of being. And why? Because in pratyekabuddhas neither going nor coming is apprehended. Subhūti, all phenomena have unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening as their way of being; they do not pass beyond that way of being. And why? Because in unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening neither going nor coming is apprehended."

46.45 "Lord, who will believe in this deep perfection of wisdom?" asked Subhūti.

"Subhūti," replied the Lord, "those bodhisattva great beings who have practiced the practice for the sake of unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, who have served well the victors of the past, who have been brought to maturity by the buddhas of the past who caused their wholesome roots to accumulate, who have attended on many hundreds of thousands of one hundred million billion buddhas, and who have been assisted by spiritual friends will believe in this deep perfection of wisdom."

47.

CHAPTER 47: TAMING GREED

47.1 Subhūti [F.162.a] then asked, “Lord, what will the attributes, tokens, and signs<sup>538</sup> be of those bodhisattva great beings who will believe in this deep perfection of wisdom, and what will be their intrinsic nature?”

47.2 Venerable Subhūti having thus inquired, the Lord replied to him, “Those bodhisattva great beings who will believe in this deep perfection of wisdom have eliminated greed and are in their intrinsic nature isolated from it; they have also eliminated hatred and confusion and are in their intrinsic nature isolated from them. Subhūti, they are in their intrinsic nature isolated from the token of greed. Subhūti, those bodhisattva great beings are in their intrinsic nature isolated from the tokens of hatred and confusion.

47.3 “Subhūti, they are in their intrinsic nature isolated from the sign of greed. Subhūti, those bodhisattva great beings are in their intrinsic nature isolated from the signs of hatred and confusion.”

47.4 “Lord, what sort of way of being will these bodhisattva great beings who will realize this deep perfection of wisdom have?” asked Subhūti.

47.5 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “those bodhisattva great beings who realize this deep perfection of wisdom will have the knowledge of all aspects as their way of being.”

47.6 Subhūti said, “Lord, those bodhisattva great beings who have the knowledge of all aspects as their way of being are the support of all beings.”

47.7 “Exactly so, Subhūti, exactly so!” replied the Lord. “Those bodhisattva great beings who believe in this deep [F.162.b] perfection of wisdom are the support of all beings because they have the knowledge of all aspects as their way of being.”

47.8 Subhūti said, “Lord, those who do what is difficult are those bodhisattva great beings who have buckled on that armor, thinking, ‘We will place all beings in complete nirvāṇa,’ even while not apprehending a being or the designation of a being.”

- 47.9 “Exactly so, Subhūti, exactly so!” replied the Lord. “Those who do what is difficult are those bodhisattva great beings who have buckled on that armor, thinking, ‘We will place all beings in complete nirvāṇa.’
- 47.10 “Subhūti, that armor of bodhisattva great beings is not spliced with form. And why? Subhūti, it is because form and that armor of bodhisattvas absolutely do not exist; that is why, Subhūti, it is said ‘that armor is not spliced with form.’ Subhūti, that armor of bodhisattva great beings is not spliced with feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness. And why? Subhūti, it is because feeling..., perception..., volitional factors..., and consciousness and that armor of bodhisattvas absolutely do not exist; that is why, Subhūti, it is said ‘that armor is not spliced with consciousness.’ Subhūti, that armor is not spliced with an owner, and it is not spliced with a being, a living being, a creature, one who lives, an individual, a person, one born of Manu, a child of Manu, one who does, one who motivates, one who feels, one who knows, or one who sees, up to Subhūti, that armor is not spliced with the knowledge of all aspects. And why? Subhūti, it is because the knowledge of all aspects absolutely does not exist, and the armor of bodhisattvas absolutely does not exist and is not apprehended; that is why, Subhūti, it is said ‘that armor of bodhisattva great beings is not spliced with ... up to [F.163.a] the knowledge of all aspects.’ Ah! Subhūti, that armor of those bodhisattva great beings practicing this deep perfection of wisdom, of those bodhisattva great beings who have buckled on such armor, thinking, ‘We will place all beings in complete nirvāṇa,’ is not spliced with all dharmas.”
- 47.11 “Lord,” said Subhūti, “they should know that there are two places where those bodhisattva great beings who have buckled on the armor, thinking, ‘We will place all beings in complete nirvāṇa,’ do not go—the śrāvaka level or the pratyekabuddha level. Lord, it is impossible and there is no chance of it. It is impossible that bodhisattva great beings who have buckled on such armor, thinking, ‘We will place all beings in complete nirvāṇa,’ would fall to the śrāvaka level or the pratyekabuddha level. And why? Because bodhisattva great beings do not buckle on the armor for the sake of beings, having drawn in the boundaries.”<sup>539</sup>
- 47.12 Venerable Subhūti having said this, the Lord then asked him, “What is the reality you are seeing, Subhūti, that forces you to say, ‘They should know that there are two places,’ one or the other, ‘where those bodhisattva great beings who have buckled on the armor do not go—the śrāvaka level and the pratyekabuddha level?’”
- 47.13 Subhūti replied, “Lord it is thus: bodhisattva great beings have not buckled on armor for the sake of only a partial number of beings. Lord, bodhisattva great beings have buckled on armor for the sake of all beings.

Lord, bodhisattva great beings have buckled on armor for the knowledge of a knower of all aspects.” [F.163.b]

47.14 “Exactly so, Subhūti, exactly so!” said the Lord. “Bodhisattva great beings have not buckled on armor for the sake of only a partial number of beings. Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings have buckled on armor for the sake of all beings; they have buckled on armor for the knowledge of a knower of all aspects.”

47.15 “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is deep,” said Subhūti. “It is not something that somebody has to meditate on, it is not something that has to be meditated on somewhere, and it is not something that has to be meditated on somehow. And why? Because, Lord, in this deep perfection of wisdom you cannot apprehend the perfect development of any phenomenon—someone who might meditate, something which might be meditated on, or something by means of which meditation might take place.

47.16 “Lord, the meditation on space is the meditation on the perfection of wisdom. The meditation on the nonexistence of all dharmas is the meditation on the perfection of wisdom. The meditation on the not truly real<sup>540</sup> is the meditation on the perfection of wisdom. The meditation on not holding onto anything is the meditation on the perfection of wisdom. The meditation on disintegration is the meditation on the perfection of wisdom.”

47.17 The Lord asked, “What is it—namely, the disintegration of meditation—that is the meditation on the perfection of wisdom?”

47.18 “Lord,” replied Subhūti, “the disintegration of the meditation on form is the meditation on the perfection of wisdom. Similarly, the disintegration of the meditation on feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness is the meditation on the perfection of wisdom. Lord, [F.164.a] the disintegration of the meditation on self is the meditation on the perfection of wisdom. Lord, the disintegration of the meditation on ... up to one who knows and one who sees is the meditation on the perfection of wisdom. Lord, the disintegration of the meditation on the perfection of giving is the meditation on the perfection of wisdom. Similarly, the disintegration of the meditation on ... up to the perfection of wisdom is the meditation on the perfection of wisdom. Lord, the disintegration of the meditation on inner emptiness, up to the disintegration of the meditation on the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature is the meditation on the perfection of wisdom. Lord, the disintegration of the meditation on the applications of mindfulness is the meditation on the perfection of wisdom. The disintegration of the meditation on the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and path is the meditation on the perfection of wisdom. The disintegration of the meditation on the ten powers is the meditation on the perfection of wisdom. The disintegration of the meditation on the fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, and eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha is the meditation on the perfection of wisdom. The disintegration of the meditation on the result of stream enterer is the meditation on the perfection of wisdom. The disintegration of the meditation on the result of once-returner, the result of non-returner, the state of a worthy one, a pratyekabuddha's awakening, and from the bodhisattva levels up to the knowledge of all aspects is the meditation on the perfection of wisdom."

47.19 "Exactly so, Subhūti, exactly so!" replied the Lord. [F.164.b] "The disintegration of the meditation on form is the meditation on the perfection of wisdom. Similarly, connect this with The disintegration of the meditation on ... up to the knowledge of all aspects is the meditation on the perfection of wisdom.

47.20 "Subhūti, you should look closely at a bodhisattva great being irreversible from this deep perfection of wisdom—'Is the bodhisattva great being not attached to this deep perfection of wisdom?' Similarly, connect this with you should look closely at a bodhisattva great being irreversible from the perfection of concentration, perfection of perseverance, perfection of patience, perfection of morality, and perfection of giving, up to you should look closely at a bodhisattva great being irreversible from the knowledge of all aspects—'Is the bodhisattva great being not attached to this knowledge of all aspects? Does the irreversible bodhisattva great being practicing this deep perfection of wisdom not look at what others have said and what others have taught as pointless? Does the irreversible bodhisattva great being practicing this deep perfection of wisdom not go along with what somebody else believes? Is the irreversible bodhisattva great being practicing this deep perfection of wisdom not captured by the production of thoughts connected with greed, not captured by the production of thoughts connected with hatred and confusion?'

47.21 "You should look closely at whether irreversible bodhisattva great beings practicing this deep perfection of wisdom are not separated from the perfection of giving, perfection of morality, perfection of patience, [F.165.a] perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, or perfection of wisdom. When this deep perfection of wisdom is being taught, do those irreversible bodhisattva great beings practicing this deep perfection of wisdom not tremble, feel frightened, and become terrified? Look closely at whether their minds are not cowed, do not tense up, and do not experience regret; are not separated from the perfection of wisdom; delight in the perfection of wisdom and in hearing the perfection of wisdom, and, having heard it, take it up, bear it in mind, read it aloud, master it, properly pay attention to it, and focus on it in practice.

- 47.22 “Subhūti, you should know that the irreversible bodhisattva great beings have asked about this deep perfection of wisdom also in the past, and have taken it up, borne it in mind, read it aloud, mastered it, and properly paid attention to it. And why? Because when there is an exposition of this deep perfection of wisdom, those irreversible bodhisattva great beings do not tremble, feel frightened, or become terrified; their minds are not cowed, do not tense up, and do not experience regret; and, on top of that, having heard the perfection of wisdom they take it up, bear it in mind, read it aloud, master it, and properly pay attention to it.”
- 47.23 “Lord,” asked Subhūti, “those bodhisattva great beings who do not tremble, feel frightened, or become terrified; whose minds are not cowed, do not tense up, and do not experience regret when there is an exposition of this deep perfection of wisdom—how should those bodhisattva great beings think carefully about this deep [F.165.b] perfection of wisdom?”
- 47.24 “Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should think carefully about this deep perfection of wisdom with mindstreams inclined to the knowledge of all aspects,” replied the Lord.
- 47.25 “Lord, how should those bodhisattva great beings think carefully about this deep perfection of wisdom with mindstreams inclined to the knowledge of all aspects?” asked Subhūti.
- 47.26 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “bodhisattva great beings should think carefully about this deep perfection of wisdom with mindstreams inclined to emptiness, tending to emptiness, and heading to emptiness.
- 47.27 “Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should think carefully about this deep perfection of wisdom with mindstreams inclined to signlessness, with mindstreams inclined to wishlessness, inclined to space, and similarly, connect this with with mindstreams inclined to the unproduced, the unceasing, the absence of defilement and the absence of purification, and inclined to suchness, the dharma-constituent, the very limit of reality, sameness, the inconceivable, and what does not occasion anything. Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should think carefully about this deep perfection of wisdom with mindstreams inclined to what is like a dream and like a magical creation.”
- 47.28 Subhūti then inquired, “Lord, given what you have said—‘Bodhisattva great beings should think carefully about this deep perfection of wisdom with mindstreams inclined to emptiness,’ up to ‘Bodhisattva great beings should think carefully about this deep perfection of wisdom with mindstreams inclined to what is like a dream’ [F.166.a]—well then, Lord, do bodhisattva great beings also think carefully about form? Do they also think carefully about feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness? Do they also think carefully about ... up to the knowledge of all aspects?”

47.29      “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “bodhisattva great beings do not think carefully about form. They also do not think carefully about feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness. Similarly, connect this with Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings also do not think carefully about ... up to the knowledge of all aspects.

47.30      “And why? Subhūti, it is because nobody has made the knowledge of all aspects, and nobody has made it change. It has not come from anywhere, is not going anywhere, is not anywhere, is not in a place, and is not in a location. You cannot apprehend its number, coming, or going, and nobody is able to fully awaken to something whose number, coming, and going cannot be apprehended, because nobody fully awakens through form, feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness; through giving, morality, patience, perseverance, concentration, and wisdom; up to through knowledge of the knowledge of all aspects. And why? Because just form is the knowledge of all aspects; just feeling..., just perception..., just volitional factors..., and just consciousness is the knowledge of all aspects. And why? [F.166.b] Subhūti, it is because that suchness of form and that suchness of the knowledge of all aspects is a single suchness. Similarly, that suchness of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness and that suchness of the knowledge of all aspects is a single suchness. Similarly, that suchness of the perfections, the dharmas on the side of awakening, the powers, the fearlessnesses, the detailed and thorough knowledges, and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha and that suchness of the knowledge of all aspects is a single suchness. That is the suchness of the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha.”

47.31      This was the forty-seventh chapter, “Taming Greed,” of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.” [B36]

CHAPTER 48: A PRESENTATION OF THE BODHISATTVAS' TRAINING

48.1

Then the gods living in the desire realm and living in the form realm took up divine sandalwood powders, took up divine blue lotus, red lotus, and white lotus flowers, and specifically strewed them down on the Lord. Having strewed them they approached the Lord, went up to him, bowed their heads to the Lord's feet, and stood to one side. Even while standing to one side those gods living in the desire realm and living in the form realm said to the Lord, "Lord, the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas have thus taught in this deep perfection of wisdom: 'Just form is the knowledge of all aspects, and the knowledge of all aspects is form. Just feeling..., perception..., volitional factors..., and consciousness is the knowledge of all aspects, [F.167.a] and the knowledge of all aspects is consciousness. That which is the suchness of form and that which is the suchness of the knowledge of all aspects are a single suchness, not two and not divided. Similarly, connect this with that which is the suchness of ... up to the buddhas, and that which is the suchness of ... up to the knowledge of all aspects are a single suchness, not two and not divided.' Thus, this perfection of wisdom—namely, the awakening of the tathāgatas—is deep, hard to behold, hard to understand, not something about which you can speculate, not an object of speculative thought, calm, subtle, an object to be known by the brilliantly learned and wise, a counterpoint to all that is ordinary."

The gods living in the desire realm and living in the form realm having said this, the Lord said to them, "Exactly so, gods, exactly so! Gods, just form is the knowledge of all aspects, and the knowledge of all aspects is form. Just feeling..., perception..., volitional factors..., and consciousness is the knowledge of all aspects, and the knowledge of all aspects is consciousness. Similarly, connect this with each, up to just the buddha is the knowledge of all aspects, and the knowledge of all aspects is just the buddha. That which is the suchness of form and that which is the suchness of the knowledge of all aspects are a single suchness, not two and not divided. Similarly, connect this with that which is the suchness of ... up to the buddha, and that which is the suchness of the knowledge of all aspects are a single suchness not two and not divided.

48.3 “Seeing this suchness forces [F.167.b] a tathāgata to incline toward a little less work and be uninclined to teach the doctrine. And why? Ah! It is because this—namely, the awakening of the tathāgatas—is deep, hard to behold, hard to understand, not something about which you can speculate, not an object of speculative thought, calm, subtle, an object to be known by the brilliantly learned and wise, a counterpoint to all that is ordinary, so nobody has fully awakened to it and it has not been fully awakened to anywhere.

48.4 “Here where the habitual idea of two does not exist is the deep state of dharmas. Gods, because space is deep this doctrine is deep. Gods, this doctrine is deep because suchness is deep, the dharma-constituent is deep, the very limit of reality is deep, and the inconceivable element is deep. Gods, because the limitless and boundless..., the sameness of not coming and not going..., the sameness of not being produced and not stopping..., the sameness of not being defiled and not being purified..., the sameness of what does not occasion anything..., the deep state of self..., up to because the sameness of one who knows and one who sees is deep this doctrine is deep.

48.5 “Gods, because form is deep this doctrine is deep. Gods, because feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are deep this doctrine is deep. Gods, because the perfection of giving is deep this doctrine is deep. Gods, because the perfections of morality, patience, perseverance, concentration, and wisdom are deep this doctrine is deep. Ah! Gods, because inner emptiness is deep this doctrine is deep; because ... up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature is deep this doctrine is deep; because the applications of mindfulness are deep, and the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and path are deep this doctrine is deep; because the ten powers, fearlessnesses, [F.168.a] detailed and thorough knowledges, up to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha are deep, up to the knowledge of all aspects is deep this doctrine is deep.”

48.6 The gods said, “O Lord, this doctrine is taught as a counterpoint to all that is ordinary. And why? Because this doctrine is not taught so form will be taken up or will not be taken up. It is not taught so feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness will be taken up or will not be taken up. It is not taught so ... up to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha will be taken up or will not be taken up. It is not taught so the buddhadharmas will be taken up or will not be taken up. Lord, this deep teaching of the doctrine is not taught so the result of stream enterer will be taken up or will not be taken up. It is not taught so the result of once-returner, the result of non-returner, the state of a worthy one, a pratyekabuddha's awakening, or the knowledge of all aspects will be taken up or will not be taken up.

48.7 "Lord, the world gets involved with taking things up, thinking, 'This is my form. I am form. This is my feeling..., perception..., volitional factors..., and consciousness. I am consciousness.' Similarly, connect this with each, up to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha. 'This is my result of stream enterer. I am the result of stream enterer. This is my result of once-returner. I am the result of once-returner. This is my result of non-returner. I am the result of non-returner. This is my state of a worthy one. I am the state of a worthy one. This is my pratyekabuddha's awakening. I am a pratyekabuddha's awakening. This is my knowledge of all aspects. [F.168.b] I am a knower of all aspects.' "

48.8 "Exactly so, gods, exactly so!" replied the Lord. "Gods, this doctrine is not taught so form will be taken up or will not be taken up. It is not taught so feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness will be taken up or will not be taken up. Those who get involved in order to take up form, up to get involved in order to take up the knowledge of all aspects do not have the good fortune to meditate on the perfection of wisdom; they are incapable of meditating on, up to the perfection of concentration, perseverance, patience, morality, and giving; and they are incapable of meditating on, up to the knowledge of all aspects."

48.9 Subhūti then said, "Lord, this doctrine is in harmony with all dharmas. With which dharmas is this doctrine in harmony? This doctrine is in harmony with the perfection of wisdom. Lord, this doctrine is in harmony with the perfection of concentration, the perfection of perseverance, the perfection of patience, the perfection of morality, and the perfection of giving. Lord, this doctrine is in harmony with inner emptiness. Lord, this doctrine is in harmony with..., up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature. Lord, this doctrine is in harmony with..., up to the knowledge of all aspects.

48.10 "Lord, this doctrine is not obstructed by anything. What is this doctrine not obstructed by? This doctrine is not obstructed by form. This doctrine is not obstructed by feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness. Similarly, this doctrine is not obstructed by..., up to the knowledge of all aspects. [F.169.a]

48.11 "This doctrine, because of the sameness of space, the sameness of suchness, the sameness of the dharma-constituent, the sameness of the very limit of reality, the sameness of the inconceivable element, the sameness of emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness, the sameness of not being produced and not stopping, and the sameness of not being defiled and not being purified, is marked by not being obstructed.

48.12 “This doctrine is not produced because form is not produced and does not stop; because feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are not produced and do not stop; and similarly, because..., up to the knowledge of all aspects is not produced and does not stop.

48.13 “This doctrine finds no footing because a footing for form is not apprehended; because a footing for feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness is not apprehended; and similarly, because..., up to a footing for the knowledge of all aspects is not apprehended.”

48.14 Then the gods living in the desire realm and living in the form realm said to the Lord, “Lord, the elder Subhūti takes after the Lord. Why? Because whatever the elder Subhūti teaches, he teaches it all with emptiness as his point of departure.”

48.15 Venerable Subhūti then responded to the gods living in the desire realm and living in the form realm, “Gods, you say, ‘Lord, this elder Subhūti takes after the Lord.’ And how does he takes after him, [F.169.b] how does the elder Subhūti take after the Lord? The suchness of the Tathāgata has not come and has not gone. Similarly, the suchness of Subhūti has not come and has not gone. In that way the elder Subhūti takes after the Tathāgata.

48.16 “Just that suchness of the Tathāgata is the suchness of all dharmas, and that suchness of all dharmas is the suchness of Subhūti. In that way the elder Subhūti takes after the Tathāgata.

48.17 “Just as the suchness of the Tathāgata is established, so too is the suchness of the elder Subhūti established, so the elder Subhūti takes after the Lord. Just as the suchness of the Tathāgata is unchanging and undifferentiated, so too with the suchness of the elder Subhūti, it also is unchanging and cannot be differentiated. Just as the suchness of the Tathāgata is not obstructed by anything, so too the suchness of all dharmas is not obstructed by anything. The suchness of the Tathāgata and the suchness of all dharmas are not two and cannot be divided into two. Suchness is not made. There is nothing of which that suchness is not the suchness. Because there is nothing of which that suchness is not the suchness and it is never not suchness, therefore suchness is not two and cannot be divided into two. In that way the elder Subhūti takes after the Tathāgata.

48.18 “That suchness of the Tathāgata is totally unchanging and undifferentiated. So too the suchness of the elder Subhūti is totally unchanging and undifferentiated. Just as the suchness of the Tathāgata is not broken apart, is not different, [F.170.a] and cannot be apprehended, so too the suchness of all dharmas is not broken apart, is not different, and cannot be apprehended. Similarly, the suchness of the elder Subhūti is not broken apart, is not different, and cannot be apprehended either. In that way the elder Subhūti takes after the Tathāgata.

48.19 “The suchness of the Tathāgata is not other than the suchness of all phenomena, and what is not other than the suchness of all phenomena is never not suchness. It is always suchness. The suchness of the elder Subhūti is like that. Therefore, since it is not something else, even though the elder Subhūti takes after the Tathāgata he does not take after him in anything. Just as the suchness of the Tathāgata is not past, is not future, and is not present, so too the suchness of all phenomena is not past, is not future, and is not present. Similarly, the suchness of the elder Subhūti is not past, is not future, and is not present. Therefore, it is said the elder Subhūti ‘takes after the Tathāgata.’

48.20 “Gods, here you should know the suchness of the Tathāgata that is the same, through the suchness of the past that is the same, and the sameness of the suchness of the past, through the sameness of the suchness of the Tathāgata; the sameness of the suchness of the Tathāgata, through the sameness of the suchness of the future, and the sameness of the suchness of the future, through the sameness of the suchness of the Tathāgata; and the sameness of the suchness of the Tathāgata, through the sameness of the suchness of the present, and the sameness of the suchness of the present, through the sameness of the suchness of the Tathāgata. Therefore, the suchness of the past, future, and present [F.170.b] and the suchness of the Tathāgata are not two and cannot be divided into two.

48.21 “The suchness of the Tathāgata is the suchness of form. The suchness of form is the suchness of the Tathāgata. Similarly, the suchness of the Tathāgata is the suchness of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness. Therefore, the suchness of form, the suchness of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness, and the suchness of the Tathāgata are not two and cannot be divided into two. Similarly, connect this with the suchness of the Tathāgata is the suchness of self. The suchness of self is the suchness of the Tathāgata. Similarly, the suchness of the Tathāgata is the suchness of..., up to one who knows and one who sees. The suchness of..., up to one who knows and one who sees is the suchness of the Tathāgata. Therefore, the suchness of self, up to the suchness of one who knows and one who sees, and the suchness of the Tathāgata are not two and cannot be divided into two.

48.22 Similarly, connect this with the suchness of the perfection of giving, the suchness of the perfection of morality, patience, perseverance, concentration and wisdom, and the suchness of the Tathāgata are not two and cannot be divided into two. The suchness of inner emptiness, the suchness of..., up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, and the suchness of the Tathāgata are not two and cannot be divided into two. The suchness of the applications of mindfulness, the suchness of the right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, [F.171.a] powers, limbs of awakening, and path, and the suchness of the Tathāgata are not two and cannot be divided into two. The suchness of the Tathāgata is the suchness of the ten tathāgata powers, fearlessnesses, detailed and thorough knowledges, and eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, and the suchness of..., up to the knowledge of all aspects. The suchness of..., up to the knowledge of all aspects is the suchness of the Tathāgata. Therefore, the suchness of the knowledge of all aspects and the suchness of the Tathāgata are not two and cannot be divided into two.

48.23 “Gods, thanks to this perfect suchness the Tathāgata has fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening and gets to be called Tathāgata.”

48.24 As this “Suchness” chapter was being expounded the great billionfold world system shook in six ways: it quaked, quaked greatly, and quaked violently; shook, shook greatly, and shook violently; stirred, stirred greatly, and stirred violently; resounded, resounded greatly, and resounded violently; roared, roared greatly, and roared violently; and was disturbed, greatly disturbed, and violently disturbed. The eastern direction rose up and the western direction sank down; the western direction rose up and the eastern direction sank down; the northern direction rose up and the southern direction sank down; the southern direction rose up and the northern direction sank down; the edges rose up and the middle sank down; and the middle rose up and the edges sank down.

48.26 Then the elder Subhūti, picking up the thread of this conversation with those gods, said to those gods, “Gods, the elder Subhūti does not take after form, does not take after anything other than form, does not take after the suchness of form, and does not take after anything other than the suchness of form. He does not take after feeling..., perception..., volitional factors..., or consciousness, does not take after anything other than consciousness, does not take after the suchness of consciousness, and does not take after anything other than the suchness of consciousness. Similarly, connect this with each, up to he does not take after the knowledge of all aspects, does not take after anything other than the knowledge of all aspects, does not take after the suchness of the knowledge of all aspects, and does not take after anything other than the suchness of the knowledge of all aspects. He does not take after the compounded, does not take after anything other than the compounded, does not take after the suchness of the compounded, and does not take after anything other than the suchness of the compounded. He does not take after the uncompounded, does not take after anything other than the uncompounded, does not take after the suchness of the uncompounded, and does not take after anything other than the suchness of the uncompounded. And why? Because the dharma that is taken after, and the dharma that takes after, do not exist and are not apprehended.”

48.27 Then the venerable Śāriputra said to the Lord, “Suchness, unmistaken suchness, unaltered suchness, the true nature of dharmas, the dharma-constituent, the establishment of dharmas, the certification of dharmas, the very limit of reality, and the inconceivable element are deep. [F.172.a] In them you cannot apprehend form, nor can you apprehend the suchness of form; if you cannot apprehend even just form, however could you apprehend the suchness of form? In them you cannot apprehend feeling..., perception..., volitional factors..., or consciousness, nor can you apprehend the suchness of consciousness. And if you cannot apprehend even just consciousness, however could you apprehend the suchness of consciousness? Similarly, connect this with each, up to in them you cannot apprehend the knowledge of all aspects, nor can you apprehend the suchness of the knowledge of all aspects. And if you cannot apprehend even just the knowledge of all aspects, however could you apprehend the suchness of the knowledge of all aspects?”

48.28 “Śāriputra, exactly so! Exactly so!” said the Lord. “Suchness, Śāriputra, is deep. In it you cannot apprehend form, you cannot apprehend the suchness of form. And if you cannot apprehend even just form, however could you apprehend the suchness of form? In it you cannot apprehend feeling..., perception..., volitional factors..., and consciousness, nor can you apprehend the suchness of consciousness. And if you cannot apprehend even just consciousness, however could you apprehend the suchness of consciousness. Similarly, connect this with each, up to you cannot apprehend the knowledge of all aspects, nor can you apprehend the suchness of the knowledge of all aspects. And if you cannot apprehend even just the knowledge of all aspects, however could you apprehend the suchness of the knowledge of all aspects.”

48.29 As this “Suchness, Unmistaken Suchness, Unaltered Suchness” chapter was being expounded, two hundred monks stopped taking hold of anything and their minds were freed from contamination. Dust-free and stainless, the

Dharma eye of five hundred nuns became clear about the dharmas.<sup>541</sup>
[F.172.b]

48.30 Five thousand bodhisattvas gained forbearance for the nonproduction of dharmas.

Sixty bodhisattvas lacking in what is necessary stopped taking hold of anything and their minds were freed from contamination.

48.31 “Śāriputra, those bodhisattvas attended on five hundred buddhas. They gave gifts, guarded morality, cultivated patience, made a vigorous effort, became absorbed in concentration, and cultivated wisdom, but uninformed by the perfection of wisdom and uninformed by skillful means, they practiced thus, thinking, ‘This is to be given. We will give it to them. We will guard this morality. We will cultivate this patience. We will make this vigorous effort. We will become absorbed in this concentration. We will cultivate this wisdom.’ Practicing like that they were separated from the perfection of wisdom and were not assisted by skillful means, so practicing the cultivation of giving, morality, patience, perseverance, concentration, and wisdom with perceptions of difference, and not apprehending the absence of difference, they did not enter into the secure state of a bodhisattva. And because they did not enter into the secure state of a bodhisattva they reached the result of stream enterer, reached..., up to the result of a worthy one.

48.32 “Furthermore, Śāriputra, even though those bodhisattva great beings’ path of emptiness, or signlessness, or wishlessness is present, still they are separated from the perfection of wisdom and have not been assisted by skillful means, so, having actualized the very limit of reality, they have become śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas.”

48.33 Śāriputra then asked, “Why, Lord, even though they have similarly cultivated just those dharmas—emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness—did those separated from skillful means actualize the very limit of reality and become śrāvakas [F.173.a] and pratyekabuddhas, while those other bodhisattvas, Lord, will, thanks to skillful means, by cultivating just those dharmas—emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness—fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening?”

48.34 “Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “here some separated from the thought of the knowledge of all aspects, who cultivate emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness without resorting to skillful means, become śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas. Śāriputra, here those bodhisattva great beings not separated from the thought of the knowledge of all aspects, thanks to skillful means, cultivate emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness, enter into the secure state of a bodhisattva, and fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

48.35 “To illustrate, Śāriputra, a winged bird with a physical body of a hundred yojanas, or a physical body of two hundred yojanas, or three hundred yojanas, or four hundred yojanas, or five hundred yojanas thinks it will come from the Trāyastriṃśa class of gods to this Jambudvīpa, but that bird is one without the proper wings to do it. It thinks, ‘I have to take off from the Trāyastriṃśa class of gods and go to Jambudvīpa,’ but if, halfway to landing on the earth, it has second thoughts—‘Hey! I had better set down in the Trāyastriṃśa class of gods’—what do you think, Śāriputra, would that bird therefore be able to set down in the Trāyastriṃśa class of gods?”

“No, Lord, it would not be able to,” replied Śāriputra.

48.36 The Lord said, “If it were to think halfway,<sup>542</sup> ‘Hey! I must set down unharmed and uninjured in Jambudvīpa,’ what do you think, Śāriputra, [F.173.b] would that bird set down unharmed and uninjured in Jambudvīpa?”

48.37 “No, Lord, it would not be able to,” replied Śāriputra. “That bird would be harmed or become injured and would suffer death or near death before landing in Jambudvīpa. And why? Because that will happen for sure since its physical body is big, its wings are stunted, and it has taken off from such a high place.”

48.38 “It is similar, Śāriputra,” continued the Lord, “with bodhisattvas who, for as many eons as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River, give gifts, guard morality, cultivate patience, make an effort at perseverance, and become absorbed in concentration, but are separated from the perfection of wisdom and not assisted by skillful means. Their entrance is bigger, they think a bigger thought, they are assisted by an immeasurable beneficial intention to fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, but still they will fall to the śrāvaka level or the pratyekabuddha level. And why? Because those bodhisattva great beings have given gifts, guarded morality, cultivated patience, made an effort at perseverance, and generated concentration separated from the thought of the knowledge of all aspects. Those bodhisattvas will still be separated from the perfection of wisdom and skillful means and fall to the śrāvaka level or the pratyekabuddha level.

48.39 “Śāriputra, bodhisattvas who habitually focus thoughts on the morality, meditative stabilization, wisdom, freedom, and knowledge and seeing of liberation of past, future, and present lord buddhas, who fully retain and make them into causal signs, still do not know the morality, still do not know..., up to the knowledge and seeing [F.174.a] of liberation of the tathāgatas, and, without knowing and comprehending, hear the words emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness and grasp the state of peace as a causal sign. Having grasped it as a causal sign they transform it<sup>543</sup> into unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. The bodhisattvas who transform it like that will stand on the śrāvaka level or the pratyekabuddha level. And why? Śāriputra, it is because that is what happens to bodhisattvas separated from the perfection of wisdom and skillful means who dedicate the wholesome roots to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. They fall to the śrāvaka level or the pratyekabuddha level.

48.40 “Śāriputra, here you should know that when bodhisattva great beings, starting from the production of the first thought, are inseparable from the thought of the knowledge of all aspects, give gifts, guard morality, cultivate patience, make an effort at perseverance, become absorbed in concentration, are not separated from the perfection of wisdom and skillful means, and therefore do not grasp all the morality, meditative stabilization, wisdom, freedom, and knowledge and seeing of liberation of past, future, and present lord buddhas as causal signs, and do not grasp the emptiness meditative stabilization, signless meditative stabilization, and wishless meditative stabilization as causal signs, then, Śāriputra, they do not fall to the śrāvaka level or the pratyekabuddha level. And why? Because those bodhisattva great beings, starting from the production of the first thought, have given gifts but not grasped at a causal sign; have guarded morality, cultivated patience, made an effort at perseverance, become absorbed in concentration, and cultivated wisdom but [F.174.b] not grasped at a causal sign; have not grasped at the morality, meditative stabilization, wisdom, freedom, or knowledge and seeing of liberation of past, future, and present lord buddhas as causal signs; and have not grasped the emptiness meditative stabilization, signless meditative stabilization, or wishless meditative stabilization as causal signs either. Thus, Śāriputra, the practice without having grasped at causal signs, with a mind separated from causal signs of giving gifts, guarding morality, cultivating patience, making an effort at perseverance, becoming absorbed in concentration, and cultivating wisdom, and similarly, connect this with each, up to the knowledge of all aspects is the bodhisattva great beings’ skillful means.”

48.41 “Lord,” said Śāriputra, “the way I understand the meaning of what you, Lord, have said is that the unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening of bodhisattva great beings who, starting from the production of the first thought, are not separated from the perfection of wisdom and skillful means is not open to doubt. And why? Lord, it is because those bodhisattva great beings, starting from the production of the first thought, do not apprehend any dharma that might fully awaken, or through which there might be full awakening, nor any form that might be awakened to, nor any feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness, nor..., similarly, up to the knowledge of all aspects that might be awakened to.

48.42 “And Lord, it should be known that the unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening of those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family in the Bodhisattva Vehicle separated from the perfection of wisdom and separated from skillful means is doubtful. Why? Lord, it is because whatever gifts those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family in the Bodhisattva Vehicle separated from the perfection of wisdom and skillful means [F.175.a] have bestowed, they bestowed them all having grasped at a causal sign, and because whatever morality they guarded..., patience they cultivated..., perseverance they made an effort at..., or concentrations they became absorbed in, they became absorbed in them all too having grasped at a causal sign. The unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening of those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family in the Bodhisattva Vehicle should be known as doubtful because of that.

48.43 “Therefore, Lord, bodhisattva great beings who want to awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening should be aware not to be separated from the perfection of wisdom and skillful means. They should stand in the perfection of wisdom and skillful means and should bestow gifts, should guard morality, should cultivate patience, should make an effort at perseverance, should become absorbed in concentration, and should cultivate wisdom by way of not apprehending anything, with a mind endowed with signlessness. They should practice..., up to the knowledge of all aspects like that.”

48.44 Then the gods living in the desire realm and living in the form realm said to the Lord, “Lord, it is going to be hard for unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening to come about for bodhisattva great beings. They have to want to awaken fully to all dharmas but those dharmas do not exist and cannot be apprehended.”

48.45 “Exactly so, gods!” said the Lord. “It is going to be hard for unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening to come about. Gods! Even though I have fully awakened to all dharmas in all their aspects, still I did not apprehend any dharma that might fully awaken, or through which I might fully awaken, or any dharma [F.175.b] I might awaken to. And why? Gods, it is because all dharmas are absolutely pure.”

48.46 Then venerable Subhūti said to the Lord, “Lord, you have said, ‘It is going to be hard for unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening to come about.’ The way I understand the meaning of what you, Lord, have said, the way it occurs to me, is that the full awakening to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening must be easy. And why? Because there is nobody who fully awakens, and there is nothing that is fully awakened to, so all dharmas are empty, and where all dharmas are empty, any dharma that might fully awaken, through which there might be full awakening, or to which they might awaken does not exist. And why? Lord, it is because any dharma that will increase or decrease, any dharma to be bestowed, up to any concentration to become absorbed in, any dharma ... up to the knowledge of all aspects to practice does not exist. Somebody who might fully awaken, something through which there might be full awakening, and something to be fully awakened to—all those dharmas are empty. In this way, Lord, it must be easy for bodhisattva great beings to fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. And why? Lord, it is because form is empty of an intrinsic nature of form; feeling..., perception..., volitional factors..., and consciousness is empty of an intrinsic nature of consciousness; and similarly, up to [F.176.a] the knowledge of all aspects is empty of an intrinsic nature of the knowledge of all aspects.”

48.47 Then venerable Śāriputra said to venerable Subhūti, “Venerable Subhūti, according to this one of many explanations, the full awakening to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening must be hard. And why? Venerable Subhūti, it is because it would not occur to space to think, ‘I will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.’ Similarly, Venerable Subhūti, it would not occur to bodhisattva great beings to think, ‘I will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.’ And why? Because all dharmas are like space, and yet, while still believing all dharmas are like space, bodhisattva great beings fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. If bodhisattva great beings do not believe that dharmas are like space, but still it is easy to fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, full awakening would not be hard, and bodhisattvas, as many of them as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River, would not turn back<sup>544</sup> from unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. Therefore, Venerable Subhūti, according to this one of many explanations, the full awakening to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening must be hard. It is obvious full awakening is not easy.”

48.48 Then venerable Subhūti asked venerable Śāriputra, “Venerable Śāriputra, what do you think, does form turn back from unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening?”

“No it does not, Venerable Subhūti,” he replied.

48.49 “Do you think feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness turn back from unsurpassed, [F.176.b] perfect, complete awakening?”

“No they do not, Venerable Subhūti,” he replied.

48.50 Similarly, connect this with each, up to “Do you think suchness turns back from unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening?”

“No it does not, Venerable Subhūti,” he replied.

48.51 “Venerable Śāriputra, what do you think, is the dharma that turns back from unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening other than form?”

- “No it is not, Venerable Subhūti,” he replied.
- 48.52 “Do you think the dharma that turns back from unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening is other than feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness?”
- “No it is not, Venerable Subhūti,” he replied.
- 48.53 Similarly, connect this with each, up to “Do you think the dharma that turns back from unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening is other than the knowledge of all aspects?”
- “No it is not, Venerable Subhūti,” he replied.
- 48.54 “Venerable Śāriputra, what do you think, is it the suchness of form that turns back from unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, up to is it the suchness of the knowledge of all aspects that turns back from unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening?”
- “No it is not, Venerable Subhūti,” he replied.
- 48.55 “Venerable Śāriputra, what do you think, is the dharma that turns back from unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening other than the suchness of form?”
- “No it is not, Venerable Subhūti,” he replied.
- 48.56 Similarly, “Do you think the dharma that turns back from unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening is other than..., up to the suchness of the knowledge of all aspects?”
- “No it is not, Venerable Subhūti,” he replied.
- 48.57 “Venerable Śāriputra, what do you think, does suchness turn back from unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening?”
- “No it does not, Venerable Subhūti,” he replied.
- 48.58 “Venerable Śāriputra, what do you think, [F.177.a] does the true nature of dharmas turn back from unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening? Do you think the dharma-constituent, the establishment of dharmas, the certification of dharmas, the very limit of reality, or the inconceivable element turn back from unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening?”
- “No they do not, Venerable Subhūti,” he replied.
- 48.59 “Venerable Śāriputra, what do you think, is the dharma that turns back from unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening other than suchness?”
- “No it is not, Venerable Subhūti,” he replied.
- 48.60 “Venerable Śāriputra, what do you think, is the dharma that turns back from unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening other than..., up to the inconceivable element?”
- “No it is not, Venerable Subhūti,” he replied.
- 48.61 “So, since as things stand in truth these dharmas cannot be apprehended, what then is that dharma that turns back from unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening?”

- 48.62 Venerable Subhūti having asked this, venerable Śāriputra said to him, “According to the way things are in the elder Subhūti’s teaching<sup>545</sup> there is no bodhisattva great being who turns back from unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, and therefore there will be no presentation of the awakenings of those three persons to do with the Bodhisattva Vehicle—those three persons to do with the Bodhisattva Vehicle about whom the Tathāgata has given an explanation. According to the elder Subhūti’s teaching, bodhisattva great beings will be this—namely, in just a single Bodhisattva Vehicle.”
- 48.63 Then venerable Pūrṇa Maitrāyaṇīputra said to venerable Śāriputra, “Venerable Śāriputra, you must ask the elder Subhūti whether the elder Subhūti accepts even a single awakening.”
- 48.64 Venerable Śāriputra then asked of venerable Subhūti, “Venerable Subhūti, do you accept that there is a bodhisattva great being [F.177.b] in the Buddha Vehicle?”
- 48.65 Venerable Subhūti asked venerable Śāriputra in return, “Venerable Śāriputra, do you accept that in suchness there are three bodhisattvas: the bodhisattva in the Śrāvaka Vehicle, the bodhisattva in the Pratyekabuddha Vehicle, and the bodhisattva in the Buddha Vehicle?”
- “No, Venerable Subhūti,” he replied.
- 48.66 “Venerable Śāriputra, in suchness can you apprehend three bodhisattvas?”
- “No, Venerable Subhūti,” he replied.
- 48.67 “Venerable Śāriputra, can suchness be apprehended as one type, or two types, or three types?”
- “No, Venerable Subhūti,” he replied.
- 48.68 “Venerable Śāriputra, in suchness can you apprehended even one bodhisattva?”
- “No, Venerable Subhūti,” he replied.
- 48.69 Venerable Subhūti then said, “So, since as things stand in truth these dharmas cannot be apprehended, what, Venerable Śāriputra, made you think, ‘This bodhisattva is in the Śrāvaka Vehicle, this bodhisattva is in the Pratyekabuddha Vehicle, and this bodhisattva is in the Buddha Vehicle’?”
- 48.70 “Thus, Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings whose minds are not cowed, who do not tense up, and who do not experience regret when bodhisattva great beings categorized in terms of the suchness of all dharmas are not specifically qualified<sup>546</sup>—they will go forth to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.”
- 48.71 Then the Lord said to venerable Subhūti, “Subhūti, your confident readiness to explain like this through the Buddha’s might is excellent! Therefore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings whose minds are not cowed, who do not tense up, and who do not experience regret—who do not tremble, feel frightened, or become terrified when bodhisattva great beings categorized in terms of the suchness of all dharmas are not specifically qualified— [F.178.a] those bodhisattva great beings will go forth to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.”

48.72 Then venerable Śāriputra asked the Lord, “Lord, to which awakening will bodhisattva great beings with such qualities as those go forth?”

“Śāriputra,” replied the Lord, “those bodhisattva great beings will go forth to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.”

48.73 Then venerable Subhūti asked the Lord, “Lord, how should bodhisattva great beings who want to go forth to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening stand?”

48.74 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “bodhisattva great beings stand with a thought that makes all beings equal:<sup>547</sup> ‘I must produce a balanced thought toward all beings, not produce an unbalanced thought. I must focus on all beings with a balanced thought, not focus on all beings with an unbalanced thought. I must generate great love and great compassion for all beings. I must focus on all beings with great love. I must not focus on any beings callously. I must stop feeling superior to any beings. I must focus on all beings without being devious. I must produce a thought to be of benefit to all beings, not produce a thought to harm them. I must focus on all beings with a thought to benefit them, not focus on them with a thought to harm them. I must produce a thought that I am not offended by any beings, not produce a thought that I am offended. I must produce a thought not to injure any beings, not produce a thought to injure them. I must focus on all beings with a thought not to injure them, [F.178.b] not focus on them with a thought to injure them. I must produce a thought that all beings are mothers. I must produce a thought that all beings are brothers, sisters, friends, kinsmen, and blood relatives. I must focus on all beings with the thought they are mothers. I must focus on all beings with the thought they are brothers, sisters, friends, kinsmen, up to blood relatives.

48.75 “ ‘I must stop killing, I must inspire others to stop killing, I must speak in praise of stopping killing, and I must speak in praise of others stopping killing as well, welcoming it.

48.76 “ ‘I must stop stealing, I must inspire others to stop stealing, I must speak in praise of stopping stealing, and I must speak in praise of others stopping stealing as well, welcoming it.

48.77 “ ‘I must stop illicit sex because of lust, I must inspire others to stop illicit sex because of lust, I must speak in praise of stopping illicit sex because of lust, and I must speak in praise of others stopping illicit sex because of lust as well, welcoming it.’

- 48.78 “That is how bodhisattva great beings who want to go forth to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening should stand.
- 48.79 Similarly, “ ‘I must stop ... up to wrong view, I must inspire others to stop wrong view, I must speak in praise of stopping wrong view, and I must speak in praise of others stopping wrong view as well, welcoming it.’
- 48.80 “That is how bodhisattva great beings who want to go forth to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening should stand.
- 48.81 “ ‘I must become absorbed in the first concentration, I must inspire others to become absorbed in the first concentration, I must speak in praise of becoming absorbed in the first concentration, [F.179.a] and I must speak in praise of others becoming absorbed in the first concentration as well, welcoming it. Similarly, I must become absorbed in ... up to the fourth concentration, up to I must speak in praise of others becoming absorbed in ... up to the fourth concentration as well, welcoming it.’
- 48.82 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings who want to go forth to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening must become absorbed in loving-kindness, up to ‘I must speak in praise of others becoming absorbed in loving-kindness as well, welcoming it. I must do the same with compassion, joy, and equanimity as well.
- 48.83 “ ‘I must become absorbed in the station of endless space. Similarly, up to I must speak in praise of others becoming absorbed in the station of endless space as well, welcoming it. I must do the same with ... up to the station of neither perception nor nonperception absorption.
- 48.84 “ ‘I must complete the perfection of giving, I must inspire others to take up the perfection of giving, I must speak in praise of the perfection of giving, and I must speak in praise of others completing the perfection of giving as well, welcoming it. I must complete ... up to the perfection of wisdom, I must inspire others to take up the perfection of wisdom, I must speak in praise of the perfection of wisdom, and I must speak in praise of others completing the perfection of wisdom as well, welcoming it.’ [F.179.b]
- 48.85 “That is how bodhisattva great beings who want to go forth to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening should stand.
- 48.86 “ ‘I must become absorbed in inner emptiness, I must inspire others to become absorbed in inner emptiness, I must speak in praise of inner emptiness, and I must speak in praise of others becoming absorbed in inner emptiness as well, welcoming it. Similarly, I must become absorbed in ... up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, I must inspire others to become absorbed in the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, I must speak in praise of the emptiness that is the

- nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, and I must speak in praise of others becoming absorbed in the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature as well, welcoming it.
- 48.87 “ ‘I must cultivate the four applications of mindfulness, I must inspire others to take up the applications of mindfulness, I must speak in praise of the applications of mindfulness, and I must speak in praise of others cultivating the applications of mindfulness as well, welcoming it. I must do the same with ... up to the eightfold noble path.
- 48.88 “ ‘I must become absorbed in the emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness meditative stabilization, I must inspire others to take up the emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness meditative stabilization, I must speak in praise of the emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness meditative stabilization, and I must speak in praise of others becoming absorbed in the emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness meditative stabilization as well, welcoming it.
- 48.89 “ ‘I must become absorbed in the eight deliverances, I must inspire others to take up the eight deliverances, I must speak in praise [F.180.a] of the eight deliverances, and I must speak in praise of others becoming absorbed in the eight deliverances as well, welcoming it.
- 48.90 “ ‘I must complete the ten tathāgata powers, I must inspire others to take up the ten tathāgata powers, I must speak in praise of the ten tathāgata powers, and I must speak in praise of others completing the ten tathāgata powers as well, welcoming it. Similarly, I must complete the four fearlessnesses, the four detailed and thorough knowledges, the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, great love, and great compassion. I must inspire others to take up ... up to great love, and great compassion, I must speak in praise of great compassion, and I must speak in praise of others completing great compassion as well, welcoming it.
- 48.91 “ ‘I must become absorbed in dependent origination in the order in which it unfolds and in the order in which it does not unfold, I must inspire others to take up dependent origination in the order in which it unfolds and in the order in which it does not unfold, I must speak in praise of dependent origination, and I must speak in praise of others becoming absorbed in dependent origination as well, welcoming it.’
- 48.92 “That is how bodhisattva great beings who want to go forth to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening should stand.
- 48.93 “ ‘I must comprehend suffering. I must abandon origination. I must actualize cessation. I must cultivate the path. I must inspire others to take up the comprehension of suffering, the abandoning of origination, the actualization of cessation, [F.180.b] and the cultivation of the path. I must speak in praise of the comprehension of suffering, up to the cultivation of the path, and I must speak in praise of others becoming absorbed in the comprehension of suffering, the abandoning of origination, the actualization of cessation, and the cultivation of the path as well, welcoming it.

48.94 “ ‘I must produce knowledge to actualize the knowledge that is the result of stream enterer, but I should not actualize the very limit of reality. I must inspire others to actualize the knowledge that is the result of stream enterer. I must produce knowledge to actualize the knowledge that is the result of once-returner, but I should not actualize the very limit of reality. I must inspire others to actualize the knowledge that is the result of once-returner. I must produce knowledge to actualize the knowledge that is the result of non-returner, but I should not actualize the very limit of reality. I must inspire others to actualize the knowledge that is the result of non-returner. I must produce knowledge to actualize the knowledge that is the state of a worthy one, but I should not actualize the very limit of reality. I must inspire others to actualize the knowledge that is the state of a worthy one. I must enter into the secure state of a bodhisattva, I must inspire others to enter into the secure state of a bodhisattva, I must speak in praise of the secure state of a bodhisattva, and I must speak in praise of others entering into the secure state of a bodhisattva as well, welcoming it.’ [F.181.a]

48.95 “That is how bodhisattva great beings who want to go forth to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening should stand.

48.96 “ ‘I must bring beings to maturity, I must inspire others to bring beings to maturity, I must speak in praise of bringing beings to maturity, and I must speak in praise of others bringing beings to maturity as well, welcoming it. I must purify a buddhafiield, I must inspire others to purify a buddhafiield, I must speak in praise of purifying a buddhafiield, and I must speak in praise of others purifying a buddhafiield as well, welcoming it. I must produce a bodhisattva’s clairvoyance, I must inspire others to produce a bodhisattva’s clairvoyance, I must speak in praise of producing a bodhisattva’s clairvoyance, and I must speak in praise of others producing a bodhisattva’s clairvoyance as well, welcoming it. I must produce the knowledge of a knower of all aspects, I must inspire others to take up the knowledge of a knower of all aspects, I must speak in praise of the knowledge of a knower of all aspects, and I must speak in praise of others producing the knowledge of a knower of all aspects as well, welcoming it. I must eliminate all residual impressions, connections, and afflictions. I must inspire others to eliminate all residual impressions, connections, and afflictions. I must speak in praise of knowledge of the elimination of all residual impressions, connections, and afflictions, and I must speak in praise of others eliminating all residual impressions, connections, [F.181.b] and afflictions as well, welcoming it.’

48.97 “Subhūti, that is how bodhisattva great beings who want to go forth to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening should stand.

48.98 “ ‘I must take possession of a perfect lifespan. I must inspire others to have a perfect lifespan. I must speak in praise of having a perfect lifespan, and I must speak in praise of others taking possession of a perfect lifespan as well, welcoming it. I must make sure the good doctrine lasts. I must inspire others to make sure the good doctrine lasts. I must speak in praise of making sure the good doctrine lasts, and I must speak in praise of others making sure the good doctrine lasts as well, welcoming it.’

48.99 “Subhūti, that is how bodhisattva great beings who want to go forth to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening should stand. That is how bodhisattva great beings should train in the perfection of wisdom and skillful means. Training like that,<sup>548</sup> standing like that, their form will be without obscuration; their feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness will also be without obscuration. Similarly, connect this with each, up to the lasting of the doctrine will be without obscuration. And why? Because even in the past those bodhisattva great beings did not seize form; did not seize feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness; and similarly, did not seize ... up to the knowledge of all aspects. And why? Because even that form that has not been seized is not form, and similarly, up to even that knowledge of all aspects that has not been seized is not [F.182.a] the knowledge of all aspects.”

48.100 During this exposition of the positioning of the bodhisattva, two thousand bodhisattvas gained forbearance for the nonproduction of dharmas.

CHAPTER 49: IRREVERSIBILITY

- 49.1 The Lord having said this, venerable Subhūti inquired of him, “Lord, what is the attribute, what is the token, and what is the sign of irreversible bodhisattva great beings? How do I know, ‘These bodhisattva great beings are irreversible?’ ”
- 49.2 Venerable Subhūti having thus inquired, the Lord said to him, “Subhūti, here what are called the level of ordinary persons, the level of śrāvakas, the level of pratyekabuddhas, the level of bodhisattvas, and the level of tathāgatas—all of them are suchness, unchanging, undifferentiated, not two, and not divided. They enter into that suchness just as it is. Thus, they do not differentiate the undifferentiated and thus enter into it. Those who have entered like that, having heard about suchness just as it is, having transcended it, have no doubt at all that they are not each separate from suchness, and are not both different and suchness. They do not say whatever just comes into their minds, their words are meaningful, and they do not talk nonsense. They are not concerned with what others have and have not done; they search for what has been well spoken. Subhūti, you should know that bodhisattva great beings who have those attributes, those tokens, and those signs are irreversible.”
- 49.3 “Lord, through what attributes, [F.182.b] what tokens, and what signs should you know that bodhisattva great beings are irreversible?” asked Subhūti.
- 49.4 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “all dharmas are without attributes, without tokens, and without signs.”
- 49.5 The Lord having said this, venerable Subhūti then asked him, “Lord, if all dharmas are without attributes, without tokens, and without signs, what are the dharmas bodhisattva great beings do not turn away from again, on account of which they are taught to be ‘irreversible’?”

- 49.6 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “you should know that bodhisattva great beings who have turned away from form, and who have turned away from feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness, are, Subhūti, irreversible bodhisattva great beings. Subhūti, you should know that bodhisattva great beings who have turned away from the perfection of giving, up to the perfection of wisdom; from inner emptiness, up to emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature; from the applications of mindfulness, up to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha; and who have turned away from the śrāvaka level and the pratyekabuddha level, up to awakening, are, Subhūti, irreversible bodhisattva great beings. And why? Subhūti, it is because a form where a bodhisattva might be located is without an intrinsic nature. Similarly, connect this with each, up to an awakening where a bodhisattva might be located is without an intrinsic nature.
- 49.7 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings do not look up to others outside the fold—those following a secluded religious life, and brahmins;<sup>549</sup> they do not think those following a secluded religious life or brahmins know what needs to be known, see what needs to be seen, or expound an exposition [F.183.a] of right view. There is no doubt about that, it is impossible. They do not grasp rules and rituals as absolute; they do not fall into a bad view; they do not hold that a spectacle or an auspicious sign makes for cleanliness;<sup>550</sup> and they do not bow down to other gods, nor do they think they should give them flowers, or garlands, or incense, or creams, or powders, or clothes, or parasols, or flags, or banners. Subhūti, you should know that bodhisattva great beings endowed with those attributes, those tokens, and those signs are irreversible.
- 49.8 “Furthermore, Subhūti, irreversible bodhisattva great beings are not born in hell, up to they are not born in the eight places that preclude a perfect human birth, and they do not take on being a woman. Subhūti, you should know that bodhisattva great beings endowed with those attributes, those tokens, and those signs are irreversible.
- 49.9 “Furthermore, Subhūti, irreversible bodhisattva great beings have taken to heart and stand on the ten wholesome actions: ‘I have stopped stealing, I inspire others to stop stealing, I speak in praise of stopping stealing, and I speak in praise of others stopping stealing as well, welcoming it. And similarly, up to wrong view.’ Subhūti, you should know that bodhisattva great beings endowed with those attributes, those tokens, and those signs are irreversible.
- 49.10 “Furthermore, Subhūti, irreversible bodhisattva great beings do not ply the ten unwholesome actions even in a dream, let alone when awake. Subhūti, you should know that bodhisattva great beings endowed with those attributes, those tokens, and those signs are irreversible.

- 49.11 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when irreversible bodhisattva great beings [F.183.b] pursue the perfection of giving they give the gift for the sake of all beings. And similarly, up to when they cultivate wisdom. Subhūti, you should know that bodhisattva great beings endowed with those attributes, those tokens, and those signs are irreversible.
- 49.12 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when irreversible bodhisattva great beings give a gift of Dharma—a discourse, melodious narration, prediction, up to tale, or exposition—a Dharma they study, they think, ‘Through this gift of Dharma, may the intention of all beings be completed.’ Having made that gift of Dharma into something shared in common by all beings, they dedicate it to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. Subhūti, you should know that bodhisattva great beings endowed with those attributes, those tokens, and those signs are irreversible.
- 49.13 “Furthermore, Subhūti, irreversible bodhisattva great beings are not unsure, not of two minds, and do not doubt the deep dharmas.”
- 49.14 “Lord, why are irreversible bodhisattva great beings not unsure, not of two minds, and why do they not doubt the deep dharmas?” asked Subhūti.
- 49.15 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “it is because irreversible bodhisattva great beings do not see any dharma about which they are unsure, or of two minds, or that they doubt at all. They also do not see form, or feeling, or perception, or volitional factors, or consciousness. And similarly, up to they also do not see awakening. Subhūti, you should know that bodhisattva great beings endowed with those attributes, those tokens, and those signs are irreversible. [F.184.a]
- 49.16 “Furthermore, Subhūti, irreversible bodhisattva great beings are endowed with gentle physical action, are endowed with gentle verbal action, and gentle mental action. Subhūti, you should know that bodhisattva great beings endowed with those attributes, those tokens, and those signs are irreversible.
- 49.17 “Furthermore, Subhūti, irreversible bodhisattva great beings are constantly and always endowed with loving physical action, are endowed with loving verbal action, and loving mental action. Subhūti, you should know that bodhisattva great beings endowed with those attributes, those tokens, and those signs are irreversible.
- 49.18 “Furthermore, Subhūti, irreversible bodhisattva great beings do not cohabit with five obscurations—namely, desire for sense gratification, malice, drowsiness and dozing, gross mental excitement and uneasiness, and doubt. Subhūti, you should know that bodhisattva great beings endowed with those attributes, those tokens, and those signs are irreversible.

- 49.19 “Furthermore, Subhūti, irreversible bodhisattva great beings do not have bad proclivities in any way at all. Subhūti, you should know that bodhisattva great beings endowed with those attributes, those tokens, and those signs are irreversible.
- 49.20 “Furthermore, Subhūti, be it the going out or the coming back, irreversible bodhisattva great beings’ thoughts do not veer off when going out and their thoughts do not veer off when coming back. Whether going out or coming back, they go applying mindfulness and come back applying mindfulness. Mindful they go out and mindful they come back; mindful they walk, mindful they pause, mindful they sit, and mindful they rest. They are not too hasty in picking up their foot and not too hasty in putting their foot down; mindful they pick their foot up and mindful they put their foot down. [F.184.b] They traverse the area while looking at the ground. Subhūti, you should know that bodhisattva great beings endowed with those attributes, those tokens, and those signs are irreversible.
- 49.21 “Furthermore, Subhūti, irreversible bodhisattva great beings’ use of robes is impeccable. Subhūti, irreversible bodhisattva great beings are habitually clean, do not smell bad, are not dusty and dirty, and do not get sick often. Subhūti, you should know that bodhisattva great beings endowed with those attributes, those tokens, and those signs are irreversible.
- 49.22 “Furthermore, Subhūti, those eighty thousand maggot families<sup>551</sup> in the bodies of human beings who feed on those bodies are not in the bodies of irreversible bodhisattva great beings as anything at all in any way at all. And why? Subhūti, it is because the wholesome roots of irreversible bodhisattva great beings rise up above everything ordinary. Therefore those eighty thousand maggot families are not in the bodhisattva great beings’ bodies.
- 49.23 “Subhūti, as those wholesome roots of the bodhisattva great beings keep on growing, the bodhisattva great beings appropriate a purer and purer body, and appropriate purer and purer speech and mind. Subhūti, you should know that bodhisattva great beings endowed with those attributes, those tokens, and those signs are irreversible.”
- 49.24 The Lord having said this, venerable Subhūti asked him, “How are the bodhisattva great beings’ bodies pure, speech pure, and mind pure?”
- 49.25 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “as those wholesome roots [F.185.a] of bodhisattva great beings keep on growing, those wholesome roots make bodhisattva great beings’ crooked bodies, speech, and minds, and their devious bodies, speech, and minds, purer and purer, and they conduct themselves more and more with the three types of good conduct to do with the body, with the four types of good conduct to do with speech, and with the three types of good conduct to do with the mind. This, Subhūti, is the bodhisattva great beings’ pure bodies, pure speech, and pure minds. With those pure bodies, pure speech, and pure minds they transcend the śrāvaka level and pratyekabuddha level but do not actualize the very limit of reality. This too, Subhūti, is the bodhisattva great beings' pure bodies, pure speech, and pure minds. Subhūti, you should know that bodhisattva great beings endowed with those attributes, those tokens, and those signs are irreversible.

49.26 “Furthermore, Subhūti, irreversible bodhisattva great beings are not attached to wealth and respect, are not attached to food, are not even focused on ... up to being a three-robe wearer, but still they undertake and keep on at those twelve qualities of the ascetic.<sup>552</sup> Subhūti, you should know that bodhisattva great beings endowed with those attributes, those tokens, and those signs are irreversible.

49.27 “Furthermore, Subhūti, irreversible bodhisattva great beings do not produce a miserly thought, do not produce an immoral thought, do not produce an emotionally upsetting thought,<sup>553</sup> do not produce a lazy thought, do not produce an uncollected thought, do not produce an intellectually confused thought, and do not produce a jealous thought. Subhūti, you should know that bodhisattva great beings endowed with those attributes, those tokens, and those signs [F.185.b] are irreversible.

49.28 “Furthermore, Subhūti, irreversible bodhisattva great beings have a steady intellect, a profound intellect, listen to the doctrine from others with respect, and whatever doctrine they have heard from others they merge it all with the perfection of wisdom, and thanks to the perfection of wisdom they merge all the ordinary things that have to be done with the true nature of dharmas. There is no dharma at all that they view as not united with the dharma-constituent; they view them all as united with the perfection of wisdom. Subhūti, you should know that marks bodhisattva great beings as irreversible.

49.29 “Furthermore, Subhūti, Māra the wicked one magically produces the eight great hells in the presence of irreversible bodhisattva great beings and in each of the great hells also magically produces many thousands of bodhisattvas, many hundred thousand bodhisattvas, many hundred thousand one hundred million billion bodhisattvas being burned and cooked, experiencing unbearable, sharp, grating sufferings, and says to them, ‘The Tathāgata has prophesied these bodhisattva great beings, all of them, to be irreversible from awakening, and yet they have been born in these hells. The Tathāgata’s prophecy that you too are irreversible is a prophecy to do with hell, so from now on let go of this thought of awakening. Then you will not be born in hell; you will on that account go to heaven instead.’ When Māra says that, if those bodhisattva great beings’ thought is not disturbed,<sup>554</sup> if they do not harbor doubt, you should know that those tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas of the past prophesied those bodhisattva great beings. Those bodhisattva great beings [F.186.a] stand certain in the irreversible element. Subhūti, it is impossible that there is any chance the bodhisattvas irreversible from awakening will be born in hell, or in the animal world, or in the world of Yama. It is impossible. Subhūti, you should know that bodhisattva great beings endowed with those attributes, those tokens, and those signs are irreversible.

49.30 “Furthermore, Subhūti, if Māra the wicked one comes into the presence of bodhisattva great beings disguised in the form of a follower of the secluded religious life and says, ‘Repudiate what you have heard before—namely, that “I must thus cleanse the perfection of giving, up to I must thus cleanse the perfection of wisdom, up to I must thus cleanse the knowledge of all aspects,” and that “I must fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.” Confess and reject your rejoicings in all those wholesome roots of past, future, and present tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas with their śrāvaka saṅghas, starting from the first production of the thought, up to the lasting of the good Dharma. What if you were somebody who confesses and rejects those wholesome roots? What you have heard is not the word of the Buddha, it is personally made up by rhymesters. I will tell you those words of the Buddha the Tathāgata has spoken.’ If, when Māra says that, those bodhisattva great beings are disturbed, are unsure, harbor doubt, then you should know that the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas of the past did not prophesy those bodhisattva great beings, and those bodhisattva great beings do not stand certain [F.186.b] in the irreversible element. But if those bodhisattva great beings are not disturbed, are not unsure, do not harbor doubt, fall back on the true nature of dharmas, and fall back on the absence of occasioning anything, and on the absence of production; do not believe in another;<sup>555</sup> and do not place their trust in another when it comes to the perfection of giving, up to the perfection of wisdom, and do not place their trust in another when it comes to awakening, then those bodhisattva great beings stand certain in the irreversible element and do not believe in another. If, Subhūti, the bodhisattva great beings irreversible from awakening cannot be crushed by those in the Śrāvaka Vehicle or in the Pratyekabuddha Vehicle and are irreversible from unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, just like worthy ones with outflows dried up directly witnessing the true nature of dharmas do not believe in another and are not captured by Māra the wicked one, then, Subhūti, never mind that they do not believe in tīrthika religious mendicants, never mind that they do not believe in those in the Śrāvaka Vehicle or in the Pratyekabuddha Vehicle or in Māra the wicked one, they do not even place their trust in the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete Buddha. It is impossible. And why? Because they do not see any dharma at all in which to believe, and because they do not see form, or feeling, or perception, or volitional factors, or consciousness, or the suchness of form, up to or the suchness of consciousness. And similarly, up to they do not see awakening, and they do not see the suchness of awakening. Subhūti, you should know that bodhisattva great beings endowed with those attributes, those reasons, and those signs are irreversible.

49.31 “Furthermore, Subhūti, Māra the wicked one comes into the presence of bodhisattva great beings disguised in the form of a monk [F.187.a] and says, ‘This way of life has to do with saṃsāra; it is not a way of life to do with the knowledge of all aspects, so you should put an end to suffering right here.’ Māra the wicked one teaches the bodhisattva great beings a counterfeit path, a counterfeit path purified of the ordinary aspects of ways of life to do with saṃsāra, or else teaches them the perception of dry bones, or else gives instruction in the first concentration, up to the station of neither perception nor nonperception absorption. ‘Venerable, this is the path, and this is the way you progress. It is the path and the way you progress to reach the result of stream enterer, up to the state of a worthy one. Venerable, you should put an end to suffering right here with this path and way of progressing and not experience the sufferings of a way of life in saṃsāra anymore. Hey! Consider why, if your body has not been brought into being right here, you would appropriate another body.’ Subhūti, if the bodhisattva great beings’ minds are not disturbed, are not shaken even when Māra says that, and if, on top of that they think, ‘This monk is a boon to me showing me this counterfeit path. It is a counterfeit path that does not even work for the realization of the result of stream enterer, up to the state of a worthy one, does not even work for the realization of a pratyekabuddha’s awakening, and does not work for the realization of unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening either.’ And if, on top of that, again pleasure rises up in them, thinking, ‘This monk who shows me those attachments is a boon to me. Having fully comprehended those attachments I will train in all three paths,’ Māra the wicked one, knowing pleasure has arisen in those bodhisattva great beings, again talks to them, saying, ‘Son of a good family, [F.187.b] do you want to have a look at those bodhisattva great beings who have served as many lord buddhas as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River with what they require—robes, alms, beds and seats, and medicines for sicknesses—who have completed the perfection of giving, up to have cultivated the perfection of wisdom in the presence of as many tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River, those bodhisattva great beings who, having attended on as many lord buddhas as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River, make inquiries on the topic of just that Bodhisattva Vehicle, asking, “How do you stand in the Bodhisattva Vehicle practicing the perfection of giving, and similarly, practicing up to the perfection of wisdom, practicing the applications of mindfulness, right efforts, legs of miraculous power, faculties, powers, limbs of awakening, and path, and similarly, up to great compassion, and up to the knowledge of all aspects?” Those bodhisattva great beings have lived in accord, practiced in accord, and made an effort in accord with what those lord buddhas have taught but still they have not yet fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. If those who have been given advice like that, been instructed like that, lived like that, trained over and over again like that have still not reached the knowledge of all aspects, how could someone like you ever reach unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening?’ If, even after having been dissuaded that like, the thought of those bodhisattva great beings is not changed; if they do not tremble, feel frightened, or become terrified; and if, [F.188.a] on top of that, pleasure rises up in them, thinking, ‘This monk is a boon to me. He shows me those attachments on account of which even the result of stream enterer is not attained, and similarly, up to even the knowledge of all aspects is not attained,’ then Māra the wicked one, knowing the minds of those bodhisattva great beings are uncowed, magically produces a great many monks in that very place and again says, ‘All of these are worthy ones with outflows dried up. If they have not set forth to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, but rather abide in the state of a worthy one, how could someone like you ever fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening?’ If even so those bodhisattva great beings still think, ‘Hey! This is Māra the wicked one! He is teaching a counterfeit path!’, then those bodhisattva great beings are practicing the perfection of wisdom, are irreversible from unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, and do not fall to the śrāvaka level or the pratyekabuddha level. On top of that, they think, ‘It is impossible that bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of giving, up to cultivating the knowledge of a knower of all aspects will not fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. There is no chance, it is impossible.’ Then you should know, Subhūti, that bodhisattva great beings endowed with those attributes, those tokens, and those signs are irreversible.

49.32      “Furthermore, Subhūti, if it occurs to irreversible bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom to think, ‘Those who have trained in, and are not separated from, the way of life in accord with what the Tathāgata has explained, with attention connected to the perfections, [F.188.b] do not lack what is necessary for the perfection of giving, and similarly, up to do not lack what is necessary for the knowledge of all aspects,' you should know, Subhūti, that bodhisattva great beings endowed with those attributes, those tokens, and those signs are irreversible.

49.33 "Furthermore, Subhūti, if it occurs to irreversible bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom to think, 'Those who comprehend the works of Māra will not be lacking in what is necessary for unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening,' you should know, Subhūti, that the bodhisattva great beings endowed with those attributes, those tokens, and those signs are irreversible from unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening."

49.34 The Lord having said this, venerable Subhūti then asked him, "From what do irreversible bodhisattva great beings have to be irreversible in order to be known to be irreversible?"

49.35 "Subhūti," replied the Lord, "they turn back from the perception of form, turn back from the perception of feeling, turn back from the perception of perception, turn back from the perception of volitional factors, and turn back from the perception of consciousness; and they turn back from the perception of constituents, the perception of sense fields, the perception of greed, the perception of hate, the perception of confusion, the perception of views, the perception of perfections, the perception of emptinesses, and the perception of applications of mindfulness; and similarly, the perception of śrāvaka, and perception of pratyekabuddha, up to they turn back from the perception of buddha. And why? Because all dharmas are empty of their own mark, so irreversible bodhisattva great beings enter [F.189.a] into the secure state of a bodhisattva. They do not apprehend even just a very tiny dharma, so they do not occasion anything, and because they do not occasion anything, they do not produce it. They are called irreversible bodhisattva great beings 'who have gained forbearance for the nonproduction of dharmas.' Subhūti, you should know that bodhisattva great beings endowed with those attributes, those tokens, and those signs are irreversible from awakening."

49.36 This was the forty-ninth chapter, "Irreversibility," of "The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines."

CHAPTER 50: TEACHING THE SIGNS OF IRREVERSIBILITY

50.1

“Furthermore, Subhūti, Māra the wicked one comes into the presence of bodhisattva great beings and discourages them, saying, ‘The knowledge of all aspects is like space; it is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, and it is empty of its own mark. These dharmas are like space as well; they are the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, and they are empty of their own marks. In dharmas that are like space with a nonexistent intrinsic nature and empty of their own marks, you cannot apprehend any dharma at all which might fully awaken, through which you might fully awaken, and which will be fully awakened to. All those dharmas are like space with a nonexistent intrinsic nature and empty of their own marks, so this—namely, this teaching that you should fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening—will frustrate you. It is meaningless, it is the work of Māra, it is not a teaching of the perfectly complete buddha. Son of a good family, reject those ways of thinking or else they will bring you misfortune and suffering and a descent into error.’

50.2

“There, when he says that, those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family, having heard those words, think, ‘In this case we have to look closely. These are the works of Māra causing a separation from unsurpassed, [F.189.b] perfect, complete awakening. Thus, dharmas are like space with a nonexistent intrinsic nature and are empty of their own marks. Beings do not know, do not see, and do not comprehend them, so we, having buckled on the space-like armor with a nonexistent intrinsic nature empty of its own mark, having fully awakened to the knowledge of all aspects, will teach the doctrine that provides a definite escape. We will establish them in the result of stream enterer, the result of once-returner, the result of non-returner, and the state of a worthy one. We will establish them in the state of a pratyekabuddha, and we will establish them in unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.’

- 50.3 “There, starting from their first production of the thought, when bodhisattva great beings hear those doctrines they must be firm in their thought, must be unwavering in their thought, and must not be robbed of their thought. If, endowed with a firm thought, an unwavering thought, a thought that cannot be stolen, they practice the six perfections, they will enter into the secure state of a bodhisattva.”
- 50.4 Then venerable Subhūti asked the Lord, “Lord, do you call bodhisattva great beings irreversible from awakening ‘irreversible,’ or do you call bodhisattvas who turns back ‘irreversible’?”
- 50.5 Venerable Subhūti having asked this, the Lord said to him, “Subhūti, irreversible bodhisattvas are said to ‘turn back,’ and bodhisattvas who turn back are said to be ‘irreversible.’ ”
- 50.6 “Lord, why are irreversible bodhisattvas said to ‘turn back,’ and why are bodhisattvas who turn back said to be ‘irreversible’?” asked Subhūti.
- 50.7 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “the bodhisattvas [F.190.a] who have turned back from the śrāvaka level or the pratyekabuddha level, Subhūti, are the bodhisattvas who have turned back who are said to be ‘irreversible.’ Subhūti, the bodhisattvas who have not turned back from the śrāvaka level or the pratyekabuddha level, Subhūti, are the irreversible bodhisattva who are said to have ‘turned back.’
- 50.8 “You should know, Subhūti, that being endowed with those attributes, those tokens, and those signs, bodhisattva great beings are marked as irreversible from awakening. Māra the wicked one cannot dissuade bodhisattvas endowed with those attributes, those tokens, and those signs from unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.
- 50.9 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings irreversible from awakening become absorbed when and as they want to in the first concentration, up to become absorbed in the fourth concentration, up to become absorbed in the cessation absorption. Furthermore, Subhūti, irreversible bodhisattva great beings become absorbed when and as they want to in the four applications of mindfulness, up to become absorbed in the eightfold noble path, up to become absorbed in the meditative stabilization on emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness. They accomplish the five clairvoyances; gain mastery over the four concentrations, four immeasurables, four formless absorptions, and the cessation absorption; cultivate all four applications of mindfulness; and similarly, become absorbed in ... up to the eightfold noble path and in the meditative stabilization on emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness; and accomplish the five clairvoyances, but still they do not appropriate the result of the concentrations, and similarly, up to do not appropriate the result of the cessation absorption, do not gain the result [F.190.b] of stream enterer, and similarly, up to do not gain a pratyekabuddha's awakening. When and as they want to, and at will, they appropriate a body. That is, they appropriate a body with which they can work for the welfare of beings. Subhūti, you should know that bodhisattva great beings endowed with those attributes, those tokens, and those signs are irreversible from awakening.

50.10 “Furthermore, Subhūti, irreversible bodhisattva great beings endowed with attention to awakening, inseparable from the thought of awakening, do not focus on form,<sup>556</sup> do not focus on a mark, do not focus on the body, do not focus on giving, and similarly, up to do not focus on wisdom, do not focus on the concentrations, do not focus on the immeasurables, do not focus on the formless absorptions, do not focus on the clairvoyant knowledges, do not focus on the tathāgata powers, do not focus on the fearlessnesses, up to do not focus on awakening, do not focus on the purification of a buddhafield, do not focus on bringing beings to maturity, do not focus on seeing the buddhas, and do not focus on growing wholesome roots. And why? Because those dharmas are like space; they are the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature and they are empty of their own marks. Subhūti, those bodhisattva great beings irreversible from awakening are endowed with this attention to being a bodhisattva while carrying themselves in all four ways. Whether going out or coming back, they do not come back with their thoughts veering off and do not go out with their thoughts veering off. They do not stand up with their thoughts veering off, they do not walk with their thoughts veering off, they do not sit down with their thoughts veering off, and they do not lie down with their thoughts veering off. Mindful they come back, and mindful they go, walk, stand, sit, and lie down. Subhūti, you should know that bodhisattva great beings endowed with those attributes, those tokens, [F.191.a] and those signs are irreversible from awakening.

50.11 “Furthermore, Subhūti, irreversible bodhisattva great beings living the life of a householder make a show of the five sorts of sense objects through skillful means in order to bring beings to maturity. They give gifts to beings, they give food to those seeking food, up to<sup>557</sup> they give whatever human requirements are appropriate. They personally practice the perfection of giving, and they inspire others to practice the perfection of giving, speak in praise of practicing the perfection of giving, and speak in praise of others practicing the perfection of giving as well, welcoming it. Similarly, connect this with they speak in praise of others practicing ... up to the perfection of wisdom as well, welcoming it.

50.12 “Furthermore, Subhūti, those bodhisattva great beings irreversible from awakening living the life of a householder give the gift of the world filled up with the seven precious stones, up to give the gift of this great billionfold world system filled up with the seven precious stones, but without making use of sense objects, constantly and always practicing celibacy, without oppressing anyone by unleashing the oppression that causes others mental distress. Subhūti, you should know that bodhisattva great beings endowed with those attributes, those tokens, and those signs are irreversible from awakening.

50.13 “Furthermore, Subhūti, the yakṣa Vajrapāṇi, with the thought, ‘Before long this bodhisattva great being will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening,’ constantly and always shadows those irreversible bodhisattva great beings, to guard and protect them just like he shadows me, the unsurpassed, perfectly complete buddha. [F.191.b] As long as the five vajra families are constantly and always shadowing them, humans and nonhumans cannot oppress them, and nobody, in truth, in this world—the gods, or Māras, or brahmins—can withstand them. Their thought does not become distracted from attention to awakening up to and including when fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. Those bodhisattvas’ faculties—namely, the eye faculty, up to the thinking-mind faculty, faith faculty, perseverance faculty, mindfulness faculty, meditative stabilization faculty, and wisdom faculty—are not incomplete. They are good people. They do not become dishonorable people.”

50.14 “What, Lord, makes bodhisattva great beings good people, not dishonorable people?” asked Subhūti.

50.15 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “to the extent the thought of awakening of bodhisattva great beings does not waver, to that extent they are good people, not dishonorable people.

50.16 “Subhūti, you should know that bodhisattva great beings endowed with those attributes, those tokens, and those signs are irreversible from awakening.

50.17 “Furthermore, Subhūti, irreversible bodhisattva great beings paying attention in those ways to being a bodhisattva do not, as anyone at all in any way at all, make use of, or get somebody else to make use of, spells, magical formulas, medicines, or herbs to procure women by casting a spell over them. They do not do anything at all to procure women by casting a spell over them. They do not demonstrate the miracle of foretelling what will happen to a man or a woman: ‘It is going to be a boy,’ ‘It is going to be a girl,’ ‘Your family line will flourish,’<sup>558</sup> [F.192.a] ‘You are going to live long.’ And why? Subhūti, it is because those bodhisattva great beings do not see in phenomena that are empty of their own marks any causal signs, and because they do not see any causal signs, they live by a pure livelihood. Subhūti, you should know that bodhisattva great beings endowed with those attributes, those tokens, and those signs are irreversible from awakening.

50.18 “Furthermore, Subhūti, listen well and hard and pay attention, and I will speak to you about attributes, tokens, and signs—those attributes, tokens, and signs endowed with which irreversible bodhisattva great beings should know that irreversible bodhisattva great beings are irreversible from awakening.”

Venerable Subhūti said to the Lord, “Indeed I will,” and listened to the Lord accordingly.

50.19 The Lord said, “Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing this deep perfection of wisdom inseparable from paying attention in those ways to being a bodhisattva are not preoccupied with aggregates, and are not preoccupied with constituents and sense fields. Why? Because they stand in emptiness and so do not see any dharma that is inferior or superior.

50.20 “They are not preoccupied with talk about robbers. Why? Because where dharmas are empty of their own marks, they do not see a staying together or a stealing away of any dharma.

50.21 “They are not preoccupied with talk about armies. Why? Because standing in the emptiness of a basic nature,<sup>559</sup> they do not see a state of less or a state of more in any dharma.

50.22 “They are not preoccupied with talk about a battle that is underway. [F.192.b] Why? Because all dharmas abide in suchness, so they do not see attachment or rage in any dharma.

50.23 “They are not preoccupied with talk about settlements. Why? Because standing in the emptiness of all dharmas, they do not see an accumulation or nonaccumulation in any dharma.

50.24 “They are not preoccupied with talk about villages. Why? Because standing in the emptiness of space, they do not see a collection or what is not a collection in any dharma.

50.25 “They are not preoccupied with talk about market towns. Why? Because standing at the very limit of reality, they do not see an increase or reduction in any dharma.

50.26 “They are not preoccupied with talk about self, and similarly, up to they are not preoccupied with talk about one who knows and one who sees. Why? Because all dharmas are absolutely pure.

50.27 “More than anything else, inseparable from attention connected with ... up to the knowledge of all aspects, they stay preoccupied with talk about the perfection of wisdom.

50.28 “They stand in all six perfections. Practicing the perfection of giving they do not live preoccupied with miserliness; practicing the perfection of morality they do not live preoccupied with immorality; practicing the perfection of patience they do not live preoccupied with upsets; practicing the perfection of perseverance they do not live preoccupied with laziness; practicing the perfection of concentration they do not live preoccupied with distraction; and practicing the perfection of wisdom they do not live preoccupied with intellectual confusion. Living with the emptiness of all dharmas [F.193.a] they want just the Dharma, not what is not the Dharma. Involved with the dharma-constituent they do not praise a dharma that can be broken down. They accept the lord buddhas and the bodhisattva great beings as their spiritual friends; inspire Śrāvaka Vehicle and Pratyekabuddha Vehicle sons of a good family and daughters of a good family to take up, enter into, be led into, and be established in full awakening to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening; please the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas and, to behold them, are born where they are dwelling and maintaining themselves. They are born there when and as they want, and they stay with that attention day and night, that is, with the attention to the buddhas.

50.29 “And why? Subhūti, it is because, in general, bodhisattva great beings irreversible from awakening produce attention associated with the desire realm, stand on the ten wholesome actions, and are born in those buddhafiels where the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas have manifested and are dwelling and maintaining themselves; they produce the first concentration, up to become absorbed in the station of neither perception nor nonperception absorption; and they are born in those buddhafiels where the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas have manifested and are dwelling and maintaining themselves. Subhūti, you should know that bodhisattva great beings endowed with those attributes, those tokens, and those signs are irreversible from awakening.

50.30 “Furthermore, Subhūti, irreversible bodhisattva great beings practicing this perfection of wisdom and standing in inner emptiness, up to standing in the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature; and standing in the applications [F.193.b] of mindfulness, and similarly, connect this with each, up to standing in the emptiness, signless, and wishless gateways to liberation do not harbor any doubt about whether ‘I am irreversible from awakening,’ or ‘I am not irreversible from awakening.’ They are not unsure about their level. And why? Because they do not see even a mere tiny dharma that is irreversible or that is not irreversible. For example, Subhūti, those standing at the level of the result of stream enterer are not unsure and do not harbor any doubt about their own level. Similarly, connect this with each, up to those standing at the buddha level are not unsure and do not harbor any doubt. Similarly, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings standing on their own level are not unsure and do not harbor any doubt about it either. Standing on that irreversible level they purify a buddhafiels, bring beings to maturity, comprehend whatever works of Māra come up, do not come under the control of the works of Māra, and, having comprehended all the works of Māra, pulverize them to bits. To illustrate, Subhūti, those who commit an inexpressible sin do not separate from the thought of that inexpressible sin up until death. The thought of their inexpressible sin haunts them and they cannot shake themselves free of the thought of the inexpressible sin in any way at all. They are obsessed with the thought up until they die. Similarly, Subhūti, with irreversible bodhisattva great beings' irreversible thought—it cannot be differentiated or shaken, and the world with its gods, humans, and asuras cannot turn it back. And why? Because with that irreversible thought they have gone beyond the world with its gods, humans, and asuras and entered into the flawlessness that is a perfect state. They are stationed [F.194.a] on their own level and, with perfect control over the clairvoyances, purify a buddhafield, bring beings to perfection, and pass on from buddhafield to buddhafield to behold, salute, and hear the doctrine from the lord buddhas there. They generate wholesome roots from those lord buddhas in those buddhafields, make inquiries of those lord buddhas, and, questioning them, serve them.

50.31 “Subhūti, the bodhisattva great beings standing like that comprehend whatever works of Māra come up, do not come under the control of whatever works of Māra come up, and purify<sup>560</sup> those works of Māra at the very limit of reality with skillful means. They are not uncertain and harbor no doubt about their own level. And why? Because they have no uncertainty about the very limit of reality, and they do not conceive of the very limit of reality as one or two. Because of such an understanding, they do not produce a thought at the śrāvaka level or the pratyekabuddha level even after returning back to a life. And why? Subhūti, it is because bodhisattva great beings do not see in dharmas that are empty of their own marks any dharma at all that is produced, or stops, or is defilement, or purification. Subhūti, even after returning back to a life, those bodhisattva great beings do not think, ‘I will not fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening’; rather, they think, ‘There is no doubt about it, I will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.’<sup>561</sup> And why? Subhūti, it is because unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening is empty of its own mark. Subhūti, the bodhisattva great beings [F.194.b] thus stand on their own level, and on their own level they do not place their trust in others; on their own level they cannot be crushed. And why? Subhūti, it is because irreversible bodhisattva great beings standing like that are endowed with knowledge that cannot be stolen.

- 50.32 “Subhūti, if Māra the wicked one disguised in the form of a buddha comes into the presence of irreversible bodhisattva great beings and says, ‘You should gain the state of a worthy one right here. Your unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening has not been prophesied. You have not even gained that forbearance for the nonproduction of dharmas on account of which those tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas would prophesy your unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. You do not have the attributes, the tokens, or the signs—those attributes, tokens, and signs, endowed with which your unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening would be prophesied.’ Subhūti, if bodhisattva great beings hear those words but still are not cowed, do not tense up, and if their state of mind is not altered, if their minds do not become terrified, then, Subhūti, those bodhisattva great beings should know, ‘Those tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas have prophesied my unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.’ Why? It is because of knowing, ‘I am endowed with those dharmas on account of which a bodhisattva great being’s unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening would be prophesied.’
- 50.33 “Subhūti, Māra the wicked one disguised in the form of a buddha comes into the presence of irreversible bodhisattva great beings and says, ‘Your unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening has not been prophesied. You are destined [F.195.a] for the śrāvaka level or pratyekabuddha level.’ Even so, Subhūti, if those bodhisattva great beings still think, ‘Hey! This is Māra or a person possessed by Māra disguised in the form of a buddha who has come. The tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete Buddha does not inspire bodhisattva great beings to take up the śrāvaka level or the pratyekabuddha level,’ then, Subhūti, those bodhisattva great beings should know that they have been prophesied.
- 50.34 “Subhūti, Māra the wicked one disguised in the form of a buddha comes into the presence of irreversible bodhisattva great beings reading aloud and reciting the expanded class of sūtras from memory and says, ‘Those sūtras you are occupying yourself with are not the sūtras taught by the buddhas and śrāvakas, they are taught by Māra.’ Even so, if those bodhisattva great beings know him, thinking, ‘Hey! This is Māra or a person possessed by Māra separating me<sup>562</sup> from unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening,’ then, Subhūti, those bodhisattva great beings should know that those past tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas have prophesied their unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, and those bodhisattva great beings should know that they are standing on the irreversible level. Why? Subhūti, it is because they have those attributes, tokens, and signs of the

- bodhisattva great beings irreversible from awakening. Subhūti, you should know that bodhisattva great beings endowed with those attributes, those tokens, and those signs are irreversible.
- 50.35 “Furthermore, Subhūti, irreversible bodhisattva great beings practicing this perfection of wisdom [F.195.b] will give up even themselves, give up even their lives to look after the doctrine.
- 50.36 “Subhūti, those bodhisattva great beings make an effort to look after the good doctrine in such a way as to look after the doctrine of past, future, and present lord buddhas. Why? Because they think, ‘If I look after the good doctrine it becomes an act of worship of the past, future, and present lord buddhas. I will be looking after the good doctrine of the past, future, and present buddhas as well.’
- 50.37 “What is the good doctrine for the sake of which they give up even themselves? Here it is the doctrine that the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete Buddha teaches, that ‘all dharmas are empty.’ It is the one that certain fools reject and argue against, saying, ‘That is not the Dharma, that is not the Vinaya, that is not the Teacher’s Doctrine.’ Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings will give up even themselves for the sake of that doctrine.
- 50.38 “Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should train in that as follows. They should train, thinking, ‘When the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas appear in the future, I will be included among their number. It has been prophesied of me, too, that I will be there. That doctrine for the sake of which I would give up even myself and would give up even my life is my doctrine too.’ Seeing that reality, Subhūti, forces the bodhisattva great beings to give up even themselves for the sake of the good doctrine. Subhūti, you should know that bodhisattva great beings endowed with those attributes, those tokens, and those signs are irreversible from awakening.
- 50.39 “Furthermore, Subhūti, irreversible bodhisattva great beings [F.196.a] are not unsure and do not harbor doubts about the Dharma teaching of the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas. They look after everything those lord buddhas have said, and having thus taken it up, those teachings are not lost. And why? Because they have obtained the dhāraṇīs.”
- 50.40 Then venerable Subhūti asked the Lord, “Lord, on account of which dhāraṇī bodhisattva great beings have obtained are the sūtras spoken by the tathāgatas not lost?”
- 50.41 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “because they have obtained the dhāraṇī for bearing the sūtras spoken by the tathāgatas in mind, they are not lost.”
- 50.42 “Lord, is it only the sūtras spoken by the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas that they do not harbor doubts about, and not the ones śrāvakas have spoken, or the gods have spoken, or the nāgas have spoken, or the yakṣas have spoken, or the gandharvas have spoken, or the asuras have spoken, or the garuḍas have spoken, or the kinnaras have spoken, or the mahoragas have spoken?” asked Subhūti.

50.43 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “whatever the sound, conventional term, and voice, in every case the bodhisattva great beings are not unsure and do not harbor doubts about it. And why? Subhūti, it is because they have obtained a dhāraṇī. Subhūti, you should know that bodhisattva great beings endowed with those attributes, [F.196.b] those tokens, and those signs are irreversible from awakening.”

50.44 This was the fiftieth chapter, “Teaching the Signs of Irreversibility,” of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.” [B38]

51.

CHAPTER 51: SKILLFUL MEANS

51.1 The Lord having said this, venerable Subhūti said to him, “Lord, bodhisattva great beings irreversible from awakening are endowed with tremendous good qualities. Lord, irreversible bodhisattva great beings are endowed with infinite good qualities. Lord, irreversible bodhisattva great beings are endowed with immeasurable good qualities.”

51.2 “Exactly so, Subhūti, exactly so!” replied the Lord. “Irreversible bodhisattva great beings are endowed with tremendous good qualities. Subhūti, irreversible bodhisattva great beings are endowed with infinite good qualities. Subhūti, irreversible bodhisattva great beings are endowed with immeasurable good qualities. And why? It is because they have gained a limitless and boundless knowledge not shared in common with śrāvakas or pratyekabuddhas. Standing in that knowledge, irreversible bodhisattva great beings accomplish the detailed and thorough knowledges. Though questioned by the world with its gods, humans, and asuras, their responses with the detailed and thorough knowledges can never be exhausted.”

51.3 Then venerable Subhūti said to the Lord, “Lord, the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete Buddha has well sorted out those attributes, [F.197.a] those tokens, and those signs on account of which bodhisattva great beings are irreversible from awakening. Engaged as you are in the exposition of those attributes, tokens, and signs of irreversible bodhisattva great beings for as many eons as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River, Lord, would that you might also well expound those deep places standing in which bodhisattva great beings practicing the six perfections complete the four applications of mindfulness, up to complete the knowledge of all aspects.”

51.4 Venerable Subhūti having made this request, the Lord said to him, “Excellent, Subhūti, excellent. It is excellent, Subhūti, that you have it in mind to ask about those deep, deep places for the sake of the irreversible bodhisattva great beings.

- 51.5 “Subhūti, deep place is a term for emptiness, the signless, the wishless, the absence of occasioning anything, nonproduction, freedom from greed, cessation, nirvāṇa, peace, suchness, the very limit of reality, and the dharma-constituent. Subhūti, those deep places have come to be words for nirvāṇa.”
- 51.6 “Lord, are they words only for nirvāṇa or are they, Lord, words for all dharmas?” asked Subhūti.
- 51.7 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “that—namely ‘deep, deep’—is a term for all dharmas. And why? Subhūti, it is because form is deep. Subhūti, feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are deep. [F.197.b] Subhūti, the eyes are also deep. Subhūti, similarly, connect this with each, up to the thinking mind is deep, up to Subhūti, awakening is deep. And why, Subhūti, is form deep? Just as the suchness of form is deep, so too is form deep; just as the suchness of feeling ... perception..., volitional factors..., and consciousness is deep, so too is consciousness deep. Subhūti, similarly, connect this with each, up to Subhūti, just as the suchness of awakening is deep, so too is awakening deep.”
- 51.8 “Lord, what is the suchness of form like, and what is the suchness of ... up to awakening like?” asked Subhūti.
- 51.9 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “there is no form in the suchness of form, and there is no suchness of form other than form. The suchness of form is like that. Subhūti, there is no..., up to consciousness in the suchness of consciousness, and there is no suchness of consciousness other than consciousness. The suchness of consciousness is like that. There is no..., up to awakening in the suchness of awakening, and there is no suchness of awakening other than awakening. The suchness of awakening is like that.”
- 51.10 The Lord having said this, venerable Subhūti said to him, “Lord, it is amazing the extent to which with a simple method irreversible bodhisattva great beings have been made to turn back from form, and nirvāṇa has been pointed out; they have been made to turn back from feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness, and nirvāṇa has been pointed out; and they have been made to turn back from all grasping at ordinary and extraordinary, shared in common and not shared in common, with outflows and without outflows, and nirvāṇa has been pointed out.”
- 51.11 Venerable Subhūti having said this, the Lord said to him, “Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings [F.198.a] think about these deep, deep places connected with the perfection of wisdom, weigh and ponder them, thinking, ‘I must stand like that in the perfection of wisdom as it has been taught; I must train like that in the perfection of wisdom as it has been taught,’ those bodhisattva great beings, Subhūti, practicing the perfection of wisdom as it has been taught like that, meditating like that, reflecting deeply on it like that, applying themselves like that, trying like that, making an effort like that, with just a single production of the thought appropriate infinite, countless wholesome roots without measure and stop saṃsāra for an immeasurable eon. Since that is the case, what need is there to say more about those who have an unadulterated practice of the perfection of wisdom and remain with their attention connected with awakening?

51.12 “To illustrate, Subhūti, say there is a man with a strong libido and a fertile imagination who has set up a date with an outstanding, beautiful, good-looking woman, but that woman is under somebody else’s protection so she cannot get out of her home. What do you think, Subhūti? With what will that man’s imagination be preoccupied?”

51.13 “Lord,” said Subhūti, “that man’s imagination will be preoccupied with that woman, thinking, ‘Will she not come? When she has come then I am going to lie down together with her. I am going to get her to come back again and have sex with her.’ ”

51.14 “What do you think, Subhūti,” asked the Lord, “how many times would that man imagine her during the passing of a day or a night?”

51.15 “During the passing of a day or a night that man would imagine her a lot, Lord; a lot, Sugata,” replied Subhūti. [F.198.b]

51.16 “Subhūti,” continued the Lord, “for as many times as that man imagines her during the passing of a day and night, for that many eons will saṃsāra be stopped and put an end to by bodhisattva great beings training in and reflecting deeply on this deep perfection of wisdom as it has been taught, bodhisattvas who endeavor at whatever will stop those faults—those faults on account of which bodhisattva great beings turn back from unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

51.17 “Subhūti, even were you to fill up as many world systems as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River with the wholesome roots appropriated in a single day by a bodhisattva great being thus preoccupied with and dwelling in the dwelling of this deep perfection of wisdom as it has been taught, it still would not approach what remains of those wholesome roots even by a hundredth part, or by a thousandth part, or by a hundred thousandth part; it would not stand up to any number, or fraction, or counting, or example, or comparison.

51.18 “Furthermore, Subhūti, if that bodhisattva great being separated from the perfection of wisdom were to give as many gifts as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River to the Three Jewels—the Buddha Jewel, Dharma Jewel, and Saṅgha Jewel—what do you think, Subhūti? Based on that would that bodhisattva great being create a lot of merit?”

“A lot, Lord; a lot, Sugata, an infinite, incalculable, immeasurable amount,” replied Subhūti.

51.19 “Subhūti,” said the Lord, “the bodhisattva great beings who make an effort at this perfection of wisdom as it has been taught create even more merit than that. And why? Subhūti, it is because just that is the vehicle of the bodhisattva great beings, [F.199.a] and in that vehicle they will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

51.20 “Furthermore, Subhūti, if that bodhisattva great being separated<sup>563</sup> from the perfection of wisdom remained for as many eons as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River giving gifts to the stream enterers; giving gifts to the once-returners, non-returners, and worthy ones; giving gifts to the pratyekabuddhas; and giving gifts to the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfect complete buddhas, what do you think, Subhūti? Based on that would that bodhisattva great being create a lot of merit?”

51.21 “Subhūti,” said the Lord, “a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who makes an effort at this deep perfection of wisdom as it has been taught creates even more merit than that. And why? Subhūti, it is because, having practiced this perfection, bodhisattva great beings pass beyond the level of śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas, enter into the secure state of a bodhisattva, and will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

51.22 “What do you think, Subhūti, if a bodhisattva great being separated from the perfection of wisdom remaining for as many eons as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River were to give gifts, guard morality, cultivate patience, make an effort at perseverance, become absorbed in concentration, and cultivate wisdom, Subhūti, based on that would that bodhisattva great being create a lot of merit?” [F.199.b]

“A lot, Lord; a lot, Sugata,” replied Subhūti.

51.23 “Subhūti,” said the Lord, “a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who remains for one single day in this deep perfection of wisdom as it has been taught, giving gifts, guarding morality, cultivating patience, making an effort at perseverance, becoming absorbed in concentration, and cultivating wisdom, creates even more merit than that. And why? Subhūti, it is because this perfection of wisdom is the mother of the bodhisattva great beings; this perfection of wisdom gives birth to the bodhisattva great beings; and because, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings dwelling in this perfection of wisdom complete all the buddhadharmas.

51.24 “What do you think, Subhūti, if a bodhisattva great being separated from the perfection of wisdom remaining for as many eons as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River were to give the gift of Dharma, Subhūti, based on that would that bodhisattva great being create a lot of merit?”

“A lot, Lord; a lot, Sugata,” replied Subhūti.

51.25 “Subhūti,” said the Lord, “a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who remains for one single day in this deep perfection of wisdom as it has been taught, giving the gift of Dharma, creates even more merit than that. And why? Subhūti, it is because that bodhisattva great being separated from the perfection of wisdom is separated from the knowledge of all aspects, while that bodhisattva great being inseparable from the perfection of wisdom is inseparable from [F.200.a] the knowledge of all aspects. Therefore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings who want to fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening should not be separated from the perfection of wisdom.

51.26 “What do you think, Subhūti, if a bodhisattva great being separated from the perfection of wisdom were to have made an effort at the four applications of mindfulness, and were to have made an effort at the emptiness meditative stabilization, signless meditative stabilization, and wishless meditative stabilization for as many eons as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River, Subhūti, based on that would that a son of a good family or daughter of a good family create a lot of merit?”

51.27 “Subhūti,” said the Lord, “a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who has made an effort at this deep perfection of wisdom as it has been taught, at the four applications of mindfulness, up to at the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha for one single day creates even more merit than that. And why? Subhūti, it is because it is impossible, there is no chance that a bodhisattva great being who is inseparable from the perfection of wisdom turns back<sup>564</sup> from the knowledge of all aspects—that is not a possibility. But it is possible, there is a chance, Subhūti, that a bodhisattva great being who is separated from the perfection of wisdom turns back from the knowledge of all aspects—that is a possibility.

51.28 “Subhūti, if a bodhisattva great being separated from the perfection of wisdom were to remain for as many eons as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River [F.200.b] dedicating the gift of material possessions, the gift of Dharma, and the attention associated with inward absorption to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening—what do you think, Subhūti? Based on that would that son of a good family or daughter of a good family create a lot of merit?”

51.29 “Subhūti,” said the Lord, “if a son of a good family or daughter of a good family remaining for one single day in this deep perfection of wisdom were to dedicate the gift of material possessions, the gift of Dharma, the perfection of wisdom, and those attentions associated with inward absorption to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening it would create even more merit than that. And why? Subhūti, it is because dedication with this—that is, the perfection of wisdom—is the ultimate dedication, while a dedication without the perfection of wisdom is not a dedication. Therefore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings who want to fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening should become skilled in dedication with the perfection of wisdom.

51.30 “Subhūti, if a certain son of a good family or daughter of a good family separated from the perfection of wisdom were to remain for as many eons as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River rejoicing in all the wholesome roots, as many as there are, of past, future, and present lord buddhas together with their śrāvaka saṅghas, dedicating them to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening—what do you think, Subhūti? Based on that would that a son of a good family or daughter of a good family create a lot of merit?” [F.201.a]

“A lot, Lord; a lot, Sugata,” replied Subhūti.

51.31 “Subhūti,” said the Lord, “if a son of a good family or daughter of a good family remaining for one single day in this deep perfection of wisdom as it has been taught were to dedicate those wholesome roots to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening it would create even more merit than that. Therefore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings who want to fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening should become skilled in dedication with the perfection of wisdom.”

51.32 The Lord having said this, venerable Subhūti inquired of him, “Lord, the Lord has said, ‘Whatever merit has been accumulated, it is all imaginary,’ so how will a son of a good family or daughter of a good family create a lot of merit? Lord, since what has been accumulated does not exist, they will not be able to enter into the right view and the secure state of a bodhisattva, reach the result of stream enterer, up to or fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.”

51.33 “Exactly so, Subhūti, exactly so!” said the Lord. “Since whatever has been accumulated does not exist, they will not be able to enter into the right view and the secure state of a bodhisattva, reach the result of stream enterer, up to or fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. Subhūti, what the bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom have accumulated appears as just empty, appears as just in vain, appears to just ring hollow, appears to be just pointless. And why? Subhūti, it is because bodhisattva great beings have trained well in inner emptiness, [F.201.b] and similarly, connect this with each, up to have trained well in the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature. Subhūti, to the extent here that bodhisattva great beings stand in emptiness examining those accumulations of merit, to that extent they are inseparable from the perfection of wisdom.

Subhūti, to the extent that bodhisattva great beings are inseparable from the perfection of wisdom, to that extent they create incalculable, infinite, immeasurable merit.”

51.34 “What are the specific features of incalculable, infinite, and immeasurable, and what makes them different?” asked Subhūti.

51.35 The Lord said, “The incalculable is that which has no enumeration, that which you cannot count as a calculable element or an incalculable element. The infinite is that of which a measure in past, future, and present phenomena cannot be apprehended. The immeasurable is that of which you cannot take a measurement.”

51.36 “Lord, would there also be a way such that form would also be incalculable, infinite, and immeasurable; a way such that feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness would also be incalculable, infinite, and immeasurable?”

51.37 “Subhūti,” said the Lord, “there would also be a way such that form would also be incalculable, infinite, and immeasurable; a way such that feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness would also be incalculable, infinite, and immeasurable.”

51.38 “Lord, in what way would form also be incalculable, infinite, [F.202.a] and immeasurable, and would feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness also be incalculable, infinite, and immeasurable?” asked Subhūti.

51.39 “Subhūti,” said the Lord, “given that form is empty, it is incalculable, infinite, and immeasurable; given that feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are empty, they are incalculable, infinite, and immeasurable.”

51.40 “Lord, is it that just that form is empty, but all phenomena are not also empty like that? Is it just that feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are empty, but all phenomena are not also empty like that?”

51.41 “Subhūti, what do you think? Did I not explain that all phenomena are empty?” the Lord asked in return.

51.42 Subhūti said, “Lord, the Tathāgata has explained, ‘All phenomena are empty,’ and Lord, that which is empty is also inexhaustible; it is also incalculable, it is also infinite, and it is also immeasurable. In emptiness you cannot get at a number, you also cannot get at a size, and you cannot get at a measure either. Since that is the case, Lord, you cannot get at a meaning or a word that makes these phenomena different.”

51.43 “Exactly so, Subhūti, exactly so!” said the Lord. “You cannot get at a meaning or a word that makes these phenomena different. Subhūti, it is inexpressible. The Tathāgata expresses it as inexhaustible, or incalculable, or infinite, or immeasurable, or empty, or signless, or wishless, [F.202.b] or not

occasioning anything, or nonproduction, or free from greed, or a cessation, or nirvāṇa; and those from inexhaustible, up to nirvāṇa are an exposition in harmony with what causes a tathāgata's teaching."<sup>565</sup>

51.44 The Lord having said this, venerable Subhūti said to him, "Lord, it is amazing the extent to which the Tathāgata has expounded the true dharmic nature of dharmas, even though the true nature of dharmas is inexpressible. Lord, the way I understand the meaning of what you, Lord, have said is that all phenomena are simply inexpressible."

51.45 "Exactly so, Subhūti, exactly so!" said the Lord. "Subhūti, all phenomena are simply inexpressible, and that inexpressibility of all phenomena, Subhūti, is emptiness, and even emptiness cannot be expressed."

51.46 "Lord, does an inexpressible reality know increase or decrease?" asked Subhūti.

"Subhūti, an inexpressible reality does not know increase or decrease," replied the Lord.

51.47 "Lord," said Subhūti, "if an inexpressible reality does not increase or decrease, the perfection of giving, Lord, will not increase or decrease. And similarly, up to the perfection of wisdom, Lord, will not increase or decrease, the four applications of mindfulness will not increase or decrease, up to the eightfold noble path will not increase or decrease, the gateways to liberation will not increase [F.203.a] or decrease, the eight deliverances will not increase or decrease, the nine serial absorptions, ten tathāgata powers, four fearlessnesses, and four detailed and thorough knowledges will not increase or decrease, and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha will not increase or decrease. Lord, if the six perfections, up to four detailed and thorough knowledges, and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha thus do not increase or decrease, even the knowledge of all aspects will not come with the good fortune of fully awakening to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening either."

51.48 "Exactly so, Subhūti, exactly so!" said the Lord. "Subhūti, an inexpressible reality does not increase or decrease. Subhūti, if bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom, cultivating the perfection of wisdom, making an effort at the perfection of wisdom with skillful means do not think, 'I am improving because of the perfection of wisdom, up to I am improving because of the perfection of giving,' but rather, thinking, 'Whatever this perfection of giving may be, it is just words'—if they practice the perfection of giving dedicating that attention, those productions of the thought, and also those wholesome roots to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening they will make a dedication just like unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. Similarly, connect this with each, up to if they practice the perfection of wisdom dedicating that attention, [F.203.b] those productions of the thought, and also those wholesome roots to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening they will make a dedication just like unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.”

51.49 Then venerable Subhūti asked the Lord, “Lord, what is unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening?”

51.50 “As the suchness of all phenomena is, so too is unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening,” replied the Lord.

51.51 “What is the suchness of all phenomena, the unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening?” asked Subhūti.

51.52 The Lord said, “The suchness of form, up to the suchness of nirvāṇa is unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening and it does not increase, nor does it decrease there. Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings inseparable from the perfection of wisdom constantly, time and again abiding there, do not see any dharma increase or decrease. Therefore, Subhūti, an inexpressible reality does not increase or decrease, and similarly, Subhūti, the perfection of giving also does not increase or decrease, up to the perfection of wisdom also does not increase or decrease. Similarly, connect this with each, up to the four detailed and thorough knowledges also do not increase or decrease. Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should practice the perfection of wisdom like that, by way of no increase or decrease.”

51.53 Subhūti then asked, “Lord, do bodhisattva great beings fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening because of the first production of the thought, or do they fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening [F.204.a] because of a later production of the thought? Lord, if you say that bodhisattva great beings fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening because of the first production of the thought, that first production of the thought will not have been fully put together with the later production of the thought, and the later production of the thought will not have been fully put together with the first production of the thought. In that case, Lord, given that the mind<sup>566</sup> and mental factors—the dharmas—will not have been fully put together, how will wholesome roots be amassed? If wholesome roots have not been amassed, it is not possible to fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.”

51.54 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “here certain learned persons understand the meaning of an explanation through an illustration, so, in order that you will understand this—namely, the meaning of this explanation—I will furnish an illustration. What do you think, Subhūti? When a wick is being lit up by the flame of an oil lamp, is that wick burned up by encountering the first tongue of fire or is that wick burned up by encountering a later tongue of fire?”

- 51.55 “Lord,” replied Subhūti, “that wick is not burned up by encountering the first tongue of fire, and, Lord, that wick is not burned up independent of that first tongue of fire. Lord, that wick is not burned up by encountering a later tongue of fire, and, Lord, that wick is not burned up independent of that later tongue of fire.”
- 51.56 “Subhūti, what do you think, does that wick get burned up or not get burned up?” asked the Lord.
“Lord, it gets burned up. Sugata, it gets burned up,” replied Subhūti.
- 51.57 “Similarly, Subhūti,” said the Lord, “even though bodhisattva great beings do not fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, [F.204.b] complete awakening because of the first production of the thought, bodhisattva great beings do not fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening independent of the first production of the thought either. And even though bodhisattva great beings do not fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening because of a later production of the thought, bodhisattva great beings do not fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening independent of a later production of the thought either. But still, it is not that bodhisattva great beings do not fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. Rather, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom, starting from the first production of the thought, having completed up to the tenth level, fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.”
- 51.58 “Lord, bodhisattva great beings, having completed all the ten levels, fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening?” asked Subhūti.
- 51.59 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “bodhisattva great beings, having completed the Śuklavipaśyanā level, fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. Bodhisattva great beings, having completed the Gotra level, Aṣṭamaka level, Darśana level, Tanū level, Vītarāga level, and Kṛtāvin level, fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. Bodhisattva great beings, having completed the Pratyekabuddha level, fully awaken to unsurpassed, [F.205.a] perfect, complete awakening. Bodhisattva great beings, having completed the Bodhisattva level, fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, and bodhisattva great beings, having completed the Buddha level, fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. There, when bodhisattva great beings train on all ten levels, they do not fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening because of the first production of the thought, but they do not fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening independent of the first production of the thought either. They do not because of a later production of the thought fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, and they do not do so independent of a later production of the thought either. But still bodhisattva great beings fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.”

51.60 “Lord,” said Subhūti, “even though it is not because of the first production of the thought, still bodhisattva great beings do not fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening independent of the first production of the thought either. So too, Lord, even though it is not because of a later production of the thought, still bodhisattva great beings do not fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening independent of a later production of the thought either. Lord, this dependent origination where bodhisattva great beings fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening is deep.”

51.61 “Subhūti, what do you think, will that thought which has stopped be produced again?” asked the Lord. [F.205.b]

“No it will not, Lord,” replied Subhūti.

51.62 “Subhūti, what do you think, is that thought which has been produced subject to stopping?” he asked.

“It is subject to stopping, Lord; it is subject to stopping, Sugata.”

51.63 “Subhūti, what do you think, will that which is subject to stopping stop?”

“No it will not, Lord.”

51.64 “Subhūti, what do you think, will it remain just as suchness does?”

“It will remain just as suchness does, Lord.”

51.65 “Subhūti, if it will remain just as suchness does, will it not be unmoved?”

“No it will not, Lord.”

51.66 “Subhūti, what do you think, is suchness deep?”

“It is deep, Lord.”

51.67 “Subhūti, what do you think, is that thought suchness?”

“It is not, Lord.”

51.68 “Subhūti, what do you think, is that thought other than suchness?”

“It is not, Lord.”

51.69 “Subhūti, what do you think, is thought in suchness?”

“It is not, Lord.”

51.70 “Subhūti, what do you think, is suchness in thought?”

“It is not, Lord.”

51.71 “Subhūti, what do you think, does suchness see suchness?”

“It does not, Lord.”

51.72 “Subhūti, what do you think, is someone practicing like that practicing the deep perfection of wisdom?”

“Lord, [F.206.a] someone practicing like that is practicing the deep perfection of wisdom.”

51.73 “Subhūti, what do you think, is someone practicing like that practicing anything?”

“Lord, someone practicing like that is not practicing anything at all. And why? Lord, it is because those habitual ideas<sup>567</sup> do not occur in bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom and abiding in suchness. They do not have habitual ideas. And why? Lord, it is because suchness does not have habitual ideas about anything, and nobody has habitual ideas about anything there.”

51.74 Venerable Subhūti having said that, the Lord asked him further, “Subhūti, where do bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom practice?”

51.75 “Lord, they practice in the ultimate where there are no habitual dualistic ideas,” he replied.

51.76 “Subhūti, what do you think, do those who practice the ultimate have anything to do with habitual ideas? Do they have anything to do with causal signs?”

“They do not, Lord.”

51.77 “Subhūti, what do you think, has the perception of a causal sign disintegrated because of them?”<sup>568</sup>

“It has not, Lord,” he replied.

51.78 “Well then, Subhūti, how have bodhisattva great beings’ perceptions of a causal sign disintegrated?”

Having been asked that, venerable Subhūti responded to the Lord, “Lord, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom do not apply themselves with the thought, ‘I will meditate on a causal sign,’ or ‘I will investigate the absence of a causal sign.’<sup>569</sup> Lord, [F.206.b] bodhisattva great beings practicing this perfection of wisdom do not fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening up until the ten tathāgata powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, great love, great compassion, up to and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha are completed. Lord, that is the bodhisattva great beings’ skillful means. With those skillful means they do not cultivate any dharma and they do not cause any to disintegrate either. Why? Lord, it is because bodhisattva great beings realize all dharmas are empty of their own marks. Now, standing in that emptiness of their own marks, they become absorbed for the sake of beings in the three meditative stabilizations, meditative stabilizations that bring beings to maturity.

51.79 “How, Lord, when they do so, will bodhisattva great beings become absorbed for the sake of beings in the three meditative stabilizations?”

51.80       “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “here bodhisattva great beings standing in the three meditative stabilizations connect beings who practice with wishes to wishlessness; the bodhisattvas establish beings who practice with thought constructions in emptiness; and they establish beings who practice with causal signs in signlessness. Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom thus bring beings to maturity with those three meditative stabilizations.”

51.81       This was the fifty-first chapter, “Skillful Means,” of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.”

52.

CHAPTER 52: COMPLETION OF MEANS

- 52.1 Then venerable Śāriputra asked venerable Subhūti, [F.207.a] “Venerable Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings have become absorbed in the three meditative stabilizations on emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness in a dream, do they improve on account of the perfection of wisdom?”
- 52.2 Venerable Śāriputra having asked that, venerable Subhūti said to him, “Venerable Śāriputra, if they improve on account of having meditated during the day, they improve in a dream like that as well. And why? Venerable Śāriputra, it is because a dream and the daytime are undifferentiated. Venerable Śāriputra, if bodhisattva great beings who practice meditation on the perfection of wisdom during the daytime have a meditation on the perfection of wisdom, then there is also a meditation on the perfection of wisdom in bodhisattva great beings’ dreams as well.”
- 52.3 Venerable Subhūti having said that, venerable Śāriputra then asked him, “Venerable Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings have made some karma in a dream is there an accumulation or diminution<sup>570</sup> in their karma?”
- 52.4 “Venerable Śāriputra,” replied Subhūti, “the Lord has said that all phenomena are like a dream, so there is no accumulation or diminution there. And why? Because you cannot apprehend any phenomenon in a dream that is accumulated or diminished.”
- 52.5 “Venerable Subhūti, if it is thought about in a certain way, on waking there is also an accumulation or reduction in one’s karma,” said Śāriputra.
- 52.6 Venerable Subhūti asked venerable Śāriputra in return, “Venerable Śāriputra, what would you say about the karma of someone who committed a murder during the day, and someone who dreamed about committing the murder and on waking thought, ‘I killed him. It is excellent that I killed him’?” [F.207.b]
- 52.7 “Venerable Subhūti,” said Śāriputra, “karma does not happen without an objective support; intention does not happen without an objective support. Karma only happens with an objective support, and intention only happens with an objective support.”

52.8 “Exactly so, Venerable Śāriputra, exactly so!” said Subhūti. “Karma does not happen without an objective support; intention does not happen without an objective support. Venerable Śāriputra, karma only happens with an objective support, not without an objective support, and intention only happens with an objective support, not without an objective support. The intellect engages with the seen, the heard, the thought—something one has been aware of; the intellect does not engage with the unseen, the unheard, the unthought—a thing of which one has not been conscious. There, one intellectual act gets hold of defilement. Another intellectual act gets hold of purification. Therefore, Venerable Śāriputra, karma only happens with an objective support, not without an objective support, and intention only happens with an objective support, not without an objective support.”

52.9 “Venerable Subhūti, the Lord has said ‘all karma is isolated and all intention is isolated,<sup>571</sup> so how could karma happen with an objective support, and not happen without an objective support, and how could intention happen with an objective support, and not happen without an objective support?’” asked Śāriputra.

52.10 “Venerable Śāriputra,” replied Subhūti, “ordinary beings, having made each separate one into a causal sign,<sup>572</sup> pile up karmas, so karma happens only with an objective support, not without an objective support; intention happens only with an objective support, not without an objective support.”

52.11 Venerable Subhūti having said that, venerable Śāriputra asked him, [F.208.a] “Venerable Subhūti, if bodhisattva great beings in a dream give gifts, guard morality, cultivate patience, make an effort at perseverance, become absorbed in concentration, cultivate wisdom, and have also turned over those wholesome roots to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, would they have been turned over to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening?”

52.12 “Venerable Śāriputra,” said Subhūti, “you should ask this of Maitreya, the bodhisattva great being interrupted by a single birth, prophesied by the Lord to be irreversible from awakening, who has direct witness of this. He will respond with the answer.”

52.13 Then venerable Śāriputra said to the bodhisattva great being Maitreya, “Son of a good family, the elder Subhūti has said this: ‘You should ask this of Maitreya, the bodhisattva great being interrupted by a single birth, prophesied by the Lord to be irreversible from awakening, who has direct witness of this. He will respond with the answer.’ ”

52.14 Venerable Śāriputra having said this, the bodhisattva great being Maitreya said to him, “Venerable monk Śāriputra, what do you think, will this—the designation ‘Maitreya the bodhisattva great being’—respond with the answer; or will form respond with the answer; or will feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness respond with the answer; or even will that emptiness of form respond with the answer, or will that emptiness of feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness [F.208.b] respond with the answer? They cannot do so. I see no dharma at all that responds with the answer, no answer that is the response, and no one to be responded to with an answer. I also see no dharma of which unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening has been prophesied, none by which it has been prophesied, and none the prophecy is about. All those dharmas are not two and cannot be divided into two, so I do not see those dharmas.”

52.15 Then venerable Śāriputra asked the bodhisattva great being Maitreya, “Son of a good family, have you had direct witness of those dharmas in the way you have explained them to be?”

52.16 “Venerable monk Śāriputra,” said Maitreya, “I do not directly witness those dharmas in the way I have explained them to be.”

52.17 Then it occurred to venerable Śāriputra to think, “Ah! The bodhisattva great being Maitreya has a deep wisdom, exhibited in this exposition of how he has practiced the practice of the perfection of giving, perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and perfection of wisdom—practicing these without apprehending anything.”

52.18 Then the Lord asked venerable Śāriputra, “Venerable Śāriputra, what do you think, do you see that dharma on account of which you come to be known as a worthy one?”

“Lord, I do not,” replied Śāriputra.

52.19 “Similarly, Śāriputra,” said the Lord, “it also does not occur to bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom to think, ‘This dharma has been prophesied to fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, this is the dharma that is being prophesied, and this is the dharma that will be prophesied.’ Bodhisattva great beings [F.209.a] practicing like that are practicing the perfection of wisdom.

52.20 “They are not anxious, thinking, ‘May it not be that I do not fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.’ They do fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing like that are practicing the perfection of wisdom. Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings practicing like that do not tremble, feel frightened, or become terrified, thinking, ‘May it not be that I do not fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.’ They do fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.”

- 52.21 Then venerable Subhūti asked the Lord, “Lord, how do bodhisattva great beings complete the perfection of wisdom and get close to the knowledge of all aspects?”
- 52.22 Venerable Subhūti having asked this, the Lord said to him, “Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of giving see hungry beings, or see thirsty beings, or the badly clothed, or those with threadbare shawls, or thin mats, or without any mats at all, they reflect deeply, ‘I must practice the perfection of giving such that one way or the other in my buddhafiield, when I have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, those beings will not face those disadvantages, they will not occur in any way at all, and so that in that buddhafiield those beings will have the possessions and enjoyments of the Cāturmahārājika gods, of the Trāyastriṃśa, Yāma, Tuṣita, Nirmāṇarati, and Paranirmitavaśavartin gods, the possessions and enjoyments just as they have them.’ Subhūti, bodhisattva [F.209.b] great beings practicing the perfection of giving like that complete the perfection of giving.
- 52.23 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of morality see beings who are killing, or see ... up to beings with wrong views, or see those with a short lifespan, who are ugly, have little autonomy, a lot of trouble, few enjoyments, little charisma, in a disadvantaged family, or with missing limbs, they reflect deeply, thinking, ‘One way or the other in my buddhafiield, when I have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, may those beings not have those faults, may they not occur in any way at all.’ Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing like that complete the perfection of morality.
- 52.24 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of patience see beings bearing malice toward each other, striking with sticks, stones, and weapons, threatening each other’s lives, they reflect deeply, ‘I must practice for awakening so that one way or the other in my buddhafiield, when I have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, those beings will not have those faults, they will not occur in any way at all, and so that they think all beings are like parents, think all beings are like brothers and sisters, and have loving and beneficial thoughts.’ Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing like that complete the perfection of patience [F.210.a] and get close to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.
- 52.25 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of perseverance see beings lacking in perseverance, lazy, not taking pleasure in the three vehicles, turning their backs on the three vehicles, far from entering into the Śrāvaka Vehicle, or Pratyekabuddha Vehicle, or Buddha Vehicle, they reflect deeply, ‘I must practice the perfection of perseverance so that one way or the other in my buddhafiield, when I have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, those beings will not have those faults, they will not occur in any way at all, and so that all beings will make a vigorous, stable attempt to pass into complete nirvāṇa in the Śrāvaka Vehicle, or Pratyekabuddha Vehicle, or Great Vehicle, whichever is suitable.’ Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing like that complete the perfection of perseverance and get close to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

52.26 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of concentration see beings obscured by the five obscurations—desire for sense gratification, malice, drowsiness and dozing, gross mental excitement and uneasiness, and doubt—or see those under the influence of the five obscurations, or see those separated from the first concentration, up to separated from the fourth concentration, or see those separated from love, compassion, joy, and equanimity, or from the absorption in the station of endless space, absorption in the station of endless consciousness, absorption in [F.210.b] the station of nothing-at-all, and absorption in the station of neither perception nor nonperception, they reflect deeply, ‘I must practice the perfection of concentration, I must purify a buddhafiield, I must bring beings to maturity so that one way or the other in my buddhafiield, when I have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, those beings will not have those faults, they will not occur in any way at all.’ Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing like that complete the perfection of concentration and get close to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

52.27 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom see beings who are intellectually confused or separated from ordinary and extraordinary right view, saying action has no effect, saying things exist and saying things do not exist, saying things are annihilated and saying things are eternal, they reflect deeply, ‘I must practice in such a way that I practice the six perfections, purify a buddhafiield, and bring beings to maturity so that one way or the other in my buddhafiield, when I have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, those beings will not have those faults, they will not occur in any way at all.’ Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing like that complete the perfection of wisdom and get close to the knowledge of all aspects. [F.211.a] [B39]

52.28 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practicing the six perfections see the three masses of beings—those destined for the perfect state, those destined to be wrong, and those not necessarily destined—they reflect deeply, ‘I must practice the six perfections, purify a buddhafiield, and bring beings to maturity such that one way or the other in my buddhafiield, when I have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, there will not even be words for those destined to be wrong, and those not necessarily destined; they will not occur in any way at all.' Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing like that complete the six perfections and get close to the knowledge of all aspects.

52.29 "Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practicing the six perfections see beings in the hells, and see beings in the animal world, and the world of Yama, they reflect deeply, 'I must practice the six perfections, purify a buddhafiield, and bring beings to maturity such that one way or the other in my buddhafiield, when I have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, there will not even be words for the three terrible forms of life, they will not occur in any way at all.' Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing like that complete the six perfections and get close to the knowledge of all aspects.

52.30 "Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practicing the six perfections see stumps, thorns, crevices, crevices in cliffs, precipices, [F.211.b] runoff from gutters, and pools of excrement on the face of the earth, they reflect deeply, 'I must practice the six perfections, purify a buddhafiield, and bring beings to maturity such that one way or the other in my buddhafiield, when I have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, there will not be those faults, they will not occur in any way at all, and it will be smooth like the palm of a baby's hand.' Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing like that complete the six perfections and get close to the knowledge of all aspects.

52.31 "Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practicing the six perfections see the face of the earth made of a clay without gold and silver, they reflect deeply, 'I must practice the six perfections, purify a buddhafiield, and bring beings to maturity such that one way or the other in my buddhafiield, when I have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, the face of the earth will be completely covered with golden sand.' Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing like that complete the six perfections and get close to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

52.32 "Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practicing the six perfections see beings who have become acquisitive, they reflect deeply, 'I must practice the six perfections, purify a buddhafiield, [F.212.a] and bring beings to maturity such that one way or the other in my buddhafiield, when I have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, there will be no beings who become acquisitive, they will not occur in any way at all.' Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing like that complete the six perfections and get close to the knowledge of all aspects.

- 52.33 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practicing the six perfections see the four castes (royal caste, brahmin caste, business caste, and low caste), they reflect deeply, ‘I must practice the six perfections, purify a buddhafiield, and bring beings to maturity such that one way or the other in my buddhafiield, when I have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, there will not even be words for the four castes, they will not be made known in any way at all.’ Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing like that complete the six perfections and get close to the knowledge of all aspects.
- 52.34 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practicing the six perfections see privileged, middling, and deprived beings, or see beings from low families, bad families, and good families, they reflect deeply, ‘I must practice the six perfections, purify a buddhafiield, and bring beings to maturity such that one way or the other in my buddhafiield, when I have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening beings, will not have such faults, they will not occur in any way at all.’ Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing like that complete the six perfections and get close to the knowledge of all aspects.
- 52.35 “Furthermore, [F.212.b] Subhūti, when bodhisattva great being practicing the six perfections see beings who are different colors, they reflect deeply, ‘I must practice the six perfections, purify a buddhafiield, and bring beings to maturity such that one way or the other in my buddhafiield, when I have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, beings will not be different colors; rather, beings will all stand out, be beautiful and good looking, and endowed with an excellent, clear, splendid color.’ Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing like that complete the six perfections and get close to the knowledge of all aspects.
- 52.36 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practicing the six perfections see a ruler, they reflect deeply, ‘I must practice the six perfections, purify a buddhafiield, and bring beings to maturity such that one way or the other in my buddhafiield, when I have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, no one will be designated ruler other than the Dharma king, the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete Buddha; it will not occur in any other way at all.’ Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing like that complete the six perfections and get close to the knowledge of all aspects.
- 52.37 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practicing the six perfections see beings in different forms of life, they reflect deeply, ‘I must practice the six perfections, purify a buddhafiield, [F.213.a] and bring beings to maturity such that one way or the other in my buddhafiield, when I have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, there will be no different forms of life—as beings in hell, in the animal world, the world of Yama, or as gods or humans—they will not occur in any way at all. Rather, all beings will have the same work and will be inseparable from the four applications of mindfulness, up to the four detailed and thorough knowledges.’ Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing like that complete the six perfections and get close to the knowledge of all aspects.

52.38 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practicing the six perfections see the four birthplaces of beings—birth from an egg, birth from a womb, birth from warmth and moisture, and miraculous birth—they reflect deeply, ‘I must practice the six perfections, purify a buddhafiield, and bring beings to maturity such that one way or the other in my buddhafiield, when I have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, all beings will take none other than miraculous birth, and there will be no birth from an egg, birth from a womb, or from warmth and moisture; those will not occur in any way at all.’ Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing like that complete the six perfections and get close to the knowledge of all aspects.

52.39 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practicing the six perfections see beings lacking the five clairvoyances, they reflect deeply, ‘I must practice [F.213.b] the six perfections, purify a buddhafiield, and bring beings to maturity such that one way or the other in my buddhafiield, when I have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, all beings will have the five clairvoyances.’ Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing like that complete the six perfections and get close to the knowledge of all aspects.

52.40 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practicing the six perfections see the feces and urine of beings, they reflect deeply, ‘I must practice the six perfections, purify a buddhafiield, and bring beings to maturity such that one way or the other in my buddhafiield, when I have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, all beings will come to live on joy.’ Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing like that complete the six perfections and get close to the knowledge of all aspects.

52.41 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practicing the six perfections see beings who do not radiate light, they reflect deeply, ‘I must practice the six perfections, purify a buddhafiield, and bring beings to maturity such that one way or the other in my buddhafiield, when I have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, all beings will radiate self-originated light.’ Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing like that complete the six perfections and get close to [F.214.a] the knowledge of all aspects.

- 52.42 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practicing the six perfections see the months of all beings, as well as the half-months, seasons, and the cycle of years, they reflect deeply, ‘I must practice the six perfections, purify a buddhafiield, and bring beings to maturity such that one way or the other in my buddhafiield, when I have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, there will not even be words for the months, half-months, seasons, or cycle of years of all beings.’ Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing like that complete the six perfections and get close to the knowledge of all aspects.
- 52.43 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practicing the six perfections see beings who live short lives, they reflect deeply, ‘I must practice the six perfections, purify a buddhafiield, and bring beings to maturity such that one way or the other in my buddhafiield, when I have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, all beings will have infinite life.’ Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing like that complete the six perfections and get close to the knowledge of all aspects.
- 52.44 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practicing the six perfections see beings who do not have the major marks, they reflect deeply, ‘I must practice the six perfections, purify a buddhafiield, and bring beings to maturity such that one way or the other in my buddhafiield, [F.214.b] when I have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, all beings will have the thirty-two major marks of a great person.’ Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing like that complete the six perfections and get close to the knowledge of all aspects.
- 52.45 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practicing the six perfections see beings who have not planted wholesome roots, they reflect deeply, ‘I must practice the six perfections, purify a buddhafiield, and bring beings to maturity such that one way or the other in my buddhafiield, when I have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, all beings will have planted wholesome roots, and on account of having planted those wholesome roots will remain in the presence of the lord buddhas.’ Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing like that complete the six perfections and get close to the knowledge of all aspects.
- 52.46 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practicing the six perfections see beings afflicted by disease, they reflect deeply, ‘I must practice the six perfections, purify a buddhafiield, and bring beings to maturity such that one way or the other in my buddhafiield, when I have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, all beings will not have the four diseases that come from wind disorder, bile disorder, phlegm disorder, or disorder of the three in combination.’ Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings [F.215.a] practicing like that complete the six perfections and get close to the knowledge of all aspects.

52.47 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practicing the six perfections see beings who have become afflicted by the three afflictions, they reflect deeply, ‘I must practice the six perfections, purify a buddhafiield, and bring beings to maturity such that one way or the other in my buddhafiield, when I have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, all beings will not be afflicted by the three afflictions—greed, hatred, and confusion—and all beings will be free from greed, free from hate, and free from confusion.’ Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing like that complete the six perfections and get close to the knowledge of all aspects.

52.48 Similarly, connect this with the rest at full length, just as it has been connected in the first section.<sup>573</sup>

52.49 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practicing the six perfections see beings with deficient belief, they reflect deeply, ‘I must practice the six perfections, purify a buddhafiield, and bring beings to maturity such that one way or the other in my buddhafiield, when I have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, even the words for the two vehicles—Śrāvaka Vehicle and Pratyekabuddha Vehicle—will not be made known, and all beings will come to have set out directly for the knowledge of all aspects.’

52.50 “Furthermore, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings [F.215.b] practicing the six perfections see beings with pride in being superior they reflect deeply, ‘I must practice the six perfections, purify a buddhafiield, and bring beings to maturity such that one way or the other in my buddhafiield, when I have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, even the words for pride in being superior will not be made known; rather, all beings will have no pride in being superior.’ Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing like that complete the six perfections and get close to the knowledge of all aspects.

52.51 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing the six perfections produce the thought, ‘If, in my buddhafiield, life is finite, light is finite, and the community of monks is finite, I will not, for the time being, fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. Rather, I must practice the six perfections, purify a buddhafiield, and bring beings to maturity such that one way or the other in my buddhafiield, when I have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, there will be infinite life, infinite light, and an infinite community of monks.’ Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing like that complete the six perfections and get close to the knowledge of all aspects.

52.52 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing the six perfections reflect deeply, ‘If at that time my buddhafield is a single one I will not, for the time being, [F.216.a] fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. Rather, I must practice the six perfections, purify a buddhafield, and bring beings to maturity such that when I have gained awakening, one way or the other there will be as many buddhafields as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River.’ Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing like that complete the six perfections and get close to the knowledge of all aspects.

52.53 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great being practicing the six perfections should reflect deeply, ‘Oh! Saṃsāra is long. Oh! The world of beings is limitless.’ And they should properly pay attention to this: ‘Oh! This saṃsāra is boundless like space. Oh! This world of beings is also boundless like space. Here there is nobody in saṃsāra, and there is nobody liberated either.’ Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing like that complete the six perfections and get close to the knowledge of all aspects.”

CHAPTER 53: THE PROPHECY ABOUT GAṄGADEVĪ

53.1 Then the sister Gaṅgadevī, who had joined the assembly and was seated in that very retinue, got up from her seat, adjusted her upper robe so it hung down from one shoulder, knelt down with her right knee on the ground, cupped her palms together in a gesture of supplication specifically to the Lord, bowed forward to him, and said to the Lord, “I too, Lord, I too, Sugata, will practice the six perfections well, and just like the tathāgatas, [F.216.b] worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas will look after such buddhafi elds as those taught in this perfection of wisdom.”

53.2 Then that woman took golden flowers; took silver flowers, flowers that grow on dry land, and flowers that grow in the water; took all the adornments; and took twinned muslin scarfs with a gold-like color<sup>574</sup> and strewed them specifically over the Lord. Through the power of the Lord, the moment after she had strewed all those twinned muslin scarfs and so on, they stayed there, a second story in the space right above the Lord’s head, square with four corners and four pillars, equidimensional, extremely excellent, perfectly proportioned and delightful.<sup>575</sup> That woman then made that second story into something shared in common with all beings and dedicated it to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

53.3 Then at that time the Lord, knowing the intention of that woman, smiled. And it is in the very nature of a lord buddha that when they smile, from the opening of the lord’s mouth issue forth light rays of many colors, of a variety of colors—namely, blue, yellow, red, white, reddish brown, crystalline, and silvery. Having dispersed through limitless and boundless world systems and retracted back they circle around the lord three times and disappear into the lord from the top of his head.

53.4 Venerable Ānanda then got up from his seat, adjusted his upper robe so it hung down from one shoulder, knelt down with his right knee on the ground, cupped his palms together in a gesture of supplication specifically to the Lord, bowed forward to him, and said to the Lord, “Lord, the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete [F.217.a] buddhas do not give a smile without a cause, without a condition. So why did you smile? What is the cause, what is the condition?”

53.5 Venerable Ānanda having asked this, the Lord said to him, “Ānanda, in the future during the eon called Tārakopama this sister Gaṅgadevī will become the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha called Suvarṇapuṣpa, the one with the golden flowers, and appear in the world. This, Ānanda, is this woman’s last female body. Ānanda, this sister Gaṅgadevī, having forsaken a woman’s body and acquired a man’s body, will be born in the buddhafiield of the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha Akṣobhya, the world system called Abhirati. She will live a celibate life there. Ānanda, that bodhisattva great being’s name will also be Suvarṇapuṣpa. Ānanda, that bodhisattva great being Suvarṇapuṣpa, having died there, will pass on from buddhafiield to buddhafiield and will never be separated from the lord buddhas. Just as, Ānanda, a wheel-turning emperor goes walking from palace to palace for as long as he lives but until the time of his death the soles of his feet never press upon the ground, similarly, Ānanda, the bodhisattva great being called Suvarṇapuṣpa will pass on from buddhafiield to buddhafiield until fully awakening to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, never separated from the lord buddhas.”

53.6 Then it occurred to venerable Ānanda to think, [F.217.b] “One should be aware that howsoever many bodhisattva great beings there are assembled in that buddhafiield, they will be a tathāgata assembly.”<sup>576</sup>

53.7 Then the Lord, understanding in his mind the thoughts occurring to venerable Ānanda, said to venerable Ānanda, “Ānanda, it is exactly as you are thinking! It is exactly so! One should be aware that those bodhisattva great beings will be a tathāgata assembly. Ānanda, in the buddhafiield of the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha Suvarṇapuṣpa his community of monks will be infinite. The measure of his community of monks cannot be taken by saying that there are this many śrāvakas, or there are up to a hundred śrāvakas, or there are up to a thousand śrāvakas, or there are up to a hundred thousand śrāvakas, or there are up to one hundred million śrāvakas, or there are up to a hundred one hundred million śrāvakas, or there are up to a thousand one hundred million śrāvakas, or there are up to a hundred thousand one hundred million śrāvakas, or there are up to a hundred thousand billion one hundred million śrāvakas; rather, there will be an ananta of an asaṅkhyeya of a hundred thousand billion one hundred million śrāvakas. Ānanda, in that buddhafiield where the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha Suvarṇapuṣpa will have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, those faults described in this perfection of wisdom will not exist and will not appear as anything at all, in any way at all.”

53.8 The Lord having said this, venerable Ānanda asked him, “Lord, in relation to whom did this sister plant such a wholesome root?” [F.218.a]

53.9 “Ānanda,” replied the Lord, “this sister planted such a wholesome root in relation to the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha Dīpaṃkara, and having dedicated that wholesome root to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, because she wanted unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening she strewed golden flowers on the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha Dīpaṃkara as well. Ānanda, when I strewed blue lotus flowers on the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha Dīpaṃkara because I wanted unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, the lord, the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha Dīpaṃkara, knowing I had the wholesome root, prophesied my full awakening to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. At that time this sister heard the prophecy about me and produced the thought, ‘Yes! Just as a full awakening to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening has been prophesied of this brahmin student, similarly in the future may there also be a prophecy that I too will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.’ Thus, Ānanda, did this sister first produce the thought of unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening in the presence of the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha Dīpaṃkara.”

53.10 The Lord having said this, venerable Ānanda said to him, “Lord, this sister has laid the groundwork for unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.”

53.11 Venerable Ānanda having said this, the Lord replied to him, “Exactly so! Ānanda, it is exactly as you say! This sister has laid the groundwork [F.218.b] for unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.”

53.12 This was the fifty-third chapter, “The Prophecy about Gaṅgadevī,” of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.”

actualize emptiness?”

54.4 The Lord responded, “When bodhisattva great beings contemplate emptiness furnished with the best of all aspects, they do not contemplate that they should actualize it; rather, they contemplate that they should master it. They contemplate that it is not the time it should be actualized, but rather it is the time it should be mastered. When not in actual<sup>577</sup> meditative equipoise, bodhisattva great beings attach their minds to an objective support and without letting the dharmas on the side of awakening lessen, in the meantime do not actualize the extinction of outflows. And why? Because the bodhisattva great beings are endowed with such prodigious knowledge that they remain with the dharmas on the side of awakening, understanding that it is thus the time for mastery, and it is not the time for actualization.

54.5 “Subhūti, there bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom thus understand analytically that it is the time for the perfection of giving; that it is the time for the perfection of morality, patience, perseverance, [F.219.b] concentration, and wisdom; that it is the time to cultivate the applications of mindfulness, up to that it is the time to cultivate the eightfold noble path; that it is the time to cultivate the emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness meditative stabilizations; that it is the time to acquire the ten tathāgata powers; that it is the time to acquire the four fearlessnesses and the four detailed and thorough knowledges; that it is the time to acquire great love and great compassion; and that it is not the time to actualize the result of stream enterer, up to that it is not the time to actualize the state of a worthy one; that it is not the time to actualize a pratyekabuddha’s awakening; and that it is not the time to acquire and to master all-knowledge.<sup>578</sup>

54.6 “Thus, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom master emptiness, and persisting with emptiness master signlessness and wishlessness. Persisting with signlessness and wishlessness, they cultivate the eightfold noble path but still do not actualize the result of stream enterer, up to the state of a worthy one. Similarly, connect this with they cultivate the applications of mindfulness and persist in the applications of mindfulness but still do not actualize it. Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings thus master the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, cultivate the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, and persist in the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, but still do not actualize it.

54.7 “To illustrate, Subhūti, a brave, heroic, firmly grounded, physically beautiful, handsome, good-looking [F.220.a] person endowed with the finest, clearest, most deeply imbued beautiful skin color, an expert archer holding hardened weapons<sup>579</sup> who is thoroughly established in the sixty-four vocational arts, knowing as much as can be known about all crafts and vocations, giving pleasure to and loved by many persons, gains great wealth from whatever work they undertake and with that wealth respects, reveres, honors, and worships many people. Having made them feel immense rapture, delight, joy, and happiness, for some purpose or other they lead the mothers and fathers, sons and daughters, into a hair-raising jungle terrifying to simple folk. That person, after having led them there, inspires the mothers and fathers, sons and daughters, to be fearless, saying, 'Do not be scared, do not be scared, I will quickly free you from this terrifying, scary place.' When enemies, murderers, and opponents of that person come close in that jungle, because that person has the ultimate power of wisdom, they get those mothers and fathers, sons and daughters, out of that jungle, leading them to freedom. Having reached a settlement, or market town, or city, or other spot uninjured and unharmed, they occasion a feeling of joy and mental happiness in them, but they do not poison their minds against those beings who are enemies and opponents. What is the reason for this? It is because they have expertise in all the vocational arts, so they magically produce immensely more and braver opponents with even more hardened weapons than the enemies and opponents in that jungle, getting rid of those beings who are enemies and opponents by scaring them. Then, having easily freed their parents, sons, and daughters, [F.220.b] that person lives at ease.

54.8 "Similarly, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings radiate out loving thoughts with all beings as the objective support—compassionate, joyful, and balanced thoughts with all beings as the objective support—and while doing so bodhisattva great beings in the interim do not employ a causal sign as a conventional label.<sup>580</sup> They do not actualize that signlessness meditative stabilization on account of which, were they to have actualized it, they would stand on the śrāvaka or pratyekabuddha level.

54.9 "To illustrate further, Subhūti, a winged bird glides through the air without falling to the ground, but even though it glides through the air in the sky it does not stand and take up a position there. Similarly, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings also master emptiness and practice emptiness, also master signlessness and wishlessness and make a practice of signlessness and the wishlessness, but they do not actualize those emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness meditative stabilizations on account of which, were they to have actualized them, they would fall to the śrāvaka or pratyekabuddha level before completing any of the ten tathāgata powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, great love, great compassion, or any of those infinite buddhadharmas, having practiced which they would reach the knowledge of all aspects.

- 54.10        “To illustrate further, Subhūti, a person, a powerful master archer well trained in archery, shoots an arrow far into the sky. Having shot the arrow far into the sky they again shoot with a series of other, later arrows going after the earlier, not letting them fall to earth. Those arrows do not fall to earth for as long as that person does not want them to. Then, thinking, ‘Let those arrows fall to earth,’ [F.221.a] they do not shoot a later arrow up into the sky and that leading series of arrows falls to earth. Similarly, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom assisted by skillful means do not actualize the final limit of reality for as long as the wholesome roots of unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening have not matured, but when the wholesome roots of unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening have matured, they then actualize the final limit of reality.
- 54.11        “Therefore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom should ponder the true dharmic nature of those dharmas like that.”
- 54.12        The Lord having said this, venerable Subhūti said to him, “Those who do what is difficult, Lord, are the bodhisattva great beings who train in this true nature of dharmas, train in the very limit of reality, train in suchness, train in the dharma-constituent, train in the emptiness of what transcends limits, up to<sup>581</sup> train in the emptiness of its own mark, up to train in the three gateways to liberation but do not, in the interim, fall away from unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. Lord, it is amazing! Sugata, it is amazing!”
- 54.13        “Subhūti,” said the Lord, “it is because the bodhisattva great beings do not forsake all beings and, Subhūti, because they find and produce within themselves the thought<sup>582</sup> of a bodhisattva great being, Subhūti, who has not forsaken all beings—this type of special prayer: ‘I will not forsake these ignorant beings, these beings who are deceived because they perceive nonexistent phenomena as existing.<sup>583</sup> I [F.221.b] should not forsake all those ignorant beings. I have not forsaken all beings, so I should also free all these beings caught up in nonexistent phenomena.’ When those bodhisattva great beings find and produce within themselves the emptiness meditative stabilization gateway to liberation, find and produce within themselves the signlessness meditative stabilization gateway to liberation, and find and produce within themselves the wishlessness meditative stabilization gateway to liberation, but in the interim, before reaching the knowledge of all aspects, do not actualize the very limit of reality, you should know that at that time they are endowed with skillful means.
- 54.14        “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings who want to understand analytically those deep, deep places—namely, inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature, and the four applications of mindfulness and three gateways to liberation—find and produce within themselves the thought, ‘These beings have been involved for a long time in a false apprehension of facts because of perceiving a self, perceiving a being, up to perceiving someone who knows and someone who sees, so in order to eliminate their view falsely apprehending facts I will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening and teach the Dharma.' Then when the bodhisattva great beings become absorbed in the emptiness meditative stabilization, they still do not actualize that very limit of reality on account of which, were they to have actualized it, they would have reached the result of stream enterer, up to would have reached a pratyekabuddha's awakening. Subhūti, when the bodhisattva great beings become absorbed in the signlessness meditative stabilization and wishlessness meditative stabilization gateways to liberation, the bodhisattva great beings meditate and become absorbed [F.222.a] but still do not actualize the very limit of reality on account of which, were they to have actualized it, they would have reached the result of stream enterer, up to would have reached the state of a worthy one and a pratyekabuddha's awakening.

54.15 "Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing like that are endowed with those wholesome roots and do not actualize the very limit of reality, but still on account of the production of that thought they do not fall away from the four concentrations, four immeasurables, four formless absorptions, or four applications of mindfulness; up to the eightfold noble path; the emptiness, signlessness and wishlessness meditative stabilizations; the ten tathāgata powers, four fearlessnesses, or four detailed and thorough knowledges; great love; or great compassion. At that time bodhisattva great beings are endowed with the thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening and do not fall away from them. Assisted by skillful means they grow in the wholesome dharmas and their faculties are also not like those of śrāvakas or pratyekabuddhas but are keener.

54.16 "Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings think, 'The minds of these beings have been distorted for a long time by the fourfold erroneous perception of permanence, perception of happiness, perception of the pleasant, and perception of a self, so I will practice for awakening for their sake, and having thus fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening will teach them so that one way or the other they do not practice with the idea of "permanent," or the idea of "happiness," or the idea of "pleasant," or the idea of "self," but rather with the idea of "impermanent," the idea of "unpleasant," the idea of "suffering," [F.222.b] and the idea of "selfless." ' Bodhisattva great beings who have produced that thought and practice the perfection of wisdom with skillful means do not enter into absorption in a buddha's meditative stabilization until they have completed the ten tathāgata powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, great love, and great compassion. During that time, they meditate on and become absorbed in the wishlessness meditative stabilization but do not actualize the very limit of reality until they have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

54.17 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings think, ‘For a long time these beings have been involved in a false apprehension of facts with the idea of “a self,” or the idea of “a being,” up to or the idea of “one who knows” and “one who sees,” and the idea of “form,” or the idea of “feeling,” or the idea of “perception,” or the idea of “volitional factors,” or the idea of “consciousness,” or the idea of “aggregates,” or the idea of “constituents,” or the idea of “sense fields,” or the idea of “four concentrations,” or the idea of “four immeasurables,” or the idea of “four formless absorptions.” When I fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, one way or the other I will make it so that they will not have these faults of beings who falsely apprehend facts.’ Bodhisattva great beings with the production of those thoughts who practice the perfection of wisdom with skillful means do not actualize the very limit of reality until they have completed the ten tathāgata powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, great love, and great compassion, and at that time they [F.223.a] complete the cultivation of the emptiness meditative stabilization gateway to liberation.

54.18 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom think, ‘For a long time these beings have been practicing a practice with causal signs: the causal sign for woman, the causal sign for man, the causal sign for form, the causal sign for formless. When I fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, one way or the other I will make it so that beings will not have such faults as these.’ When bodhisattva great beings who produce those thoughts and also with skillful means practice the perfection of wisdom, they do not, in the interim, actualize the very limit of reality until they have completed the ten tathāgata powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, great love, and great compassion. Endowed with that production of the thought they complete the cultivation of the signlessness meditative stabilization gateway to liberation.

54.19 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom think, ‘For a long time these beings have been practicing a practice while making wishes—that is, they have harbored a strong liking for Śatakratu, Brahmā, a world protector, or a wheel-turning emperor; they have harbored a strong liking for form, feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness; up to they have harbored a strong liking for the knowledge of all aspects—so for their sake, fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, one way or the other I will teach the doctrine so that beings will not have these [F.223.b] wish-making faults.’

54.20 “Thus, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings who produce those thoughts and also with skillful means practicing the perfection of wisdom complete the cultivation of the emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness meditative stabilization gateways to liberation, and do not, in the interim, actualize the very limit of reality for as long as the ten tathāgata powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, great love, and great compassion are still not completed, and until they have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

54.21 “Subhūti, it is impossible and there is no chance that bodhisattva great beings practicing the six perfections; practicing inner emptiness, up to the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature; practicing the applications of mindfulness; practicing the emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness meditative stabilizations; practicing the ten tathāgata powers, up to and practicing the four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, great love, great compassion, and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha—it is impossible that those bodhisattva great beings practicing and mastering them with such knowledge could fall into the absence of volitional activity<sup>584</sup> or inhabit the three realms.

54.22 “Subhūti, you should ask bodhisattva great beings thus practicing mastery of those thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening, ‘How do bodhisattva great beings who want to fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening cultivate the perfection of wisdom when they master those dharmas [F.224.a] with a realization that does not cause them to actualize emptiness; does not cause them to realize the very limit of reality; and does not cause them to actualize the signlessness, wishlessness, not occasioning anything, nonproduction, or the absence of an existing thing which would otherwise lead to the attainment of the result of stream enterer, up to or the state of a worthy one or a pratyekabuddha’s awakening?’ If, Subhūti, when a bodhisattva great being has asked bodhisattva great beings about that, they respond, ‘Those bodhisattva great beings must pay attention to emptiness, must pay attention to signlessness, must pay attention to wishlessness, and must pay attention to not occasioning anything, to nonproduction, and to the absence of an existing thing,’ then, Subhūti, the bodhisattva great being should know that the lord buddhas have prophesied the unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening of those bodhisattva great beings. And why? Subhūti, it is because they pronounce on, point out, and sort out the mastery of bodhisattva great beings irreversible from awakening. But if, Subhūti, when asked they respond, ‘They should not pay attention to emptiness, and they should not pay attention to signlessness, wishlessness, not occasioning anything, nonproduction, or the absence of an existing thing,’ then, Subhūti, the bodhisattva great being should know that the lord buddhas have not prophesied the unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening of those bodhisattva great beings. And why? [F.224.b] Subhūti, it is because they do not pronounce on, point out, or sort out the mastery of irreversible bodhisattva great beings, and do not pronounce on, do not point out, and do not sort out the Dharma of irreversible bodhisattva great beings. In regard to them, that bodhisattva great being should know that those bodhisattva great beings are not like irreversible bodhisattva great beings who, having achieved mastery, have stepped onto the irreversible level, passing beyond the Tanū level.”

54.23 “Would there then, Lord, be ways in which the bodhisattva great beings would be irreversible from awakening?” asked Subhūti.

54.24 “There would be, Subhūti,” said the Lord. “It would be if the bodhisattva great beings, whether or not they have heard of the six perfections, give an answer just like an irreversible bodhisattva great being.”

54.25 “Therefore, Lord,” said Subhūti, “those bodhisattva great beings who practice for awakening are many, but levels that have been cleansed or levels that have not been cleansed do not appear—those bodhisattva great beings who give an answer just like an irreversible bodhisattva great being are few.”<sup>585</sup>

54.26 “Exactly so, Subhūti, exactly so!” replied the Lord. “Subhūti, those bodhisattva great beings of whom the irreversible knowledge level has been prophesied are few. Those who are prophesied are those who will give such an answer, and you should know that those who will give such an answer are those with cleansed wholesome roots. [F.225.a] The world with its gods, humans, and asuras cannot steal those bodhisattva great beings away.”

54.27 This was the fifty-fourth chapter, “Teaching the Cultivation of Skillful Means,” of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.” [B40]

55.           CHAPTER 55: TEACHING THE STOPPING OF THOUGHT CONSTRUCTION

- 55.1       “Furthermore,<sup>586</sup> Subhūti, if the śrāvaka level or pratyekabuddha level or the three realms do not retain any attraction for bodhisattva great beings even in dreams, and if they do not entertain the thought that they are of benefit, if they see all dharmas like a dream, see all dharmas like an echo, like a mirage, and like a magical creation and still do not actualize the very limit of reality,<sup>587</sup> you should know, Subhūti, that too is a sign that irreversible bodhisattva great beings are irreversible from awakening.
- 55.2       “Furthermore, Subhūti, if in a dream bodhisattva great beings see a tathāgata—a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha teaching the Dharma at the head of, and surrounded by, a retinue of many hundreds, a retinue of many thousands, a retinue of many hundreds of thousands, a retinue of many hundreds of thousands of one hundred million billion monks and nuns, laymen and laywomen, gods, nāgas, yakṣas, gandharvas, asuras, garuḍas, kinnaras, and mahoragas—and if, having listened to that Dharma, thinking, ‘I must understand the meaning of that Dharma,’ they live having set out in the Dharma in full conformity with the Dharma, having set out in total conformity, putting into practice the Dharma in its totality, you should know, Subhūti, that too is a sign that irreversible bodhisattva great beings are irreversible.
- 55.3       “Furthermore, Subhūti, if in a dream [F.225.b] bodhisattva great beings see a tathāgata with the thirty-two major marks of a great person, with a halo extending the length of his outstretched arms, rise up and teach the Dharma to the community of monks while suspended in the sky, and see that tathāgata demonstrate the miracle of miraculous power, magically create magical creations, and with those magical creations do the buddha’s work in other world systems, you should know, Subhūti, that too is a sign that irreversible bodhisattva great beings are irreversible.

55.4 “Furthermore, Subhūti, if in a dream bodhisattva great beings see a settlement wiped out or a village wiped out, or burned by fire; or see poisonous wild animals; or see other types of enraged wild animals; or see those on the verge of decapitation; or see other hazards and terrors; or see suffering, mental anguish, and grief; or see the dread of thirst; or see the dread of hunger; or see the death of a mother; or see the death of a father; or see the death of a brother; or see the death of a sister; or see the death of a friend, a counselor,<sup>588</sup> a kinsman, or a blood relative, and they have no pain, fear, trembling, or terror—if they do not tremble, feel frightened, or become terrified and if, on waking after dreaming that dream, they think, ‘Hey! All these three realms are like a dream, so having fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, I will teach the doctrine that all the phenomena in the three realms are like a dream’—then you should know, Subhūti, that too is a sign that irreversible bodhisattva great beings are irreversible.

55.5 “Furthermore, Subhūti, [F.226.a] how do you know that when irreversible bodhisattva great beings have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening these three terrible forms of life will not occur as anything at all, in any way at all, in their buddhafiels? Subhūti, you do if in a dream the bodhisattva great beings see beings in hell, or see beings in the animal world or in the world of Yama, and become possessed of mindfulness, such a mindfulness in possession of which they think, ‘I will do whatever it takes so that in my buddhafiels when I have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening these three terrible forms of life will not occur as anything at all, in any way at all.’ And why? Because both dharmas—the dream and the end of the dream—are not two and cannot be divided into two. You should know, Subhūti, that too is a sign that irreversible bodhisattva great beings are irreversible.

55.6 “Furthermore, Subhūti, if irreversible bodhisattva great beings, in a dream or awake, on seeing a village in flames think, ‘These attributes, tokens, and signs, which I have while dreaming or awake, if I have the attributes, tokens, and signs that are those that you see in irreversible bodhisattva great beings, then, through this truth and this truth statement let the flames engulfing this village die down, cool down, and go out,’ and if, when those irreversible bodhisattva great beings [F.226.b] have unleashed the controlling power of truth<sup>589</sup> like that, the flames engulfing this village do die down, cool down, and go out, you should know, Subhūti, it has been prophesied that those irreversible bodhisattva great beings are irreversible from unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

55.7 “Subhūti, if those masses of flames do not obey the truth statement but burn down house after house, burn down street after street, burn down some houses but not burn down other houses, burn down some streets but not burn down other streets, then, Subhūti, irreversible bodhisattva great beings should know, when thinking about the fact that the houses of some beings burn down and the houses of other beings do not burn down, ‘It is because of those beings’ karma of rejecting the Dharma. In this very life that karma has come to maturity—just that remainder from the karma of rejecting the Dharma has come to maturity.’ Subhūti, you should know that this is a cause of, and this is a condition for irreversible bodhisattva great beings; because of those causes and because of those conditions they are irreversible bodhisattva great beings.

55.8 “I am going to teach something else about those attributes, those tokens, and those signs that are the attributes, tokens, and signs on account of which bodhisattva great beings are known to be irreversible.

55.9 “Subhūti, if some man or woman gets possessed by a demon, irreversible bodhisattva great beings focus as they habitually do and think like this: ‘My unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening has been prophesied by earlier tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas; my aspiration regarding how I want to fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening and how I [F.227.a] will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening is pure; the attention I pay to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening is pure; without śrāvaka thoughts and separated from pratyekabuddha thoughts I am going to fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening; I am not not going to fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening; and I am absolutely going to fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. For the lord buddhas dwelling and maintaining themselves in countless infinite world systems, the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas, there is nothing that they do not see, or do not hear, or do not know—nothing at all of which they are not aware, or that they do not directly witness, or to which they have not fully awakened. If those lord buddhas are therefore cognizant of my surpassing aspiration and I indeed will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, then through this truth and this truth statement, whatever demon has taken hold of or violated this man or woman, let that demon be exorcised.’ Subhūti, if when those bodhisattva great beings have said that, the demon has not been exorcised, then you should know, Subhūti, that those bodhisattva great beings’ unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening has not been prophesied by the earlier tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas. [F.227.b] But if, Subhūti, when those bodhisattva great beings have said that, the demon has been exorcised, then you should know, Subhūti, that those bodhisattva great beings' unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening has been prophesied by earlier tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas. From those attributes, those tokens, and those signs you should know, Subhūti, that those bodhisattva great beings are irreversible.

55.10 “Furthermore, Subhūti, on account of the controlling power of truth, bodhisattva great beings not practicing the six perfections, without skillful means, not practicing the four applications of mindfulness, up to emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness, who have not entered into the secure state of a bodhisattva, make Māra approach. Subhūti, when those bodhisattva great beings invoke the controlling power of truth with the thought, ‘If I will indeed fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, then through this truth and this truth statement that my unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening has been prophesied, may this demon be exorcised,’ then Māra the wicked one eagerly gets to work, thinking, ‘How will I exorcise this demon?’ And why? Because Māra the wicked one is extremely powerful and very grand and the demon is not like that. Therefore, when that demon is exorcised through the controlling power of that Māra the wicked one, it occurs to those bodhisattva great beings to think, ‘It has been exorcised because of my power.’ Not knowing the demon has been exorcised because of the power of Māra, the bodhisattva great beings falsely project superiority over others, and deride, sarcastically compliment, make fun of, and disparage others, thinking, ‘The earlier [F.228.a] tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfect complete buddhas have prophesied my unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, but they have not prophesied the unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening of these others.’ Just because of that they get more conceited, puff themselves up with pride, distance themselves from the knowledge of all aspects, and distance themselves from the unsurpassed knowledge of a buddha. You should know that when that sort of bodhisattva great being without skillful means gets more conceited, just because of that, for such a one there are two levels. What are the two? They are these, namely, the śrāvaka level and the pratyekabuddha level. On account of the controlling power of truth, bodhisattva great beings will thus encounter the work of Māra. There they will not resort to, not worship, not follow after, not become closely acquainted with, and not attend on spiritual friends and will tighten just that bond with Māra. And why? Because they do not practice the six perfections and are not assisted by skillful means. Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should know that this too is the work of Māra.

55.11 “Furthermore, Subhūti, how does Māra approach bodhisattva great beings not practicing the six perfections, and similarly, connect this with each, up to who have not entered into the secure state of a bodhisattva because of the controlling power of a name?<sup>590</sup>

55.12 “Māra the wicked one disguised in some form or other approaches the bodhisattva great beings and says, ‘Son of a good family, the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete Buddha has prophesied your unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. This will be your name, this will be your mother’s name, this will be your father’s name, [F.228.b] this will be your brother’s name, this will be your sister’s name, and these will be the names of your friends, counselors, kinsmen, and blood relatives.’ He informs them, ‘These are the names of the grandparents on your mother’s and father’s side going back seven generations,’ and tells them, ‘You are from such-and-such a city, such-and-such a town, such-and-such a settlement, and such-and-such a location; you were born in such-and-such a city, in such-and-such a town, and in such-and-such a settlement.’ If they are naturally easygoing he will tell them, ‘You have been naturally easygoing like this before as well.’ If they are keen he will tell them, ‘You have been keen before like that as well.’ If they are jungle dwellers, or if they are alms-food eaters, or if they are refuse-rags wearers, or if they are later-food refusers, or if they are single-sitters, or if they are satisfied with whatever alms they get, or if they are cemetery dwellers, or if they are open-air dwellers, or if they are a tree-root dwellers, or if they are those who sleep sitting up, or if they are natural-bed users, or if they are three-robe wearers, or if they are not needy, or if they are contented, or if they are quite apart,<sup>591</sup> or if they have stopped having their feet massaged,<sup>592</sup> or if they are those who hardly speak, he will also tell them, ‘Also before, like this, ... you have been those who hardly speak.’ Also, if they are those who hardly say anything he will also tell them, ‘You have been uncommunicative like this before as well.’ And why? He says, ‘It is because you have these sorts of qualities of the ascetic and on account of that it is impossible that you did not have these qualities of the ascetic and excellent restraints before as well. Of that there is no doubt.’ [F.229.a]

55.13 “That earlier declaration of their name like that, and that declaration of their family line, and of the qualities of the ascetic they presently have makes them feel a false sense of pride, so again Māra the wicked one approaches them and says, ‘Son of a good family, that you have such qualities of the ascetic is in line with your unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening that has been prophesied by the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas.’ Or else he approaches disguised as a monk; or else he approaches disguised as a nun; or else he approaches disguised as a landlord; or else he approaches disguised as their mother; or else he approaches disguised as their father, and having approached he says, ‘Your unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening has been prophesied by the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete Buddha. And why? Because whatever the good qualities of the irreversible bodhisattva great beings there are, you have them.'

55.14 "Subhūti, those bodhisattva great beings do not have the attributes, tokens, or signs of an irreversible bodhisattva great being that I have taught, so bodhisattva great beings other than them should know, Subhūti, that those bodhisattva great beings are possessed by Māra the wicked one. And why? Because they do not have those attributes, those tokens, or those signs that irreversible bodhisattva great beings have, and because of that declaration of their name, they falsely project their superiority over bodhisattva great beings other than them, and deride, sarcastically compliment, make fun of, and disparage them.

55.15 "Bodhisattva great beings [F.229.b] should know, Subhūti, that this declaration of a name, through the controlling power of a name, is also the work of Māra the wicked one. And why? Subhūti, it is because bodhisattva great beings not practicing the six perfections do not know Skandhamāra, do not know form, and do not know feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness, so Māra will make a prophecy of them through the controlling power of a name: 'Once you have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening this will be your name.' He declares just that name the bodhisattva great beings will have reflected on and considered, so it occurs to those bodhisattva great beings disposed to intellectual confusion and lacking skillful means to think, 'This very name that I have reflected on and considered will indeed be my name once I have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.' Just as Māra the wicked one, or the Māra class of gods, or monks controlled by Māra's power make that declaration, so too it occurs to them to think, 'This monk has declared my production of the thought and my name exactly as they are. The names match, so the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete Buddha has prophesied my unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.' Subhūti, those bodhisattva great beings do not have those attributes, tokens, or signs of an irreversible bodhisattva great being that I have taught. They are without those attributes, tokens, and signs, [F.230.a] so that declaration of a name makes them conceited and they falsely project their superiority over other bodhisattva great beings and look down on them. Their false sense of superiority, and looking down on and making fun of them make unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening distant. You should know that there are these two levels for those who are thus without skillful means, without the perfection of wisdom, without spiritual friends, and influenced by bad friends, namely, the śrāvaka level and the pratyekabuddha level.

- 55.16 “Alternatively, having wandered for a long, long time through different cycles of existence, thanks to this perfection of wisdom they may fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. But you should know that even if they find the sight of spiritual friends and attend on them with constant joy and rejoicing, if they still do not disparage and do not regret those earlier false productions of the thought, there are two levels for them, namely, the śrāvaka level and the pratyekabuddha level.
- 55.17 “To illustrate, Subhūti, when monks incur any one of the four root downfalls, they are not followers of the secluded religious life, are not offspring of the Śākya, and do not have the good fortune in this body to reach any one of the four results of the secluded religious life. Similarly, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings who produce a thought with a false sense of superiority just because of the declaration of a name, who falsely project their superiority over, and look down on, other bodhisattvas just because of that utterance of a name, incur a downfall even more serious than that. You should know that the production of that thought is more serious even than that. Let alone the four serious root downfalls, Subhūti, the production of a thought with a false sense of superiority [F.230.b] just because of the declaration of a bodhisattva’s name is even more serious than the five inexpressible sins. You should know that the production of that thought is even more serious than that. Thus, such works of Māra as subtle as these will occur because of the declaration of a name.
- 55.18 “Furthermore, Subhūti, Māra the wicked one, declaring the good qualities of isolated bodhisattva great beings, will approach, and having approached, say, ‘The Tathāgata has spoken about the good qualities of isolation.’
- 55.19 “Subhūti, I have not said that jungle, upland forest, or frontier retreats are the bodhisattva great beings’ isolation.”
- 55.20 Subhūti asked, “Lord, if bodhisattva great beings are not isolated in jungle, upland forest, or frontier retreats, what other isolation do bodhisattva great beings have? Lord, what other sort of isolation is there for bodhisattva great beings?”
- 55.21 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “if bodhisattva great beings are isolated from attention connected with śrāvakas, are isolated from attention connected with pratyekabuddhas, bodhisattva great beings are in isolation. Subhūti, I have endorsed that as the bodhisattva great beings’ isolation. Living in jungle, forest, and frontier retreats is not the bodhisattva great beings’ isolation.
- 55.22 “If bodhisattva great beings live day and night in this isolation they truly live in isolation. Bodhisattva great beings—that is, those in the bodhisattva great beings’ isolation—living in jungle, upland forest, and frontier retreats truly live in isolation. Even if these [F.231.a] isolated bodhisattva great beings live on the outskirts of a town they truly live in isolation. Subhūti, about this bodhisattva great beings' isolation that I have endorsed, Māra the wicked one says, 'You should live in jungle, upland forest, and frontier retreats.' Because of that isolation adulterated with attention connected with śrāvakas and with attention connected with pratyekabuddhas, they do not work hard at the perfection of wisdom and do not complete the knowledge of all aspects.

55.23 "Dwelling in the dwelling of such impure attention, they feel a false sense of superiority over bodhisattva great beings other than them, who are dwelling on the outskirts of a town, who nevertheless have pure thoughts and attention, who are unadulterated with attention connected with śrāvakas and unadulterated with attention connected with pratyekabuddhas, and who have completed unadulterated concentrations, deliverances, meditative stabilizations, absorptions, and clairvoyances.

55.24 "Furthermore, even if those bodhisattva great beings without skillful means live in wild jungles stretching a hundred yojanas, devoid of predatory animals, game animals, and birds, devoid of the hideouts of thieves, where you do not encounter<sup>593</sup> paths where flesh-eating demons roam for a year, or a hundred years, or a thousand years, or a hundred thousand years, or a hundred thousand one hundred million billion years, or even more than that, still, if they do not know isolation, that isolation in which bodhisattva great beings live having set out with the surpassing aspiration, then those bodhisattva great being are truly adulterated. Living attached to and settling down in that isolation, they are truly [F.231.b] defiled. With just that they do not gladden my mind. They do not have that isolation of the bodhisattva great beings that I have explained. That isolation is not evident in them. And why? Because they do not dwell in that isolation.

55.25 "Māra the wicked one comes into their presence and, standing in the sky above, says, 'Excellent, excellent, son of a good family. This is the unmistakable isolation taught by the Tathāgata. You should stay right in this isolation and you will quickly and fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.' Thinking their isolation is even more important than that isolation, they falsely project their superiority over other monks in the Bodhisattva Vehicle, and similarly, connect this with<sup>594</sup> those of good character, thinking, 'These venerable ones are living an adulterated life.' They urge on and project their superiority over those bodhisattva great beings who are living a life in isolation,<sup>595</sup> because they think they are those who live adulterated, saying 'Those who dwell in an adulterated dwelling are not those who practice dwelling in isolation.' What they should treat with respect<sup>596</sup> they do not treat with respect, and they feel proud of that. And why? Because they think, 'This life that I live is the truly perfect life, so it would be me the demons would seek to influence, me the demons would cause to hanker after things. As for those living on the outskirts of a town, who would seek to influence them and cause them to hanker after things?’ Those bodhisattvas thus falsely project their superiority over other sons of a good family in the Bodhisattva Vehicle.

55.26 “Subhūti, you should know that they are vulgar bodhisattvas. You should know that they are polluted bodhisattvas. You should know that they are [F.232.a] fake bodhisattvas. You should know that they are the robbers of the world with its gods, humans, and asuras. You should know that they are robbers masquerading as monks in the world with its gods, humans, and asuras. You should know that they are robbers of the sons of a good family in the Bodhisattva Vehicle. You should not worship, should not rely on, and should not serve persons with such a disposition. And why? Subhūti, it is because such persons should be known to have an unfounded conceit.

55.27 “Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings who do not give up the knowledge of all aspects, and do not give up unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening—bodhisattva great beings with the surpassing aspiration on account of which those bodhisattva great beings want to fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, and want to work for the welfare of beings—those bodhisattva great beings should not worship, should not rely on, and should not serve persons with such a disposition. They should occupy themselves with a yoga that advances their own aims, otherwise they will always be disgusted with and scared of saṃsāra and unadulterated by the three realms. And they should train, thinking, ‘Right there too I should feel love; and right there too I should feel pity and compassion; and right there too I should produce joy and equanimity. I must act in such a way that one way or the other I will not incur such faults as those, as anyone at all in any way at all, so that they will not be produced, and if they are produced I must quickly eliminate them.’ Subhūti, you should know that this is the courageous advance on account of the personal clairvoyance of the bodhisattva great beings.

55.28 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings with the surpassing aspiration [F.232.b] who want to fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening should worship, rely on, and serve spiritual friends.”

55.29 The Lord having said this, venerable Subhūti then asked him, “Lord, whom should they know to be the spiritual friends of bodhisattva great beings?”

55.30 The Lord said to venerable Subhūti, “Subhūti, they should know that lord buddhas are the spiritual friends of bodhisattva great beings. Subhūti, they should know that bodhisattvas are also the spiritual friends of bodhisattva great beings. Subhūti, they should know that śrāvakas are also the spiritual friends of bodhisattva great beings. Subhūti, they should know that those who speak about, set forth, teach, expound, advance, explain, go into detail about, make clear, and perfectly illuminate the six perfections are also the spiritual friends of bodhisattva great beings. Subhūti, they should know that the six perfections are the spiritual friends of bodhisattva great beings; they should know that the applications of mindfulness, and similarly, connect this with each, up to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha are the spiritual friends of bodhisattva great beings; and they should know that suchness, the very limit of reality, and the dharma-constituent are the spiritual friends of bodhisattva great beings.

55.31 “Subhūti, they should know that the six perfections are the teachers; the six perfections are the path; [F.233.a] the six perfections are the light; the six perfections are the torch; the six perfections are the illumination; the six perfections are intellectual awareness, knowledge, and wisdom; the six perfections are the protector; the six perfections are the refuge; the six perfections are the final ally; the six perfections are the mother; and the six perfections are the father. The applications of mindfulness, and similarly, connect this with each, up to the knowledge of all aspects is the elimination of all residual impressions, connections, and afflictions.<sup>597</sup> And why? Subhūti, it is because these thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening were the father and mother of the lord buddhas who were tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas in times gone by; because, Subhūti, these thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening will be the father and mother of the lord buddhas who will be tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas in times yet to come; and, Subhūti, because these thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening are the father and mother of the lord buddhas who are presently dwelling and maintaining themselves in the ten directions. And why? Subhūti, it is because past, future, and present lord buddhas issue forth from them.

55.32 “Therefore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings who want to fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, want to purify a buddhafield, and want to bring beings to maturity [F.233.b] should gather beings in the four ways of gathering a retinue. What are the four? They are giving gifts, kind words, beneficial actions, and consistency between words and deeds. Seeing that reality, Subhūti, I too am forced to say that these thirty-seven dharmas on the side of awakening are the teacher, father and mother, resting place and protector, island, refuge, and final ally of the bodhisattva great beings. Therefore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings who want to get to a state where they are not led astray by others, who want to remain in that state where they are not led astray by others, who want to allay the doubts of others, who want to purify a buddhafield, and who want to bring beings to

- maturity should train in this perfection of wisdom. And why? Because in this perfection of wisdom are taught in detail those dharmas in which bodhisattva great beings have to train.”
- 55.33 The Lord having said this, venerable Subhūti then asked him, “Lord, what is the mark of the perfection of wisdom?”
- 55.34 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “the perfection of wisdom is like space, unimpeded. Subhūti, the perfection of wisdom is without a mark. The perfection of wisdom’s mark does not exist at all.”
- 55.35 “Lord, could you explain it this way: the mark through which the perfection of wisdom exists is the mark through which all phenomena exist?” asked Subhūti.
- 55.36 “Exactly so, Subhūti, exactly so!” said the Lord. “Subhūti, the mark through which the perfection of wisdom exists is the mark [F.234.a] through which all phenomena exist. And why? Subhūti, it is because all phenomena are isolated from an intrinsic nature, all phenomena are empty of an intrinsic nature. Subhūti, because of this one of many explanations, the mark—that is, the isolated mark and emptiness mark—through which the perfection of wisdom exists is that through which all phenomena exist.”
- 55.37 The Lord having said this, venerable Subhūti inquired of him, “Lord, if all phenomena are isolated from all phenomena, and if all phenomena are empty of all phenomena, Lord, how could there be the defilement and purification of beings? Lord, the isolated is not defiled nor is it purified; emptiness is not defiled nor is it purified either, so the isolated and empty do not fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. The isolated do not apprehend in emptiness any phenomenon that is the awakening to which they will fully awaken, and emptiness does not apprehend in the isolated any phenomenon that is the awakening to which they will fully awaken either, so how are we to understand the meaning of this statement the Lord has made?”
- 55.38 Venerable Subhūti having thus inquired, the Lord asked him in return, “What do you think, Subhūti, do beings go on grasping at ‘I’ and grasping at ‘mine’ for a long time?”
- 55.39 “So it is, Lord; so it is, Sugata. Beings [F.234.b] go on grasping at ‘I’ and grasping at ‘mine’ for a long time,” said Subhūti.
- 55.40 “What do you think, Subhūti, are grasping at ‘I’ and grasping at ‘mine’ isolated? Are grasping at ‘I’ and grasping at ‘mine’ empty?” asked the Lord.
- “They are isolated, Lord; they are empty, Sugata,” said Subhūti.
- 55.41 “What do you think, Subhūti, do beings pass through many cycles of existence because<sup>598</sup> of grasping at ‘I’ and grasping at ‘mine’?” asked the Lord.

55.42 “So it is, Lord; so it is, Sugata. Beings pass through many cycles of existence because of grasping at ‘I’ and grasping at ‘mine’,” said Subhūti.

55.43 “Subhūti,” said the Lord, “there are therefore beings passing through many cycles of existence, so there is defilement. Those beings who do not grasp at ‘I’ and do not grasp at ‘mine’ and hence are without grasping, Subhūti, they do not pass through many cycles of existence. And those not passing through many cycles of existence, Subhūti, are not defiled, so there is purification as well.”

55.44 The Lord having said this, venerable Subhūti said to him, “Lord, bodhisattva great beings practicing like that do not practice in form. They do not practice in feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness; up to they do not practice in the applications of mindfulness; up to they do not practice in the four detailed and thorough knowledges. And why? Because all those dharmas—those who are practicing, that by means of which they are practicing, and that in which they are practicing—[F.235.a] cannot be apprehended. Lord, the world with its gods, humans, and asuras cannot break bodhisattva great beings practicing like that. Lord, none of the śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas can surpass bodhisattva great beings practicing like that. And why? Because they are located in a place that is unsurpassed, namely, in the secure state of a bodhisattva. Lord, that place is unsurpassed because the bodhisattva great beings keep on paying attention to the knowledge of all aspects. Lord, bodhisattva great beings practicing like that are close to the knowledge of all aspects.”

55.45 The Lord continued, “What do you think, Subhūti, were all the beings, as many as there are in Jambudvīpa, to obtain human bodies, and, having obtained human bodies, to have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, and were a son of a good family or daughter of a good family to attend on them, to respect, revere, honor, and worship them with the requirements—robes, alms, beds and seats, and medicines for sicknesses—for as long as they lived and to have transformed those wholesome roots into unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, what do you think, Subhūti? Based on that would that son of a good family or daughter of a good family create a lot of merit?”

“A lot, Lord; a lot, Sugata,” said Subhūti

55.46 “Subhūti,” said the Lord, “a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who stays [F.235.b] with attention connected to the perfection of wisdom and speaks about, teaches, expounds, advances, goes into detail about, explains, makes clear, and perfectly illuminates it for others will create a lot more merit than that.

55.47      Similarly, connect this with each, up to were all the beings, as many as there are in a great billionfold world system, to simultaneously obtain human bodies, and were a certain son of a good family or daughter of a good family to establish them in the ten wholesome actions, and in the four concentrations, the four immeasurables, the four formless absorptions, the result of stream enterer, and similarly, connect this with each, up to to establish them in a pratyekabuddha's awakening, and to establish them in unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, and were they to have transformed those wholesome roots into unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, what do you think, Subhūti? Based on that, would that son of a good family or daughter of a good family create a lot of merit?"

55.48      "A lot, Lord; a lot, Sugata," said Subhūti.

55.49      "Subhūti," continued the Lord, "a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who stays with attention connected to the perfection of wisdom speaking about, teaching, expounding, advancing, going into detail about, explaining, making clear, and perfectly illuminating it for others will create a lot more merit than that. Subhūti, those bodhisattva great beings will have become worthy of the offerings of all beings. And why? Because apart from the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete Buddha, no other being [F.236.a] occupies such a station as the bodhisattva great beings do. Why? Because sons of a good family<sup>599</sup> practicing the perfection of wisdom find and produce within themselves great love; practicing the perfection of wisdom they see all beings as if condemned to execution and find and produce within themselves great compassion; and dwelling in that dwelling, experiencing a delightful feeling of joy they find and produce within themselves great joy, but still they do not dwell together with that causal sign, so they also obtain great equanimity. Subhūti, this—that is, the great illumination of the perfection of wisdom, and the great illumination of the perfection of concentration, perseverance, patience, morality, and giving—is the great illumination of the wisdom of bodhisattva great beings. Even though those sons of a good family have not become buddhas, they have become worthy of the offerings of all beings and are irreversible from unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. They get close to the knowledge of all aspects, so those requirements of theirs come to have a great result, a great benefit.<sup>600</sup>

55.50      "Therefore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings who want to behave so a city's almsgiving is fruitful, want to guide beings on the path, want to cause a great illumination, want to completely release beings who are in bondage, [F.236.b] and want to reveal the unsurpassed wisdom eye to all beings should dwell in the perfection of wisdom, going over it again and again in their minds.

- 55.51 “Subhūti, if bodhisattva great beings pay attention with this attention connected to the perfection of wisdom, then, when bodhisattva great beings are paying attention with this attention connected to the perfection of wisdom, they should also engage in conversation connected to just the perfection of wisdom. But even while they are engaged in conversation connected to just the perfection of wisdom, they should also pay attention with this attention connected to the perfection of wisdom. They should act in such a way that they dwell paying attention with this attention connected to the perfection of wisdom, providing no opportunity for any other attention, dwelling, day and night, without giving up endeavoring for this attention connected to the perfection of wisdom.
- 55.52 “To illustrate, Subhūti, say there is a person who has never found a precious jewel before. Later on, they find a precious jewel and become overjoyed, ecstatic, and filled with mental happiness from finding a precious jewel. If, right afterward, they were to lose the precious jewel they had found they would, based on that, experience intense suffering and intense mental unhappiness. Their mind would be constantly and always on that precious jewel, thinking, ‘Oh no! Alas! I have lost my precious jewel.’ Similarly, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings should think ‘this is a precious jewel’ and never be separated from the attention connected with the knowledge of all aspects.”
- 55.53 The Lord having said this, venerable Subhūti inquired of him, “Lord, given that all attention is separated from an intrinsic nature, [F.237.a] that all attention is empty of an intrinsic nature, how, Lord, are bodhisattva great beings never separated from attention connected to the knowledge of all aspects? You cannot apprehend a bodhisattva, attention, or the knowledge of all aspects given that they are separated from an intrinsic nature.”
- 55.54 Venerable Subhūti having thus inquired, the Lord replied to him, “Subhūti, if bodhisattva great beings know this: ‘All phenomena are separated from an intrinsic nature. They are not made by śrāvakas, they are not made by pratyekabuddhas, and they are not made by buddhas. They stay as what they are—the dharma-constituent, the establishment of dharmas, the certification of dharmas, suchness, unmistaken suchness, unaltered suchness, and the very limit of reality,’ then those bodhisattva great beings are not separated from the perfection of wisdom. And why? Subhūti, given that the perfection of wisdom is separated from an intrinsic nature and the perfection of wisdom is empty of an intrinsic nature, it is because it has no increase and it has no decline.”
- 55.55 “Lord, given that the perfection of wisdom is separated from an intrinsic nature and empty of an intrinsic nature, how will bodhisattva great beings succeed at the perfection of wisdom and fully awaken to unsurpassed,

- perfect, complete awakening?" asked Subhūti.
- 55.56 "Subhūti," replied the Lord, "even though they have had success at the perfection of wisdom, they do not become more or less of a bodhisattva great being. [F.237.b] The very limit of reality does not become more or less. The dharma-constituent does not become more or less. And why? Because the perfection of wisdom is not one and it is not two either. Subhūti, if bodhisattva great beings do not feel cowed, tense up, tremble, feel frightened, or become terrified when such an exposition is being given, they stand on the irreversible level; they are supreme. Those bodhisattva great beings are practicing the perfection of wisdom."
- 55.57 Then venerable Subhūti asked the Lord, "Lord, is it the emptiness of the perfection of wisdom, its state of ringing hollow, being in vain, being a fraud, and being pointless, that practices the perfection of wisdom?"
- "No it is not, Subhūti," said the Lord.
- 55.58 "Lord, can you apprehend any dharma other than the perfection of wisdom that is practicing the perfection of wisdom?"
- "No you cannot, Subhūti."
- 55.59 "Lord, does the perfection of wisdom practice the perfection of wisdom?"
- "No it does not, Subhūti."
- 55.60 "Lord, does emptiness practice emptiness?" he asked.
- "No it does not, Subhūti."
- 55.61 "Lord, does something other than emptiness practice emptiness?"
- "No it does not, Subhūti."
- 55.62 "Lord, does form practice the perfection of wisdom? Do feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness [F.238.a] practice the perfection of wisdom?"
- "No they do not, Subhūti."
- 55.63 "Lord, do the six perfections practice the perfection of wisdom? And similarly, up to do the four detailed and thorough knowledges practice the perfection of wisdom?"
- "No they do not, Subhūti."
- 55.64 "Lord, is it the emptiness of form, its state of ringing hollow, being in vain, being a fraud, and being pointless; its suchness, unmistaken suchness, and unaltered suchness; its true dharmic nature, dharma-constituent, establishment of dharmas, and certification of dharmas; or its very limit of reality that practices the perfection of wisdom?"
- "No it is not, Subhūti."
- 55.65 "Lord, similarly, up to is it the emptiness of the four fearlessnesses, their state of ringing hollow, being in vain, being a fraud, or being pointless that practices the perfection of wisdom?"
- "No it is not, Subhūti."

- 55.66 “Lord, if those dharmas do not practice the perfection of wisdom, how, Lord, do bodhisattva great beings practice when they practice the perfection of wisdom?”
- 55.67 Venerable Subhūti having asked this, the Lord asked him in return, “What do you think, Subhūti, do you see that dharma which is the dharma practicing the perfection of wisdom?”
“No I do not, Lord.”
- 55.68 “What do you think, Subhūti, do you see that perfection of wisdom which bodhisattvas have to practice?”
“No I do not, Lord.” [F.238.b]
- 55.69 “What do you think, Subhūti, is there any dharma that has been apprehended in that dharma you do not see?”
“No there is not, Lord.”
- 55.70 “What do you think, Subhūti, in that dharma that has not been apprehended, will there be production or stopping?”
“No there will not, Lord.”
- 55.71 “Subhūti, this is the bodhisattva great beings’ forbearance for the nonproduction of dharmas. Subhūti, the unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening of bodhisattva great beings endowed with such forbearance will be prophesied. Subhūti, this is the Tathāgata’s fearlessness and detailed and thorough knowledge, so it is impossible that bodhisattva great beings accomplishing like this, practicing like this, endeavoring like this, making an effort like this will not reach knowledge of unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, the great knowledge, the knowledge of all aspects. And why? Because those bodhisattva great beings have reached forbearance for the nonproduction of dharmas and will therefore be set on that until they have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.”
- 55.72 The Lord having said this, venerable Subhūti then asked him, “Lord, is the bodhisattvas’ unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening prophesied because there will be the production of all the dharmas?” [F.239.a]
“No it is not, Subhūti.”
- 55.73 “Lord, is the bodhisattvas’ unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening prophesied because there will be the nonproduction of all the dharmas?”
“No it is not, Subhūti.”
- 55.74 “Lord, if the bodhisattvas’ unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening is not prophesied because of the production of all the dharmas, and not because of the nonproduction of all the dharmas, then why, Lord, is the unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening of bodhisattva great beings prophesied?”

- 55.75 Venerable Subhūti having asked this, the Lord asked him in return, “What do you think, Subhūti, do you see that dharma, the dharma of which unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening is being prophesied?”
- 55.76 “No I do not, Lord,” he replied. “I do not see that dharma, Lord, the dharma of which unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening is being prophesied. And, Lord, I also do not see the dharma that is a full awakening, or on account of which there would be a full awakening, or one who becomes fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.”
- 55.77 “Exactly so, Subhūti, exactly so!” he said. “Subhūti, it does not occur to bodhisattva great beings not apprehending all phenomena to think, ‘I will become fully awakened; on account of this I will become fully awakened; I will become fully awakened to this.’ And why? Subhūti, it is because all these ideas do not occur to bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom. And why? Subhūti, it is because the perfection of wisdom is without thought construction.” [F.239.b]
- 55.78 This was the fifty-fifth chapter, “Teaching the Stopping of Thought Construction,” of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.” [B41]

CHAPTER 56: EQUAL TRAINING

- 56.1 Then Śatakratu, head of the gods, said to the Lord, “Lord, because the perfection of wisdom is extremely isolated this perfection of wisdom is deep, hard to behold, hard to comprehend, not something about which you can speculate, not an object of speculative thought, up to subtle, and an object to be known by the brilliantly learned and wise, so those who hear, take up, bear in mind, read aloud, master, and practice this deep perfection of wisdom for suchness, not giving space to other mind or mental factor dharmas up until they have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, do not have paltry wholesome roots.”
- 56.2 “Exactly so, Kauśika, exactly so!” replied the Lord. “Those who hear, take up, bear in mind, read aloud, master, and practice this deep perfection of wisdom for suchness, not giving space to other mind or mental factor dharmas up until they have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, do not have paltry wholesome roots.
- 56.3 “Kauśika, what do you think, were the beings in Jambudvīpa, as many as there are, to be endowed with the ten wholesome actions, and to be endowed with the four concentrations, four immeasurables, and four formless absorptions, and yet were some son of a good family or daughter of a good family to take up, bear in mind, read aloud, [F.240.a] and master this deep perfection of wisdom, and having taken up, borne in mind, read aloud, and mastered it, also to practice it for suchness, would that earlier wholesome root not approach that wholesome root even by a hundredth part? Would it not approach it by a thousandth part, by a hundred thousandth part, or by a hundred millionth part? Would it not approach it by any number, fraction, counting, example, or comparison?”
- 56.4 Then a monk said to Śatakratu, head of the gods, “Kauśika, those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who take up, bear in mind, read aloud, master, and practice this deep perfection of wisdom for suchness with an undistracted mind, not giving space to other mind and mental factor dharmas up until they have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, surpass beings in Jambudvīpa endowed with the ten wholesome actions, endowed with the four concentrations and four immeasurables, endowed with the four formless absorptions, and endowed with the five clairvoyances.”

56.5 That monk having said this, Śatakratu, head of the gods, replied to him, “Monk, given that the bodhisattva great beings who have produced even one thought surpass beings in Jambudvīpa endowed with the ten wholesome actions, endowed with the four concentrations and four immeasurables, endowed with the four formless absorptions, and endowed with the five clairvoyances, what need is there to mention those who take up, bear in mind, read aloud, and master this deep perfection of wisdom, and having taken up, borne in mind, read aloud, and mastered it, also practice it for suchness? They will surpass the world with its gods, humans, [F.240.b] and asuras. Bodhisattva great beings will surpass the world with its gods, humans, and asuras. The bodhisattva great beings will not simply surpass the world with its gods, humans, and asuras in one respect but not another; they will surpass all the stream enterers, once-returners, non-returners, worthy ones, and pratyekabuddhas, as many as there are. The bodhisattva great beings will not simply surpass the stream enterers, up to the pratyekabuddhas in one respect but not another; they will surpass all those bodhisattva great beings without skillful means and separated from the perfection of wisdom practicing the perfection of giving. And they will not simply surpass those practicing the perfection of giving in one respect but not another; they will surpass all those bodhisattva great beings without skillful means and separated from the perfection of wisdom practicing the perfection of morality. And they will not simply surpass those practicing the perfection of morality in one respect but not another; they will surpass all those bodhisattva great beings without skillful means separated from the perfection of wisdom practicing the perfection of patience, the perfection of perseverance, and the perfection of concentration. Those bodhisattva great beings who are practicing the perfection of wisdom as it has been taught cannot be surpassed by the world with its gods, humans, [F.241.a] and asuras. Those bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom as it has been taught carry out the perfection of wisdom as it has been taught. Those bodhisattva great beings ensure that the line of the knowledge of all aspects will be unbroken. Those bodhisattva great beings do not distance themselves from the Tathāgata. Those bodhisattva great beings practicing like that will not turn back from the site of awakening. Those bodhisattva great beings want to lift up beings who are depressed.

Those bodhisattvas who train like that train in a bodhisattva's training. They do not train in the training of a śrāvaka; they do not train in the training of a pratyekabuddha.

56.6 “The Four Mahārājas will think about approaching bodhisattva great beings who train like that, and having come into their presence, they will say, ‘Make haste at training! Train quickly! The tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas of yore took possession of these four begging bowls, so you too, seated at the site of awakening, having fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, should take possession of them as well.’ The Four Mahārājas together with the Cāturmahārājika gods think about approaching bodhisattva great beings training like that in the perfection of wisdom. I together with the Trāyastriṃśa gods think about coming. The god Suyāma together with the Yāma gods think about coming. The god Saṃtuṣita together with the Tuṣita gods think about coming. [F.241.b] Similarly, the god Sunirmita..., Vaśavartin..., Sahāṃpati..., and Brahmā together with the Brahmakāyika gods also think about coming. Similarly, the god Ābhāsvara together with the Ābhāsvara gods also think about coming. Similarly, the Śubhakarṣna, Bṛhatphala, Avṛha, Atapa, Sudarśana, Sudṛśa, up to the Śuddhāvāsa gods also think about coming. The tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas continually watch over those bodhisattva great beings practicing this deep perfection of wisdom. The bodhisattva great beings practicing this deep perfection of wisdom like that do not face those ordinary physical sufferings, as many as there are, from being attacked by any others at all, in any way at all.

56.7 “These, monk, are the good qualities during this life of bodhisattva great beings practicing this deep perfection of wisdom.

56.8 “Their bodies will not be beset with disorders from the three humors in combination,<sup>601</sup> as many as there are—that is, by eye diseases, ear diseases, nose diseases, tongue diseases, diseases of the teeth, physical illnesses, or mental illnesses. These too are the good qualities that can be expected when bodhisattva great beings are practicing this deep perfection of wisdom.”

56.9 Then it occurred to venerable Ānanda to think, “Are these Śatakratus, heads of the gods, teaching the perfection of wisdom through the power of their own confident readiness, or are they teaching through the power of the Buddha?”

56.10 Then Śatakratu, head of the gods, understanding in his mind the thoughts occurring to venerable Ānanda, said [F.242.a] to venerable Ānanda, “Venerable monk Ānanda, you should be aware that this teaching of mine of the perfection of wisdom is through the power of the Buddha.”

- 56.11 Then the Lord said to venerable Ānanda, “It is exactly so, venerable monk Ānanda, exactly so! It is through the power of the Tathāgata that Śatakratu, head of the gods, gives such a teaching of the perfection of wisdom as this. It is through the sustaining power of the Tathāgata. Ānanda, when bodhisattva great beings train in the perfection of wisdom, do the yogic practice of the perfection of wisdom, and meditate on the perfection of wisdom, then all the Māras, the wicked ones, in the great billionfold world system feel anxious, wondering, ‘Will these bodhisattvas actualize the very limit of reality, and actualizing the very limit of reality will they actualize the result of stream enterer, or will they actualize the result of once-returned, or the result of non-returned, or the state of a worthy one, or will they reach a pratyekabuddha’s awakening, or will they rather fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening?’ Furthermore, Ānanda, when bodhisattva great beings are inseparable from the perfection of wisdom, then Māra the wicked one experiences a sharp stab of pain. Moreover, Ānanda, Māra the wicked one frightens bodhisattva great beings by sending a shower of meteors to destroy their feeling of self-confidence, to make their hair stand on end, to cow them, and to distract them from producing even a single thought of paying attention to the knowledge of all aspects.” [F.242.b]
- 56.12 Then venerable Ānanda asked the Lord, “Lord, does Māra the wicked one come into the presence of all bodhisattva great beings bent on hurting them?”
- 56.13 “Ānanda, replied the Lord, “Māra the wicked one does not come into the presence of all bodhisattva great beings bent on hurting them. Ānanda, Māra the wicked one comes into the presence of some bodhisattva great beings bent on hurting them and does not come into the presence of others.”
- 56.14 “Lord, who are the bodhisattva great beings into whose presence Māra the wicked one comes bent on hurting them, and who are those into whose presence he does not come?” asked venerable Ānanda.
- 56.15 “Ānanda,” replied the Lord, “if in the past when this deep perfection of wisdom was being explained the minds of those bodhisattva great beings were not filled with belief, then Māra the wicked one will come into their presence bent on hurting them.
- 56.16 “Furthermore, Ānanda, if when this deep perfection of wisdom is being explained those bodhisattva great beings wonder whether this is the perfection of wisdom, or whether it is not the perfection of wisdom, then, Ānanda, Māra the wicked one will also come into the presence of those bodhisattva great beings bent on hurting them.
- 56.17 “Furthermore, Ānanda, when bodhisattva great beings have become separated from spiritual friends they do not see them, so they do not hear this deep perfection of wisdom. Not hearing it they do not know it, and

- because they do not know it, they do not practice it for suchness, thinking, 'This is how to cultivate the perfection of wisdom.'
- 56.18 "Furthermore, [F.243.a] Ānanda, when bodhisattva great beings have become separated from the perfection of wisdom, they look after a false Dharma and Māra the wicked one, Ānanda, finds an opportunity to hurt those bodhisattva great beings.
- 56.19 "Furthermore, Ānanda, when bodhisattva great beings who have become separated from the perfection of wisdom praise a false Dharma, it occurs to Māra the wicked one to think, 'That one praising a false Dharma is my fellow traveler. From among the many in the Bodhisattva Vehicle, in this person praising a false Dharma I have found a fellow traveler. That one will fulfill my ambition that those in the Bodhisattva Vehicle will stand on two levels, namely the śrāvaka level or the pratyekabuddha level.'
- 56.20 "Again, Ānanda, what sorts of bodhisattva great beings will Māra the wicked one get an opportunity to hurt? Ānanda, Māra the wicked one will get an opportunity to hurt those bodhisattvas who, when this deep perfection of wisdom is being explained, say, 'This perfection of wisdom is so deep someone like you is not going to find the bottom of it, whether you have heard it, explained it, borne it in mind, read it aloud, mastered it, or completed it, because until now even I have not found it.'
- 56.21 "Furthermore, Ānanda, Māra the wicked one will get an opportunity to hurt bodhisattva great beings when the bodhisattvas falsely project superiority over other bodhisattvas, saying, 'I am practicing the perfection of giving but you are not practicing the perfection of giving,' and similarly, connect this with each, up to falsely project superiority, saying, [F.243.b] 'I am practicing the perfection of wisdom but you are not practicing the perfection of wisdom.'
- 56.22 "Furthermore, Ānanda, when bodhisattva great beings have it in mind to brag about themselves, Māra the wicked one feels joy and is pleased, delighted, enraptured, overjoyed, and glad, and Māra the wicked one, Ānanda, gets an opportunity to hurt those bodhisattva great beings.
- 56.23 "Furthermore, Ānanda, when those bodhisattva great beings whose names are mentioned or whose lineage is mentioned, whose name or lineage is celebrated and mentioned, falsely project superiority over other fine bodhisattvas of virtuous character, bragging about themselves and disparaging others, they are without any of the good qualities that are the attributes, tokens, and signs of irreversible bodhisattva great beings, and in the absence of those attributes, tokens, and signs, cause affliction, bragging about themselves and disparaging others. They say, 'You do not show yourself to be in the Bodhisattva Vehicle and bodhisattva family in the way that I show myself to be in the Bodhisattva Vehicle and bodhisattva family.'

When they look down on and disparage persons in the Bodhisattva Vehicle like that, it occurs to Māra the wicked one to think, 'My place will not be empty, there will be an increase in the great hells, the animal world, the world of Yama, and the region of ghosts.' Māra the wicked one employs his controlling power so that the words of those bodhisattva great beings become more and more believable. [F.244.a] Many people come to think that they should listen to those words that have become believable. Listening to them, they come to think that they should trust them. They watch them and sing the same tune as them. Having watched them, they behave in conformity with them, training just like them. Having trained just like them, they will have accomplished something just like them, so they cause affliction to increase. Thus every action of body, speech, and mind they have undertaken leads to unwanted, disagreeable, and unpleasant states because their minds have become distorted, and so the great hells also increase; the animal world, the world of Yama, and the region of ghosts also increase; and Māra the wicked one's place also increases. Ānanda, Māra the wicked one, seeing that cause and effect, feels delighted, enraptured, overjoyed, and glad.

56.24 "Furthermore, Ānanda, if a person in the Bodhisattva Vehicle quarrels with a person in the Śrāvaka Vehicle, it occurs to Māra the wicked one to think, 'Ah! These sons of a good family are distancing themselves from the knowledge of all aspects. They are not getting closer to the knowledge of all aspects. And why? Because battling, fault finding, fighting, and quarreling are not the path to the knowledge of all aspects; rather, because they are not the path to the knowledge of all aspects, they are the path to the great hells, the path to the animal world, and the path to the world of Yama.'

56.25 "Furthermore, Ānanda, if a person in the Bodhisattva Vehicle should battle, find fault, fight, and quarrel with another person in the Bodhisattva Vehicle, [F.244.b] it occurs to Māra the wicked one to think, 'Ah! Both these sons of a good family are distancing themselves from the knowledge of all aspects. Both will not fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. And why? Because what these sons of a good family have undertaken is not the path to the knowledge of all aspects; rather, what these sons of a good family have undertaken is the path to the hells, the path to the animal world, and the path to the world of Yama.'

56.26 "Furthermore, Ānanda, if bodhisattvas whose awakening has not been prophesied entertain a malicious thought about other bodhisattvas who have been prophesied and battle, pick a fight with, find fault with, quarrel with, and wage war against them, if they have not given up the knowledge of all aspects, they will have to buckle on armor for as many eons as they have entertained the thought of battling, fault finding, fighting, and quarreling.”

56.27 The Lord having said this, venerable Ānanda asked him, “Lord, is there a release for those who entertain those thoughts, or do they have to buckle on armor for exactly that many eons?”<sup>602</sup>

56.28 Venerable Ānanda having asked this, the Lord replied to him, “Ānanda, I have taught a Dharma where there is a release for persons in the Śrāvaka Vehicle, in the Pratyekabuddha Vehicle, and in the Bodhisattva Vehicle. There, if persons in the Bodhisattva Vehicle fight with, quarrel with, intimidate, and humiliate others in the Bodhisattva Vehicle, and having fought and quarreled with, intimidated and humiliated them, still do not make a confession, letting it fester [F.245.a] and harboring a bad proclivity, I do not say, Ānanda, that there is a release for those persons. And if those persons do not give up the knowledge of all aspects, they will definitely have to buckle on armor for that many eons.

56.29 “Moreover, Ānanda, even if bodhisattva great beings have fought and quarreled, intimidated and humiliated, still, if they make a confession, do not let it fester, and do not harbor a bad proclivity, and if they think, ‘Were I, who have to remove all beings from suffering, to speak back to someone who speaks to me, and were I, who should thus act as a bridge for all beings, to speak unkind words to others and reply negatively, it would be improper, so I must not act like that. I should stay still with a sheep-like obtuseness and say nothing. I must not disturb my surpassing aspiration that I have to fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening and place all beings in complete nirvāṇa, so it is not proper that I am entertaining a malicious thought about them, that I am upsetting them, so I should not entertain a malicious thought about them and I should not upset them,’ and if from then on they also keep restraint, Ānanda, then I say that those bodhisattva great beings are those for whom there is a release and Māra the wicked one will not get an opportunity to hurt them.

56.30 “Furthermore, Ānanda, bodhisattva great beings should not live together with persons in the Śrāvaka Vehicle, and if they do live with them still they should not entertain a malicious thought toward anyone. And why? Because those who entertain a malicious thought toward them, or who would upset them, are not agreeable to me. And why? Because I think it is necessary that having fully awakened [F.245.b] to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening they should attain liberation from all suffering.”

56.31 Then venerable Ānanda asked the Lord, “Lord, how should bodhisattva great beings behave toward persons in the Bodhisattva Vehicle?”

56.32      “Ānanda,” replied the Lord, “bodhisattva great beings should behave toward persons in the Bodhisattva Vehicle just as they would behave toward the Teacher. And why? They think, ‘It is because they are my fellow travelers, they have set out in the same vehicle, and what they have to train in, I have to train in just that too—that perfection of giving, up to that knowledge of all aspects that they have to train in, I have to train in too. If they practice an adulterated practice separated from attention connected to the knowledge of all aspects, I will not train in that, but if this bodhisattva great being practices inseparable from attention connected to the knowledge of all aspects, I will practice like that too.’ Bodhisattva great beings training like that become those with the same training.”

56.33      This was the fifty-sixth chapter, “Equal Training,” of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.”

CHAPTER 57: PRACTICE

57.1 Then venerable Subhūti asked the Lord, “Lord, what is the sameness of bodhisattva great beings, the sameness in which bodhisattva great beings have to train?”

57.2 “Subhūti,” replied the Lord, “inner emptiness ... [F.246.a] connect this in the same way with each, up to and the emptiness that is the nonexistence of an intrinsic nature is the sameness of bodhisattva great beings. Form is empty of form. Feeling..., perception..., volitional factors..., and consciousness is empty of consciousness, and similarly, up to also awakening is empty of awakening. Subhūti, that is the sameness of bodhisattva great beings, and stationed in that sameness bodhisattva great beings will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.”

57.3 Subhūti then asked, “Lord, when bodhisattva great beings train to put an end to form do they train in the knowledge of all aspects, when they train to become detached from form do they train in the knowledge of all aspects, when they train for the cessation of form do they train in the knowledge of all aspects, and when they train so that form will not be produced do they train in the knowledge of all aspects? And similarly, up to when they train to put an end to the four detailed and thorough knowledges do they train in the knowledge of all aspects, and similarly, up to and when they train so that the four detailed and thorough knowledges will not be produced do they train in the knowledge of all aspects? When they train to put an end to feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness do they train in the knowledge of all aspects, up to when they train so that they will not be produced do they train in the knowledge of all aspects? Or when they train to put an end to, become detached from, for the cessation of, up to awakening, up to<sup>603</sup> so that they will not be produced do they train in the knowledge of all aspects?” [F.246.b] Connect this in the same way, at length, with them all.

57.4 Venerable Subhūti having inquired about this, the Lord replied to him, “Subhūti, you have said, ‘When they train to put an end to form do they train in the knowledge of all aspects, up to when they train so it will not be produced do they train in the knowledge of all aspects? When they train to put an end to feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness do they train in the knowledge of all aspects, up to<sup>604</sup> when they train so that they will not be produced do they train in the knowledge of all aspects? When they train to put an end to, become detached from, for the cessation of, up to awakening so they will not be produced do they train in the knowledge of all aspects? Connect this in the same way, at length, with them all.’

57.5 “Subhūti, what do you think—is there an end to, a cessation of, or a diminution in that suchness that is the suchness of form, of feeling, of perception, of volitional factors, and of consciousness; connect this in the same way with each, up to that suchness that is the suchness of awakening, that is the suchness of the Tathāgata, on account of which suchness they are labeled the Tathāgata?”

“No, Lord; no, Sugata,” said Subhūti.

57.6 “Subhūti,” continued the Lord, “bodhisattva great beings training like that, training in suchness, train in the knowledge of all aspects, and suchness neither ends, nor ceases, nor diminishes. Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings training like that, training in suchness, train in the knowledge of all aspects. [F.247.a] Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings training like that, training in suchness, train in the six perfections. They train in the applications of mindfulness, connect this in the same way with each, up to the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha, up to the knowledge of all aspects. Subhūti, Māra or the Māra class of gods cannot break bodhisattva great beings training like that. Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings training like that reach the irreversible state extremely quickly. Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings training like that range over their own father’s, the Tathāgata’s, range. Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings training like that practice the dharmas that dispel darkness. Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings training like that practice the dharmas that purify a buddhafield. Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings training like that train in great love, train in great compassion, train in order to purify a buddhafield, and train in order to bring beings to maturity. Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings training like that train to turn the wheel of the Dharma that has twelve aspects three times. Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings training like that train with the thought ‘I will place beings in complete nirvāṇa.’ Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings training like that train so the line of the tathāgatas [F.247.b] will be unbroken. Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings training like that train with the thought ‘I will open the gate to immortality,’ and train with the thought ‘I will perfectly reveal the un compounded element.’

57.7 “Subhūti, inferior beings are incapable of training in this training. The bodhisattva great beings who train in this training want to extricate all beings from saṃsāra. Subhūti, the bodhisattva great beings training like that are not born in hell; are not born in the animal world, in the world of Yama, or in the border areas; and are not born in outcaste families, with a missing limb,<sup>605</sup> crippled, deaf, with a goiter,<sup>606</sup> or with one side of the body withered away. They will not have incomplete sense organs; their sense organs will be complete, not incomplete. They will not be involved with killing, up to have a wrong view, will not fashion a life on wrong livelihood, will not hold onto the unreal, will not be immoral, and will not hold on to immorality.

57.8 “Subhūti, the bodhisattva great beings training like that are not born among the long-lived gods. And why? Because those bodhisattva great beings have skillful means—a skillful means so that even though they become absorbed in the concentrations, become absorbed in the immeasurables, and become absorbed in the formless absorptions, still the concentrations, immeasurables, and formless absorptions do not dictate where they are born.

57.9 “Subhūti, the bodhisattva great beings training like that [F.248.a] attain the perfect purity of the power of all the buddhadharmas, which is to say, they do so because the śrāvaka and pratyekabuddha levels have been perfectly purified.”

57.10 The Lord having said this, venerable Subhūti then asked him, “Lord, if all dharmas are in their basic nature perfectly pure, what dharma’s perfect purity do bodhisattva great beings attain?”

57.11 “Exactly so, Subhūti, exactly so!” replied the Lord. “It is exactly as you say, Subhūti, all dharmas are in their basic nature perfectly pure. Subhūti, when, even with all dharmas being perfectly pure, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom do not feel cowed and do not tense up, that is the perfection of wisdom of those bodhisattva great beings. Ordinary persons do not understand and do not see that true nature of dharmas, so for the sake of those beings the bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of giving, up to practice the perfection of wisdom, and, Subhūti, the bodhisattva great beings practicing all dharmas like that accomplish the powers and fearlessnesses. Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings training like that go beyond the continually moving thought activity of all beings.

57.12 “To illustrate, Subhūti, there are not many places on the great earth where shiny nuggets of Jambū River gold and silver crop up. Similarly, there are not many beings practicing this practice—namely, the perfection of wisdom. Far more than them are the beings standing on the śrāvaka and [F.248.b] pratyekabuddha levels.

57.13 “To illustrate further, Subhūti, there are not many beings who take up and remain at the work that transforms them into a wheel-turning emperor. Far more than them are the beings who take up and remain at the work that transforms them into local rulers. Similarly, Subhūti, there are not many beings who have set out on the path to the knowledge of all aspects. Far more than them are the beings who have set out on the śrāvaka and pratyekabuddha paths. Subhūti, there are far fewer bodhisattva great beings who practice for suchness than there are bodhisattva great beings who have set out for unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, and far more than them are those who will be in the state of a śrāvaka or pratyekabuddha. Subhūti, far more than the sons of a good family in the Bodhisattva Vehicle standing in the perfection of wisdom who will attain<sup>607</sup> the irreversible level are those who will not attain the irreversible level. Therefore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings who want to reach the irreversible level and want to be counted among those at the irreversible level should train in this deep perfection of wisdom.

57.14 “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom do not produce a thought associated with miserliness, do not produce a thought associated with immorality, do not produce a thought associated with disturbance, do not produce a thought associated with laziness, do not produce a thought associated with distraction, do not produce a thought associated with intellectual confusion, do not produce a thought associated with greed, do not produce a thought associated with hatred, do not produce a thought [F.249.a] associated with confusion, and do not produce a thought associated with hardheartedness. They do not produce a thought associated with form, and do not produce a thought associated with feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness; similarly, connect this with each, up to they do not produce a thought associated with awakening. And why? Subhūti, it is because bodhisattva great beings practicing this deep perfection of wisdom do not apprehend any phenomenon, and while not apprehending do not produce any thought about any phenomenon. Bodhisattva great beings thus practicing this deep perfection of wisdom, Subhūti, have perfectly taken up all the perfections, have perfectly succeeded at all the perfections, and all the perfections accompany them. And why? Subhūti, it is because all the perfections are included within this deep perfection of wisdom. To illustrate, Subhūti, the sixty-two views are included in the view of the perishable collection. Similarly, Subhūti, all the perfections are included within this deep perfection of wisdom. To illustrate further, Subhūti, when a person’s time to die has come and the life faculty shuts down, all the other faculties will shut down as well. Similarly, Subhūti, all the perfections accompany bodhisattva great beings practicing this deep perfection of wisdom. Therefore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings who want to go to the other side of all the perfections should train in this deep perfection of wisdom.

57.15 “Subhūti, bodhisattva great being practicing the perfection of wisdom train for the highest state [F.249.b] of all beings. Subhūti, what do you think, are there a lot of beings in a great billionfold world system?”

57.16 “Lord, given that just the beings of Jambudvīpa are many, what need is there to say more about beings in a great billionfold world system? There are a lot, Sugata, a lot,” he replied.

57.17 “Subhūti,” he continued, “were all the beings, as many as there are in a great billionfold world system, to have simultaneously obtained human bodies and to have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, and were some bodhisattva great being to have attended on each of those tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas for as long as they live with the requirements—robes, alms, beds and seats, and medicines for sicknesses—what do you think? Based on that, would that bodhisattva great being create a lot of merit?”

“A lot, Lord; a lot, Sugata,” he replied.

57.18 “Subhūti,” said the Lord, “those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family who take up, bear in mind, read aloud, master, and properly pay attention to this deep perfection of wisdom create even more merit than that. And why? Subhūti, it is because this perfection of wisdom of the bodhisattva great beings brings about unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, serving a great purpose. Therefore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings who want to become the best of all beings, who want to become a protector [F.250.a] of beings without a protector, who want to be a refuge of those without a refuge, who want to be a final ally of those without a final ally, who want to be a lamp for those standing in darkness, who want to reach the state of a buddha, who want to have reached the range of a buddha,<sup>608</sup> who want to live the life of a buddha,<sup>609</sup> who want to roar the buddha lion’s roar, who want to beat the big buddha drum, who want to blow the buddha conch, and who want to engage in buddha discourse should thus train in this deep perfection of wisdom. And why? Subhūti, it is because there is no perfect state that bodhisattva great beings training in the perfection of wisdom have to obtain that they have not obtained.”

57.19 “Do they even have to obtain a śrāvaka’s perfect state, and do they even have to obtain a pratyekabuddha’s perfect state?” asked Subhūti.

57.20 The Lord said, “Even though they even have to obtain a śrāvaka’s perfect state, and even though they even have to obtain a pratyekabuddha’s perfect state, still they do not stand there and do not stay there. With knowledge and seeing they have to look and transcend, and they have to enter into the secure state of a bodhisattva. Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings training like that get close to the knowledge of all aspects and will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. Bodhisattva great beings training like that are worthy of the offerings of the world with its gods, humans, and asuras. Subhūti, [F.250.b] bodhisattva great beings training like that surpass those others who are worthy of the offerings—all the śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas, as many as there are—and get close to the knowledge of all aspects. Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings training like that do not give up the perfection of wisdom, practice the perfection of wisdom, and are not separated from the perfection of wisdom. Subhūti, you should know that the attribute of bodhisattva great beings practicing this deep perfection of wisdom like that is not abandoning the knowledge of all aspects.<sup>610</sup> They distance themselves from the śrāvaka level and the pratyekabuddha level and get close to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

57.21 “If it occurs to them to think, ‘This is the perfection of wisdom. In this perfection of wisdom, on account of this perfection of wisdom, I will accomplish the knowledge of all aspects’—if they form such a notion—they are not practicing the perfection of wisdom. But if they do not have the notion, ‘This is the perfection of wisdom. The perfection of wisdom is here’—if they do not know and do not see whose perfection of wisdom it would be, on account of what it would be a perfection of wisdom, and who, with the perfection of wisdom, would go forth and fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening—and if it also occurs to them to think, ‘The dharma-constituent, suchness, and the very limit of reality remain, so this is not the perfection of wisdom, and the perfection of wisdom is not here, and there is no dharma at all that goes forth on account of this perfection of wisdom,’ in that case, Subhūti, the bodhisattva [F.251.a] great beings practicing like that are practicing the perfection of wisdom.”

57.22 This was the fifty-seventh chapter, “Practice,” of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.”

58.           CHAPTER 58: EXPOSITION OF THE ABSENCE OF THOUGHT CONSTRUCTION

58.1       Then it occurred to Śatakratu, head of the gods, to think, “Here, since even bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of giving, perfection of morality, perfection of patience, perfection of perseverance, perfection of concentration, and perfection of wisdom, connect this in the same way with each, up to and the eighteen distinct attributes of a buddha surpass all beings, what need is there to say more about when they have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening? Since those beings whose thought is going toward the knowledge of all aspects get things easily and stay alive easily, what need is there to say more about those who have produced the thought of unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening? The beings who will have produced the thought of unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening are pleasing to me. The beings who produce the thought of unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening are also pleasing to me.”

58.2       Thinking that, Śatakratu, head of the gods, took up coral tree flowers and approached the Lord. Going close he strewed those coral tree flowers near, strewed them around the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete Buddha, and having strewed them in front and strewed them around him, made this statement: “On account of this wholesome root may those persons in the Bodhisattva Vehicle holding unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening as a support complete the buddhadharmas; [F.251.b] may they also complete the dharmas of the knowledge of all aspects, may they complete just these self-originated dharmas, and on account of this may they complete the uncontaminated qualities. Lord, I do not produce even the mere arising of a thought that those persons in the Bodhisattva Vehicle who have set out for unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening turn back from unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. Lord, I do not produce even the mere arising of a thought that those bodhisattva great beings turn back from awakening and become śrāvakas or pratyekabuddhas; rather, that the bodhisattvas wanting the welfare, benefit, and security of the world with its gods, humans, and asuras would, having seen those sufferings of those wandering through cycles of existence, produce a longing for unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening and would thus produce the thought, and would make this fervent prayer that is a vow for unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening: ‘One way or the other I, who have gone beyond, must liberate beings who have not gone beyond; one way or the other I, who have been freed, must free beings who have not been freed; one way or the other I, who have sighed with relief, must give beings who have not sighed with relief a sigh of relief; and one way or the other I, who have passed into nirvāṇa, must cause beings who have not passed into nirvāṇa to pass into complete nirvāṇa.’

58.3 “Lord, how big is the wholesome root grown by those sons of a good family and daughters of a good family who rejoice in the thought of enlightenment of bodhisattva great beings who have newly set out in the Bodhisattva Vehicle, who rejoice in the thought of enlightenment of bodhisattva great beings who have practiced in the Bodhisattva Vehicle for a long distance, who rejoice in the thought of enlightenment of bodhisattva great beings [F.252.a] who are irreversible, and who rejoice in the thought of enlightenment of bodhisattva great beings who are interrupted by a single birth?”

58.4 Śatakratu, head of the gods, having asked about this, the Lord replied to him, “Kauśika, it is possible you can take the measure of a four-continent world system by weighing it against some unit of weight, but the measure of the merit of those thoughts that has arisen from the presence of rejoicing is not like that. Kauśika, it is possible you can take the measure of the oceans in a great billionfold world system by taking each drop of water out<sup>611</sup> with the tip of a strand of hair split into a hundred finer strands,<sup>612</sup> but the measure of the merit of those thoughts that has arisen from the presence of rejoicing is not like that.”

58.5 The Lord having said this, Śatakratu, head of the gods, said to him, “Lord, those beings who will not rejoice in those thoughts will be possessed by Māra. Lord, those beings who will not rejoice in those thoughts will be on the side of Māra. Lord, those beings who will not rejoice in those thoughts came here having died where Māra dwells. And why? Lord, it is because those beings who find and produce rejoicing within themselves for those thoughts, turning it over to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, are those who pulverize the dwelling of Māra. Lord, those [F.252.b] thoughts that produce the thought of unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening are the ones in which they should rejoice. Lord, those who have not given up the Buddha, who have not given up the Dharma, and who have not given up the Saṅgha, they too should rejoice in these thoughts, and, having rejoiced, one way or the other they should turn it over to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening in such a way that there is no notion of duality and no notion of nonduality.”

58.6 “Exactly so, Kauśika, exactly so! It is exactly as you say!” said the Lord. “Kauśika, those who rejoice in those thoughts will please the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas extremely quickly, and having pleased them they will not again displease them. Those endowed with the wholesome roots from those thoughts arisen from the presence of rejoicing will become respected, revered, honored, and worshiped wherever they are born. They will never, ever see a form not pleasing to the mind, hear a sound not pleasing to the mind, smell a smell not pleasing to the mind, taste a taste not pleasing to the mind, feel a feeling not pleasing to the mind, or become conscious of a dharma not pleasing to the mind. They will never, ever be separated from the lord buddhas. They will pass on from buddhafiield to buddhafiield and also attend on those lord buddhas and produce wholesome roots.

58.7 “And why? Kauśika, it is because those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family have rejoiced in the wholesome roots of countless bodhisattva great beings who have newly set out in the Bodhisattva Vehicle [F.253.a] and turned the merit over to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening; have rejoiced in the wholesome roots of bodhisattva great beings standing on the first level, standing on the second level, up to and standing on the tenth level; up to and have rejoiced in the wholesome roots of bodhisattva great beings who are interrupted by a single birth and turned the merit over to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. They get close to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening because their wholesome roots have grown, and having fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening they then cause immeasurable, incalculable, infinite beings to enter into complete nirvāṇa.

58.8 “Kauśika, because of this one of many explanations, those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family should rejoice in the wholesome roots of bodhisattva great beings who have produced the first thought, turn the merit over to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, and one way or the other they should turn it over in such a way that awakening will not be in that thought, nor in another thought either.<sup>613</sup> They should rejoice in the wholesome roots of bodhisattva great beings who have practiced the practice, who are irreversible, and who are interrupted by a single birth; turn the merit over to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening; and one way or the other they should turn it over in such a way that awakening will not be in that thought, nor in any other thought either.”

58.9 Then venerable Subhūti asked the Lord, “Lord, in what way will a thought that is like an illusion fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening?”

58.10 Venerable Subhūti having asked this, the Lord asked him in return, [F.253.b] “Subhūti, what do you think, do you see that thought that is like an illusion?”

58.11 “Lord, I do not see it,” he said. “Lord, I do not see an illusion or an illusion-like thought either.”

58.12 “Subhūti, what do you think, will that thought—that thought in which you do not see illusion or illusion-like thought—fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening?”

“No, Lord.”

58.13 “Subhūti, what do you think, do you see a dharma different than an illusion and an illusion-like thought that will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening?”

58.14 “No, Lord,” he said. “Lord, I do not see a dharma other than an illusion and an illusion-like thought that will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, and given that I do not see another dharma, Lord, what dharma will I teach to ‘exist’ or ‘not exist’? The dharma that is extremely isolated<sup>614</sup> will not be existent or nonexistent; the dharma that is extremely isolated will not fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening; and a dharma that does not exist will not fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening either. And why? Lord, it is because all those dharmas that are defiled or purified do not exist and are not apprehended. And why? [F.254.a] Lord, it is because the perfection of wisdom is also extremely isolated, and similarly, up to the perfection of giving is also extremely isolated, and similarly, up to and awakening is also extremely isolated, and a dharma that is extremely isolated is not something you cultivate and not something you analyze. The perfection of wisdom is extremely isolated so it does not bring about any dharma, and given that the perfection of wisdom is extremely isolated, how will bodhisattva great beings, thanks to the perfection of wisdom, fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening? Given that unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening is extremely isolated, how will there be a realization of the isolated by the isolated?”

58.15 Venerable Subhūti having said that, the Lord said to him, “Excellent, excellent, Subhūti! Exactly so, Subhūti, exactly so! The perfection of wisdom is extremely isolated, the perfection of concentration is extremely isolated, and similarly, up to the perfection of morality is extremely isolated, the perfection of giving is extremely isolated, and similarly, up to awakening is extremely isolated, and the knowledge of all aspects is extremely isolated. Subhūti, just as the perfection of wisdom is extremely isolated, up to the knowledge of all aspects is extremely isolated, so too is full awakening to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening extremely isolated. Subhūti, were the perfection of wisdom not extremely isolated, and similarly, connect this with each, up to were the knowledge of all aspects [F.254.b] not extremely isolated, it would not be the perfection of wisdom, up to it would not be the knowledge of all aspects. Therefore, Subhūti, in line with the perfection of wisdom being extremely isolated, up to the knowledge of all aspects being extremely isolated, so too, Subhūti, there will be no full awakening to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening thanks to the perfection of wisdom. There is no full awakening to the isolated by the isolated. Still there is full awakening, but there is no full awakening to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening unless it is thanks to the perfection of wisdom.”<sup>615</sup>

58.16 “Exactly so, Subhūti, exactly so!” replied the Lord. “Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings practice the two deep realities.<sup>616</sup> Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings who practice a deep reality but do not actualize that reality—namely, the śrāvaka level or pratyekabuddha level—are those who do what is difficult.”

58.17 Subhūti then said, “The way I understand the meaning of what you, Lord, have said, is that bodhisattva great beings are not those who do what is difficult. And why? Lord, it is because a reality to be actualized cannot be apprehended, the perfection of wisdom through which it might be realized cannot be apprehended, and the phenomenon that might actualize cannot be apprehended either. Lord, given that all phenomena cannot be apprehended, what reality will be awakened to, [F.255.a] what perfection of wisdom will be awakened to, what phenomenon will be awakened to, and what will have been realized such that unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening will be awakened to?

58.18 “Lord, this course of action where nothing is apprehended is the course of action of bodhisattvas. Bodhisattva great beings practicing it reach a freedom from darkness in respect to all phenomena. Lord, if bodhisattva great beings’ minds are not cowed, if they do not tense up, tremble, feel frightened, or become terrified when there is an exposition of this, the bodhisattva great beings practicing like that, Lord, are practicing the perfection of wisdom. They do not see a causal sign, they also do not see the perfection of wisdom, and they also do not see that ‘I will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.’ Lord, it does not occur to those bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom to think, 'I am distant from the śrāvaka level or pratyekabuddha level, but I am close to the knowledge of all aspects.'

58.19 "To illustrate, Lord, it does not occur to a space to think, 'I am near one thing and distant from another.' And why? Lord, it is because a space does not have specific features, because a space is without thought construction.<sup>617</sup> Similarly, Lord, it does not occur to the perfection of wisdom to think, 'I am distant from the śrāvaka level or pratyekabuddha level, but I am close to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.' [F.255.b] And why? Lord, it is because the perfection of wisdom is without thought construction.

58.20 "To illustrate further, Lord, it does not occur to an illusory person to think, 'I am distant from the illusion but close to the magician,' or 'I am close to' or 'distant from the crowd of people who have gathered together.' And why? Lord, it is because an illusory person is without thought construction.

58.21 "To illustrate further, Lord, it does not occur to a reflection in a mirror to think, 'I am close to the objective support on account of which this reflection has arisen, but I am distant from those that have not arisen in that mirror or container of water.' And why? Lord, it is because a reflection in a mirror is without thought construction. Similarly, Lord, it does not occur to a bodhisattva great being practicing the perfection of wisdom to think, 'I am distant from the śrāvaka level or pratyekabuddha level, but I am close to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.' And why? Because the perfection of wisdom is without thought construction.

58.22 "Lord, the perfection of wisdom does not have likes or dislikes. And why? Because an intrinsic nature that is likable or dislikable cannot be apprehended in it. To illustrate, Lord, just as tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas [F.256.a] do not have anything they might like or dislike, similarly the perfection of wisdom does not have anything it might like or dislike. To illustrate, Lord, just as a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha has abandoned all thought construction, similarly, Lord, the perfection of wisdom has abandoned all thought construction because it is without thought construction.

58.23 "To illustrate further, Lord, it does not occur to a tathāgata's magical creation to think, 'I am distant from the śrāvaka level or pratyekabuddha level, but I am close to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.' And why? Lord, it is because a tathāgata and a tathāgata's magical creation are without thought construction. Similarly, Lord, it does not occur to a bodhisattva great being practicing the perfection of wisdom to think, 'I am distant from the śrāvaka level or pratyekabuddha level but I am close to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.' And why? It is because the perfection of wisdom is without thought construction.

- 58.24        “To illustrate further, Lord, a tathāgata creates a magical creation, but even when that magical creation does that deed it was created to do, still it is without conceptualization and without thought construction. Similarly, Lord, the perfection of wisdom too is cultivated for what it does, but even when it does what it does, still that perfection of wisdom is without conceptualization and without thought construction.
- 58.25        “To illustrate further, Lord, a skilled contractor or contractor’s apprentice puts together a contraption in the shape of a woman, or in the shape of a man, or in the shape of an elephant, [F.256.b] or in the shape of a bull. It is made for what the contraption does, but even when it does what it does, still that contraption is without conceptualization and without thought construction.”
- 58.26        Then venerable Śāriputra asked venerable Subhūti, “Venerable Subhūti, is only the perfection of wisdom without conceptualization and without thought construction, or is the perfection of concentration also without conceptualization and without thought construction, up to is the perfection of giving without conceptualization and without thought construction too?”
- 58.27        “Venerable Śāriputra, ... up to the perfection of giving is without conceptualization and without thought construction too,” said Subhūti.
- 58.28        “Well then, Venerable Subhūti,” Śāriputra further inquired, “is form without conceptualization and without thought construction, and are feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness also without conceptualization and without thought construction? Venerable Subhūti, are the eyes without conceptualization and without thought construction, and are the ears, nose, tongue, body, and thinking mind also without conceptualization and without thought construction? Venerable Subhūti, is a form without conceptualization and without thought construction, and are a sound, a smell, a taste, a feeling, and dharmas also without conceptualization and without thought construction? Is eye consciousness, up to thinking-mind consciousness; eye contact, up to thinking-mind contact; and feeling that arises from the condition of contact with the eyes, up to feeling that arises from the condition of contact with the thinking mind also without conceptualization and without thought construction? Venerable Subhūti, are the concentrations, [F.257.a] immeasurables, and formless absorptions also without conceptualization and without thought construction? Are the applications of mindfulness, connect this in the same way with each, up to the eightfold noble path, and the emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness meditative stabilization also without conceptualization and without thought construction? Are the ten tathāgata powers, four fearlessnesses, four detailed and thorough knowledges, great love, and great compassion without conceptualization and without thought construction; up to and are the eighteen distinct attributes of an awakened one and an awakened one also without conceptualization and without thought construction? Is awakening also without conceptualization and without thought construction? Are the compounded element and the un compounded element also without conceptualization and without thought construction?"

58.29 "Venerable Śāriputra, all phenomena are without conceptualization and without thought construction," said Subhūti.

58.30 Śāriputra further asked, "Venerable Subhūti, if all phenomena are without conceptualization and without thought construction, how has this division of cyclic existence into the five forms of life—in the hells, animal world, world of Yama, and as a human and god—come about, and how do the categorizations of stream enterer, up to awakening of the lord buddhas come about?"

58.31 Venerable Śāriputra having asked this, venerable Subhūti replied to him, "Venerable Śāriputra, these beings pile up karmic actions of body, speech, and mind motivated by error. Based on that they saddle themselves with, and pile up, karmic maturations that have arisen from the root—the desire-to-do. Saddled with them they enact the forms of life arisen from thought construction in the hells, [F.257.b] animal world, world of Yama, and as a human and god.

58.32 "Venerable Śāriputra, you have said, 'How do the categorizations of stream enterer, once-returner, non-returner, worthy one, and pratyekabuddha come about, up to how does the categorization of lord buddha come about?' Venerable Śāriputra, stream enterer and result of stream enterer are categories because of being without thought construction, up to the state of a worthy one, the state of a pratyekabuddha and a pratyekabuddha's awakening are categories because of being without thought construction; buddha is a category because of being without thought construction, and awakening too is a category because of being without thought construction.

58.33 "Venerable Śāriputra, those lord buddhas, the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas who have appeared in times past, were also without thought construction, were free from thought construction, and had abandoned thought construction. Similarly, those in the future will abandon thought construction, and, Venerable Śāriputra, those lord buddhas who have appeared at the present time, the lord buddhas who have fully awakened to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening in world systems in the ten directions, they too are without thought construction, are free from thought construction, and have abandoned thought construction. Because of this one of many explanations, Venerable Śāriputra, having taken the suchness that is the absence of thought construction, the suchness that is the very limit of reality, and the suchness that is the dharma-constituent as authority, you should know that all phenomena are without thought construction.

58.34 “Venerable Śāriputra, bodhisattva great beings [F.258.a] should practice the perfection of wisdom like that without thought construction. Practicing the perfection of wisdom without thought construction there is a full awakening to dharmas without thought construction.”

58.35 This was the fifty-eighth chapter, “Exposition of the Absence of Thought Construction,” of “The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines.” [B42]

CHAPTER 59: NONATTACHMENT

59.1 Then venerable Śāriputra said to venerable Subhūti, “Ah! Venerable Subhūti, those bodhisattva great beings who are practicing this perfection of wisdom make a practice of something really worthwhile. Ah! The bodhisattva great beings practicing this perfection of wisdom make a practice of something really worthwhile.”

59.2 Venerable Śāriputra having said this, venerable Subhūti said to him, “Ah! Venerable Śāriputra, the bodhisattva great beings practicing this perfection of wisdom make a practice of something that is not worthwhile! And why? Venerable Śāriputra, it is because the perfection of wisdom is not worthwhile, up to the knowledge of all aspects is not worthwhile. And why? Venerable Śāriputra, it is because bodhisattva great beings practicing this perfection of wisdom do not apprehend and do not see even something not worthwhile, so however could they apprehend something really worthwhile? Similarly, connect this with each, up to the knowledge of all aspects is not worthwhile, so however could they apprehend something really worthwhile?”

59.3 Then it occurred to the gods living in the desire realm and living in the form realm to think, “It is right to bow down to those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family [F.258.b] who have produced the thought of unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, to those who practice this deep perfection of wisdom as it has been taught, and to those who practice that reality but still do not actualize the very limit of reality, the very limit of reality which, were they to have actualized it, would have them standing on the śrāvaka level or the pratyekabuddha level. By the same token, it is right to bow down to those bodhisattva great beings who do not actualize these dharmas as being the same.”

59.4 Then venerable Subhūti said to those gods, “Gods! For those bodhisattva great beings it is not difficult to refrain from actualizing those dharmas as being the same, dharmas which, were they to have actualized them, would have left them standing on the śrāvaka level or the pratyekabuddha level, but, gods, it is difficult for them to buckle on the armor of ‘we will place infinite, countless beings without measure in complete nirvāṇa,’ and still absolutely not apprehend those beings they have to discipline. Gods! Bodhisattva great beings practicing like that have set out for unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening with the thought, ‘I will discipline all beings,’ and that aspiration—‘I will discipline beings’—is the aspiration, ‘I will discipline space.’ And why? It is because they have to view beings as isolated because space is isolated, view beings as empty because space is empty, view beings as worthless because space is worthless, and view beings as in vain because space is in vain. Gods! In this way those bodhisattva great beings [F.259.a] buckling on armor for the sake of nonexistent beings are those who do what is difficult. Gods, someone with the thought to buckle on armor for the sake of beings wants to argue with space. Bodhisattva great beings have buckled on that armor but still do not apprehend those beings for whose sake they have buckled on the armor. And why? Because they view armor as isolated because beings are isolated. If the bodhisattva great beings’ minds are not cowed when this is taught, they are practicing the perfection of wisdom.

59.5 “And why? Because they view beings as isolated because form is isolated; beings as isolated because feeling, perception, volitional factors, and consciousness are isolated; the perfection of wisdom as isolated because form is isolated; connect this in the same way with each, up to and the knowledge of all aspects as isolated because form is isolated. If bodhisattva great beings’ minds are not cowed, if they do not tense up, tremble, feel frightened, or become terrified when this explanation of the isolation of all phenomena is being given, those bodhisattva great beings are practicing the perfection of wisdom.”

59.6 “Subhūti, why are bodhisattva great beings not cowed by the perfection of wisdom?” asked the Lord.

59.7 “Lord,” replied Subhūti, “bodhisattva great beings are not cowed by the perfection of wisdom because it is nonexistent. Lord, bodhisattva great beings are not cowed by the perfection of wisdom because it is isolated, calm, and unproduced. It is because of that, Lord, that bodhisattva great beings [F.259.b] are not cowed by the perfection of wisdom. And why? Lord, it is because those who are cowed, or that on account of which they are cowed, or about which they are cowed—all those dharmas do not exist and are not apprehended. Lord, if bodhisattva great beings do not become depressed, do not become despondent, do not feel cowed, do not tense up, do not tremble, do not feel frightened, and do not become terrified when this explanation is being given, those bodhisattva great beings are practicing the perfection of wisdom. And why? Lord, it is because those who are cowed, or that on account of which they are cowed, or about which they are cowed—all those dharmas do not exist and are not apprehended. Lord, the gods—those with the Indras, those with the Brahmās, and those with the Prajāpatis—will bow down to bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom like that.”

59.8 Venerable Subhūti having responded like this, the Lord said to him, “Subhūti, not only should the gods—those with the Indras, those with the Brahmās, and those with the Prajāpatis as their leaders—bow down to bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom like that, but the Śubhakṛtsna gods of surpassing color, the Bṛhatphala..., up to the Śuddhāvāsa classes of gods should also bow down to bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom like that as well.

59.9 “Subhūti, the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas dwelling and maintaining themselves [F.260.a] in infinite, countless world systems—those tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas too watch over those bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom, having in mind, ‘This bodhisattva great being is practicing the perfection of wisdom, completing the perfection of concentration...,’ connect this in the same way with each, up to ‘... completing the knowledge of all aspects.’ Subhūti, those bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom, the bodhisattva great beings whom the lord buddhas watch over, should be treated as candidates for buddhahood.

59.10 “If all the beings in world systems as many as there are sand particles in the Gaṅgā River, as many as there are, were to become wicked Māras, and if each of those wicked Māras were to magically create that many wicked Māras, they would be incapable of hindering those bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom. Subhūti, the Māras, the wicked ones, cannot break bodhisattva great beings endowed with two dharmas. Which two? They view all dharmas as emptiness and they do not give up on all beings. Endowed with those two dharmas, Subhūti, the Māras, the wicked ones, cannot break bodhisattva great beings.

59.11 “There are a further two dharmas, Subhūti, endowed with which bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom are not broken by the Māras, the wicked ones. Which two? They are true to their word and watched out for by the lord buddhas. [F.260.b] Endowed with those two dharmas, Subhūti, the Māras, the wicked ones, cannot break bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom.

59.12 “The gods will think that they should approach bodhisattva great beings practicing like that to attend on them, to question them and make inquires, and they convey their enthusiasm, saying, ‘Son of a good family, you are going to quickly and fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, so, son of a good family, you should dwell by dwelling in these, namely, by dwelling in emptiness, dwelling in signlessness, and dwelling in wishlessness. And why? Son of a good family, it is because if you dwell in those dwellings you will become the protector of beings without a protector, you will become the refuge of beings without a refuge, you will become the support of beings without a support, you will become the final ally of beings without a final ally, you will become the resting place of beings without a resting place, you will become the island of beings without an island, and you will become the sight of beings who have gone blind. And why? Because the lord buddhas dwelling and maintaining themselves in infinite, countless world systems, lord buddhas surrounded by communities of monks, also teach the Dharma to the bodhisattva great beings dwelling in this dwelling of the perfection of wisdom, expressing delight in the form of proclamations of the name and the lineage of those bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom like that, which is to say, those bodhisattva great beings endowed with the requirements [F.261.a] for the good qualities of the perfection of wisdom.

59.13      “To illustrate, Subhūti, I now express delight and teach the Dharma in the form of a proclamation of the name of the bodhisattva great being Ratnaketu; express delight and teach the Dharma in the form of a proclamation of the name of the bodhisattva great being Śikhin; and I also express delight and teach the Dharma in the form of proclamations of the names of those bodhisattva great beings living a celibate life, those bodhisattva great beings inseparable from the perfection of wisdom in the presence of the lord, the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha Akṣobhya. Subhūti, the lord buddhas dwelling and maintaining themselves in the eastern direction, those lord buddhas also teach the Dharma, they too express delight and teach the Dharma by way of being delighted by those bodhisattva great beings living such a celibate life there. Similarly, the lord buddhas dwelling and maintaining themselves in world systems in the south, west, and north, below and above, and the intermediate directions, those lord buddhas also teach the Dharma, they too express delight and teach the Dharma by way of being delighted by those bodhisattva great beings inseparable from the perfection of wisdom living a celibate life. Subhūti, the lord buddhas also express delight and teach the Dharma by way of being delighted by those bodhisattva great beings who, starting from the first production of the thought, [F.261.b] complete the awakening path, until they reach the knowledge of all aspects. And why? Subhūti, it is because those bodhisattva great beings who have thus set out to ensure that there will be no interruption to a buddha's guiding principle are those who do what is difficult."

59.14 The Lord having said this, venerable Subhūti then asked him, "Lord, do those lord buddhas teach the Dharma in the form of a proclamation of the names of, and by way of being delighted by, those bodhisattva great beings who turn back or those who do not turn back?"

59.15 Venerable Subhūti having asked this, the Lord replied to him, "Subhūti, there are bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom who are irreversible from awakening, and there are also those bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom who have not been prophesied—and those lord buddhas express delight and teach the Dharma to them by way of being delighted by them."

59.16 "Lord, who are they?" asked Subhūti.

"Subhūti," said the Lord, "those bodhisattva great beings who, when they practice a bodhisattva's practice, practice by way of following the lord, the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha Akṣobhya in training—they, Subhūti, are irreversible bodhisattva great beings. Those lord buddhas express of delight and teach the Dharma to them by way of being delighted by them. [F.262.a] Subhūti, those lord buddhas also express delight and teach the Dharma by way of being delighted by them to those bodhisattva great beings who, when they practice a bodhisattva's practice, practice by way of following the bodhisattva Ratnaketu in training.

59.17 "Furthermore, Subhūti, those bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom who believe all dharmas are not produced but still have not gained forbearance for the nonproduction of dharmas, who believe all dharmas are 'empty' but still have not gained forbearance for the nonproduction of dharmas, who believe all dharmas are 'calm,' who believe all dharmas are 'free from greed,' 'in vain,' 'a fraud,' and 'pointless,' but still have not gained forbearance for the nonproduction of dharmas—the lord buddhas, Subhūti, express delight and by way of being delighted by them teach the Dharma to them. Subhūti, those bodhisattva great beings in regard to whom those lord buddhas express delight and teach the Dharma in the form of a proclamation of their names, teach the Dharma by way of being delighted by them, those bodhisattva great beings will shun the śrāvaka level and pratyekabuddha level, and their unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening will be prophesied. Subhūti, those bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom, in regard to whom those lord buddhas express delight and teach the Dharma in the form of a proclamation of their names, those bodhisattva great beings will stand [F.262.b] in the irreversible state, and having stood there will reach the knowledge of all aspects.

- 59.18       “Furthermore, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings who, having listened to the deep perfection of wisdom, are not unsure, not open to doubt, and not perplexed about whether it is exactly what the unsurpassed, perfectly complete buddha has said will again hear in detail about it later on from the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha Akṣobhya and from those sons of a good family in the Bodhisattva Vehicle. Those sons of a good family in the Bodhisattva Vehicle will also have a belief in this perfection of wisdom, and with a belief in this deep perfection of wisdom will believe it is exactly what the Tathāgata has said and will stand in the irreversible state.
- 59.19       “Subhūti, given that there is such a great boon for bodhisattva great beings who even hear the perfection of wisdom, what need is there to mention those who believe in it, and believing it stand in suchness and practice it for suchness, and having stood in suchness and practiced it for suchness will reach the knowledge of all aspects?”
- 59.20       “Lord,” Subhūti then inquired, “given that no phenomenon is apprehended when they have stood in suchness and practiced for suchness, how will they stand in the knowledge of all aspects? Lord, given that no phenomenon called ‘a tathāgata’s magical creation’ is apprehended at all,<sup>618</sup> who will stand in suchness, and who, having stood in suchness, will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening? Who, having stood in suchness, will teach the Dharma? [F.263.a] Given that even suchness is not apprehended, what need is there to say more about someone who will stand in suchness; someone who, having stood in suchness, will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening; and who, having stood in suchness, will teach the Dharma? It is impossible.”
- 59.21       Venerable Subhūti having thus inquired, the Lord said to him, “Subhūti, you have said, ‘Lord, given that no phenomenon called “a tathāgata’s magical creation” is apprehended at all, who will stand in suchness, and who, having stood in suchness, will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening? Who, having stood in suchness, will teach the Dharma? Given that even suchness is not apprehended, what need is there to say more about someone who will stand in suchness; someone who, having stood in suchness, will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening; and who, having stood in suchness, will teach the Dharma? It is impossible.’ Exactly so, Subhūti, exactly so! It is exactly as you say! Subhūti, given that apart from suchness no other phenomenon is apprehended, who will stand in suchness; who, having stood in suchness, will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening; and who, having stood in suchness, will teach the Dharma? Given that even suchness is not apprehended, what need is there to say more about someone who will stand in suchness; connect this in the same way with each, up to who, having stood in suchness, will teach the Dharma? It is impossible.

59.22 “And why? [F.263.b] Subhūti, it is because whether the tathāgatas arise or whether the tathāgatas do not arise, suchness, unmistaken suchness, unaltered suchness, the true nature of dharmas, the dharma-constituent, the establishment of dharmas, the certification of dharmas, and the very limit of reality simply remain. Subhūti, there is nobody who stands in suchness, there is also no full awakening to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening having stood in suchness, and there is no teaching of the Dharma having stood in suchness either. And why? Because in suchness you cannot apprehend anyone who will stand in suchness; anyone who, having stood in suchness, will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening; or anyone who, having stood in suchness, will teach the Dharma. Thus, because even suchness cannot be apprehended, therefore production cannot be apprehended there, and there is no stopping, no remaining, and no changing into something else. Therefore, because production cannot be apprehended in that dharma, and there is no stopping, no lasting, and no changing into something else, who will stand there; who, having stood there, will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening; and who, having stood there, will teach the Dharma?”

59.23 Then Śatakratu, head of the gods, said to the Lord, “Lord, this perfection of wisdom is deep. Lord, those bodhisattva great beings who want to fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening are those who do what is difficult. And why? Because there is nobody [F.264.a] who will stand in suchness, there is nothing that is full awakening to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, and there is nothing that is the teaching of the Dharma, but still they do not become unsure, do not become open to doubt, and do not become perplexed by that.”

59.24 Then venerable Subhūti said to Śatakratu, head of the gods, “Kauśika, you have said that bodhisattva great beings who do not become open to doubt, and do not become perplexed by the deep dharmas, are those who do what is difficult. Kauśika, all phenomena are emptiness, so who would doubt or become perplexed by that?”

59.25 The elder Subhūti having said this, Śatakratu, head of the gods, replied to him, “Whatever the elder Subhūti teaches, all of it is a teaching that takes emptiness as its point of departure and does not get attached to anything. Just as when an arrow is shot into the sky, it does not get attached to anything, similarly, even though the elder Subhūti teaches the Dharma, it does not get attached to anything.”

59.26 This was the fifty-ninth chapter, "Nonattachment," of "The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines."

CHAPTER 60: ENTRUSTING

- 60.1 Then Śatakratu, head of the gods, asked the Lord, “Speaking like that and teaching like that, am I saying what the Lord has said, teaching the Dharma and perfectly giving expression to the Dharma in its totality?”
- 60.2 “Kauśika,” replied the Lord, “speaking like that and teaching like that you are saying what the Lord has said, teaching the Dharma and giving expression to the Dharma in its totality.”
- 60.3 Śatakratu said, “Lord, it is amazing how the elder Subhūti is confident in his readiness to speak about it [F.264.b] all with emptiness as the point of departure, is confident in his readiness to speak with signlessness and wishlessness as the point of departure, and is confident in his readiness to speak about the applications of mindfulness, up to awakening with that point of departure.”
- 60.4 Śatakratu, head of the gods, having said this, the Lord said to him, “Kauśika, Subhūti, dwelling in emptiness, does not apprehend even the perfection of giving, so what need is there to say more about those who might practice the perfection of giving. Similarly, connect this with he does not apprehend even the perfection of wisdom, so what need is there to say more about those who might practice the perfection of wisdom; he does not apprehend even the applications of mindfulness, so what need is there to say more about those who might cultivate the applications of mindfulness; similarly, connect this with each, up to he does not apprehend even the path, so what need is there to say more about those who might cultivate the path. Similarly, connect this with he does not apprehend even the concentrations..., immeasurables..., deliverances..., meditative stabilizations..., or absorptions, so what need is there to say more about those who might cultivate the absorptions; he does not apprehend even the powers, so what need is there to say more about those who might cultivate the powers; he does not apprehend even the fearlessnesses, so what need is there to say more about those who might accomplish the fearlessnesses; he does not apprehend even the detailed and thorough knowledges, so what need is there to say more about those who might accomplish the detailed and thorough knowledges; he does not apprehend even great love, so what need is there to say more about those who might stand in great love; he does not apprehend even great compassion, so what need is there to say more about those [F.265.a] who might stand in great compassion; he does not apprehend even the distinct attributes of a buddha, so what need is there to say more about those who might accomplish the distinct attributes of a buddha; he does not apprehend even awakening, so what need is there to say more about those who might fully awaken to awakening; he does not apprehend even the knowledge of all aspects, so what need is there to say more about those who might reach the knowledge of all aspects; and he does not apprehend even the Tathāgata, so what need is there to say more about those who might become a tathāgata? He does not apprehend even nonproduction, so what need is there to say more about those who might directly realize nonproduction; he does not apprehend even the major marks, so what need is there to say more about those on whose bodies the major marks might appear; and he does not apprehend even the minor signs, so what need is there to say more about those on whose bodies the minor signs might appear. And why? Kauśika, it is because the monk Subhūti abides in the isolation of all dharmas. Kauśika, it is because the monk Subhūti dwells without apprehending anything, dwells in emptiness, dwells in signlessness, and dwells in wishlessness.

60.5 “Kauśika, the monk Subhūti’s dwelling is like that and yet, Kauśika, that dwelling of the monk Subhūti does not approach the bodhisattva great being’s dwelling in the perfection of wisdom even by a hundredth part; it does not approach it by a thousandth part, does not approach it by a hundred thousandth part, and does not approach it by a hundred thousandth one hundred millionth part—it does not approach it by any number, fraction, counting, example, or comparison.

60.6 “And why? Because, setting aside the dwelling of a tathāgata, those dwelling as bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom [F.265.b] are highest, foremost, special, best, superb, sublime, unsurpassed, and unrivaled among those dwelling in the dwellings of śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas. Therefore, Kauśika, those who want to become the foremost of all beings should dwell in just this dwelling, namely, dwell in the perfection of wisdom.

60.7 “And why? Kauśika, it is because bodhisattva great beings practicing this perfection of wisdom pass beyond the śrāvaka level and the pratyekabuddha level, enter into the secure state of a bodhisattva, and, having completed all the buddhadharmas, reach the knowledge of all aspects. Having reached the knowledge of all aspects, they obtain the elimination of all residual impressions, connections, and afflictions.”

60.8 Then the Trāyastriṃśa gods in that very retinue took up coral tree flowers and strewed them near, strewed them in front, and strewed them all around the Lord. Six thousand monks also got up from their seats, adjusted their upper robes so they hung down from one shoulder, knelt down with their right knees on the ground, cupped their palms together in a gesture of supplication specifically to the Lord, and bowed down toward him without closing their eyes. Through the power of the Buddha the palms of their hands cupped in the gesture of supplication were filled with coral tree flowers. They strewed the coral tree flowers near, strewed them in front, and strewed them all around [F.266.a] the tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete Buddha. While strewing them near, strewing them in front, and strewing them all around him, they made this statement: “Lord, on account of this wholesome root may we dwell in this loftiest of dwellings that is not the dwelling of all the śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas.”

60.9 Then at that time the Lord, knowing the aspiration of those monks, smiled. And it is in the very nature of a lord buddha that at the time of the smile, from the opening of the lord’s mouth issue forth light rays of many colors, of a variety of colors, namely, blue, yellow, red, white, reddish brown, crystalline, and silver-like. Having spread through the great billionfold world system and lit it up, they retract back, circling around the lord three times and disappearing into the lord from the top of his head.

60.10 Venerable Ānanda then got up from his seat, adjusted his upper robe so it hung down from one shoulder, knelt down with his right knee on the ground, cupped his palms together in a gesture of supplication specifically to the Lord, bowed forward to him, and said to the Lord, “Lord, the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas do not give a smile without a cause, without a condition. So why did you smile? What is the cause, what is the condition?”

60.11 Venerable Ānanda having asked this, the Lord said to him, “Ānanda, during the eon called Tārakopama these six thousand monks will fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. All will become [F.266.b] a tathāgata, worthy one, perfectly complete buddha called Avakīrṇakusuma. Ānanda, those tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas called Avakīrṇakusuma will have a comparable community of monks, will have a comparable buddhafiield, and will have a comparable thousand-year lifespan too. Having gone forth from wherever they go forth, they will go forth to homelessness, and having gone forth to homelessness, wherever they dwell, there a rain of five-colored flowers will rain down. Therefore, Ānanda, bodhisattva great being who want to dwell in the loftiest dwelling should practice the perfection of wisdom, and bodhisattva great beings who want to dwell in the Tathāgata's dwelling should practice the perfection of wisdom.

60.12 “Ānanda, as for any son of a good family or daughter of a good family practicing this deep perfection of wisdom, that son of a good family or daughter of a good family should have this unquestioned certainty: ‘I have thus died a human and taken birth here, or have died among the Tuṣita class of gods and taken birth here. I have heard this deep perfection of wisdom in detail from humans or heard this deep perfection of wisdom in detail from the Tuṣita class of gods.’ Ānanda, the tathāgatas have kept their eye on those bodhisattva great beings practicing this deep perfection of wisdom. Ānanda, any son of a good family or daughter of a good family who hears this deep perfection of wisdom and, having heard it, takes it up, bears it in mind, reads it aloud, masters it, properly [F.267.a] pays attention to it, and instructs persons in the Bodhisattva Vehicle in this deep perfection of wisdom, Ānanda, those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family should have this unquestioned certainty: ‘We have heard this deep perfection of wisdom from the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas, and have taken it up, borne it in mind, read it aloud, and mastered it. We have produced wholesome roots sprung from those tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas.’ Ānanda, those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family should know, ‘We have not produced wholesome roots sprung from śrāvakas, and we have not heard this deep perfection of wisdom from śrāvakas.’ Ānanda, any son of a good family or daughter of a good family who hears this deep perfection of wisdom, and takes it up, bears it in mind, reads it aloud, masters it, and understands it from the meaning, the Dharma, and the [Vi]naya,<sup>619</sup> those sons of a good family or daughters of a good family, Ānanda, should have this unquestioned certainty: ‘We have been face to face with the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas.’

60.13 “Ānanda, when any son of a good family or daughter of a good family hears an explanation of this deep perfection of wisdom and does not reject it, does not argue against it, and gains a serene confidence in it, Ānanda, that son of a good family or daughter of a good family should know, ‘I have served well the victors of the past and have been assisted by spiritual friends.’

60.14 “Ānanda, a son of a good family or daughter of a good family who has planted wholesome roots from [F.267.b] the tathāgatas, worthy ones, perfectly complete buddhas does not falsify<sup>620</sup> the state of a śrāvaka or the state of a pratyekabuddha or the state of a buddha, but still, Ānanda, as bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of giving, connect this in the same way with each, up to practicing the knowledge of all aspects should have understood those states well. Ānanda, bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of giving, connect this in the same way with each, up to practicing the knowledge of all aspects who have understood them well do not dwell in the state of a śrāvaka or the state of a pratyekabuddha.

60.15 “Therefore, Ānanda, I entrust this deep perfection of wisdom to you. Ānanda, of all the Dharma I have taught, with the exception of the perfection of wisdom, if you, having taken up and mastered all the Dharma I have taught, afterward let it go to waste, and afterward reject it, you will not, just on that account, be at fault as far as I am concerned. But, Ānanda, should you, having taken up this deep perfection of wisdom, afterward let even a single line of it go to waste you will, just on that account, be at fault as far as I am concerned. Ānanda, if you, having taken up this deep perfection of wisdom, afterward do not let it go to waste and do not throw it away, Ānanda, you will be faultless as far as I am concerned.

60.16 “So, Ānanda, I entrust this deep perfection of wisdom to you. One way or the other take it up, bear it in mind, read it aloud, master it, and always pay proper attention to it. Take it up well, bear it in mind well, with the letters, stems, and inflected words perfectly received and having fully grasped the excellent explanation. Ānanda, any son of a good family or daughter of a good family who [F.268.a] takes up this deep perfection of wisdom, bears it in mind, reads it aloud, masters it, and properly pays attention to it will have taken up<sup>621</sup> the entire awakening of past, future, and present lord buddhas. Ānanda, any son of a good family or daughter of a good family who takes up and assists with this deep perfection of wisdom will have assisted with the awakening of past, future, and present lord buddhas.
